And they end up, in the scientific groups and the study groups and statistics groups, have all got their hands out for life in little companies they join up looking for grants to live on, you see, so they can spew forth studies have shown that blah blah blah. And you say, well that's just so fascinating, you know, I didn't know how many ants did strange sexual things together on a Friday afternoon once a year. I mean, I could live without it to be honest with you. But yet, this is the sort of stuff they churn out, endless rubbish, you see.

But then you have the other ones too who work in the labs. Hm. I read the articles over the years, because once in a blue moon authorities are so fed up of having to pay collapsed loans and grants to these people, or they abscond with the cash or whatever it happens to be, because that happens too. Will admit that all these things that they, oh did you know that eventually scientists hope to blah blah blah and hope to do this, are generally countered or turned over, and the studies have found that this does that and this does, are basically contradicted with subsequent studies. Most of it is bunkum!

But they got to churn something out to pretend that they're actually doing something for their big grants. Really, that's what it's all about. It's all about that. And how many years have you read that white wine is a good thing, another year it's a bad thing, and it's best to try red wine to save your heart. You know? Then it will come out after that, oh it's bad to take wine at all with certain conditions. Then they're back to the white wine again before you know it. Then the red again. It's just an endless circle of the same old reports, that saves them even writing new ones for their big grants. It's just astonishing.

So again, getting back to hospitals. If you go into a hospital and your friends go in, you should make sure you have an advocate, someone who will stand up for you no matter what happens. No matter WHAT the doctors tell them. Because they have, as I say, ones who are basically trying to persuade you what to do, what they want you to do. They're very good. You'll like them. They fit right into a soap opera, you know, there's so concerned. As they persuade you. Oh, well, I guess so... You should have someone there who's going to stand up for you.

Do you know why? To make sure you come out of the place alive! Because is not the old style at all of, maybe you get an occasional, used to have great country hospitals, small hospitals where more relaxed people weren't caught up in the rat race, you see, so much. And if you're caught up in the rat race, you're more inclined to become a bit of a rat yourself. You start to adapt and adopt these particular memes that go across, you know, people are really just, there's just too many people, and people over a certain age should, maybe shouldn't live anyway, you know. Isn't it sad when you actually hear folks saying this kind of thing in this day and age? And never dawns on them that the age will get lowered [Alan chuckles.] until they are in it.

No one bothers to read Julian Huxley's ideas for the socialist society that was to be controlled on behalf of his elite group that he worked for. They gave you socialism, you see, we'll be your champions, you'll all fall for it, but we'll guide and shape you into the system that we wish to have. We'll dethrone you from your throne as being the superior creature on the planet and bring the level of your status down to that of the animal, or below. Until basically they'll tell you, your life isn't worth... ding, ding, you know. You little piece of awful protoplasm, you. And that's how things are done, folks. Everything's done with incredible psychology in this day and age. The Bernays techniques are all through society and all through the so-called professions, at every possible level.

Now, back to the unfolding of the, I was going to say the Martian law but it's the martial law. Well maybe Martian may be pretty good for it too, the God of war, hey. Because that's where the word actually really comes from. But we are going through a NATO system step-by-step-by step in tandem. As they say, the first step is lie to the public and pretend nothing is happening, to you, you'll be fine. The second step is when the media that's been silent up until then, or at least they've been told to attack anyone who is saying this could be a problem and call you conspiracy nuts and so on, who are all on board with it because they are all privately owned cartels who all know each other and work together in clubs on behalf of the governing system, which is not yours.

Then the third step is when they're told, they're told this on the same day, they've known in advance, but they're actually given a date, now it's implemented, terrify the public. And they go into hyper mode, way more than conspiracy theory, you know. Until they do a good job of it. I listened to one guy who works way up at the CDC in an interview and he said that. And he was asked, why don’t you terrify the public? He said, well yes, we are, yeah. He says, because now it's time to get them to take it seriously, just to terrify them. And that's what the media is there for, well, to be very afraid.

But there's nowhere you can get any, ANY, any consistent information on this disease, anywhere at all. It's part of it too, it's obviously deliberate, right, the idea of not giving you concise information that makes any kind of sense. Have you noticed that? In the same articles they'll have contradictions, maybe five contradictions on what they're telling you are the facts. In the same article. By themselves contradicting themselves.

And then they'll give you total coronavirus cases, at least the Covid 19, which they're now calling SARS 2 Covid 19. They'll give you the total cases sometimes, for a province of Canada or a state in the US as an example, or even a city. So, you look at the total and you say okay, okay, wow, okay. But then they have after it different categories of it such as recovered. And you see this tiny number, like 5 out of 400. And you're left wondering, okay did the rest of them die or what? I mean, five of them recovered? Who's making this stuff up?

Because you would think when you look through it there'd be an awful lot more folk recovered than five. And you'd have a justification of why they're telling you this and how many recovered previously, if it's done by the day or the week or… Because they won't even tell you that. It's like, is this today? Is this today's number today? Like 400 new ones got it? Or is that the total that's been from the beginning? You know? I've never seen anything in my life like this. I really haven't. And I'm not the only person that's mentioned it. I mean, there's other people, people in the professions that are saying what on earth is this? Because that's the first thing you think, okay 400 odd people got it, five recovered, okay.

Then you go into the same articles by the same authors in the same papers, or even government studies sort of thing, or health studies, and they'll say that we don't have the testing kits, but we're going to get them. And then of course the top ones, the people at the top will say, well yeah we are.. we are... Then you say, okay, well how did they, they've got confirmed cases down. And you say, okay, confirmed cases, right? How are they confirming it?

Are they using, you see, I know that in Canada they're not using the MRIs and so on like they do in China. Every hospital there has got quite a few MRIs, they can really go one after the other, boom, boom, boom. Here in Canada in Ontario, I'm not kidding you, like CAT scans as well, you could be on the books for a year. Easily. But there, they can actually diagnose it, particularly the mottling of it and the patterning, in the lungs you can see the patterning of it. And in the blood or even the tissue samples and so on, so you can do it that way too. But most countries are using, oddly enough, signs and symptoms.

Now, the signs and symptoms are so incredibly varied. If you've got maybe 15 signs and symptoms, or even 20 signs and symptoms, and I've seen that for this thing, you know, you may have, and then they'll tell you the classic signs. But then they'll tell you in the same article that not everyone gets ALL the signs and symptoms. Which is normal in medicine, you know. Then you get these oddball signs and symptoms and a lot of them could be anything at all.

I was thinking about, you know, I know that when this happened and broke out in China in January, China also admitted that there were two of the, like the others, it was H5N1, I know H1N1 broke out about the same time as these flu strains, the annual type ones, but they're slightly different from the usual ones that you vaccinate for. So, you've got another two strains going through the countries at the same time, and along with previous strains right.

Now remember when one of the big flu pandemics, you might call it an epidemic came through a few years ago? I did the stories on the radio at the time and I followed it closely because they were hyping it up, hyping it up, and hyping it up. And I thought, well, how are they testing for this one? Because eventually, and in quite a quick time period they actually said, it was announced that doctors were told if anybody with a runny nose, and maybe a cough or maybe a fever, hm, like a head cold, put them down as this, just take for granted that's the flu. And so, you had this massive figure of folk with the flu and at a time when most folk just had a common cold or the sniffles that you wouldn't even diagnose, you know.

In the spring in Canada too you get incredible fungus breaking out, even in the snow, you know. I get that, I'm so sensitized I just, I start, you know, my nose starts going. And you'll get the mold too, even in the houses, you've got to scrub them. Because when you've had maybe about 6 feet sometimes of snow, surrounding the walls of your house and it's going down and down, and that starts the stuff, it really makes a big difference inside the house on any drywall and so on and you'll see mold appearing occasionally. That's what happens. Quite common here in these wooden type houses, 'eh.

So anyway, again getting back to the facts. After reading about the cases for instance for Ontario and different parts of the country, then you realize, no, they're not testing folk. And then they give you this new thing where, oh yeah, you've got all these different places on the Internet, and here's the phone numbers too. And you get five different places to phone to get a person who might be a real person and start speaking to you. You could spend days on this thing. No kidding you. So that they'll decide whether you have to get treatment or not. They've already done it across the world, they're telling folk without any treatment or even testing, just self-quarantine.

Right. No testing. But they'll go down, you see, first as presumed cases, and eventually the presumed bit disappears and they just put it down as confirmed, even though they haven't been seen. That happened before as I say, with the previous two big flus that went through over a few years ago. So that's what's happening now too.

Obviously if you're not getting actual, any kind of test, there's an awful big chance you've got some other flu, or cold, a head cold, or even that plus allergies. That comes in as I say with the molds that we have when the snow starts to go down when a bit of warm weather comes in occasionally, that's very common. So, everybody's getting put down as presumed cases, you see. The other day I looked up Pennsylvania for a person who phoned me. Na, I phoned him. Oh no, he phoned, me, yeah. He wanted to know what they're saying in the newspapers about the confirmed cases there. And they had the same kind of thing, it was identical to Ontario really with so many cases and presumed, and confirmed, right. It says at the bottom, this is from a government site down there, from the local government site. It said…

We shall have better results...

(Alan: After giving you all these statistics and so on, right...)

…better results when the primary, (A: I think it was…) the primary set of testing kits are delivered.

They didn't have the kits there to test this out, how were they confirming it? Because they're not taking them in and out to do what the Chinese have been doing, in the West, our system is so broken with greed it would take you forever to get an appointment for an MRI test, as an example. There is an awful lot of presuming going on. I presume. As far as I can tell.

And yet, as I say, the world has been terrified, terrified, terrified like never before. We know that the SARS, and this is confirmed by China itself, who also I can remember way back years ago when the SARS came out in 2003 I think it was, 2003 to 2004 and the big panic in Toronto, it was pretty well through the Chinese community, you see. It didn't seem to be catching on amongst people of other ethnic groups. And it was really bad because I can remember too when a lot of Chinese had died in a week or so in Toronto and a local mortician, it was a Chinese mortician, they came down with it, I think five of them got it, that were dealing with the corpses. It was so virulent, this strain. But again, that was contained.

But China did, after that, do studies and they actually wondered, and said it, that this was like a bio ethnic specific strain, like warfare type thing. Which is not unheard of, and sort of conspiracy minded, when you have top laboratories like Porton Downs in England that had, I keep telling the people about the fantastic interview that was given, very very rare interview. A reporter got in, even for the breakfast starting in the morning with the scientists as they came in to work, were talking about their ethnic specific diseases, as though they were talking about pruning the roses, you know, it was just such a common chat. Back then.

So, countries can be excused from wondering, especially when these types of rather exotic types of diseases didn't exist before as such. Not the way they are now. And not the way either when you see so many, so many, again we're churning out people to be scientists, scientists, all with their hands out, you see, who all want their names in the history books for discovering something or creating something.

Right down to that article I put up before from a Harvard professor who deals with training people for bio labs and so on. Asking if they should be using the laboratories to create potentially deadly pandemic diseases? Why are they creating it? Well, the excuse is that well, we're trying to predict a thousand different ways that this virus might mutate. What it's like to me is someone who gets a basic, basic machine gun, you see, and they say I wonder how I could alter this thing, if you could jump ahead and see how it improves in 100 years times, all the different varieties that they could make with this machine. And then you do it yourself anyway, until you've got a thousand barrels all pointing in the wrong directions. That's pretty well what they're doing in these labs.

They get around the biowarfare like treaties by pretending, well we're doing it for health reasons. We're creating brand-new diseases to see if this virus might mutate in this direction. One of the most terrifying things was when a few years back I read the article at the time too when there were people out to try and dig up corpses in permafrost from the 1918 flu pandemic. And they got samples, that they revived, and admitted, and then write ups of how wonderful it is they had revived the most deadly flu we'd ever known. At least recorded, who knows how long flu has been around, 'eh? Before people even wrote about it, but ever recorded by us anyway.

And how wonderful it was. And the next thing, a few years later, and I knew it was going to come, some scientists had altered it yet again to see if this thing could ever, if it ever returned by itself, which was pretty well impossible, then maybe it would mutate into this way or that way or that way, you know. And I said, here we go. And we're all sitting waiting for it to happen. There's no sanity here. But again, this is a human problem obviously with human people doing it and being lauded as science takes off as the new God. They're the gods, you see. You're not supposed to question science. At all. They are telling you what to do.

I noticed too, recently, the scientists had informed presidents and prime ministers to ban congregations at churches meeting until this is all over. Interesting, that, as they impose, again, the laws of the world on the laws of the Godhead. Interesting. And they’re training the people, oh yeah, you'd better obey or else. Well, what about social distancing? I mean, the churches are pretty well empty anyway. If you're all sitting, you know, like 30 feet apart, that's pretty safe isn't it? No.

You see, there's a lot of agendas getting fulfilled right now. And they never let a good crisis go to waste, as they say. I've actually repeated that in so many talks, years and years ago from the CFR. I couldn't believe it, every crisis there was from 9/11, to 7/7 in Britain, to the bank crashes in 2007/8, these characters at the Council on Foreign Relations/Royal Institute of International Affairs were coming out and saying, you know we could really use this disaster to our advantage. We could really use this disaster to fulfill our agendas. That was one of the ones that started at 9/11, by the way. I even know who did it and said it, and I've got the article here.

But, when you look at what's happening now with the companies getting millions and millions, from all countries, maybe billions, thrown at them, oh save us, save us, tax money, ooooooo, save us. And there they go at it. You understand, they don't have to guarantee they're going to create anything to help you. It's great money, that. You know, great work if you can get it, isn't it? M-hm.

As I say, the figures just don't add up at all. Anywhere. I mean, why don't they give you this... Why don't they give you... Well.... It's a rhetorical question, but why don't they give you a comparison, with every report they give you on this one, where they're lumping everybody in with all kinds of flu, in with it, what the normal flu rate should be, the average? …to make your own mind up. And if it's hammering at some countries worse than others, once again, ethnic specific, you know, ethno specific? And we do know that the receptors and so on are different in different people in the lungs, that literally activate this type of virus to start going, become more virulent.

IT'S OFFICIAL: Chinese Scientists Find Genetic Explanation for Coronavirus Discriminating By Race - unz.com / 4 March 2020

There's so much of the agendas here. And yeah, you will definitely, if they can get their way, don't forget there is a big movement for the permanent ID, 'eh. ID2020 it's called. That was with Bill Gates involved in it and the usual characters, the new masters that we don't elect, they just seem to appear. You know, the giants that they make, you know, the hidden masters have come forward and they'll be telling you, you're not gonna drive anymore, and you got to live this way, and you're going to live in austerity because you're getting rationing coming down the pike and so on and so on.

But there's nothing happening in any logical sequence. That's what makes folk wonder. Pandemic. Well, why would you still have jets, and you can actually still book them and go around the world to infected areas and then come back in? Hm? That's… Do you really want to believe they're just stupid at the top? No. No. It doesn't wash. It doesn't wash. When you see that happening, there's other motives going on here. Until they build up enough numbers to make the problem, perhaps, hm, and then say, oh dear we've got a problem now. Well, who would've guessed, 'eh?

It makes no sense at all. And then they're not supposedly equipped for it all, medical-wise or even facemask-wise we're told as well. Even now under emergency powers every year the big agencies, and the US is a good example with FEMA, they have massive stockpiles of things they use in all kinds of martial law type scenarios, from radioactive fallout to any kind of biowarfare to whatever. They have all that stuff.

But once again, how stupid are we? We didn't decide to give all the businesses to China. The politicians were told to sign the agreements and get into the agreements starting with the NAFTA deal. And then getting expanded into the USMCA or whatever they call it now. Same thing. And they've expanded it even further with Obama's pacific rim agreement. So, they're involved in it too. It's all meshed into one as they keep just changing names of things. It's the same agenda.

You're living through incredible agendas. Which are never dropped. Never dropped. Including the wars against Syria. Still going on. And Iran, still going on, you know. Even in… This is a great time to really hit them, when they're on their knees, or they’re almost on their faces actually, and they're hitting them and hitting them and hitting them. Because there's agendas to be fulfilled, on the list of the PNAC group. And then there's big business it's going to take in. And then there's a different way of living.

What were they on about for years at the World Economic Forum, and the Club of Rome? They would use the climate thing as the big bugaboo to bring about all the socialistic control policies on the whole planet. And at the last big climate when they had, oh, people are not listening enough, and we'll have to get more authoritarian and demand who could have children and who will not have children. The old socialist agendas on behalf of those who ran the Fabian societies from the 1920s and 30s, that's what they said then they'd do. Nothing changes.

You're going through incredibly long-term agendas through foundations, etc. And foundations can live for centuries. They fulfill the same goals. They have all the time in the world to do it. They train every generation that they hire, once they bring them into it, do the work and then they retire, and there's already people taking over. You can't lose when you have that, with all the money on the planet to back you up. Because the guys own all the money on the planet that own these foundations. All of them. That's what you're living through.

First patient to get coronavirus vaccine today as hopes for cure emerge

dailystar.co.uk / 16 March 2020

So, you're living through a system where you're terrified. The press is saying be very terrified. You can't make head nor tails and your governments, and this is what makes the panic happen, are all telling you, be very terrified. But they're not telling you, they tell you to go home and quarantine, the whole, just go home and stay there with no follow-up, like, okay how is your state designed to get any food to you, as an example?

The folk in the cities have been cleaning out... Some of them are sitting waiting at seven in the morning now I hear, even in the local cities. They we're going to give an hour in the morning, you probably had the same in the States and elsewhere. This is the global program as they unleash it. Well what about the old folk? Well, we'll tell them to come in at seven in the morning, 'eh. All the old folk, you know. All the infirmed ones, again, that they want to eradicate, seven in the morning and they can have an hour shopping. Well, if the old folk are getting stampeded over by other ques of every other age group, just trying to get in... It's mayhem and madness.

And you had this farce in Canada. It's a really wonderful farce because Canada is so politically correct, because we're called progressive. All the things that you can't fathom at all as existing and being good for you in society, which they always give prizes to each other for doing, they say, well Canada, we're different, we won't need all this kind of authoritarian thing as they have in the States, we'll use the people's natural good judgment and we'll just tell them what we'll do, and they'll do it, because we're socialist, you see.

[Alan laughing.] I think we were cleaned out before the States was cleaned out with the stores and the shelves and so on. [Alan laughing.] It's just astonishing. But I don't blame the people. Because you're terrified. Government has not laid out anything saying go home and self-isolate, quarantine, and we'll make sure that we can get food to you and here's how it will happen and blah blah blah. No, nothing like that at all. Just go home and stay there, and what? Starve? Is that the idea? Hm? Or like, you know, Canada you know, just go home and quarantine yourself. I mean you can live on hope or something. Maybe you can just, you know, clutching the little red flag and wave it. You've got your flag to keep you warm, your socialist flag. Who knows? Because it's a farce.

And you cannot believe that the people are just so Idiocracy, it's Idiocracy. You can't just believe that. No. There's always a method as they say to the madness. Always. And things will get pushed in big time. So, this is intended obviously, the stores getting cleaned out. And you know, I've had reports of folk, and I understand folk trying to get enough to get through months. Because they've had no warnings from government, or no advice that we're going to make sure that after a month we'll… No, no. Nothing like that. Nothing. Zilch.

So, it's generally a small minority with the cash, big cash, who are literally filling rooms with stuff up. Some guy was on the Internet with a photograph, and he's like laying in a whole room of toilet roles. A roomful, you know. And I got a report that someone saw a woman with five of these big pushcarts that you get at the grocery stores, five of them, I don't know if she link them all together like a train pulling them, loaded up like you wouldn't believe. That's how crazy folk are getting right now.

And obviously, of course it's designed that there's nothing left for anybody else. The government made it that way. They've terrified the public with photographs from China for about three months. Then they're showing you how to be terrified and very afraid. Then they unleash it here. With no follow-up as to here's what we're going to do and just stay calm. You see, no one trusts the governments because they're such liars. I could go on and on about them, but the fact is, that's the basic thing too.

Now, one thing that's for sure, as you well know, some of these world leaders, all of them actually, they're all on antivirals, the stuff that you aren't going to get, or going to get to see. They will not get written off at the hospital, oh, you're a bit too old or, you know, whatever it is, and, we're not going to treat you. No, no. The earth will get moved to save them. Because we live in such a class ridden communist society. And in socialist communism there's an incredible hierarchy of more important people, and that's the truth of it, who love to praise each other on how wonderful they are and all the great jobs they've done and everything.

I can remember giving the talk, talking about euthanasia and all the rest of it and writing folk off as dollars and cents. Even though you've paid into it for years and years and years, maybe your whole life, into the healthcare system because they take it off you, you know, the cash. But then they write you off, they just write you off when you need it. Bioethics, 'eh? Well who…? I didn't vote any bioethicists in. And who was the idiot who came up with, oh, we've got to decide who should live and die, you know, it's a good way to go, in a world where there's going to be too many of, you know, the wrong people. Quite amazing, 'eh.

So, as I say, keep calm, folks. And no, you're not going crazy. You're all getting the same conflicting reports, as I say, when even in the same articles by, say, one author, you find them giving you about 10 different opinions and contradictions on the same topics and things, and statistics. To deliberately keep you confused. Obviously. Obviously.

And following the movie scripts too, it's wonder if they're going to put up some of these big inflatable outside tents, just like the movies they've trained you into the last few years, you know. And oh, here they go. To scare you even more suppose. I can remember in London; in London they were gonna put them in the big big parks and stuff. To make sure everybody sees them.

This is the strategy they used to get World War II going before it happened, telling folk to be very terrified and get volunteers to dig up trenches. This was the Royal Institute of International Affairs and had stated this, Quigley had their reports and their records because he had access to all their archives. They all got together, all the media moguls, who were the members of this organization too, all of them, and they worked together to terrify the public. You see, terrify the public, get them on board until they think there's really… And then they'll start hating Germany.

Before the war starts, get them to hate the country you're going to fight with, you see. By saying they're coming, going to gas you. Oh, so, let's dig trenches in London because we're going to get gassed. That makes a lot of sense, doesn't it? Then they issued gas mask to everybody. Even though there was nothing in any reports from Germany that they were going to gas anybody. But oh, they're going to come across in waves of aircraft and just gas you.

Mind you, they had already done HG Wells Things To Come movie where they did, they were the “Freemasonry of the air,” remember that one? That's in the movie, in the book, Things To Come. Very long protracted type of war against some other nation. Guess who it would be? And eventually the Freemasons of the air would have to go over these little settlements that survived, that returned to kind of barbaric feudalism, and the Freemasons of the air would go over and gas them all. And then they'd come down in parachutes and round up the leaders and stuff and then create a new world.

That was released in the 1930s too, getting them already for World War II. So, when you went in, oh, they're all going to get, Germany's going to gas you all from the air. You see how they work it out? Predictive programming over and over, 'eh. So, here's gas masks and every mom had to have them for herself and her children. Every person. It was a fine to go outside your home without your gas mask, and your little tin hat, you know. But definitely without your gas mask, that was a big one.

Now, you can really see the buildup to it. We had years of movies with these inflatable tents, 'eh. And you never go into them because in the movies they always show you it's horrific with these guys in suits and stuff, the hazmat suits, they have special oxygen and so on. And they've got people there who shoot you if you try to run away, which is the NATO policy by the way, I hope you understand that if you don't follow directions and so on.

And how many movies have you had too, with culling’s, The Thinning and everything else, they've churned out there over the years? Too many of you. And how are you going to bring you into austerity? Well, we've got to start rationing things. Why we rationing things? Because there's nothing left in the stores. Why is that? Because you've petrified the public into taking everything and panicking. Cause-and-effect. Cause-and-effect. Cause-and-effect. It's just too obvious, isn't it?

So, don't think you're going to come out of this, and I really believe this, they really don't want… I looked at some articles from some of the big shots and they actually believe that they could continue this for a few years if they want to, step-by-step, with austerity, just like World War II. Britain in World War II, they were still issued ration cards up until 1952 or 53. I hope you understand what they can play with in these sorts of games.

Now they're talking about the digital rationing card, etc. And even having special IDs for your cars. If you go to pick up groceries and things, they have that all set up already, even in Walmart I believe there's police at the moment, eventually it will come to the military, they'll know how many times you visit that store in that week, things like that, you see.

It's true, some people are so panicked that if a man and woman and, say, one offspring and they've all got cars, they are all taking different stores every day, and then the next day each one will change, so's that there's different identities. The son will go to a different store that day and so on, so they all swap around the stores. So, they can't be accused of, you know, and they're literally taking everything they can get their hands on. They must be borrowing money, thousands of bucks to just keep buying and buying and buying. It's just astonishing.

And the thing is, what they don't know is, this is all planned. Even your panic buying into mass collections of food. It covers as a lot of things. But the military eventually have to go door-to-door, that's what they do, if they're following, and they seem to be following the book, right, step 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. Then they go around door-to-door to see who's been hoarding. And then they take it. [Alan chuckles.]

By me saying that, you see, and they start looking for other places to hide it all, then they're all getting, they don't even know they're getting watched. You probably, you know, people who used to watch the old scientific rubbish on TV. Well scientists have put something in this little mouse's brain, on this rat's brain. And they've got wooden mazes and things and this little... And they give them little names just for the camera because they're just numbers in reality for the scientists. This one here is going to get from here to here. And they've got a little maze to go through from here to here to here, and they've got four choices to make and blah, blah, blah, blah. And they have predictions, after stimulating parts of the brain, of which way it's going to go.

Oh, we have neuroscientists and behavioral scientists on behavioral insights teams and we have all social media that's on board with this, that was officially pronounced back in November before it supposedly broke out at the meeting that they had to plan the emergency, you see, on a tabletop you know scenario as they called it. With the same characters who were to be in control. And they went through it all. And how the people would react and how they expect them to react. And how they all lie to them about this and lie to them about that. And even prompt them this way to do that, knowing they do the opposite. You're getting used and abused and stimulated and you don't even know it. [Alan laughing.] You see, you’re following an agenda unwittingly that the Masters laid out for you.

And everyone is photo IDed in the stores. Automatically. Hm. Your car's automatically photo IDed by the cameras on top of the big lights in the parking lots at the supermarkets. And I'm not kidding you. Yes, they do. It's cheap to do. It's not like they're having to put any money on you. Everybody's getting done. Matched instantly, dun-dun-dun-dun-dun. Print up.

But can you blame the folks too, the ordinary fork. But as they say, governments have laid out nothing, absolutely nothing about how they're going to, they’re ordering the folk to stay home in some places, right, and yet, they aren't telling them how they're going to get food you or whatever. And d'you think that's just a mistake or they just forgot or something?

Everything that happens is very very deliberate and professional teams of manipulators, expert manipulators are working on you, all of you. All of you. All the time. And the first thing is to give up all your rights. Okay, okay. 9/11 part 2, 'eh. You've got little, literally goons, goons telling you what to do and how to behave and what you must do next, that are called politicians and mayors and things like that.

Just amazing, as they come to the fore, you know, with their amazing, amazing and astonishing and astounding declarations of what they're going to do and how you'd better obey it, you know. If the countries are collapsed, isn't it wonderful of the big unification? As soon as this was announced this was coming, people who were in the World Health Organization as an example, in the backgrounds of it but still occasionally public, were rubbing their hands in glee about, oh this could bring, this could really force world government to come into being. Generally, they call it world governance, but world government, you see. Centralized authority on everything, food distribution, water distribution, energy distribution. The technocrats are loving that because they're into energy, you see. A new way of living.

Right down to, do you realize, just like they said at the last climate meeting, how much one person who gets born, one child, how much they're going to consume in their life and how much carbon is going to get produced. Well, it's like a big debt to society before you even start. Well wait a minute here, who are these people? Who are calling you a consumer of goods and a producer of the carbon, 'eh, compared to themselves? Always keep things grounded, right. They have no more right to tell you how to live, right, as you have about them.

But you have the right to tell them to get off your back as being utter hypocrites because it seems to me they're alive at the same time, probably eating a lot more than you are, and consuming a lot more than you are, and a lot more goods and electricity and goodness knows what else, you know.   When you start getting subservient, oh I guess they’re right. What d’you mean then? They're not… Are they royalty or something? And if they were, so what? That's… you're being trained into the next step.

And yes, out of this will come, if they can get austerity really really going, there's another massive incentive not to have any children, 'eh? Especially for you lot. For the nations, the countries that still have intact families, and you know who they are, man, woman and children, then for most families who invest heavily in their offspring, which they do, they're going to be successful. The Western societies have had about a 70-year war upon their brains and their culture, deliberately planned and executed right up to the present state, until, I'm sorry to say, they are finished, pretty well finished for most folk.

The Western societies too, had this strange idea of freedom because it came from societies which were feudal, you see, feudal, really really feudal until not that long ago in actuality. They would, you were trained, you had a massive working class. That's what they depended upon for feudal systems, for serfs, that were slaves basically, you are bought and sold with the land and, you know, that was freedom back then. You pretty well owned nothing because everything is owned by the Lords in the manors and all that. The reality was that the stock that came out of that never really got away from it.

Because for instance, Europe and especially Britain into basically an industrial age, forced the peasants off the land by different means into the big red brick cities at the time where they overcrowded them into these awful crammed in little houses where they died terribly with diseases of all kinds. No hygiene often, no running water or even septic systems and so on. So's that the masters that owned the factories, chains of the factories too, nothing really changes, isn't it, could get incredible profits with the slave labor. And no rights for the people of course. Now China is doing the same thing.

But Britain was different in that it took almost revolutions inside the country to get any rights at all. It took a long, long, long time to get any rights at all. But the people were still, they were still kept in the working-class mentality. And in the working-class schools, they never heard about getting their own business started. It never dawned on them in fact. It didn't dawn on their parents to get a business started. And how to do it. They felt inferior. They were trained to feel inferior. And that's the truth of it. They never really broke out of it.

Even when the factories were taken away from them too, by the free-trade deals made by the Royal Institute of International Affairs, that's who drafted them up, folks. Folk you don't even vote for draft up all the big things that you have to obey. But they were kept in the working-class mentality, they didn't invest, high intensive investment in their offspring. Because the parents themselves had lived, that's how, they pretty well just survived or died. Simple. Simple as that.

And the universities, even when eventually it got to subsidized university entrance and all the rest of it, and for a lot of people they still couldn't afford to leave and get put up, or have rent somewhere else and buy their books and all the rest of it. So, it was still a disincentive if you didn't have the cash. You just couldn't do it for most folk. That's how bad it really, really was. That's the truth of it.

But if you look at China and India, with massive, really intact families still, and the high intensity, high intensive investments in their children, then you can see the success right there. Look at the West right now. They're all off to the beaches during this so-called break, 'eh. Huh? Where they might come back with more diseases than Covid to pass around. And that's where we are. Our culture has been destroyed this way; I hope you understand that. Deliberately too. It wasn't by accident.

Here's the next phase as well. Here's the next phase of it… where so many things can get fulfilled. Oh, they wouldn't listen to the climate change thing, they wouldn't stop, wouldn't go into austerity voluntarily, so we'll make it happen. How are we going to do that? Well, we terrify them to clear out all the stores, you know. And it works awfully well. You know, it doesn't matter what culture you look at, you terrify them, they'll do the same things.

And they're prompted to do the same things. If the governments say, right off the bat, don't worry, we'll make sure we get food to the peoples, in the rural areas too, right. Just go home and quarantine and stay there. In the rural areas? Some of the rural areas would have to leave home at six in the morning or 5:30 to get into the cities to get the food, and by that time [Alan chuckles.] they are already getting stampeded underfoot.

So, this is deliberate, as I say, to bring in other big programs. And the socialists are rubbing their hands in glee. And socialist, I've never met so many millionaire socialists in my life. They're all so happy and wealthy and all that, as they keep fawning over helping the people. And they certainly do help themselves to the things of the people, from taxes, etc. And give themselves very good pay raises. And always celebrating themselves.

Getting back to Ontario as an example, healthcare. I can remember quite a few years back reading an article from the Canadian papers where Ontario, and the same Ontario that's decided not to treat certain folk over a certain age or whatever, bu-bu-bu-bu-bum, you know. Bioethics, you see, is cost-effectiveness. Stop thinking about people like real valuable creatures and see it with practicality. Just give treatment to those people we think could survive, or they may be more essential to the community. Or the UN definition of a good citizen, a good producer and consumer. And pensioners are just consumers. You see? Click click click in the brain, 'eh. I can remember Ontario put $40 million a year to tell the people how great the healthcare system was. Why didn't they put that $40 million into the healthcare system? The system we're living in as an alien system to what your brain wants to believe it is. It really is.

So, a lot of things will happen with this supposed pandemic. As I say, we can't get any real data on facts. And we're saying, what's causing the big big big problem in Italy, etc. etc.? Do you think it's just a massive retirement home or something, is that what it is? No, they're not saying that at all. But they do have a lot of Chinese people there too that are into that whole area where it's happening, for the big factories, the cheap labor for huge leather factories and so on. We just don't, they won't, we won't get any real information, you understand. Because this is meant to terrify everybody, including those who are less likely to get it.

And why would you offer cheap flights now? now that the students are off and the airlines are, cheap flights all across the world. Very cheap for the students. First-time offer, 'eh. Even though they'll say to the student, if you come back, you know, there's a good chance, and China said this, that it's the younger people who were spreading it all through society. Not feeling the symptoms, they were the cause of the most to spread. And your governments that help subsidize airlines, to make students, rather than have the poor souls get bored, go across the planet to party and have fun and all that, and then come back, during a supposed worldwide pandemic.

Sir Conan Doyle said this in his novels with Sherlock Holmes, and I'm paraphrasing but, when you've examined all the clues and all the causes and all the people involved and so on, when you've examined them all and it doesn't fit the bill of why this has happened, and you looked at all the possible, and tossed them all out, then only that which is inside the impossible must be true. And yes, this is all deliberate, there's no doubt about it. And too many folk have too much to gain in a massive world social agenda really. And they're not shy in telling you, if you really know where to look.

Anyway, here's a few articles I'll just get off, just to show you, 'eh. This is from MIT…

We're not going back to normal

technologyreview.com / 17 March 2020

To stop coronavirus we will need to radically change almost everything we do:

(Alan: Doesn't that just ring a bell to what I've been talking about?)

how we work, exercise, socialize, shop, manage our health, educate our (A: ...children, I hate the word...) kids, (A: Kid is a small goat, remember.) take care of family members. (A: which, if you say it's a goat then you're dehumanizing them.)

We all want things to go back to normal quickly. (A: …what was normal for most folk?) But what most of us have probably not yet realized—yet will soon—is that things won't go back to normal after a few weeks, or even a few months. Some things never will.

(A: And they give you all their coverage of the coronavirus, Covid 19, for free etc. etc. and give you…)

It's now widely agreed (even by Britain, finally) that every country needs to "flatten the curve": impose social distancing to slow the spread of the virus of the number of people sick at once doesn't cause the healthcare system to collapse, as it is threatening to do in Italy right now. That means the pandemic needs to last, at a low level, until either enough people have had Covid-19 to leave most immune

(A: Have you noticed that they can't explain anything. People can't get meanings across these days. I really notice an awful lot of that. So that enough people, right, to leave most immune… So, in other words, is that them trying to tell you that most folk have to get it, is that what he's trying to say? You have a think for them, you know.)

(assuming immunity lasts for years, which we don't know)

(A: So why assume it in the first place if you don't know, if it's a brand-new thing, you see, it's not behaving like the other ones?)

or there's a vaccine.

Then they go on about limiting meetings to 10 people on blah blah blah blah blah, all that kind of stuff. But the message really is, it's never going to be the same.

Well, the banks are collapsing, hm. They collapsed in 2007/8 not because it had to happen. It's because it was a political decision at the top to make it happen. I know people in Switzerland who work in the banking industry and I asked one of them, how that happened, these bank collapses, just to get their take on it. And that's what was said when he talked to the top head of one of the top banks in Switzerland, very high bank, who said it was a political decision, always done for other reasons but not because they have to do it. You understand, if nothing is backed by anything, you can play the game forever and ever and ever. That's what Greenspan said. He said we can never really collapse, he says, we just keep printing money. They don't even print it now, they just punch in digits in the computers, and special people, literally their magicians, have the authority to just punch them in and yeah, okay, you know. There's nothing real about anything. Except the effects that you're all getting screwed. So anyway, that's that one there.

The Coronavirus COVID-19 Pandemic: The Real Danger is “Agenda ID2020” - globalresearch.ca / 12 March 2020

(A: ID2020, that is the name of it. Global Research did articles on it. Anyway, and yes, even with different sites that you might not even agree with or whatever, it's occasionally good to look at all information regardless, check it out and see if it's true of whatever. Because a lot of people are looking at things that you're not looking at.)

It seems, the more there is written about the causes of the Coronavirus – the more the written analyses are overshadowed by a propaganda and fear-mongering hype. Questions for the truth and arguments for where to look for the origins and how the virus may have spread and how to combat it, are lost in the noise of wanton chaos. But isn’t that what the “Black Men” behind this intended pandemic want – chaos, panic, hopelessness, leading to human vulnerability – a people becoming easy prey for manipulation?

Well that's what terror is for, you see. But there is such a program as I say, agenda ID2020. You see the usual characters involved and their agenda. Real ID for everybody they call it, you know, and you have your number. And some of them, it's already up and running for people who want it, and who join it. Yeah.

So, there you go. That will be used for everything. Just like the old science fictions had you down with barcodes and stuff, or chips. Here it comes, it's all there. So, it's no surprise. A lot of folk will run for it actually. A lot of youngsters will run for it thinking it's cool, you know. I remember doing the article when the chip was put under the skin maybe 10 years ago or more, as a test run for big company that had nightclubs and things and dance clubs. You can go in there and get the little chip under your arm, in the forearm and it would be charged like a credit card. They could charge it, just put a scanner over the top of it, with so many credits for the bar. You went up there to get something, you just swipe your arm. And you show off to your girlfriend, you now. Until about a month later, and the thing's getting, you swipe the thing and there's a big boil over it. It doesn't look that appealing anymore to the girlfriend, right. Never mind the realities.

Anyway, that's how they're going to go with all this stuff. Anything that's cool, you always get a certain segment of society that goes ahead first, you see. To be cool. To be noticed. Until everybody is the same as them and then they're just one of the crowd. It's like the tattoos. The whole fad was pushed. I remember them doing a program years ago about who was pushing it, the TV shows are pushing it, blah, blah, blah, blah. Then they all started getting these tattoos, you see. And it came from being on their derrieres apparently for the women, to copy them in the arms, then eventually they get them on their faces. And the avant-garde are always, I'm more cool, I've got more tattoos. Until everybody's got them and then they're just one of the crowd then. You see?

And then you have...

US 'Help' To Virus-Stricken Iran Comes In The Form Of... More Sanctions Of Course! - zerohedge.com / 19 March 2020

That's the US help to Iran, is more sanctions as they're down, ya-da, ya-da, ya. Terrible. It's really horrific. You know what I thought too, I'm sure you saw it in the newspapers. That the people who really are trying to help the people in that poor area of Italy that's been heavily, heavily hit, big Chinese jets were coming in with full medical teams, nursing teams, who've already been working with their own pandemics, and with massive crates of medical supplies and medications, all the stuff that you need, and gowns and masks and everything, gloves. And to help. That is something. Because who else, what Western countries are going to this length to help each other? Even their own people? Think about that, folks.

What is that, what a statement to make. Of course, China is making hay out of it. But that's what all countries would do. I feel so sorry for Italy because, and again, it tells you how the Western societies have been. They've had a war on them, even before World War II started, it was a massive war on the culture and the people. Planned, directed and managed and financed, it didn't happen by itself.

I read about two other doctors that had come out. You see, who's rushing in to help the Italians in their own countries, and around the surrounding areas? Doctors who are in their 70s and 80s, who are retired, have come in to help. Because the young folk are staying away. What you're reading right now is so important to understand what's happening and what has happened to values of all kinds. A lot of nursing staff too are just keeping away or took off sick because they're terrified. Just terrified. But here's people who literally, they know they'll probably die, and they've already got doctors, there were some articles there the other day who did come back to help and they are dead with the virus. Supposedly, so we're told, the virus. That's a sad, sad comment right there. And yet Chinese are coming in with teams. What does that say about the West?

The West is still squabbling, especially the States and Canada, over who, what company, what foreign, let's put it, what foreign company is going to get all the contracts for either antiviral drugs and any kind of subsequent vaccinations that come along the pike or whatever. As opposed to just helping the people with what's available right now and taking the antivirals from wherever they can get it, etc. Even supply facemasks and so on, you've got to ask China or somebody else to make them for you. How come? Are we just too stupid we don't make, we can't make anything anymore? No, the agenda is that you're not going to make anything anymore. Except debt of course. That's your free-trade agreements.

Anyway…

Fed relaunches crisis-era lending program to aid companies facing pandemic credit crunch - washingtonexaminer.com / 26 March 2020

You can believe that as much as you want because there's always incredible conditions. Not everybody gets help at all. Big one for Canada too and the States...

Big banks working together to limit hours, reduce number of branches

ctvnews.ca / 17 March 2020

(A: And they're closing down a lot of the branches so it's going to be harder to get banking help. Isn't it amazing too, to make things harder and harder and harder, to keep any kind of not just your economy going, but your personal survival going? Hm? You think that's accidental?)

The Canadian Bankers Association says...

(A: By the way, Canada's still paying off the money they borrowed from the US Federal Reserve. Because Canadian banks were bailed out with the 2007/8 and they were given special drawing rights, like they did all the banks in America got from the Federal Reserve. Well, Canada was lumped in there too, all the big banks. We still haven't paid it off and then they get hit with this. Of course, there's going, whether they're going to take the bail-ins now, I don't know. As opposed to the bailouts. Because we all signed onto them, didn't we, and folk wouldn't believe it at the time. So, the excuse they're giving is to...)

The move comes as public health officials urge people to limit contact with others in an effort to limit the threat of the novel coronavirus.

I remember too reading just a few days ago from a health site from the government here in Ontario, and for the north for Sudbury. They said that, oh, be afraid. This woman who's in charge said, I'm not going to beat around the bush, she said, I'm going to be, try to get you really, you know, on board with the whole thing, this is going to be really really bad, blah, blah, blah, blah, blah, you've got to do this and you've got to do that, etc. etc. and all the hype that's going on. And then she said, at present, right, after telling you all to try and stay at home and all the rest of it, and the businesses are all shut down and the restaurants are all closed… At present there is no community spread in Sudbury. There's no community spread in Sudbury. Well, if there's any spread it must be from folk still coming in from outside, way outside. You see how they rephrase things rather than say we're still bringing people in from all over.

Folk get connecting flights from Toronto, from here, but they're coming from all over the infected areas too. First law, you stop all that to protect the healthy population. That's the first law. It hasn't been done at all. Including the fact that Justin Trudeau said it was racist to stop people coming in. Well you can believe that if you want. And you can believe that he really means that for the reasons you think he does. No, no. There's something else afoot here obviously. It's meant to happen.

They've got the same woman who wrote the article for the government who's in charge of it supposedly for Ontario, she says, after telling you there's no community spread in Sudbury, as we're all supposed to stay home blah blah blah blah blah, she says that it will, it will spike, you know maybe next week or whatever. But they just know, out of no community spread, it's suddenly going to go woooof. Now, that can only happen in two ways. Either a lot of folk are going to get dumped in your midst with it, which they know they're going to dump, and they know that they've got it. Hm? Or, something's going to get released. What else could it be?

These are the people who couldn't tell you a good bet on a racetrack, you know. But they can just know that when there's no community spread, they know, they all seem to just know that there's going to be a massive spike in about a week to a week and a half. It's just, you know, no community spread, but it's going to be here. But what do they know that we don't know? Well, that's the two things. Either a lot are going to get dumped right here, of infected people, obviously, that's what it would take. Or else, it would be released. What else are you going to do, to know that, to just know that? Hm?

When you've got literally a martial law type scenario, and shut everything down, including nothing in the stores, and you're sitting waiting for what? Are you waiting for people to just get... And people are losing it. A lot of folk just can't take this kind of stress and they crackup. That is happening. And you've got this incessant drumbeat from the media, oh, oh, no, no. N-n-n. All intentional, folks.

It's so easy for governments, especially in socialized countries, to say, there-there, now, don't worry, we've got this plan here and there will be representatives who set up stalls or whatever, or food, whatever, once a week or whatever in the town dut-dut-dut... And don't worry, you won't be left without. So easy to do. But no. The message is, be petrified, go home, quarantine. And no mention about following up for food, paying electricity or anything else or how would you even pay.

This article too is...

Jackson Doughart on COVID-19: Canada's experiment in good faith may lead to catastrophe

nationalpost.com / 19 March 2020

(A: Because that's what it is, it would be good faith, you know, if people would just be sensible.)

If we’re going to use the honour system to prevent Canada from meeting the same fate as Europe, everyone needs to take their community obligations seriously.

That's the best, they're talking about canceling big meetings and things. But I think folk would take it seriously and be much more obedient if they knew that we weren't all going to be left without things to eat, as an example. Just basic stuff like that, you know, might be important.

This is how great our health system is here, that spends $40 million a year in telling you how good it is. This is just Ontario, right. And there's a really nice-looking young girl too, young woman…

Canadian has brain of 70-year-old after 'flawed' test let disease go undiagnosed for years

toronto.ctvnews.ca / 11 March 2020

(A: That gives you confidence about going into hospital here. The same hospital that just charged me before a week was out, when I was told I might be here for an awful long time or they didn't expect me to get out at all. And I was discharged without the medications to save my life, I had to get them myself. Which I did. It says…)

A young Canadian woman has been left with the brain of a 70-year-old after suffering from Lyme disease for more than seven years without treatment because she says tests failed to give her a proper diagnosis.

St. Catharines, Ont., woman Nikki Kent was bitten by a tick in 2013 at the age of 17, but didn't think much of it at the time. Kent said she noticed the tick on her leg as she sat by her pool, but simply plucked it off and moved on.

"I'm not even sure if I told my parents that it happened," the now 24-year-old said in a phone interview with CTV News Toronto. "I didn't think it was a big deal. I had no idea what Lyme disease even was at the time."

About a week later, she started to feel ill. The normally energetic cheerleader and soccer player began to feel weak but chalked it up to having the flu.

"I was falling apart," Kent said. She said doctors continued prescribing her different anti biotics but nothing seemed to help. "I had no idea what was going on. I thought maybe it was in my head. I was getting pretty upset that I was feeling this way and not knowing why."

Three years later, after doing some research of her own online, Kent thought she would get some answers when she was tested for Lyme disease in St. Catharines, but was disappointed when the results came back negative. She wasn't aware, at the time, that a US$1,100 test from the United States would give her a more accurate result and tell her that she did have the disease.

(A: The tests here are rubbish, absolute rubbish.)

It would be another three years before Kent was finally diagnosed through testing conducted outside of Canada.

(A: Another three years it says here.)

Kent's situation is similar to thousands of other Canadians, experts say, who were misdiagnosed, or have gone undiagnosed, for Lyme disease and have had their health deteriorate as their nervous system is attacked by the disease.

Despite constantly feeling ill, Kent moved to London, England in 2014 to pursue a career in media and fashion. After about a year in London, she went backpacking to several different countries, but said she would often have to see doctors along the way.

Kent moved back to Ontario in 2016 and saw numerous doctors, none of them, she said, mentioned the possibility that she contracted Lyme disease.

(A: You get brain fog with it. It's like a pre-senile case when it starts hitting your nervous system.)

"That's when the brain fog started kicking in," Kent said. "I was struggling putting sentences together. I couldn't read a book. Even my family noticed I was mumbling more and wasn't easy to talk to. I was losing my memory."

Kent developed insomnia and experienced heart palpitations regularly. Her nervous system also began failing, which caused horrible tremors, she said.

Kent began to do her own research... And between doctors… And then she came to the conclusion she could have Lyme's disease. Eventually said she sent tests off to the States, came back positive, came back positive again. They are way more detailed intricate and better tests in the US than what they have in Canada.

In Canada, you see, if they did it properly, they'd have to treat you, it costs money. I'm not kidding you. This is in the article too. That's really what happens. I'm not kidding you; this is the real system here. It's pretty scary in fact. It's nothing to do with the doctors, the nurses especially, that are treating you, but they do their best. But the fact is the policies of these hospitals are disgusting.

And we'll have a little bit from Sir Humphrey Appleby. He's the Machiavellian senior civil servant in the hit 1980s British hit sitcom called Yes Minister about politicians, about high-level bureaucrats really. He once famously commented that, one should never believe anything until it's been officially denied by the government. And that's where we are today, 'eh, they officially deny everything. Until, then they tell you to be terrified when they admit too it's all done by design.

Now, we've got here too another great one in Ontario, just to give you confidence about the hospital…

COVID-19 patient in Ontario has died, health minister says

toronto.ctvnews.ca / 17 March 2020

Christine Elliott addressed the fatal Muskoka case, (A: That's the area south of me, Muskoka region.) adding that it is unclear at this time whether the novel coronavirus is in fact the cause of death.

(A: So, here's your confusing, right, the headline says...)

COVID-19 patient in Ontario has died, health minister says

(A: And then...)

...it is unclear at this time whether the novel coronavirus is in fact the cause of death.

(A: Right.)

"There has been a death.

(A: Mm. Ok. There's a big statement. That's why you get specialists that are put, well they're not even, there really just appointed as ministers. Like politicians.)

I'm very sorry and extend my condolences to this person's family," she said. "We have asked for the assistance of the coroner's office to do a complete examination and investigation to determine whether this person died because of COVID or with COVID."

According to a spokesperson for Elliott, the Barrie man was never listed as a confirmed case before he died, (A: [Alan chuckles.] You love how precise things are here.)

rather he was under investigation for the virus. COVID-19 was discovered after his death, Travis Kann said.

(A: [Alan chuckles.]   It's more and more confusing the more you read. I think folk don't know how to put things across now.)

The 77-year-old man, who died on March 11, could be the first COVID-19 related death in the province.

(A: Could be if they could find out if he had it before he died, I don't know.)

It really gives you confidence, where they can’t tell you that, they can’t decide that hey, for a newspaper article. Breaking news, 'eh? That's CTV news, that's not a little Mickey Mouse operation. And I have noticed that with so many articles now, you can't make head nor tails of them because of the way things are written. So...

patient in Ontario has died, health minister says okay.

Covid 19 patient.

Unclear if he died of the disease or if that was the cause of death. Hm. Well why don't you just wait and see and then do the proper stuff and find out before you do that kind of thing?

So anyway, here's another article too...

Tracking every case of COVID-19 in Canada - ctvnews.ca / 13 March 2020

What does the coronavirus do to your body?

usatoday.com / 16 March 2020

A visual guide of coronavirus infection, symptoms of COVID-19 and the effects of the virus inside the body, in graphics

And even these are also massively varied too by the way. As I say, they could encompass a whole bunch of other diseases and flus. The other day of course every paper went on board with it immediately...

Diarrhoea and loss of appetite could be early signs of coronavirus as scientists find almost half of patients experience one or more digestive symptoms

dailymail.co.uk / 20 March 2020

(A: And you find too, how many folks had digestive system symptoms before they get the virus, as a problem, like a habitual problem? Who knows? I mean they don't tell you that.)

Study of 204 Wuhan residents reveals 48.5 per cent had digestive symptoms

(A: Rather than say digestive abnormalities symptoms or whatever, we all have digestive symptoms, you know, otherwise we'd be dead and there'd be no digestion going on.)

Most also had the normal respiratory issues but seven people did not

(A: Right. So, some of them have the respiratory symptoms, but seven didn't.)

Those with digestive symptoms are less likely to be successfully treated and discharged compared to those with just respiratory symptoms

(A: And again, why would that be? Why would your digestive symptoms be more likely to cause you to die? Well, maybe they cleaned out the stores, there is no food. I mean, we're left wondering here. That's the Daily Mail online.)

...diarrhoea, vomiting and loss of appetite could be a symptom of coronavirus...

(A: ... it could also be a symptom of a whole bunch of other ones, you know. You get that too with that normal virus that goes around every year and other flus and things. Hhh-hm. There you are.)

And then…

In a Europe Closed Down by the Coronavirus the EU Opens its Doors to the US Army.

(A: That's quite an interesting article.)

Could the Defender become the Invader of Europe?

(A: Who knows.)

globalresearch.ca / 12 March 2020

I know that the military, the US has been stepping up the military before this just around Russia again of course. As the wars, you know, as the big corporations that run the countries, the military-industrial complex, they really miss the Cold War, so they had to remake it again. I gave a talk in the 90s that would happen, that that's exactly what would happen in fact. In the late 90s I said, you know if they want an enemy to get the missiles, in a race for missiles and expensive jets and all that going, then the have to resuscitate and revive the bad bear, the Russia bear, the bad bear of Russia. That's eventually what they did of course.

Another article here about...

The Extraordinary Decisions Facing Italian Doctors - theatlantic.com / 11 March 2020

That was about how they're overwhelmed, and again they put it down to bioethics. Once it comes down to a situation ethics, well we've only got so many things left to treat people with, who will we treat? ...and dut-dut-dut and dut. And that's where it is, 'eh.

'Who gets the ventilator?' Doctors say we need to decide now who gets care if COVID-19 overwhelms ICUs - nationalpost.com / 17 March 2020

And a lot of young folk are going along with this thinking that's okay to kill the old folk off. And they've got their memes on the Internet about it too. They have to remember that every big revolution doesn't stop with the initial target. Eventually they take in different sections above and below them step-by-step by step.

Another thing I found too is in China studies they found that people with type A blood, again, were less likely, had more of a chance of getting it more severe or dying with it. Hm. There's interesting little bits, if they are confirmed, again, with more testing in other countries. Interesting to see. You can also get a breakdown of the countries that obviously have a higher percentage of type A blood people, and you get ideas of things of how things will work out perhaps. But there's many other factors involved too.

So, if you've got type A with heartburn you better get some, you know, antacids very quickly. [Alan laughing.]   I think, maybe. Who knows? Who knows, 'eh? Because you'll probably find other things that will, next week with different types of blood types being the more predominant apparently to have bad, bad affects from it all. Who knows? Everybody gets in on the act, when every specialist out there gets the name out there, it's probably the only time in history they'll ever hear they get their name printed anywhere.

As I say, the distrust in public authority, that was Paul Craig Roberts, he’s got an article...

Have we brewed a whirlwind? - paulcraigroberts.org / 4 March 2020

With the destruction of the system in the West, can we even manage it? Pretty well.

How do I know if I have COVID-19? A guide to symptoms

ctvnews.ca / 2 March 2020

(A: Signs and symptoms again. Given to them by I guess some other specialists.)

SIGNS AND SYMPTOMS

(A: Right, here ya go. This is why you pay specialists. You might have a…)

fever

(A: These are what you might have, right. Remember, even when you get trained in medicine, they give you a whole host of signs and symptoms, and a lot of them forget that, doctors too forget. But it used to be stressed that the signs and symptoms, you won't get them all at the same time. You'd be very unique to have a patient with all the signs and symptoms for that disease. And what you're getting today too, most folk today in the West especially have been told, oh if you've got a little fever, a little cough, self-isolate for so many days, you see, at home. And then it breaks out in the paper they end up having to get taken into emergency eventually or intensive care because they're dying at home. It doesn't inspire confidence to me. So...)

fever

cough

(A: and then...)

difficulty breathing

(A: ...right...)

pneumonia in both lungs

(A: Now, pneumonia is really an affected that happens of it. It just means your lungs are filling up with basically blood in a sense if it's viral pneumonia. And it's your immune response to this disease that can kill you, it can make you very ill or if not kill you in fact. That's why the antivirals can try and fool the body the thing isn't as bad, or it isn't even present in the body, that's what they're trying to tell all the different response mechanisms in your body, just to ignore it. So, you can breathe, etc. And if that doesn't happen your lungs are overwhelmed with massive blood running in with all the different cells and so on, that are killer cells and phagocytes and leukocytes, etc., all the different cytes, 'eh. And it's not a tourist guide to all these cytes, it's just things your body happens to send there. Anyway, here we go again...)

pneumonia in both lungs

(A: So, pneumonia is a response to something, it's a condition you might say. Bacterial pneumonia is a bit different, with the dirty sputum and so on too. But similarly, you can't get a breath eventually. The alveolar tissue are pretty thin walled tissues for oxygen to pass through and your CO2 to come out and all that, before they give you your CO2 bill. And if they get damaged, which they do with this kind of thing, then you get fewer and fewer cells that are working for exchange. And that's what causes the problem.)

(A: Sometimes you've seen them, you've probably seen them in Italy, people on their bellies, with the tubes on the front of their faces but they're on their bellies to try to help them breathe easier. Because the pressure is bad enough on the lungs and often, they feel a bit more ability to breathe better and expand the lungs to get the air in when they're lying on their chest to an extent.)

(A: Then the other symptoms you might have, right. And remember too, fever, cough, difficulty breathing, pneumonia can happen with other things as well.   So…)

tiredness

(A: With anything too, it's like an infection, it wears you down, you get tired.)

aches and pains

(A: Well, that could be anything, 'eh?)

Nasal congestion or runny nose

(A: It could be a cold, or just a cold day. Or an allergy.)

Sore throat

diarrhea

(A: …and if it's getting worse you see, they have…)

shortness of breath or difficulty breathing persistent pain or pressure in the chest

(A: …which could be other things too, including a heart condition.)

new confusion or inability to arouse bluish lips or face

(A: …which obviously is not healthy.)

So, you've got a whole bunch of things that could or couldn't be. But the only way they can really tell, as I say, is with a proper working and accurate test. Obviously, right. So, like the previous flus, as I say, they often just lump them all down as a particular strain. And it's presumed, and they often find the games that governments play with the term presumed, and the presumption eventually vanishes as they want to show, for one reason or another, that there's actually more of a particular thing which they want you to believe exists. And it's not necessarily the case if they hadn't had the test.

Doctors map body's COVID-19 immune response: study - ctvnews.ca / 17 March 2020

We know that...

COVID-19 Italy: Nation passes China's coronavirus death toll, despite having fewer confirmed cases - nationalpost.com / 19 March 2020

And there's another spike happening right now apparently in Italy. Pandemics do, they can come and go and rise and fall is the idea too.

Ontario declares state of emergency amid COVID-19 pandemic

toronto.ctvnews.ca / 17 March 2020

"This is a decision not made lightly."

(A: And once again you're left with what do we do? Just go to your homes and sit there and stay there? Is that right? Hm? What are you supposed to…? But they certainly, and they tell you what they closed, which is pretty well everything, pretty well. But they don't tell you how life is still going to go on, hm.)

(A: And like everywhere else…)

Ontario has set aside a $100-million contingency fund, (A: Contingency for what, though?) And is receiving $200 million from the federal government.

The money will be used to open 75 more critical care beds in hospitals, as well as 500 post-acute care beds and to help hospitals set up 25 more COVID-19 assessment centres.

(A: So, this is going to cost $300 million for Ontario, 300 million right, for 75 more critical care beds in hospitals... And 500 post acute care beds... I mean really, they should have more post acute care beds anyway in hospitals. So, they're really making up for things they know they should have had before. Because you get post acute in lots of things. But 75 critical care beds, 'eh? N-n-n.)

Money… You know when government does anything, you probably see it when it comes holiday time for students. I can remember years ago reading articles where they, they would have sort of, amazing things like, Ontario government is giving, it would be $16 or $17 million to set up, like one of these quasi-private window cleaning companies that would employ 11 students. For how many millions was this? You know? What are they paying them? Well of course the money never gets to the bottom.

I mean money goes… We live in an awfully corrupt system, folks. We truly are, you know. And the last people who want efficiency, oh, you'll get it from, are bureaucrats and petty bureaucrats that run government political scenes as well.

Another article…

The Canada-U.S. border is not securable - politicians need to stop insulting our intelligence if we're going to survive - nationalpost.com / 19 March 2020

And has never been, especially during a pandemic. Because they're letting them cross back and forth, it's been a political thing that's been going on for the last few years with, we used to call them illegal aliens, that simply jump the queue. It makes a farce of the folk who apply in their own countries legally and wait and see what happens. These ones are basically just come in and say you're getting us whether you like it or not, and they just walk across from the States and Canada and back and forth all the time. The cops just stand by and watch them. Hm. What can you do? And it's from a place in Québec mainly it's all been happening for years now. It's a complete farce, you know.

Then you have a story for the States really, and Canada, or anywhere…

It Pays to Be Rich During a Pandemic

How the wealthy, powerful, and connected are exploiting the loopholes in our health-care system

theatlantic.com / 15 March 2020

And yes, there's nothing new in any of that of course. But they have no problem getting test gets for all the wealthy, or the celebrities. It's just instant. Even football teams in fact. Because you know, they're worth a lot of money. But you just can't get the kits for the normal folk.

And back in Pennsylvania as I say, I talked to a person there and it said about the numbers in different parts of a few counties there, and they said that these were all, they had put them down as coronavirus. And this was like confirmed cases pretty well, that's how they were putting the articles across. But at the end of the article it said, we shall know more when we get the first actual test kits on the 23rd. They haven't even got the kits yet. Well, how could you be getting confirmed? Do you understand all this nonsense going on right now?

And again, why don't they give the completely published up-to-date versions of the regular average flu cases that they get in every year, what they are? At the moment. Because as I say, there's two more, at least two more different flus going around, different kinds anyway. Of course, they came out of China supposedly, about the same time, just after Wuhan, just after the virus broke out. There were two more flus broke out, to confuse things even more. And I'm sure it's all over here too. So, but if you put them all down without kits, then fffffff [Alan laughing.] that's quite a potpourri you might say, or a mosaic of guesses in a sense, isn't it?

So obvious, to me obviously it's a massive agenda. Because there's so many if's and iffy things involved here. And it's been planned from the very top with all the NATO countries obviously involved, heavily involved in it. On board together with the exact same step-by-step-by-step.

First ignore it and have the press lambast anybody who mentions it from the supposed alternates sites. Then you come in, then you give the permission for the press to go into overdrive and terrify the public. Which they do quite happily, much more than the conspiracy sites did. Then you go on from there step-by-step by step. That's how it's done.

Let the prisoners out of prisons, which they're all doing. And even telling them, telling the same prisoners, in the papers, in all the newspapers, that the police have been told not to arrest them if they get involved in certain areas of crime. So, if you're a criminal and you get into the gangs again once you're out there, you're not going to get arrested. They all know that. And it's going to be permanent Christmas time in the middle of summer when it comes along because they've been told they're not going to get arrested. Well, when that all happens then the troops will have to come out and deal with things too, you see.

Do you kind of see where it's all planned to go? Don't you? Hm? Don't you think so? Who knows? Maybe prison’s going to be the only safe place to be eventually because there will be no prisoners there. But you might still get some three meals a day.   Because at the moment everybody's scratching their heads, with empty shelves, everywhere, in Europe, here and everywhere else. What on earth are they gonna do, 'eh?   Hm? [Alan chuckles.] What are you gonna do?

I can imagine, you could do a really good, a kind of a dark comedy about this in a sense. There's so many aspects of it. Where you would have big big massive drones going over the cities etc., after they've petrified the public and terrified them into buying like never before, of everything that they need and so on. And they'll say, we must take in food, you've cleaned out the country's emergency thing, we're taking the food off you. And they fly over you. And they've got these massive electromagnets hanging. [Alan laughing.] And you're going to see billions of cans just go flying through rooftops zapping up to this thing. [Alan laughing.] That would be quite… You could do… It's funny how your mind works sometimes because I get little pictures like that with the kind of things that they're telling us. But yeah, it's so obvious that people have no confidence in government. That's because government has given us no reason to ever trust them in fact.

And things will get rather nasty. So, don't lose your cool, folks. Because folk are cracking up now. They really believe they're in a movie now. The movies never end up well, have you noticed, all these movies. So folk are terrified and it's working awfully well by those in charge of it. And everybody will do their parts. The police will do their part and they will go overboard as the public get nastier towards them, when they're denied entrance for the second time or 10th time that day into the same store for food. That's happening already in a sense. Things like that.

Then they expect the police might start getting sick with it and they want time off as well. And believe you me, there's a lot of folk come down not from a virus in situations like that but through terror. Terror. If you want to get all the signs and symptoms there of fatigue and lethargy and so on, just get constant stress for a while, terrible fear, and you'll start breaking down. You get the symptoms of it from the psychological effects of it. Terrible thing to have. And that will go for police and everybody else as well.

Because if they're married and they go home, and their wives are there or their, maybe the police themselves are wives, and they're terrified of even bringing it home where they've got children. So, it's a domino effect, that's how things are designed to go. The military are talking about it too, they'll come down with it.

And I tell you, folks have no idea, the average people have no idea, none at all of how to manage self-quarantine and basically barrier techniques to ensure they don't get it. It's a very intensive way of what you clean, even if you have gloves, and you take this off and you take that off. And you've got to do your shoes. You've got to do everything. Where your shoes have walked, keep them outside your house blah, blah, blah, blah, blah. And then sterilized the shoes and boots or whatever it is.

You've got to, if you have two people and you've got one that you call the dirty one, and the other one is the clean one, when they hold things open for the dirty one, who puts things out, you can't cross contaminate. It's a highly intensive thing to know and most folk can't manage it and they don't know how to do it. And a lot of folk in the hospitals don't even know how to do it. It's sad. Very sad. Very sad but true.

Because one tiny little thing, we are told 'eh, and you've got the pictures almost emblazoned in your mind with psychic driving, just like 9/11 towers, boom, boom, boom. And you see this awful thing you expect to come out of a kind of a cartoon or a Simpsons cartoon, and it's embedded in your brain, it's got a picture of the thing blown up, this big drawing of this thing... in everything you look at, 'eh. Which is quite amazing.

It's like the AIDS one, 'eh. When the AIDS one came out, they terrified the public then too. The people thought they could get AIDS just from folk having accidents, car accidents and things. The ambulance drivers wouldn't go near them, they were terrified. Because it was a brand-new thing too and they were terrified, oh it could be airborne, it could be this, blah blah blah. Same kind of thing.

So again, psychic driving is… And again, they did drawings for the peasantry back then. Really good drawings. Big drawings. Sometimes half a page, of this tiny tiny little thing they thought was the virus for HIV. And they even said, it seemed to be part bacterium and part virus, like a virus. And oh my God, this brand-new thing, from outer space or something, you know. That's how it was put across to you. These were drawings, you know, artist renditions. Probably from horror comics, I would imagine. And that's how they terrified the public back then.

But literally, poor souls were getting in accidents and the ambulance drivers wouldn't, they were petrified. They'd go, oh my God, you know what I mean. Because of the same thing, oh, we're all going to die. And the World Health Organization was going overboard, oh yeah, in about five years time, six years, 10 years at the max, 95% of the folk will have this virus etc. etc. etc. etc. etc. And here you go again, 'eh. Here ya go.

But again, no one would dare say to the Biolabs, this is enough, the people aren't going to have this anymore. And stop churning out these scientists that literally make a living getting paid to find pretended ways to, well if this virus just, as though it was intelligent or something, if this decides to mutate in 10 different steps here into this or that, well we might be ready for it by making it happen first. Meaning, inventing it. Hm. And since we all have a say on life on the planet, maybe we should start saying, that's enough. That's enough. Hm? And it's not just Level IV BioLab's that do this. Level III are doing them too. Some of these countries can actually do it in a kitchen, folks, create things like that. There ya go.

Anyway, don't be panicking. Keep in touch with your buddies. Help each other out in these times which are not good at all for us. And we'll get through it one way or another. We have no say in the matter. For those that are cracking up, we're all in the same boat. When the power has been taken out of your hands for most things, you've gotta keep your head and just do basic basic survival and get along day by day. That's all you can do.

Because this was planned, I'm sure, a long time ago. If it wasn't this time it would be released, something would be released down the road, etc. As you know. Because the economy has been caput for a while. They want us into austerity. They've been talking about forcing us into austerity for years so they can control us all. And less children in the West, etc. And as I say, the banks are just, you know, they are jokes. They’re backed by nothing and they keep telling us we are in debt all the time. And they keep devaluing the price of your currency, so you need more and more of the same dollars or pounds to pay for whatever. And it's not meant to go on forever that way.

The control freaks could make it go on forever and even give you more bang for your buck. But no. We are controlled that minutely. Money runs everything. That's what old Rothschild said long time ago. He didn't care who appointed people as leaders or kings or queens, as long as he had control of the money, he says, they all belong to me, they do what I tell them. Money controls, that's it. I was kind of paraphrasing but that's what he said in his own memoirs.

Money is the key to things. And you can force folk to do anything, even get rid of their own children if need be, for economic reasons. That's taught in sociology of course naturally.

So, keep cool and look after each other. Because that's all we have really, isn't it? And I'll get in touch next weekend. Do your basic cautions and we'll come through it. Okay?

I'm Alan Watt from Ontario Canada and it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Topics of show covered in following links:

We’re not going back to normal

technologyreview.com / 17 March 2020

The Coronavirus COVID-19 Pandemic: The Real Danger is “Agenda ID2020”

globalresearch.ca / 12 March 2020

California governor issues statewide order to ‘stay at home’ effective Thursday evening

cnbc.com / 19 March 2020

The Form Of... More Sanctions Of Course!

zerohedge.com / 19 March 2020

Fed relaunches crisis-era lending program to aid companies facing pandemic credit crunch

washingtonexaminer.com / 26 March 2020

Big banks working together to limit hours, reduce number of branches

ctvnews.ca / 17 March 2020

COVID-19: Canada's experiment in good faith may lead to catastrophe

nationalpost.com / 19 March 2020

Canadian has brain of 70-year-old after 'flawed' test let disease go undiagnosed for years

toronto.ctvnews.ca / 11 March 2020

COVID-19 patient in Ontario has died, health minister says

toronto.ctvnews.ca / 17 March 2020

Race

unz.com / 4 March 2020

Tracking every case of COVID-19 in Canada

ctvnews.ca / 13 March 2020

What does the coronavirus do to your body?

usatoday.com / 16 March 2020

and loss of appetite could be early signs of coronavirus

dailymail.co.uk / 20 March 2020

In a Europe Closed Down by the Coronavirus the EU Opens its Doors to the US Army. Could the Defender become the Invader of Europe?

globalresearch.ca / 12 March 2020

'Who gets the ventilator?' Doctors say we need to decide now who gets care if COVID-19 overwhelms ICUs

nationalpost.com / 17 March 2020

The Extraordinary Decisions Facing Italian Doctors

theatlantic.com / 11 March 2020

First patient to get coronavirus vaccine today as hopes for cure emerge dailystar.co.uk / 16 March 2020

Have we brewed a whirlwind?

paulcraigroberts.org / 4 March 2020

How do I know if I have COVID-19? A guide to symptoms

ctvnews.ca / 2 March 2020

COVID-19 Italy: Nation passes China's coronavirus death toll, despite having fewer confirmed cases

nationalpost.com / 19 March 2020

Ontario declares state of emergency amid COVID-19 pandemic

toronto.ctvnews.ca / 17 March 2020

Doctors map body's COVID-19 immune response: study

ctvnews.ca / 17 March 2020

The Canada-U.S. border is not securable - politicians need to stop insulting our intelligence if we're going to survive

nationalpost.com / 19 March 2020

It Pays to Be Rich During a Pandemic

theatlantic.com / 15 March 2020

Mar. 29, 2020 "Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt (Blurb, i.e. Educational Talk): " C'mon, Everybody Sing... We'll meet Again, Don't Know Where, Don't Know When, If We're Allowed Out of Our Homes Some Sunny Day " *Title and Dialogue Copyrighted Alan Watt - Mar. 29, 2020 (Exempting Music and Literary Quotes)

Mar. 29, 2020 (#1767)

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

(Blurb, i.e. Educational Talk)

C'mon, Everybody Sing...

"We'll meet Again, Don't Know Where, Don't Know When,

If We're Allowed Out of Our Homes Some Sunny Day."

© Alan Watt Mar. 29, 2020

*Title & Dialogue Copyrighted Alan Watt - Mar. 29, 2020 (Exempting Music and Literary Quotes)

Information for purchasing Alan’s books, CDs, DVDs and DONATIONS:

America: Stripe, Cash, Cash App, personal checks, (Bitcoin and Ethereum for donations only)

Outside America: Stripe, Cash, personal checks, (Bitcoin and Ethereum for donations only)

Stripe Orders: USE THE DONATE LINK ON THE WEBSITE – AND –
Send a separate email along with the donation (list your order, name and address)

PayPal no longer accepted for donations and orders

Click the link below for your location (ordering info):
USA Canada Australia or New Zealand All Other Countries

THE OFFICIAL WEBSITES OF ALAN WATT

cuttingthroughthematrix.com, cuttingthroughthematrix.net,

cuttingthroughthematrix.us, alanwattcuttingthroughthematrix.ca

MIRROR SITE

cuttingthrough.jenkness.com

INTERNATIONAL AND MULTILINGUAL SITE

alanwattsentientsentinel.eu

[emphasis added to articles with underscore and bold]

"Code of Silence" by Bruce Springsteen

There's a code of silence that we don't dare speak

There's a wall between us and a river so deep

And we keep pretending that there's nothing wrong

But there's a code of silence and it can't go on

Is the truth so elusive, so elusive as you can see that it ain't enough baby

To bridge the distance between you and me

There's a list of grievance 100 miles long

There's a code of silence and it can't go on

Hi folks I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through the Matrix on March 29, 2020. Now this will be another large talk this week. I don't plan it like this. I honestly don't sit down and decide what I'm going to talk about. I do look through stories during the week sometimes or even a day before, I just collect a few just to mention, if they are warranted at all and I'll read them. But I prefer just to come on spontaneously, I've always done the same thing. It's more natural, isn't it?

I like to talk to people the same way. If I see people in person, you've gotta be natural about things. Not this this pretentious nonsense that you're trained to believe, and folk actually emulate the characters on television news programs, the anchor people that they've grown up with. They try to emulate how they pause, and looking sternly, and how they pronounce things. It's so unnatural. If someone came into your house and sat across the table for a cup of tea or something, you'd think they were a robot if they did that kind of thing in your presence, you see. So, I'd rather just be quite natural.

So, because it's a long, long talk, just like last week I'll split it up, for those that want it. I'll do the whole program for those who want to download the whole thing, on my website @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. I'll also split it up into parts as well so that you can bring down each segment if you want to. Some folks like to upload them too so it might be easier for them if it's all broken up as well. But for the rest of the people just continue with the talk and it will go right through the whole, however long it will end up being. And that's how we'll do it.

I always like to tell you that I hope that you're all doing pretty well, as well as can be expected. Apart from all the usual things that happen in life to us all at some time or another in different ways. And the problems that people have with even getting work, today you're put off your work if you have any at all and you're locked down, for most people too, as we go through this massive massive experiment. Which really has, I gave talks years ago on this very very thing, even in the late 90s, and then the SARS one in 2003, and other outbreaks after that too in 2009/10 and so on.

Back in the 90s I mentioned the fact that eventually you would be made to take some kind of chip or ID chip or something which would be electronically tagging you and you wouldn't walk into a supermarket eventually without it. It would have to have your vaccinations up-to-date, or alarms would go off and all the fingers would point at you and then you'd be dragged off. And these things are coming down the pike.

Because you see, you're living in an incredible agenda. And most folk could never get that through their heads. It doesn't matter even if you show them. You can't help most folk who don't want to know. It's a choice to know things. And if you choose not to know, then they feel they don't have to be involved in anything except to go along with orders or props that they get from the behaviorists that run our lives today. And run them for their fictional movies and dramas, and on the Internet too. The Internet is incredibly well organized and run by behaviorists teams, BITs, [Behavior Insights Teams] that prompt you to go to all the sites they want you to go, and not to look at the actual sites you're trying to get to.

We are so incredibly, incredibly managed and folk have no idea just how intense it is. We've come an awful long way, really, in 20, 30 years basically. And don't forget too that even the Internet was set up by ARPA that became DARPA. They set it up really during the Cold War back in the 50s and 60s and they were running the games with Russia back and forth for a long long time. So, the Internet as such was highly developed. I know people who had been able to buy some of the equipment from the 1970s and 80s from the NSA, used stuff, old stuff and so on. The old stuff really was high-definition and a lot of the computer types of stuff was way faster than they're even selling to you today.

We're living in a fool's paradise in some way. But it could also be a hell for those that know. It's true enough, you can only be a fool in a paradise if you don't know what's going on. And you don't care to know. And they say ignorance is bliss. But you truly are living through an amazing agenda.

Back in the 90s and later too I mentioned that, to get the whole agenda through would take wartime scenarios. Either outside attack, and of course the 9/11 came along and that brought in the first half of it. The next would be economic. And we got the crash in 2007/2008. Money literally since 2008 in Canada, for sure, because we borrowed from the US Federal Reserve by the way to bail us all out and we're still paying for it all, the dollar in Canada from 2008 onwards dropped and dropped and dropped in real purchasing power by a good, almost, well, it's almost 50%, 60% at times, for the same items. No doubt about it. Food has probably tripled in price or more or quadrupled in price. Especially meat, and they want to wean you off it.

But anyway, in wartime scenarios, real imaginary or fictitious or whatever, or using the war on a virus, they bring in basically the same martial law type scenarios. Emergency powers acts, I've got them all, all the different things here. They can do whatever they want.

Like again, back in the 90s I talked about how you steer the public. The public go to sleep, or like, they say we are like cattle grazing in fields. Or sheep, sheep's pretty good for that too. And if it's a nice sunny day and there's not much happening as you go through life, it's an eternal sunny day in your mind and you're playing yourself and having a good time. It's hard for them at the top with all the big massive think tanks who are directing the future on where they want you to go and your children to go and grandchildren so on, it's hard to get you to move and accept things when you're peaceful and happy. The longer you're at it chewing the grass, you see, in that beautiful field there, the less you want to, you'll say, no I'm not budging.

Once you get things going, the stampede, and you get the horror... and there's the cattle just like Rawhide the movie, the series on TV Rawhide, you know, don't try to understand them, just move them, move them and brand them. So, you get them stampeding. They're wild eyed and ahhhhhhhhh, you know. And you can't, once they're wild eyed and they're really getting going, they lose their minds and it's easy to steer them by people in the front and sides to nudge them along in the direction they want them to go. Once you've got the people really stampeding, the idea, technique is not to let them settle down then. If you've got a whole list of things to accomplish, that's the time to move them here, and then move them there, and move them, and they keep moving and they'll do what they're told, you see, because they're panicked. So that's the first thing in warfare.

It's astonishing to realize, as I've said so many times, we've never had a generation, we've never had a generation of people who have had complete peace in their life. We haven't been allowed that. I keep saying, we get financial crashes at least two or three a century, the big ones. You're plundered, your countries are totally plundered by the big banks and stock market and the people who manage it all, for themselves.

Then you have wars, they give you wars, and it isn't for often a whole generation later that they'll really tell you and start to sneak out in books deep, because it's now taken off the official secrets act and you find that the real reasons for war, completely different, completely different really, and deceitful, from what they told the public at the time. If they tell the people at the time the truth, they won't go off to war.

So, you must again always, even if you want to invade someone, then you've got to pretend that you're being invaded first even if you're not. It's amazing the doublethink and doublespeak that goes on to get you to go off. But once the killing starts and some of your own people get killed, it's easier then to instill the hate and the rage and retribution and vengeance and away...and that can carry on for a long time.

So, we don't get peace, we're not given peace. We're not allowed peace. Because peace would break down the system that we live under. It's an incredible system. It's nothing, as I've said so many times, like the system that you're brainwashed to believe it is with your talking heads on TV and the people who are on your authorized shows and so on. It's a vastly different system. And it isn't new when I say that it's run by experts or people who claim they're experts. Now they claim they are really, really into many more advanced sciences than the people of Julian Huxley's day or even HG Wells’s day. You'd be surprised just how scientific as far as data collection on the public they had at the end of the 1800s in places like Britain, especially. Then into the 20th century and the mass propaganda outfits. It's just astonishing the marketing techniques used to get wars started and to keep them going and so on.

It's like Edward Bernays. Again, he's given a lot of credence, or accolades for being one of the top marketers who can pretty well… a persuader of people, you see, through marketing techniques by supposedly understanding the subconscious motives the people have for buying things. They're not really conscious of their drives inside of them. Don't forget that Bernays, his uncle was Freud. So, you've got this, you got people like Freud and Bernays who specialize in sussing out their victims, put it that way, to get them to do what you want them to do. And many more of course. Now it's even more sophisticated.

But even back then Bernays was approached by the cabal who wanted a war, World War I for America. Don't forget that Britain was already in it from 1914. And they just set up that year too, 1914, that's why they set up the central bank system and the Federal Reserve in America in order to tax the public for a coming war. Just like the Bank of England, the Bank of England could loan to other countries and banks and so on and they put the public, the whole population of Britain down as the guarantors to pay it off through, and would take it off by taxes on the income tax act. So, the US had to be the same. So, they gave it different names for the same system, exactly the same system.

They brought in Warburg from Germany and made him, one of the brothers, the other one was still in Germany, the head of the bank. They lent to every country for three years. Massive, massive returns, maybe 200% 300% interest from nations that might lose. You can charge incredible interest rates. Then come 1917 they said we'd better get in there, get the Americans in there to make sure that this war goes of what the way we want it to go, so we can start getting all our payments back to the bankers, you see. And that's what they did. That's why America went in.

Bernays was approached… Well he actually, I say approached, he was part of the same cabal actually, they all knew each other and worked with each other. He helped to get America in the war propagandizing stories and so on. They even brought out a newspaper for themselves, gave all the different stories that they wanted to get the people really enraged to go to war. Then after the war was over, being a good psychopath, and psychopaths love to boast, you know, he wrote another book about how they deceived Americans and conned them into going to war.

This is the reality. This is not conspiracy theory, you know. It's written by the people who were involved in it like Bernays himself. And you have to get yourself out of the little rut in saying, oh that was a little quirk in time, you know, that was a little one-off. No, it wasn't. I mean Bernays himself kept, he actually worked for many US governments and this public-private partnership was not that new really, it depends who the master is. And Bernays literally got America, he got the government to send troops to Latin America to overthrow any people who were trying to be socialist.

He had the American Fruit Company as a client, massive client, and massive shares of his own in it. They elected a guy [Jacobo Árbenz] who wanted to start spreading some of the wealth inside the country [Guatemala] instead of it getting taken out to shareholders in America. Bernays managed to, he actually set up another big propaganda newspaper and a film crew and put out in the cinemas how evil this country was and how terrible it was and how socialist it was and how they'd take down the nation, etc. But it was all in order to get America to send the troops down and kick the guy out. And America's been doing that kind of thing ever since.

So that's only one little thing. It's got nothing to do [Alan chuckles.] really with what I'm talking about tonight. Except, the system in which we live is a system with incredible think tanks that work full time. It's hard for you to imagine, these that aren't little guys that go into hobbies and just come and meet once in a while. Real think tanks are think tanks for the foundations, are a department of the foundations. There are many, many foundations run by the big multibillionaires. And some of the billionaires, most of the billionaires you'll never really know. You see the front ones for them, they always put front men out there pretending to be self-made people and so on, or geniuses, that's how it's done. And it's good enough for the public. I mean, why should they be lying to you? You know?

But the fact is, they lie to you because they never want you to have any truth at all. They want you to be like a sponge that just soaks up the propaganda that's dished out daily to you so you behave in the right way.

The think tanks plan futures just like big business projects and business plans. Some of these big big companies, if you read their projects from say 1960 and 70, they were doing fifty-year plans of where they would take their company, and in the process some of them, massive companies, take the world with them or the nations with them. They don't just take the companies, everything must…

It's very much like an organism, these corporations. And this applies to tyrants too, and tyrannical peoples at times not just the individual tyrants. But if you look at a field, a field will have different wildflowers and herbs and grasses that will grow over time in that field. And some will take over from some, and then the old ones die off as the new ones take over and take all the nutrients. In other words, an organism alters the terrain for its own survival. Very important to understand that.

It alters the terrain and corporations are the same way. Other things are too but corporations are definitely the same way. They're set up not just with business and profit. They've got a mandate. They create a whole mystique about themselves to their employees for instance. Like a cause, they've got causes. They make sure you know they've got causes too, and their charitable causes as well and we're part of the community, etc. But they have a big massive project to try to get the public to believe the same thing, that they are part of the community or are a part of the nation and so on. It used to be a slogan for many many years that what was good for GM was good for America. And even presidents said that occasionally. That's how interwoven the system is with commerce, massive commerce and wealth and so on.

So, don't just pooh-pooh think tanks thinking it's all a bunch of old characters that go in there with smoking pipes and they just chat and stare at the ceiling and vocalize their dreams. It's completely different. It's highly organized. Some of these foundations have as much bureaucracies, and some corporations have as much bureaucracies as some governments have, like civil servants and staff and departments. You've got to understand how it really works.

Because you see, you're whole, what you're living in today is the culmination of many of these think tanks working together. And it is pyramid style because there's a snob appeal involved, and definitely a gang mentality, and organized, a very well-organized gang mentality to those that run the world. If you read basic sociology and political sciences, they'll go into, well yeah, they're kind of like clubs that start off and gentlemen's clubs long ago and so on. Partly true but it's much much deeper than just that of the wealthy elite starting... This has gone on for at least, pretty openly in some ways, from the 1700s that we can detect, hm.

People don't know it, that you had the lunar society, it was called the lunar society that met, you know, every time the full moon I think it was in the US, and they'd travel back and forth back then, and Britain. And they really did communicate through their writings and so on with each other all the time. Rothschild at the time was one of them. Some inventors were part of it too and I know who they were [e.g. Benjamin Franklin and James Watt]. They literally, the idea was to plan the kind of society they were going to bring in through science, and financing of certain sciences. You see, other sciences get nowhere if you can't get funding. So, money is the key to everything today and it has been for a long time.

If you hold the purse strings of the nation, and the government, heads of governments must come to you, every year, which they all do cap-in-hand for borrowing more money for the big massive projects. Which of course the lender's so happy to encourage them and give money here and give money there and create more debt. Which means more taxation, it pays off the lender himself. So, it's quite a nice cozy set up they have at the top.

But again, they've got societies, or brotherhoods if you like, to make sure it all works that way. The Council on Foreign Relations is one of them. Everybody talks about masonry, it's no big... You got to look into the where these characters, the CFR is one of them, Council on Foreign Relations. The Royal Institute of International Affairs is a big one, massive one, who helped set up in fact, actually directed the whole system before it was even called that name, but it was the Lord Alfred Milner group, with the Kindergarten. He literally ran the British Empire, the members of it ran the British Empire and they appointed each other to government positions and commercial positions too, and literally ran the world's wealth. Nothing has changed, they still do.

They have the divisions for the Far East for the unification of the various countries and so on, the Pacific Rim companies. They have members in China. They've got members in Japan. And all over the place. They also have the CFR in America, and they've got the European CFR now for most or all of the European members of Parliament. All basically a private club, folks.

Whoever joins them swears allegiance to them first and foremost, so don't think that politicians are serving your country. They're not serving your country. They've already given their oaths to something else. But they have a big agenda and it's not, it's not just developing as we go along. They get what they want, as I say, how do we make this happen? And they'll have plan A, B, C and D. And like a big business plan they can say this might take us 20 years, 30-year plan, 40-year plan for this part and so on. And that's how it's done.

Like the United Nations. The same as the United Nations. Who set up the United Nations? The same organization, the Royal Institute of International Affairs. They set up the League of Nations back then, you see, the first one. The World Bank they set up. The IMF they set up. The Bank for International Settlements, all the private institutions, they own them themselves, the ones at the top who own the organizations. And they plan the world.

They plan the world's direction minutely through the countless think tanks underneath them. Like massive bureaucracies, those that... governors basically, and there are governors of the world, unelected governors are appointed in a definite, almost like a military type system, have no qualms about dealing with the general population. I've gone through so many talks in the past and remember you can go to cuttingthroughthematrix.com website into the archives and listen to the talks I’ve given over many many years.

I go through the different characters that pop up in our history, you know, in our recent past and present time too, who shape, they shape the culture that we grew up in basically. They designed it. They planned it. And they promoted it. And they were held up as heroes to the certain class that ruled the world. And it is the system of a class, not just upper classes, it's above even that. These are characters who really are banded together in what they claim is a moral duty, as they enrich themselves to save the world, or save the society, or what they claim is the betterment of society.

The Georgia Guidestones is only one monument they put up. You'll get taught their monuments by learning what they teach in universities in modern social sciences and so on as you get indoctrinated into their projects. And they get a lot of lesser workers that actually work the projects for them and who are also well rewarded as long as you parrot the right mantras.

Not so long ago I remember hearing, and they do, they give you the front people who get sudden publicity. Because stars, you know, the star making machinery for stars, for actors and musicians, is a massive business to make people stars. Regardless of whether they have talent or not. But the same star making machinery makes scientists, for those who haven't caught onto that. An old technique too in Bernays days, he was up doing it as well. They would get people like Einstein who was more of advocating social policies and so on for the planet as opposed to a scientist. But they promoted him as a genius. And that's how it was done.

They still do it today. They give you the front people that seem to… You have these visions of a small planet, these big tall people with big long strides, striding over, you know, designing, giving you the new kind of cars that you're going to drive and this, that and the other and how you're going to live. And they're being projected to you and promoted to you as though you should just listen to them, somehow, they're geniuses. And you really believe it, most folk believe what they are… They can't fathom that, no, these are front people for much bigger bigger purposes.

As I say, how come everyone who gets to the multibillionaire class, in the sciences mainly that we are all using today, which help to indoctrinate and enslave us again, how come they all suddenly just get to a point, a certain dollar value and say oh my God I think there's too many people, of the wrong kind, but I'd like to vaccinate them all and make them healthy, but there's just too many people? We know who. Bill Gates has said that of course before. And it's up on YouTube still, you get the clips, he talks about it.

But it's amazing, they're all on board with the same projects. They suddenly want to be philanthropists. But they don't do anything outside a certain narrow vision. They all come on board with the exact same program, which is not normal either. If you've got so many people, you think, I'll go off and do this kind of thing, which you take, oh well, you know it's up to them. But no. They're all on board with the same, with each other too. So once again you're back to that kind of club aspect, you know, here's the club and they're all on board with the same thing, they're sworn to it and they back each other up.

And they've been given power, like the Royal Institute of International Affairs said, with the Council on Foreign Relations too, their American branch, they said some years ago and I read the articles at the time, where they said that it's time for the big philanthropists to take the proper position in governance, global governance. Well wait a minute, you've just knocked any idea of democracy out the window. Although democracy has been a bit of a fake up until now of course but it's knocked out the window, you can't have them both.   You can have appointees, self-appointees at that, by a particular private club over all of… But that's what we've got through public-private partnerships, etc. etc.

But they have big agendas and don't forget the agendas are always the same, there's too many of you. All the way from Thomas Malthus right up to the present time. Every one of them that was held up as somehow a genius or philosopher, a philosopher like Bertrand Russell, who was really a mathematician. But his big thing with social change. Again, the same social change that's like a mantra to the brotherhood, 'eh, there's too many of you. And you should all live this way. And many of you shouldn't have children at all, you should be sterilized. And on and on and on it goes.

And then again most folk, folk will actually turn around, if you're well indoctrinated and brainwashed, just with your education and watching TV and so on, you're getting bits and bytes all the time accumulating in your brain, well yeah, there's too many people, there's too many of the wrong people. And it never dawns on them that you're all being used. When you adopt viewed points that have an emotional tang to it especially, you're being used. Because your emotions then really surpass your reasoning and you go along with something because it feels good, it feels better, yeah.

But you don't realize that if you eliminate this group here, because they're unfit for whatever you've claimed they're unfit for, then who's to come down to you one day and stay wait a minute it's time for you to take the big dive as well. Because we don't need you anymore. You're a useless eater. And that's basically what Julian Huxley said himself, the guy who helped set up a good part of this agenda you're living through today, on behalf of the elite of the world.

His family claimed that they were a scientific family because they could put across ideas to the public, that were kind of social sciences, you see. And psychologists and psychiatrists and behaviorists, they're all part of the scientific network that manage the system on behalf of the ones above them, the dominant minority they call them. It hasn't changed. These guys who long before Adolf Hitler started off with his basically hygiene, his German hygiene programs to get rid of the unfit and so on in the hospitals, he got the ideas from Britain especially, from the elite group we're talking about now. That are all over the place now, but back then most of them, not all of them, were in Britain, the rest of them were in parts of the US in the CFR. But yeah, they got all the ideas, Hitler actually went ahead.

And again, don't forget that in Cold Spring Harbor in the US, the big eugenics organization set up there and funded by Rockefeller and the rest of them, to do with creating better types of people, you know, better genetic types of people and breeding the proper genes into them. And using cattle ranchers' data on breeding cattle, that's what they used initially, to try to adapt it into breeding people. They also wanted to start culling off the wrong kind of people. Which they did. They sterilized them. The exact same way that HG Wells promoted in his early books.

Because HG Wells was another employee to push the mythmaking machinery of doing good to help society by reordering society and sterilizing the unfit and so on. Little HG Wells was truly are front man for a much bigger organization. He took initially the left-hand path of socialism, labor, even though he'd never lifted anything heavier than a fork in his life, I think. He belonged to the Fabian Society, cofounder.

So, you're looking at a system well organized to make sure that they run every side of everything. If you've got a class or point of view or whatever it happens to be in society, they've already got ready-made leaders for you. Very, very well organized. Well-funded. Well, it's easy to have funding if you just, if the guys who literally not just print it out but put extra zeros behind the numbers in computers for nations, you can't fail, can you? And that's what it is.

Bertrand Russell was quite blatant about it and he said, he says we need a good black death, a bubonic plague every generation or so to cull off the useless types and infirm and feeble types. And the poor types. Quite open about it. And he also said that the future they'd bring in, he and his brotherhood class that he belonged to, he said we'll by means of diet injections and injunctions we shall bring it in, their order in, on the general population, to make it really obedient, you see. And cull us off. Make us stupid as well.

Of course, you also had Aldous Huxley, brother of Julian, writing his books. He was up there. He knew, that's why he came up with Brave New World way back in 1930s, early 30s, 1932, 1933, with literally a class system where the people were bred for the functions right down to the lower orders basically that wouldn't get to board or go crazy by doing the same repetitive kind of work that robots eventually would do. They were still on board with the same thing.

I remember a professor in Australia a few years ago, another star that they make the stars up. They get all the airtime, suddenly, all of a sudden and all the papers immediately jump on board, what do you think of Professor so-and-so when he says, you know, we've got to start bringing down the population mandatorily, and the older folk should just die off. Maybe, you know, literally he's talking about euthanasia rather than collect pensions and be a drag on society. He's forgetting that the pension money that they sent in all their whole working lives kept the system going. It was invested in countless things on behalf of their masters, we've all got masters, the same masters, you see, and they don't want you to claim any of it back when you retire. They want to take it all.

But the definition from the United Nations of a good global citizen is a good producer and the consumer. You can look it up from their own website. And once you're retired you see, you’re now consuming, that's how they put it down. You think this is little children that just came up with this idea sustainability and they're ready to kill for it and knock down, you know, and all that kind of stuff, all you nasty people who ruined the world, all you ordinary folk, you know, it's all your fault.

You think they just dream this up themselves? They've been utterly brainwashed into it, radicalized through all of their education from an early age, at school. And the schools have got all the tool kits to make sure they're really radicalized, and also dysfunctional in any other possible way, and they're ripe for revolution... Against the targets that they've been told ruined the world for them taking all the resources and polluting, it's all your fault. That's done on purpose.

If you got a natural system, where it's all real, and you've got natural overloads watching this from the real society, the real present society they belong to, the people who would try to radicalized them would have been put behind bars, including the teachers, for what's coming down the pike, folks. It didn't happen by chance. Nothing ever does.

We live in myths, you know. It's like the myth, we all have foundation myths, some nations. Some of them are nice and quaint, etc. Like the Romulus and Remus idea for Rome, you know, that kind of thing. Kind of quaint things. And they're good stories actually, I like the stories, we all do, we like mythologies. But they still make all the founding myths and you get the ones by the revolutionaries themselves. Revolutions are famous for making up myths.

Look at the communist system where literally every schoolchild right through its entire generational existence of communism, the communist state, the Soviet Socialist Republic, every child had to learn it by heart. Oh, this is what Lenin thought about this, this is what Marx thought about that. And they had to parrot the stuff. And every exam had it in it, and so on and so on and so on regardless of what the topic was. We're living through that same system in the West and folk don't know it.

When you go into anything that happened in the past you got to bring the present into it and how would this really be seen through the eyes of the so-and-so, one of the many varieties of angst that we have today in our PC culture. Of course, we're getting taught it all and folk think it's, you know, the same system run on behalf of the global elite.

The US itself, it's not to put any country down, the people are the people. But by God the US just like the British folk now, they've been incredibly abused. They were given a bit more cash than the British ever had during it’s time as the little mercenary country that went across the planet fighting to bring civilization as they were told. And with the ordinary folk left with the debt of it all. [Alan laughing.] Including the soldiers, the ordinary soldiers that did all the fighting.

But the US were given a bit more extra cash themselves, maybe from 1920 to 1960, 1970, then it started going down with the whole economy and the debt, etc. And all the wars. All the wars. But the founding myth again had something, a modicum of truth for the fact they did definitely have a revolution for independence. But if you read the writings of Franklin, not by, not about them, but BY them, and others that signed the declaration, some of them talk quite candidly of the 30-year period of setting up the system for the revolution. Including importing and buying powder and ball and all the armaments and so on from other nations. And storing them in secrecy, even in some islands off the US for all those years.

It wasn't a spontaneous thing like it's made out to be. The US already had the people in it. They were part of a big brotherhood. Look at Benjamin Franklin's talks about that himself, you know, the one whose family were the Chandlers, you know, they were candlestick makers, the light bringers, you know. [Alan chuckles.] Yep. So anyway, if you go into any country who have got myths, foundation myths and so on.

But we're run by as they say societies. Everywhere you look are societies. And there's no doubt about it, if you put them on top of each other in the proper order, it's a kind of pyramid type system. There's no doubt about it. And we're living through it.

Now, I'll read a little bit, just a little bit to give you an idea of the mindset of what really runs the world. Because those at the top don't talk about us as though we are human, you know. They don't even talk about us like we are fond pets or anything. We're just things and they have no problem talking about us as being nothings basically, serfs and slaves. And that's a fact. That is a fact. It's rather sad but true the way that we are being so abused and used and how easy it is to do with using incredible sciences of understanding human nature.

But here's a little bit, a little bit from HG Wells, Anticipations. Some of them say it was published in 1902, but I think 1901 we know he definitely it wrote then. HG Wells was already involved in societies as a front person who would do anything to please the Masters. And he did do a lot of things to please the Masters. This one is called Anticipations as I say, and he talks about…

Anticipations, HG Wells

Faith, Morals, and Public Policy of the New Republic

(Alan: Like after Plato's Republic sort of idea.)

It is manifest that a reconstructed ethical system, reconstructed in the light of modern science and to meet the needs of such temperaments and characters as the evolution of mechanism will draw together and develop, will give very different values from those given by the existing systems (if they can be called systems) to almost all the great matters of conduct.

(A: He's talking about the old systems of religious values and humanity’s values and family values and so on. So, the scientific priesthood, this new religion, you see at the time, would have completely different values altogether.)

Under scientific analysis the essential facts of life are very clearly shown to be two—birth and death. All life is the effort of the thing born, driven by fears, guided by instincts and desires, to evade death, to evade even the partial death of crippling or cramping or restriction, and to attain to effective procreation, to the victory of another birth. Procreation is the triumph of the living being over death; and in the case of man, who adds mind to his body, it is not only in his child but in the dissemination of his thought, the expression of his mind in things done and made, that his triumph is to be found.

And the ethical system of these men of the New Republic, the ethical system which will dominate the world state, will be shaped primarily to favour the procreation of what is fine and efficient and beautiful in humanity—beautiful and strong bodies, clear and powerful minds, and a growing body of knowledge—and to check the procreation of base and servile types, of fear-driven and cowardly souls, of all that is mean and ugly and bestial in the souls, bodies, or habits of men.

To do the latter is to do the former; the two things are inseparable. And the method that nature has followed hitherto in the shaping of the world, whereby weakness was prevented from propagating weakness, and cowardice and feebleness were saved from the accomplishment of their desires, the method that has only one alternative, the method that must in some cases still be called in to the help of man, is death.

(A: ...the method that must in some cases still be called in to the help of man, is death.)

In the new vision death is no inexplicable horror, no pointless terminal terror to the miseries of life, it is the end of all the pain [Pg 299] of life, the end of the bitterness of failure, the merciful obliteration of weak and silly and pointless things....

(A: ...OF life...)

The new ethics will hold life to be a privilege and a responsibility, not a sort of night refuge for base spirits out of the void; and the alternative in right conduct between living fully, beautifully, and efficiently will be to die. For a multitude of contemptible and silly creatures, fear-driven and helpless and useless, unhappy or hatefully happy in the midst of squalid dishonour, feeble, ugly, inefficient, born of unrestrained lusts, and increasing and multiplying through sheer incontinence and stupidity, the men of the New Republic will have little pity and less benevolence.

(A: ...you see, and efficiently…)

To make life convenient for the breeding of such people will seem to them not the most virtuous and amiable thing in the world, as it is held to be now, but an exceedingly abominable proceeding. Procreation is an avoidable thing for sane persons of even the most furious passions, and the men of the New Republic will hold that the procreation of children who, by the circumstances of their parentage, must be diseased bodily or mentally

(A: He's talking about what they claim are the unfit.)

—I do not think it will be difficult for the medical science of the coming time to define such circumstances—is absolutely the most loathsome of all conceivable sins. They will hold, I anticipate, that a certain portion of the population—the small minority, for example, afflicted with indisputably[Pg 300] transmissible diseases, with transmissible mental disorders, with such hideous incurable habits of mind as the craving for intoxication—exists only on sufferance, out of pity and patience, and on the understanding that they do not propagate; and I do not foresee any reason to suppose that they will hesitate to kill when that sufferance is abused. And I imagine also the plea and proof that a grave criminal is also insane will be regarded by them not as a reason for mercy, but as an added reason for death. I do not see how they can think otherwise on the principles they will profess.

The men of the New Republic will not be squeamish, either, in facing or inflicting death, because they will have a fuller sense of the possibilities of life than we possess. They will have an ideal that will make killing worth the while; like Abraham, they will have the faith to kill, and they will have no superstitions about death.

They will naturally regard the modest suicide of incurably melancholy, or diseased or helpless persons as a high and courageous act of duty rather than a crime. And since they will regard, as indeed all men raised above a brutish level do regard, a very long term of imprisonment as infinitely worse than death, as being, indeed, death with a living misery added to its natural terror, they will, I conceive, where the whole tenor of a man's actions, and not simply some incidental or impulsive action, seems to prove him[Pg 301] unfitted for free life in the world, consider him carefully, and condemn him, and remove him from being.

(A: And he goes on and on and on.)

Now, if you really read the whole thing, you'll find that it isn't just getting rid of what they claim are the ones who are at the unfit, or the bad people either. And don't forget, once you got tyrants in power, they keep expanding the levels of who's bad. It's like the French Revolution, they end up slaughtering themselves eventually layer by layer until there's nobody left. And that's part of it too.

But don't forget, so you can say a lot of this stuff people will agree to, about the criminals and so on etc. etc. etc. But as I say, think about the rest of it. They're going to kill everybody else they claim is unfit. Or maybe if you've got, Aldous Huxley mentioned it too in an interview with George Wallace he says, well supposing people, even just simple things like you're shortsighted and you breed, and you breed more children who are shortsighted, etc. He was trying to tell you that nature would have a perfect generation each time by literally not producing what you would claim would be the inferior types, even in that level.

Well that goes with simple things too like allergies. We're hearing that now with eugenics, 'eh, you really want to have a child, you know, that might have this, that and that and that and they might might might might might. And you're into eugenics and who should get born, who shouldn't.

So, all the stuff that Wells basically was talking here and this is a little bit of it. He wanted to sterilize pretty well most of the people, even the ones who are doing the base work for them, the really hard base work, the brutes as he called them. He'd have them sterilized until the next generation that wouldn't need them because science would have again progressed even then.

So, you think you're living through something that's just happening step-by-step by itself today. No, you're not. You're living through an amazing agenda. Sometimes the agenda gives the appearance you're a bit freer especially when they need you to fight the next war. And as soon as you're fighting it suddenly rights are getting taken away from you. If some enemy, or enemy that wasn't an enemy before, retaliates, and you've got Marshall law back home. Or as I say, a plague is awfully handy, whatever kind it is, and the same thing is happening isn't it?

Terrify the people. Terrify, terrify them until they can't think anymore. But I would say to people, you know, if you want an idea how they think today, and what you see being taught in the sciences including medicine, it's good to read Anticipations as an example. And the works by Bertrand Russell. Some of the parts you might agree with in fact, that's how they get you on board.

It's like the people they send, give to you to follow, like talk show hosts and so on. You gotta be very very careful because the authorized ones out there, even the ones you think are fighting the authorized ones, it's like rat poison. They must give you stuff that other people, real workers are putting out there, the real investigators, they'll take it all and say it's theirs and put it out to sound legitimate to the followers. Oh, yeah, well they're telling us good truth. Yeah, what they are is taking it from here. But their real project, the real motive is, you know, that last 10% of poison, you know, which is politics or who to vote for, or what nation to bless or whatever it happens to be. It's really something else what we're witnessing today. It's never been so open, never ever. But yeah, you must be given a good part of the truth to take the poison, you see. That's how it's done.

And let's see now, so I'll put, well you can look it up yourself, Anticipations. It's a good read actually. It's quite interesting. Especially now that you're locked in and you can't really go anywhere or do very much because of the lockdown. The global lockdown, 'eh. And it's almost global.

But just before I get into the talk tonight really, [Alan chuckles.] please excuse my drifting off into something else. But if you read Anticipations, it gives you an idea what you're dealing with today, you understand, the same mindsets. Wells was a big player for putting out massive propaganda through fantastic fiction by the way and stacks of nonfiction as well. It was his fiction that gave him the credence and the stardom to do the nonfiction in fact. And he was quite open about inferior types. He was into phrenology, measuring skulls and all that, in his Outlines of History you see that kind of thing.

But I'll put this here and it's by Brandon Turbeville. It's interesting, he's talking about the lockdown…

Two Hundred and Thirty Years of Rights and Liberties Shredded: Why I Oppose The Lockdown - activistpost.com / 24 Mar 2020

Good article. Again, everything is food for thought. It doesn't matter if you believe in it or agree with it or not. If you don't look at everything you won't learn anything. It's bits and pieces from all aspects of human thought where you actually learn things.

You've got to understand what's happening right now. 9/11 took so much of the rights away. It had already been decided long before that when they brought in electronics and computers that would guide you eventually to enslavement, where the authorities would know everything about you 24 hours a day. They had it all worked out too, how many years to give you on what would seem to be free this and free that, until everybody thought, expected everything to be free.

But they addicted them on it. They even knew that pornography and bringing up one generation up to the age of about 20, at least, with easy porn and all the rest of it would, per their agenda, they would never toss that computer out the window, or whatever they're using, the tablet, you name it because they're addicted to it. That was part of it. In the 90s that's when they made sure everybody knew it was, every paper carried, oh more, day after day, week after week, month after month, you know, the Internet is full of pornography. To make sure that everybody would go in and see it, you see.

Everything else can get stopped but there was no attempt at all to stop pornography. They can stop YOU. They can cut you off altogether just for saying something or thinking something, or even asking questions. That's how tyrannical it is today. But back then they made sure you had enough little free things and entertainments that once they started to take your rights away from you, you'd keep using the computer. It was all worked out that way by strategists and behaviorists.

So, 9/11 took it away. In fact, I can remember the headlines, so many headlines. Would you willingly give up your rights for safety? You know. Every Western country went into the same act with the same man on the street, you know, asking different passersby, the man and woman in the streets, hey, would you be willing? Oh well, you know, I suppose we have to do it, you know. And you really think what happened then. And never mind the fact there was a whole massive back story to the whole 9/11 thing as we all know, I won't even go into it. But it was mainly concentrated on one day’s attack in New York City and the whole world was to change. You understand? The WHOLE world was to change.

And in so many ways. And never to get your rights and freedoms back. And Patriot Acts got signed. And the president said to all the people who were supposed to sign it and look at it or debate it, if you don't sign IT, you’re unpatriotic. Well what, are they going to put you down as a criminal? George Bush Junior gave the speech too, he said that you're either with us or you're with the terrorists. There was no option at all. In other words, if you weren't going to go along and you didn't like what the US was planning, to go invade other countries, then you would be classed as a terrorist. Incredible really.

The same guy who repeated his father's talk before it happened, of, I see a world coming into view, a new world order, dut dut dut dut dut. Hm. 10 years apart from his dad giving the same speech. And you think it's just developing by itself? [Alan laughing.]

So here we are, here's part two and just like part one, so many rights you're never to get back again, you see. You've been told even after 9/11, in the years following 9/11, that they said get used to it, this war on terror is going to last your whole life and beyond. It's permanent. It's like the temporary war tax that became the income tax, you know, and victory tax, etc.

And this nuisance thing called rights, awful nuisance as the CFR journalist [Richard Gardner] published, and I've read the article [The Hard Road to World Order] so many times over many years and he said that, we've got to stop attacking the U.S. Constitution and Bill of Rights, he says, head-on and debating that. Instead, just ignore it and go around it and over it and above it, build bridges and go around and circumvent it, by bringing other laws in until you can't see the Constitution and Bill of Rights anymore. That's what he was really referring to. And it's true, most folk go through all this extraneous stuff that's just sort of pasted all over it and they can't see what's lying underneath, you know, the simplicity of it.

So here is, as I say, you’re into 9/11 part two. Brandon goes into the Constitution and what it meant etc. And how people are panicking, and that's why they're made to panic, that's when you just do what you're told and run with the herd. It's designed that way. Incessant, incessant psychic driving too, daily stuff. We’re all going to die. You're all going to die unless you do what we tell you. Incessant. It's the same as the towers, every minute on any television station on 9/11 in the days after that followed, you see the same planes going boom boom, down down, and oh. Over and over psychic driving boom boom boom. Which imprinted it in the brain, you see. And here you have it today, 'eh? Here you have it today.

Don't forget the economy was already crashed before it happened, it was crashed. We never recovered from the 2007/8 manufactured planned crash. It was planned because the big bankers and investors pulled out of everything before it happened. [Alan chuckles.]   So, it was planned to go right up to the very end. They're still trying to work out who really owns houses now because they kept flipping mortgages until hundreds and hundreds of times per mortgage, from banks to banks as well, just flipping and increasing the value until literally almost mud huts were worth 10 million, you know. That’s stretching a little bit, not too much.

This is supposedly the sane society in which you live, 'eh? All run by, you know, honest businessman. I don't know who invented that one, probably the businessman. But anyway, Brandon talks about how police officers now are often...

Two Hundred and Thirty Years of Rights and Liberties Shredded: Why I Oppose The Lockdown - activistpost.com / 24 Mar 2020

Instead, police officers are now often indistinguishable from military soldiers...

Don't forget that so many of the, I remember years ago when they started bringing the troops back from the different wars in different years, they would go straight into the police departments. In fact, they are wooed, they are wooed into the police departments as soon as they come out. They treat the people on the roads the same way, they pull their guns out on them as though they were Afghanis or whatever, or Iraqis. The same thing. This is intentional. Once these rights go and you allow these things to happen, the terrible things that keep happening, as police do forget what their job really is supposed to be, or it was, then you're in trouble obviously. So, I'll put this one down tonight.

I also want to mention too that it's so amazing that Gordon Brown who was the Prime Minister of Britain at one time, who helped crash the economy there too, they wrecked it, another world socialist who was eventually put over to the US I think at the World Bank, I think he went too. Which was probably his reward for crashing the economy of Britain I suppose. He worked over there. Anyway, he's come out of course and he's urged world leaders to...

Gordon Brown calls for global government to tackle coronavirus

theguardian.com / 26 Mar 2020

Gordon Brown has urged world leaders to create a temporary form of global government to tackle the twin medical and economic crises caused by the Covid-19 pandemic.

(A: This is from the Guardian newspaper.)

The former Labour prime minister, who was at the centre of the international efforts to tackle the impact of the near-meltdown of the banks in 2008, said there was a need for a taskforce involving world leaders, health experts and the heads of the international organisations that would have executive powers to coordinate the response.

A virtual meeting of the G20 group of developed and developing countries, chaired by Saudi Arabia, will be held on Thursday, but Brown said it would have been preferable to have also included the UN security council.

“This is not something that can be dealt with in one country,” he said. “There has to be a coordinated global response.”

“This is first and foremost a medical emergency and there has to be joint action to deal with that.

(A: So, there's the emergency part. And once you get an emergency then you have your emergency powers. Then you have the United Nations and then you have a completely different system running the show. I've already made quite plain that [Alan chuckles.] I haven't seen the laws of quarantine used as it was supposed to be used. Because it isn't difficult or rocket science to save a domestic population. It's all understood that the plans have always been in existence what to do.)

(A: The first law is, you stop all travel, international travel into your country. We watched the farce from January right through to the present time where international flights from the contaminated countries, the heavily contaminated countries are still coming in. Some of them just take a flight from one country into another country, into another country and eventually they get into the country they're supposedly not to be allowed into, they get there. And do roundtrips. It's still happening now. What a farce it is, isn't it?)

(A: And then you bring in, you know, contaminated people and ask them to go home, if they got a home, and just quarantine themselves. They're just starting now, inside Canada, I think today or yesterday, or I think actually it's Monday that they put it in, I think it takes effect. Where literally inter provincial travel, most of it is supposed to be banned except for buses and trains. Well, I guess nobody travels on buses and trains, you know, that are infected. It's just nonsensical. Really.)

Coronavirus: Canada to ban sick travellers from domestic flights, intercity trains

globalnews.ca / 28 Mar 2020

(A: So, they've made sure, as far as I'm concerned, that they've got enough people brought in with the illness to ensure that it's passing on, so that they can get all these measures forward. Because they could really have nipped it in the bud much much much earlier. No doubt about it. And you don't wait two months before you tell people not to have cruises, actually three months, and put themselves in danger and so on.)

(A: Anyway, this is the kind of thing that's going on here. So anyway, there's Gordon Brown calling for global government with basically wartime powers. And again, experts, the guys who really looked after, the guys that crashed banks in like 2007/8, having them on board with it at the top to run the countries and the world, you know, the guys who really profited from it all by causing it, I think.)

“We need some sort of working executive,” Brown said. “If I were doing it again, I would make the G20 a broader organisation because in the current circumstances you need to listen to the countries that are most affected, the countries that are making a difference and countries where there is the potential for a massive number of people to be affected - such as those in Africa.”

The World Bank and the International Monetary Fund needed an increase in their financial firepower

(A: [Alan laughing.] Of course, they're always, it's just astonishing, the hand is always out. [Alan laughing.] You're going to turn into, you're going to be utter slaves that can live in utter austerity and live on a handful of rice, etc. to make it all work, right. All for the good, you know, we're all in it together, 'eh, all for the greater good. So, the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, the two big organizations along with the Bank for International Settlements, these private organizations, private banks, folks, but private, they were set up by the world controllers, the Royal Institute of International Affairs. They set this up, including the UN, 'eh. You don't vote for these guys. They meet in secret and all that. So, they want an increase in their financial firepower, off of us, you see, the people, again, the taxpayer...)

to cope with the impact of the crisis on low- and middle-income countries, he said.

To be honest with you, the money I live on is probably below the poverty line today. I don't ask for any help of authorities. What they were giving out in fact to some of the people in some of the countries, and way below them, what they get, that's what I bring in, you know, and live on. So here he is saying, they want to tax me and other people, 'eh, to give to the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, so they can cope with the impact of the crisis on low and middle income countries. I hope he's talking about being Canada. I doubt it. You see what I'm saying?

Corruption, we live in corruption. We are over arched by corruption. It's all around you. It's at the top, it's top-heavy with it. They all have business suits and have fancy titles of the organizations and so on. They'll justify millions of dollars for their incomes, quite easily, for the big mansions and to pay for their central heating through their mansions and so on, as they tell you you've got to pay taxes for climate change and so on and all that carbon. This is the same bunch, 'eh, that want to sit on the board and tell you how to live, under the pretense they want to help Africans. N-n.

As we're going through this too, and I was thinking of going back again but I won't go back at the moment to HG Wells Anticipations. He does mention the people who live on opiates and so on, as of course Aldous Huxley mentioned too with his Soma, the people would all be on Soma, a drug that would have little side effects, like long-lasting side effects, but it could put you in a wonderful euphoric happy contented non-anxious state, you see. And as we're going through this, isn't it amazing, because when you look at the authorizations of the ruling ones above, the behaviorists above us that have all the psychologists and behavioral think tanks working for governments right now, and every country is getting the same propaganda dished out at the same time, exact same stuff, with the ads and so on. Here's one here talking about, they call it…

Yes, liquor stores are considered essential businesses in Massachusetts

boston.com / 23 Mar 2020

Yes, packies (A: Packies, I guess they've got packets of something.)

are considered essential businesses in Massachusetts

"Food and beverage operations, which would include package stores, fall in as essential."

(A: ... to what we need. So, the stores that must stay open, you see, through all this.)

Businesses and stores across Massachusetts (A: It's happening everywhere though.) are going dark and remote — if they haven't done so already — temporarily under a new emergency order issued by Gov. Charlie Baker Monday morning.

Nonessential services are closing down for two weeks... (A: It's going to be longer than that.)

But here's one place shoppers can still expect to be there for a bargain or two: package stores.

Yes, liquor stores are considered essential businesses in the commonwealth, right there among the select places...

(A: It's the same across Canada, Britain and everywhere else. Plenty of booze as you get locked in, right. And there'll be, and I really mean it, I've got so many articles and I won't even touch them because it's like long lectures on the behaviorists that are working on all of this right now on how to manage our psyche, right. And I really mean that. Billions of dollars actually have gone into all this thing across the world, just to manage our psyches. So, if they get lots of booze… And you can't get food because it's cleaned out with folk panicking. But there are stacks of booze, right. So, it's an essential service they can get their booze.)

(A: Here in Ontario of course the government runs the booze industry and you have to get their booze from liquor stores and beer stores that are run by liquor licenses authorities, they're all government employees basically that work there. So, the government gives us our drugs here and they give us a lot of the dope too here, since it's all legal, you see. So anyway, and here's the thing too, it isn't just booze, right. It says...)

Gov. Baker says the decision 'is driven by federal policy as much as anything else'

Baker, moments after announcing the emergency order Monday, was asked about how places like package stores and marijuana dispensaries would be affected by the new regulations.

“Food and beverage operations, which would include package stores, fall in as essential, and that’s driven by federal policy as much as anything else,

(A: So basically, the booze and the drugstores, the real drugstores [Alan chuckles.] are continuing. To make sure you're kept, you know, because people are freaking out, you see. They're tuning in every day.)

I gave talks a long time ago about horror stories and how they work. Now, everybody likes horror stories. A little scare here and there, we all like them. And there's so much to watch, you see. And even the really really bad ones, you'll still watch them, generally, if you're not too tired. And the reason that you keep watching, intently, even in the most terrible horror story, is that you project yourself into the story.

We do it in all kinds of stories, you see. Because it affects the limbic system, the primitive part, the basic, you know, animal survival. And if you look away and missed a part of it, for a brief moment, of what the hero or the guy that you're identifying with is, you might die. Because you don't know, you see, so your mind, in a real-life situation, if a monster was coming at you or was walking around watching you, you wouldn't take your eyes off it, you see, to survive. The same thing watching a horror movie.

Well, that's what all of your hype hype hype hype on the television and the Internet is right now. The same thing. And you're terrified. And they're making sure you're terrified. And you keep tuning into make sure, oh.... And all they keep demanding of you is the same things, you know. Don't go out. Well, how are you going to get the food in if you don't go out? Hm? Especially the folk who are supposedly more susceptible to it, or the bad effects of it. It's in the wrong age group sort of thing as they say. Or with certain disabilities are more prone to it. Well, they've got no option but to go out. I'll have to go to Sudbury myself.

I was in the hospital, remember, I almost croaked in 2016 of something similar. And they kicked me out of the hospital. I had to get the drugs myself to cure myself. I'm not kidding you, that happened. So, I'll have to get into town and try to find, and hope they haven't cleaned out another supermarket. And no one is going to, the government says to stay at home, well, what are you supposed to do, starve to death, just stay home and starve, is that the idea? Hm?

Then they use UPS I think it is, or a courier that takes orders from I think the big stores that are delivering food and so on to someplace, like Amazon. They don't deliver here. They won't deliver in my little place in Estaire. They'll take the money for it from the guys, whoever purchases the stuff, someone wanted to send me a few cans, they won't do it. They want me to go into Sudbury to get it. As I say, that's a 40-mile round-trip. So, you've got a courier company in Canada that wants the customer to pick up the stuff rather than them deliver it. Hm, okay. They've done that before of course over the years, that kind of thing, that same company. So yeah, you've got a go into town and risk it. I'm sure Mr. Trudeau doesn't drive into some supermarket and put himself and other folk at risk.

Another article I'll put up tonight too, I've got to do it before I forget, is about the farces of all the, d'you realize the campaign to show you how celebrities are getting this? That's all you get is terror, fear and celebrities getting it. And I'm a bit suspicious of them personally. Because again, it's right up the path basically, the beaten path of the marketers and how they convince you that we're all going to, we're all susceptible and they're human, and we all follow, they say the people all follow the celebrities. It makes it more real to them, you see. If it's Joe Blow getting it, you wouldn't care. But celebrity. I'm very suspicious of them, I really am. [Alan chuckles.] I really, really am.

The Covid-19 pandemic has spawned another epidemic, of incessant celebrity attention-seeking - rt.com / 23 Mar 2020

By the way, they certainly have incredible treatments for those near, at the top. They really do. They really really do, you know. China is already getting, taking actual antibodies from survivors in China who are donating blood, and its immunoglobulin basically and you inject it into people with it, who are, you know, and they're fine right away. It kills it off right away.

Anyway, the Africans did that dealing with Ebola years ago. I did a show on it too. Because the UN went in with the WHO, World Health Organization, and these doctors that went in were furious that when the Africans, eventually the African doctor says we've had enough here, we can take blood from survivors and, again, you withdraw the antibodies from it and injected into them. And something like out of 20 patients that they did it with in a village, all of them except 2 survived from getting this injected into them. They were all terminally ill at the time, going under fast. And the two that didn't survive, it was too late, their organs were already in total failure and necrosis breakdown. So, the African doctors knew what to do and it was awfully successful.

They've always known how to do this. So, believe you me, don't think that any world leader is going to get it bad here. N-n. Unless he's not part of the club and they want rid of him. But all kinds of treatments they have for them at the top there. M-hm. But we won't see them at the bottom.

I also want to put up some articles to do with, which I talked about too some years back, I saw it coming. I got the whiff, the whiff of the, from the World Health Organization, using other organizations too, like the vegans and so on, stop eating animals and stop pumping them full of antibiotics. Then of course all the health, the ones that are really into it and there are a lot of people who really go overboard with the health thing, they really go for it all. If it's in a health magazine, natural health, they'll just go overboard without thinking. The antibiotics are not in the animals when they go for slaughter. So, a lot of the, they stop giving it to them about a month beforehand. Antibiotics in you or an animal won't last longer than 24 hours in the system. And if something was put in the system, by the time it's cooked it's not an antibiotic anymore at all. Honestly. Folk forget that. Yep. There's all kinds of ways to get you stop eating meat. Of course, that's one of them.

The World Health Organization put the big push on too. And you have to understand the World Health Organization and what's across the hallway there too at the United Nations. You also get the United Nations Department, used to be called the Department of Population Control. It was actually put up there and funded, set up by the Rockefellers years ago. So, it was put through their fund. But the whole point of it was actually population control and they just dropped the 'control' part when folk realized what it was. It's still there.

So, the World Health Organization quite a few years ago, and then really stepping it up in 2015/16, you saw these articles appear, and across the board at the same time, you know, doctors perhaps shouldn't be prescribing so many antibiotics. This is part of a campaign, you see. The general public must read this stuff and say, oh I see, okay, without realizing it a campaign you're reading to get you to stop asking or expecting to get treated with antibiotics. They put memos out to the doctors encouraging them too to reduce their prescriptions in the antibiotics and so on. Well, guess what happens when you reduce your prescriptions of antibiotics? The folk who need them can't get them and folk die.

Doctors urged to stop prescribing antibiotics for colds and flu - cbsnews.com / 19 Jan 2016

Some doctors prescribe antibiotics much more often than others. Ontario is trying to find out why - globalnews.ca / 13 Sept 2018

I've already read last week the articles and put the links up to them in Canada where they are, we've got to start thinking about now, who we can treat and who won't we treat before it gets worse, you see, before it hits really badly. Eugenics and bioethics are all into play right now. They've decided before you even get brought in if they're going to even bother, just palliative care until you die, it depends on who you are, what age you are. Pre-existing condition, written off.

Who gets the ventilator?' Doctors say we need to decide now who gets care if COVID-19 overwhelms ICUs - nationalpost.com / 17 Mar 2020

And believe you me, the doctors these days are like robots. Most of them can’t think for themselves. They go along with these agendas. It's like Idiocracy, you know, and they've got the little tablets out and their phone and they point to things that are wrong, a little pain here, little pain there. Flowcharts. Flowcharts. And they're taught, you know, stop prescribing that and expect folk to die, you see, you have to accept that as part of the work and so on.

Well, when they go into hospitals it's all admitted to, even when they're pushing the different forms of quinine right now, along with azithromycin, which is an antibiotic, how many folk are getting the antibiotic? Have you worked that out? You can if you really dig into it and if you're good at investigations, find out, even like places in BC, there are certain reasons why they've even had 90-year-olds come out from critical-care there. There's good reasons for it, and some of them are political by the way.

COVID-19: Here are all the B.C. cases of the novel coronavirus - vancouversun.com / 26 Feb 2020

Because it's not good for folk to die that are in specific categories, in this day and age. So, they given all the treatments they can to pull them through as best they can. Which they won't give to the rest of the population probably.

There's reasons it's awful, it's so terrible today with political correctness.   You can't, you just couldn't save yourself now if you had to by just knowing facts that might help everybody. That's how bad things are now.

I know that in some countries for instance are going overboard with everything they've got to bring certain ethnic groups through. Because they don't want what they classify as ethnic foreigners dying on their soil. Looks bad, it looks bad bad bad on the governments and so on. And everything’s so incredibly tender, isn't it? Talking is tender. So much so you can't describe anything, if your life depended on it by knowing it to save yourself or saving others. It's that bad. And it's going to get worse. So other countries are at this too.

So yeah, as I said last week, if you are a certain age and you have any problems at all and you might end up in there, make sure you have an advocate that will fight tooth and nail when they try to deny you certain treatments which should be standard for everybody. I really mean that.

Now also I'll put up another one, another article to do with the last one...

Six States Declare Marijuana Dispensaries "Essential Businesses", Exempting Them From Lockdown - zerohedge.com / 25 Mar 2020

Cannabis companies pen letter seeking government help amid COVID-19 - ctvnews.ca / 23 Mar 2020

So, there's more and more and more of them. In Canada it's even better, you see, because Canada, everybody at the top and the government and so on, they sunk their money investments into the big corporations in Canada. The companies, right when this is happening actually, already had their hands out for about a million and a half, or a billion and a half, I'm not sure what it is, of bailouts because they are in such bad trouble. Because they had overestimated what the folk... They thought folk would start living on the stuff, I guess. Maybe stuffing their [unintelligible] with this stuff, I don't know what they imagined, but it was going to be heaven for all the people who invested. And the bottom has been falling out of it apparently. Big big trouble. So, when this came along, out come the hands, please give us money and save us. And, you need us, this is the Soma time, you see. So, there you go.

By the way, as they're doing all that with the booze and drugs and telling you all to stay at home, right, and it's bad enough it's going neurotic watching TV and be afraid, be very very afraid, and keep bringing the same experts on telling the same things. And by the way, before I forget too, I just tuned in to Canadian radio today on the CBC I think it was, or one of the stations. They were talking about British Columbia. They've actually got a big fan base now for the woman who comes on, a doctor out there, who gives these little quips. I don't know if she writes them herself or they are written for her by the marketing companies and so on because everybody reads scripts these days.

But she's just a PR person, a spokesperson for the people. They've given her star status and they've got a big fan club for her now and rah-rah clubs. This is all manufactured, isn't it, like a wartime scenario? So, these are the news heroes, you see, and big fan clubs for them. And they can tell you, you know, keep 2 meters apart. You know, this is what you go to university for and get big money when you come out, and, wash your hands. Okay. And, don't come out of your houses. As I say, there's always a dead silence out there, like how are they going to get food, you know, etc.? Never anything. They don't say that. These stars don't tell you how to manage that way. Especially if there's no income with a lot of people. Hm? But we'll have fan bases for them and make them into star status, you know. And you create an image for them, you see, as the star machinery is all in operation. It really is folks. That's how things actually happen and how they work.

Another article too is called...

A Brady Bond solution for America’s Economic Crisis and Unpayable Corporate Debt paulcraigroberts.org / 25 Mar 2020

Even before the Covid-19 crisis had slashed stock prices nearly in half since it erupted in January, financial markets were in an inherently unstable condition. Years of quantitative easing (A: ... after the 2007/8 crash…) had loaded so much money into stock and bond prices that stock price/earnings multiples and bond prices were far too high by any normal and reasonable historical standards. Risk premiums have disappeared, with only a few basis points separating U.S. Treasury bills and corporate bonds.

So, it goes into what's happening in the financial realm and so on and so on. And it's true enough, this was time for this big thing to happen, some will say it's a godsend I suppose. It depends, it maybe gets sent by a demon, who knows, 'eh?

Nearly half of Canadians say they can't afford to miss work as coronavirus cases escalate

montrealgazette.com / 22 Mar 2020

You've got doctors now that are going to be made into stars, you know. Wash your hands. 6 feet apart. You see. Cough up your sleeves. Stay in your homes. Okay. But you can say it with a little joke here and there, as I say, who writes it for her, I don't know. Yep. I tell ya. And the folk never figure it out, everything is getting staged and managed like that.

In wartime scenarios that's what they do. I remember looking at the British ones who, I kept wondering who these characters were they were given, like George Formby and so on. He would sing the little, with a working-class accident, he wasn't a working-class guy but he would sing about leaving your bubblegum, when you're leaving your bubblegum, or your toothpaste overnight, I can't remember what it was. Silly little ditty songs that HG Wells talked about long before Formby came along. But they make him a star too, a wartime star, you see. They do all these kind of things, always. Literally they made Churchill a star as well. That's what it was.

I liked actually, I mentioned before Spike Milligan. Spike Milligan was, he was a bipolar comedian and not everybody's cup of tea with the type of humor and so on. But he did mention that he was in World War II, I think mobile artillery unit and he did mention about cracking up on one of the, when they were getting shelled one day and he clawed his self into the ground basically. But he does mention when Chamberlain came back with his little paper about his treaty with Germany and how they were all happy and so on and happy, until eventually the war was declared. And he says he heard on the news, the Prime Minister came on and he says, we are now at war with Germany. And as he says, what struck him was the 'we' part, because he had nothing to do with it. [Alan laughing.]

That's really the way you have to look at things in all reality. You have nothing to do with it, it's all so staged, isn't it? We are now... right? But here we go through all the same kind of thing too. M-m-m. We, we are all in it together. For the greater good though.

So, Canadians can't afford to miss work. You've got so much disinformation along with the information, it's just astonishing. You still can't get actual, actual figures on anything the way things are written and put across. With the wonderful Malthusian graphs. Well, Malthus was the first guy to start graphs, you see, to terrify the public about what would happen if this continued, if people kept breeding. You'd all be walking on each other's heads, you know, over each other. But it never happened of course. Of course, you'd all die of starvation, that never happened either. But facts don't matter when it comes to terrifying the public to get them to be compliant and to do what they're told.

Last week I mentioned too, I says isn't it odd that even in Sudbury they say there's no community spread but they just knew that the following week there is going to be massive spread. I said, they're either going to be bring it in or else release something. How else could you do that? Well, you see, they've got the snowbirds…

COVID-19 outrage as snowbirds flock across the border, shop and refuse to self-isolate - nationalpost.com / 24 Mart 2020

Snowbirds are retirees. They go down for the winters mainly to Florida and other places in the States too, but mainly to Florida, then they come back up in March. Well bingo, without really mentioning too much about it to the people, they started talking about new cases. And you dig into the case and you find out they came back from mainly Florida. Snowbirds. Some of them drove up and other ones... They're supposed to go straight to their homes and quarantine. There's an article and they said no, they're not going to do it and comply, etc. etc. That's what they said, as they try to make you dislike them. It's not their fault. But the fact is, some of them definitely were contaminated.

Of course, they haven't been screening anybody all along in Canada either coming in through aircraft or any other ways. So, they've got cases for sure. One woman was on a plane, she took a plane from Florida I guess to I don't know if it was Toronto or somewhere, and then got a flight from Toronto to another place inside Canada. So, they had to, when she came down sick eventually, they had to trace, this is the comical bit to me, they're looking for the passengers on both flights that she was on, from I think four seats down, all the passengers for four seats from either direction front and back that she had. Because the virus knows not to go any further than four seats, 'eh? I guess that's how it works.

It's amazing how scientists just know these things, isn't it? And you get bureaucrats that just come up with the rules. Well that's it, four seats, everybody else, don't bother checking anybody else. Or maybe, did this person go to the bathroom a few times and touch the seats when she went along, you know? Let's not think about that. Let's not look in the dark side of things, for goodness sake, that's too unpleasant. And no one likes to look at unpleasant things like that. So just look four seats down and back. So, they had to trace those folk and then put them in the quarantine too.

But there's more and more of them actually, there's thousands that come up across Canada, and a lot of them into Québec. But even at that, [Alan chuckles.] you can't… It's quite amazing. Because you know they've got all the scientists working and the social programs working together with this agenda too, don't you? They already had the Facebook on board and the other social programs, Twitter and so on. Even in the exercise they had with Bill Gates and Johns Hopkins University, they had, they already admitted they had them, even in the exercise, on board before it happened. Which is pure luck of course.

There's articles, I'll put them up, where they're using your phone apps, all your phone apps, stacks of your phone apps, and they're tracking you everywhere you go. Not just who you meet and your cluster of friends. And they are tracking your clusters of friends too, to see if one of them's infected or possibly even got a little bit of a fever or headache or whatever, they want to then study all of you. And they'll keep tracking you and listening in to your calls and so on through the different Echelon programs that they have that are triggered by certain words like, I've got a headache, I've got a fever, yada yada yada. Then of course your cluster friends and where you travel are all watched and monitored.

They actually say you're going to get monitored. Eventually they might come and get you after giving you a warning to stay put at home rather than quarantine yourself if you think you're sick. And this is all, again in the newspapers as they get ramped up for it. Of course, I'm sure they had this all planned long long before this thing broke out as they say.

I should really mention too that, before I get off the topic, and I never plan my talks but I was thinking of The Last Enemy, the TV series that Britain did. It was about two or three parts perhaps, but it was really well done. It was 2008. They showed you high-tech machinery, it was actually designed, they actually said that when they did the series that the author had looked at all the different technology which was in use then, and the stuff that was on the table to come into use, and put it into the series. Where everybody in Britain was monitored, way beyond anything you can imagine. Infinite speed for the government agencies, it was just incredible, speed beyond anything the average person's getting at home.

Of course, they had all the data on every single person in real time as they monitored everyone, followed you, and speech, the whole thing. And it was called The Last Enemy. Because the enemy was the people's rights and freedoms. It was to do with, guess what? It was to do with massive migration coming in, illegally, and a secret plan that was hatched by the government, and their version of homeland security you might say, to use science and vaccines, free vaccines to help the people in all the countries that had their cities and that bombed into the Stone Age.

Then they would track them with tracers coming into the country. Because these things will give off traces basically through, as you're going through different checkpoints, and you go through subways, everything's got it, little cashless things at the register, you're going through with your ID and everything else. But on top of the plot the scientists that they hired actually put something else in the vaccine. It was a disease, ethnic specific disease meant to hit mainly just them, the ones that got it. You couldn't get it from them. Maybe if you get a transfusion from them or something. But it would kill the person who had the vaccination itself, just for them. That's what it was based upon.

And hit teams going out to try to kill off anybody who was uncovering the big plot, you see. So, the government agencies were all, there was about two or three government agencies all kind of competing with each other to clean it all up. It was quite well done. They showed you the technologies that were in use then and the arguments that were put forth in fact about why they should monitor the public, etc.

They also had what they called, and it is true they do have this by the way, you find this in your emergency plans that will be unrolled everywhere in every country. If you have an ability to talk to people and communicate to them, and you're not putting out the right stuff, the authorized stuff across to them in times of war, they grab you and imprison you. They'll warn you and close you down, fine you as well they said they would do. But they could imprison you. Or maybe even worse, 'eh. This is wartime scenario.

In The Last Enemy if you don't go along with everything you're called an unis [?], which is an unaffiliated subversive. I mentioned this years ago too. An unaffiliated subversive. It means you're not necessarily affiliated with any terrorist organization but you're subversive individually because you don't comply with authority and go along with it. So, you're going to get lifted at the very least.

I'd also like to mention that Gates' universal vaccine agenda, ID2020, is all there too. And 2020 is not just ID, it's an ID with your vaccinations. As I say, getting back to what I talked about in the late 1990s was eventually you'll need this thing as you walked into anywhere, even to get food, and if you didn't have your vaccines up to date and so on... And this is in Bill Gates, this is the kind of things from Bill Gates ID 2020. I'll put the links up and you can read it from his own site and his own statements and so on that really, you'll be a threat to others, you see, you'll be considered a threat so alarms will go off eventually, you see.

Gates Tattoo - An Invisible Quantum Dot 'Tattoo' Could Be Used to ID Vaccinated Children - sciencealert.com / 21 Dec 2019

Bill Gates, MIT Develop New ‘Tattoo ID’ to Check For Vaccinations - 21stcenturywire.com / 23 Dec 2019

Invisible Ink Could Reveal whether Children Have Been Vaccinated - scientificamerican.com / 18 Dec 2019

They've already done the testing on some volunteers with this kind of thing. And of course, eventually it's to go all the way into not just your ID but it will be your debit card, under your skin and all the rest of it. It's unlimited what you can put in a chip these days.

And also tattoos, they can use tattoos. A few years back they showed you some of these tattoos. They could actually make them trendy on your skin. They're actually a circuit type of thing, integrated circuit. I guess with enough TV shows and so on with heroes and heroines, then they can make it trendy, sexy, the folk would want it. And that's the tattoo delivery chip, it's called.

Another thing too, they always give you the slogans. Like the James Bond, they would always give you, the tyrants that were generally incredibly rich billionaires, individual billionaires but they belong to the same organizations, you know Spector and so on. Some of them were even taking over the world's water supply under the guise of preservation and saving the world and having their big philanthropic investments companies on the go. Then in reality they were actually, they would start to ration the water and it would cost a fortune. It was to be more expensive than gold, you see. Which is happening in different parts the world. And of course, they hype up the droughts, oh, we have drought like never before. As they make sure they've drained places you normally got water from. That's how it really works, you see.

When I think of Event 201, I do think of James Bond, believe it or not. Whenever I see the big, obviously appointed by very much higher power you might say, to rule over us or manage us basically, being benevolent, you know, philanthropists and all that kind of thing. I can't help but think of the characters in the Bond movies because often the bad guys were the great, you know, philanthropists and they were doing wonderful things to change the world and big money was getting spent on technology generally and sciences and so on. [Alan chuckles.]

But when I really see Bill Gates, I can't listen to him when he's waving his hands all over the place. That's all he does, too much hand clapping and arm flapping. Which I distrust in people because they get taught that in motivational courses. They're taught, they think that convinces people and distracts them, or really detracts them from what they're saying, it absorbs you into actions as opposed to the content and at the end of, say, a business meeting for instance you say, well yeah okay, without thinking because you forget everything else they've said because of all this magicians sort of waving in front of your face. I can't really stand it. And it is a taught thing, you know.

But Bill Gates really, is a lucky guy as I say, very lucky, just happens to get into the right things at the right time. And things take off at the right time. And you know, he goes ‘round the world to help the world. But he reminds me, as I say, when I think of that Event 201 that he went to and help manage, I think of the character [Alan chuckles.] in that James Bond movie, believe it or not. That's how my mind works I guess. It's Tomorrow Never Dies.

Yeah, it was Tomorrow Never Dies it's called. The main character, the villain in it was a wonderful man who was worshiped by everybody because he made sure through publicity campaigns and marketing and massive publicity, they made him a star so you would worship him. That's how it's done. So, the character, he owns a massive news organizations across the world, video and newspapers and everything else. He literally made the news in advance. That was part of the trick you see because he would manipulate events in the world to make things happen.

Of course, Bond comes along and catches on to the game and disrupts the outcome of the news. Which really upsets him since he's already got it all written how it's supposed to work out. But that was his big headline too in the movie Tomorrow Never Dies, was Tomorrow's news today. And that's really what Bill Gates makes me think of with these meetings. Because he just seems too, I guess he must read tea leaves a lot, you know. Must get the old-fashioned tea, the proper stuff. And you're left with these tea leaves. And you bring somebody in who will stare at them for ages and then tell you what it means, they can see things in it, you see, things that are going to happen. If you did the same thing, you know, but he doesn't need to bet on horses and that, but if he did, I'm sure he'd be a real winner with that too.

Interesting, the Red Cross is requesting blood. But they're not doing testing for the Covid. Isn't that rather odd? They were asked this in an interview, and they said no no, it didn't occur to them to do any special testing. I was wondering too if it's for the white, the actual antibodies from folk who have recovered. They won't tell you that, but I'm just wondering if it's for the wealthier people I'd imagine, 'eh.

I also want to mention the Ray Bradberry theater. Ray Bradbury was in awfully good sci-fi fantasy writer. A lot of his stuff got used and put in the movies as well. Bradberry puts one out called The Pedestrian in 1989, a short, maybe 29-30 minute show of a future where everyone is locked down. And they've been brought up their whole lives in the lockdown, they can't remember when they were free. So, they were raised in that apartment building and so on, each one in their own apartment. They didn't have the computer there then, but you had a TV on 24 hours a day with God knows how many stations. The people would just sit individually in their little box and stare at the thing. I guess food must have got delivered somehow, I don't know how it was done. No one went outside. It was a permanent curfew.

So, one guy that used to phone him all the time would come down and he'd try to get him out, this one particular guy, try to take him out with him for a walk at night. The guy was terrified, oh we can't do that, can't do that, you know, and all the excuses not to go. Eventually he goes out with him. And he couldn't believe it, looking at the moon, where he couldn't remember ever seeing the moon and so on, and nature and all that.

Eventually a kind of robotic helicopter comes along and questions them and says why are you out? And the guy says, well, to get some exercise and something to do. It said, haven't you got a television? Yes, but it's broken. Eventually he takes one of them away with them. Well, there's nobody in the helicopter, it's robotic. And he's walking into it, he's been ordered to walk into the helicopter that opens its front door. And he sees there's nobody in it. He says I wonder how long these things have been operating without any humans at all? Maybe there are no humans left to manage all this whole system and the machines were just going on as usual and threatening people and taking them away if they were literally kind of, a kind of the subversive again, with kind of old think mentality, you know what I'm saying, they had a term for it in the thing.

Ray Bradbury-The Pedestrian - youtube.com

But it was interesting, just the concept of permanent lockdown until you take it all for granted it's normal and you're supposed to stay in your room. The whole idea just... It all falls into place at the same time, these kind of shows. Along of course with the eugenics program and Soylent Green. And also you had Logan's Run, it was a big hit too where you hit a certain age and a little chip in your hand went off and you were carouseled away into oblivion. Meaning you are destroyed. But they thought you went up to a kind of a heaven for the general public. Eugenics.

And of course, the same thing again, HG Wells and his pal George Bernard Shaw and a few others, and his mentor through it all, because the one who financed the Fabian Society was the Astor family, Lord Astor. Of course, they thought too about the useless eaters and just doing away with them too, all the useless people at the bottom. It's all there really, isn't it?

You know, people like to have winners all the time. They follow what they think are the winners. That goes for authors down through history that predicted certain things and how they even put some of their predictions in novel form. We have of course those who for the last while have been on about, well Aldous Huxley with this Brave New World really put it across much better as opposed to, you know, old-fashioned Orwell that's saw things as the big boot stamping on the human face forever in an authoritarian managed society, curfewed society and all the rest of it, with rationing and all that, you see. And how crazy because, I said years ago, they'll use both systems together. And here we are.

You've got massive psychological warfare going on with monitoring of us all, incredibly minutely right now. Billions getting tossed across the globe for all the snoops on the Internet to manage us and watch us and so on. But at the same time yet you have martial law techniques getting put in with millions of troops in some places to ensure folk stay in their homes at night and that kind of thing. Very Orwellian.

When you think about 1984, Orwell had it quite right too because in wartime, and he went through it in wartime. He was a propagandist for the BBC, in fact, he worked there. He understood it and he said in 1984, they had these, basically these propaganda spiels every day where they come out and say, we have made so many tanks and so many rifles and so many bombs for our boys at the Malaba front. Today we get the heads of countries coming out and saying, we've made so many millions of facemasks, and so many gallons, and so many gloves, for our people at the National Health Service front. It's the same stuff we are hearing. It really is, isn't it?

The same techniques are being used. It's kind of interesting to put the two together. But yeah, both systems, the Brave New World system and at the moment, the present, the Orwellian system to speed it up a little bit are being both used at the same time.

Anyway, we're living in an amazing system that really, to watch this unfurl, in a complete war strategy with the same kind of propaganda, and even celebrities, all celebrities… The only folk that seem to be sick are celebrities, we're supposed to believe, 'eh? And are they really? Is this part of the…? To me it's just too staged, that part of it. I have no doubt about that. Celebrities really love themselves. They don't like getting sick. They like their lives; they enjoy it because they are so wealthy and everything's taken care of for them.

Now, Michael McCaffrey is a journalist who writes from Hollywood basically where he works. He's got a good page basically on the celebrities and he calls it celebri-virus. Because we're getting inundated with these ridiculous inane, verbiage interviews with who's doing well, who's not doing well as a celebrity. Of course, for some reason they're all getting into the news as having supposedly, supposedly the quarantine for the virus 'eh. Poor souls. But this particular journalist says

The Coronavirus Pandemic is Bad, but the Epidemic of Incessant Celebrity Attention Seeking is Much, Much Worse

mpmacting.com / 23 March 2020

Coronavirus is a terrible malady that is killing people and the economy, but it isn't the most pernicious pandemic afflicting the globe right now. No, the most diabolical disease currently in circulation is the dreaded Celebrivirus.

The onset of the Celebrivirus starts with a steady stream of verbal diarrhea gushing forth from empty-headed, self-absorbed, attention-starved celebrities, which is quickly followed by convulsive (A: [Alan laughing.] and he goes on with a few more things.) puking and rage headaches from the rest of us

Then he goes into the people you've seen recently, celebrities, with all their thoughts, you know, as they suffer because they can't mix with people and nonsense like that. That's just completely made up verbiage as I say. But it's a good article. It gives you a little chuckle and it's worthwhile reading. And we certainly need a chuckle during this debacle we're going through right now. So, I'll put the links up for that.

Let's get on with some of the other things here before I run out of time. Remember too, I could maybe split this into two parts or just put it all up at one go, I'm not sure, you'll see at the end of the talk. Remember too, folks, you can help me out by going into my website @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. You can always get the whole talk there for sure. List my other sites which are listed on the .com website in case this one goes down for any reason you've got the other ones listed there which will be working hopefully. You can find out to how to send some cash my way as well so that I can tick along here, hopefully. Because as I say, I live in [Alan chuckles.] I live [Alan chuckles.] I live at all level most folk can't fathom at all. I really mean that too.

So anyway, coronavirus, I talked about the snowbirds coming into Canada again from the States, hey. And Florida is a heavily infected area right now. So…

Over 1 Million Fled Paris Before Lockdown began, phone data suggests independent.co.uk / 27 March 2020

(A: So, there's actually phone data organizations there that show you we're all getting monitored. If you've got a cell phone you're getting monitored. I don't have a cell phone. But most folk have cell phones, and you're getting monitored all the time. Your movements and when you suddenly vanish from an area, they've tracked you already to where you ended up, very very precisely too. Quite a few organizations are doing this, so I'll put this one up. One company is called...)

Phone company Orange said it analysed location data and charted the mass exodus from the capital as the country prepared to restrict movement to tackle the virus.

The number of people in Greater Paris fell by nearly 1.2 million between 13 and 20 March ...

...vamoosed, out of the country. A lot of them came to Canada too, Québec. Québec now is just rising with numbers of the infected people too. So that was a good area for them to flood to, some of them to flood too. God knows, I don't know how many, but it's French-speaking, you see, so with the kind of a home-from-home in a sense where they feel more at ease naturally. Unfortunately, these statistics are going up higher and higher in Québec now. Cause and effect, 'eh?

It's the same thing, remember, that happened with Wuhan. 5 million people I think vamoosed out of the country and very quickly and went to different areas. A lot of them came to the West Coast of Canada. Lots of relatives all over the world, you know. And you can't blame folk for getting petrified and trying to get out. Regardless though, there was no real attempt to stop anybody coming into the countries to save your domestic populations. The first law is always save the healthy population first, by all means. Because once it gets in, everything you're fighting for is lost, isn't it, if it really goes bad.

So strange, strange new types of quarantines. The only people getting quarantined are the general population who are all told to stay home. And...

The Scientist Whose Doomsday Pandemic Model Predicted Armageddon Just Walked Back The Apocalyptic Predictions

thefederalist.com / 26 March 2020

British scientist Neil Ferguson (A: He was a biggie there.) ignited the world's drastic response to the novel Wuhan coronavirus when he published the bombshell report (A: And the link is there too.) predicting 2.2 million Americans and more than half a million Brits would be killed. (A: That's what it was to be, be very very afraid scenario that the US and Britain parroted, you see. It's all done by computer, I think they're using computers where they predict the weather, you know, and the climate change.) After both the U.S. and U.K. governments effectively shut down their citizens and economies, Ferguson is walking back his doomsday scenarios.

Ferguson's report from Imperial College, which White House and other officials took seriously, said that if the U.S. and U.K. did not shut down for 18 months, and isolation measures were not taken, "we would expect a peak in mortality (daily deaths) to occur after approximately 3 months." His "models" showed overflowing hospitals and ICU beds.

"For an uncontrolled epidemic, we predict critical care bed capacity would be exceeded as early as the second week in April, with an eventual peak in ICU or critical care bed demand that is over 30 times greater than the maximum supply in both countries," the report reads.

(A: But now he's going back on his predictions to an extent. I guess he's may be put an update to his computer program, you know.)

But after tens of thousands of restaurants, bars, and businesses closed, Ferguson is now retracting his modeling, saying he feels "reasonably confident" our health care system can cope when the predicted peak of the epidemic arrives in a few weeks. Testifying before the U.K.'s parliamentary select committee on science and technology on Wednesday, Ferguson said he now predicts U.K. deaths from the disease will not exceed 20,000, and could be much lower.

Also, too, here's the kind of thing that confuses you. I don't think you realize that most folk now, they are getting put down by phone and so on as having the virus, have never been tested, and won't get tested. You can play the numbers game too and lots of folk are playing the numbers game on all sides and for all different reasons, and a lot of science organizations too. And statisticians of course that's what their job is, is to use statistics for agendas. [Alan chuckles.]

But anyway, the Ontario provincial police…

OPP says first uniformed member (A: …that they've got gone ill with it I guess is what they're trying to say. It's badly written. Everything is so badly written. The first uniformed remember, which make folks think, don't they have uniforms for the rest? the way it's written, right? Anyway…)

has tested presumptive positive for COVID-19

northernontario.ctvnews.ca / 24 Mar 2020

So, a presumptive positive. Before they could only use positive after the testing. But now it's presumed positive. So, it is a presumption, or is it? You don't know. You see? And lots of stuff is written this way too to terrify you. It just terrifies the people doesn't it?

Also, when you see the different levels of folk who have supposedly got it, and you say my God, that's a hundred for every thousand that's dying or something like that. So, for every thousand that has got it, a hundred die. No. Don't forget that the ones who either have phoned in or the folk that have been tested, are not the whole population that's got it. For every person that supposedly got it and tested, there are thousands that have probably got it and don't even know it. So, then the death rate doesn't look anywhere near per thousand as it would seem to be, if it's only the ones who are tested and then so many die, you see. Everyone who is tested, there's thousands who are not tested, that's what I'm saying, that goes up and up and up with the overall numbers.

I'll put these links up with those that want to peruse what I'm talking about here. An interesting article too was about in Italy, and you hear all the different reasons why Italians have got it. By the way I was going through a lot of documentation in old books by the way that were written after the so-called Spanish flu of 1917/18. One of them had listed, they had pretty good listings that were in books written in about 1925 of the different, so many people fighting in Europe you see, all different nationalities.

They found that, again, people who are Chinese, the ones that got through China areas or Far East, they got hit very very hard with it. But interestingly enough, Italians, who were fighting in the trenches too, and their own men were also fighting in their own country against the so-called axis powers or whatever they called themselves, but it wasn't axis before World War II mind you. But anyway, they were fighting in World War I and they were coming down with it pretty bad too in Italy, a much more higher number than other people's.

At the time some of the authors and even authors in universities tried to figure out, thought maybe it was due to bad diets and malnutrition in some countries, their poverty. But there were no poorer than the Irish and the Scots at that time and they weren't coming down with the same kind of numbers. So, it was thought there was, even queried then, there was something different. Of course, we now know today there's definite receptors and more receptors for this type of thing in certain people's lungs than others in ethnic groups. And also, they found that the people from the area that eventually was called Iran also were higher in it too. Higher mortality rate, right. And they caught it more easily too.

So, it's interesting that there's something definitely with these Covid viruses, if that's where it was the first time too. And that's just off, by the way, as they say. But there you go. In the area of Italy where it really broke out and spread, and this is from the New Yorker in 2018...

The Chinese Workers Who Assemble Designer Bags in Tuscany

newyorker.com / 16 Apr 2018

(A: It's an interesting little article.)

The first significant wave of Chinese immigrants arrived in the industrial zone around Prato, a city fifteen miles northwest of Florence, in the nineteen-nineties. Nearly all of them came from Wenzhou, a port city south of Shanghai. For the Chinese, the culture shock was more modest than one might have expected.

(A: Then it goes on and on and on of how they really, really grew up, you know, and multiplied and brought more in. They came in really as bottom-line workers and then started getting small businesses, even starting in garages and things and then built up and got factories, stacks of factories.)

In Tuscany, business life revolved around small, interconnected firms, just as it did in Wenzhou...

(A: So, they really took off there. Thousands and thousands of them live there and go back and forth to China in fact. But it says…)

By the mid-nineties, Wenzhouans were setting up textile businesses in small garages...

(A: And then they go into buying big manufacturing businesses. Then they're into designer clothing and the whole thing too. There's thousands of them living there now permanently. M-hm. So, there's obviously a connection too, because a lot of them are coming back and forth from China, all along. Until it really broke out hard there.)

As I say, you just really… You have to really look and look and look. And it's the same in Canada when you look at the people who even in the homes out West in British Columbia, it's quite fantastic to find out that many of them had taken trips to Iran, from the old folks homes, I guess these managed tours that they have or something. Others had gone to Egypt. Other ones had gone on cruise ships. Other ones had gone to China, lots in China, back and forth. And you start to get the connections of different people carrying it back and forth from countries. But isn't it amazing that Canada wasn't even putting it's foot down, and I'm not sure that they've even put the foot down yet on international travel? I really don't know. So, I'll put these links up anyway for those that want to toss the ideas around in their heads.

COVID-19 outrage as snowbirds flock across the border, shop and refuse to self-isolate - nationalpost.com / 24 Mart 2020

A flock of homeward-bound snowbirds landed in Brockville on the weekend, settled overnight in the Walmart parking lot...

(A: It goes through about the fact too...)

The actions of the returning Canadians struck fear and concern among store employees...

Because they're supposed to go straight home and so on and now they're going to stores and all that and yada, yada, yada, ya.   But again, there's no checks in Canada at all over temperature or sickness or background, have you felt sick in the last week or something or whatever. Nothing at all. It's quite amazing.

Also, Peter Hitchens put a link up to an interview with Professor Sucharit Bhakdu [Bhakdi]. He's a high chutzpah.

An Expert says the Current response to the Coronavirus is 'Grotesque, Absurd and Very Dangerous.' - Professor Sucharit Bhakdi

hitchensblog.mailonsunday.co.uk / 24 Mar 2020

A recent interview with Professor Dr Sucharit Bhakdi, an infectious medicine specialist. The Professor is one of the most highly cited medical research scientists in Germany. He was head of the Institute for Medical Microbiology at the Johannes Gutenberg University of Mainz, one of Germany's most distinguished seats of learning.

(A: And they give a transcript in the article, and a link, and a link also on YouTube, I'll put that up as well. The interview with Professor Sucharit Bhakdu - youtube.com.)

(NB Interview dates form 18th March so please note one of the figures he gives for deaths in Germany is now out of date. It is not mistaken.)

(A: He talks about the coronavirus and spreads over the whole world and what the viruses are. He says…)

Prof Bhakdi : Very often, infections remain subclinical (A: ... in coronavirus types...) without symptoms. Severe courses occur almost exclusively in elderly patients with other underlying illnesses, in particular of lung and heart.

(A: He goes on to give, again, the medical point of view on it, that they're all getting taught today. It shows you how it often can be mistaken with the numbers that are dying and why they're getting certain different numbers and discrepancies in the numbers too. Because no one else is bothering to explain things, you understand. Everybody wants the big graphs, and then, oh my, look at the spiked graph, oh my God it's going up and up and... There’s now these union charts, you know. He said, and he was talking about Germany I believe he says...)

“We have 10,000 infections (A: …that was then, right...) reported (18th March 2020). 99.5% have no or only mild symptoms. Here we already see that it is false and dangerous to talk about 10,000 “patients”. They are not seriously ill. ‘Infection’ is not identical with ‘disease’ Of the 10,000 infected people, only 50-60 were severely ill. And 30 died to the present day. “So, we have an apparent mortality rate of 1 COVID-19 positive case per day. Up to now.

“The looming worst case scenario that must be prevented according to the authorities is that we would have 1 million cases and maybe 3,000 deaths in 100 days. This would mean 30 deaths a day.”

So, he goes through, again, and I'm not going one way or another with the thing, I'm saying, this is definitely, this is definitely, and I more suspicious than most folk about this particular disease. Because it's got different characteristics than previous coronaviruses, even the fact that it's primarily going for the older folk, primarily going for males, and the effects that it can have on the lungs too are really astonishing. If you get hit with a bad coronavirus, some parts of your lung will never recover and there will be scarred tissue forever. And this is no exception, this one here. You'll lose lung capacity. Permanently. If you survive.

However, there are treatments, there's no doubt about it, there's darn good treatments out there too, they can stop it pretty fast. But they got to start giving you the antibiotics, definitely. Because the antibiotics, whenever you get the complete storm, you know, basically where your body goes to war against this thing and attacks the disease in the lungs itself and brings all its troops and its cavalries and so on into the lungs fast, and really saturate it with blood, heavily, then some of the blood will go through the barrier. The alveolar tissue is very very thin, it's meant for oxygen to pass back and forth and with CO2 going out too. But the fact is, you can start getting blood coming out of it too. Then when blood could get in and out of the alveolar tissue and get in contact with the air, and hemorrhaging, then bacteria set in immediately and so you've got to be on antibiotics, I hope folk realize that.

And hence, the thing too, this thing for doctors, you should really stop prescribing antibiotics, since about 2015/16. I saw this coming years ago. Well, isn't it amazing that once they start that, the doctors don't want to even give you that if you're really ill? You better start looking at this.

Get you an advocate, folks, absolutely, who will stand by you through thick and thin. As these very well trained, these very good trained bioethicists come up and, well you know, maybe you have to look at them, maybe this is, maybe they've had their time here, you know. And they're awfully nice and you'll like them. They've been well-trained how to get through to you. But no, you can get pulled, they've got people in their 90s that they're desperate to save in British Columbia pulling them through, who are now getting discharged. Hm. Really.

They've got ways to stop, you know, your body massively attacking the lungs, if they want to do it, they can certainly do it, folks. Whether they will is a different story according to the, you know, the list. Your age, oh dear, you're a male, oh dear, hm. And pre-existing condition, oh dear, hm. How valuable are they to society? Do we really need them? Oh, not really, you know. Well, that's it, palliative care.

I'll put these articles up too where they're telling the doctors not to give antibiotics if need be from previous years up to the present as they go through the agenda of course.

Doctors urged to stop prescribing antibiotics for colds and flu - cbsnews.com / 19 Jan 2016

Some doctors prescribe antibiotics much more often than others. Ontario is trying to find out why - globalnews.ca / 13 Sept 2018

And then I'll put up too...

Gates Tattoo - An Invisible Quantum Dot 'Tattoo' Could Be Used to ID Vaccinated Children - sciencealert.com / 21 Dec 2019

Bill Gates, MIT Develop New ‘Tattoo ID’ to Check For Vaccinations - 21stcenturywire.com / 23 Dec 2019

The one that MIT is working with, along with I think it's Bill Gates and published in Science Translational Medicine. Bill and Melinda Gates foundation, yep. Of course. Amazing the big agendas this man is in. He such an altruistic person, he just wants to, you know, help you all. And then…

What is the REAL death rate for the coronavirus? Figures reveal just 0.6% of patients in Germany die but the rate in Italy is higher than 10% because of a stark difference in testing regimes - dailymail.co.uk / 27 Mar 2020

...testing regimes… Well, there's something else going on definitely in Italy, there's no doubt about it. But in the rest of the world so far, it's been nothing like Mr. Ferguson said it would be, at least in the Western countries. I think Australia is even lower, you know. And...

Invisible Ink Could Reveal whether Children Have Been Vaccinated - scientificamerican.com / 18 Dec 2019

That's MIT, same thing again. Engineers working with the same characters, you know. I'll put that up as well. Another thing too I won't even go into is the incredible disgusting postponing of certain medications and so on through political reasons because, and let’s be honest, you know, the big big Pharma companies are all competing. D'you realize the billions of dollars at stake per contract? Billions. When folk are petrified, you know, oh yeah, they can demand what they want, and the government can guarantee it's going to get paid one way or another. And oh yeah, some of them are connected to the folk in governments like the businesses, 'eh, or their relatives. It's just so sad, isn't it? And they're squabbling and stopping some of the cheaper stuff getting put out right now to try and get their pals’ contracts through. Incredible disgusting behavior that's going on right now.

Paul Craig Roberts actually has an article about that too I think, I'll see if I can find it and put it up. As they squabble as folk are really sick and maybe even dying.

Coronavirus Profiteers Are Worse Than War Profiteers - him paulcraigroberts.org / 27 Mar 2020

That really is about almost it for the night I guess, I didn't want to rush it through so quickly. But I do want to say this, you have to think for yourselves. You know this is going, they want to drag this out even further. They're talking about, well... And it gets trial balloons in real time, very much like The Last Enemy.

Very much like The Last Enemy series where in real time they could float ideas to the public to see how it would accept it, and within five minutes through the different algorithms and so on they could tell in real time, all the social media would be searched and in five minutes they know exactly how many folk were for something percentagewise or against the idea, of whatever it happened to be. So, they could adjust the thing that the trial balloon was for to make it spread over a longer period, to make folk get used to the idea or whatever or nudge it a little bit. And that's how things are.

We're living through that right now in real time and they are using all your social media apps and so on as spy mechanisms, in your phones and everything. And they're talking about it openly now. But they've been doing it all along, folks, really. Now of course they can give themselves permission. It's to save you. You know, you've got to… And there's articles out there too just like the ones after 9/11, well you know, you might have to give up all your privacy for safety. This is identical to 9/11, folks. And the folk will be so terrified, oh well, I guess so, you know.

So, whatever happens, this is fulfilling a lot of the agenda. It's the same agenda as sustainability and austerity that came out a few years back from the whole climate group and the whole thing to do with bringing us down to the basic simple way of living and then cutting back on energy. Technocracy Inc kind of idea, cutting back. First take over it all, you know, take it all over and then cut it back step-by-step. Once you've taken it over, public-private partnerships, it's already here, through electricity, heating fuels and so on, start cutting it back. This time, they're already talking about maybe brownouts if they can drag this out for two years, this pandemic.

All the things I talked about in the early 2000's and onwards to do with brownouts, because they came out with their plan then they would unroll these things to bring us into austerity. Well, here, bingo. You're watching it all get fulfilled. All of it. If they can't get you to comply with it one way, they'll make you comply with it another way, you see. It's to save you all. We're all in it together, you know. It's for the greater good.

So, keep your heads. Don't go nuts. Help each other out. You've got to help each other out if you know people in the same boat as yourselves. Don't just sit and watch the TV until it terrifies you. It's the greatest tool for terrorizing. You're looking at a system where the media has been lying to you for your whole life about most things. And suddenly they've got you all glued to it. Huh? And they're making stars supposedly of doctors that say, wash your hands, cough up your sleeve, don't go closer than 6 feet to anybody, stay in your homes. Making stars out of them, because they'll give little jokes for them to quip on, probably written by writers' groups, you see. Everybody out there is PR, public relations, which is the new term they gave for propaganda. Used to be called just basic propaganda, they changed it in Bernays' day to public relations.

In public relations, every organization out there for corporate businesses, for the police, for everything, it's public relations. People who will bend all truths on all questions and give you all the answers to anything you ask, but never a straight answer on anything. That's their job, they're going to make them into stars now. Hmm-m-m. There ya go.

So, keep your heads. Don't be drinking yourself to death in your homes and then you'll be battling each other. Again, after they announced, oh you know, gotta make sure to keep beer flowing and you gotta keep the drugs going, and the cannabis at home. The police are expecting more domestic violence. I wonder why, 'eh? You're all going to get shut out for months, maybe. Don't forget that they said in the beginning of this, this might be like the last big flu one, it might literally go all through this year and into next year. This is what they're hoping for. That's [Alan chuckles.] what I see anyway.

Because d'you realize the money that's getting tossed out there that's never going to be accounted for by the ones who are receiving it, the big corporate ones?... give us this and we might find ways to do this and blah. And massive, millions were given, millions, maybe billions actually, to all the mind managers, all the behaviorists. They've got sites out there telling you about it, from their own sites on how they're going to help manage you, tell you what… They even had stuff if you're at home, how often to masturbate for God's sake. I wonder how much they got to put that article up there.

Bertrand Russell said, we'll bring in a world, he says, where the people will be unable to think for themselves, they'll be guided by experts for every simple thing. Until they can't do anything simply by themselves. Without the expert. And bingo we're here, 'eh. Bingo.

So, when you really feeling bad, listen to some good music. And remember eventually one way or another this will eventually be over. If you can help each other and you've got little pals, to help each other. Take precautions if you deliver food to each other and so on. And you don't have to go inside their houses. You'll have to agree with that, you know, and keep each other safe.

And for those that can't get to town to do any shopping at all, maybe you can arrange for them to do it for them, things like this, the simple things. That's how you get, don't look to government to help you. Just the corporations that can look to government and can expect the help in certain, certain big big political organizations and such.

For yourselves, you have each other. And do your best. Keep safe. It's awfully important to keep safe. But you get through it, we'll come through this. Again, if they have their way it will be a different system again. And whatever laws that they've slapped on with emergency powers will not be taken off, especially to do with whatever privacy was left. And you will have to eventually probably get, have to go, they'll try and make you go for your little chip in the arm and so on eventually. They really want to do that. And it's there, it's no conspiracy theories, MIT is involved in it with the Gates Foundation.

As I say, it's up to you to eventually come out of this and say no, no way, get lost. Because where they're taking you with this and because of this is just the same agenda, taking you along the same route into totalitarianism. They already told you in the last big meeting for the climate change group and the WEF, World Economic Forum, that the people are not listening to their demands of what they must change, the behavior and so on. They're talking about austerity and yada yada ya. He says, and we'll have to take next steps, steps to try and force them not to continue the way they are with consumerism. They're also talking about it might even come down to it's time now to decide who should have children, and should they have children.

This is an old agenda. They had books out in the 1920s about this. They never give up. Because these foundations are eternal. They don't stop. They go on for centuries with their agendas.

But again, they always say this too shall pass, the worst of it shall pass. And it's up to the people then to demand their rights afterwards. And demand inquiries into why a lot of people were not treated with the right medications and so on. And lawsuits must start flying out, you know. And get at the politicians too who allowed all this kind of thing to happen because they didn't do the quarantining right off the bat. And they didn't tell the people that they had certain treatments which you could certainly give them. And again, more lawsuits for the politicians that held back the treatments because they wanted their own pals in the different Pharma companies to get the contracts once they had their versions of whatever it happened to be drugs on the market. So that's what you've got to do.

You know, this is disgusting what's happening right now. Absolutely disgusting. Everyone is locked down. And we've been locked down for a while now. While international aircraft still come and go. What's going on here? We're all locked down while they bring more and more in? And if they hadn't, if they had done quarantine to begin with, literally, you wouldn't have the lockdown, they would have no excuse for the lockdown. So, I think that's why they kept bringing the people in. Obviously. It's like getting a loading dose, enough and okay, that's fine now, we've reached the loading dose, now we'll quarantine the people.

We've got to stop thinking they're just stupid at the top, you know. We've got to stop doing that. But as I say, the money that's been… Do you realize it's all to get paid back by the people, the taxpayers? All these trillions of dollars? And there's no follow-up to see if folk come up with vaccines or whatever, you know. And it's just astonishing what's happening.

But anyway, as I say, remember folks I’ll put up the whole talk @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. I might split it into two again in case folk want to have just part one and part two. I don't know just yet. Remember you can send me a few bucks my way hopefully @cuttingthroughthematrix.com website. You can use PayPal. You can also send cash if you want to, you can still take cash, that can be washed and laundered, believe you me, without ruining the money. And the mail is still going. Although they say it may be a bit slower, you know, but the actual letter mail is still going for the time being.

And folk are still accepting cash in the stores, they don't like it so much, they are told. But again, another part of the agenda is to eliminate cash as you know. But as long as folks to keep using it, it makes it a bit harder for them just to drop it.

So, don't go crazy. Don't drink yourself into the boondocks basically. And don't drug yourself into it either. Listen to some good music or watch some movies that you've got saved by there that are a bit more uplifting. And stop looking at the daily daily hype hype hype by the same faces, that are supposedly specialists in this and specialists in that. It reminds me, they made Greenspan a star too, you know. The man who used to come out, this little fellow that would come out, and everybody would be hushed. And they would actually announce on TV, he's coming out to speak again, and everybody's hushed. And he would just, talking about the stock market, all he would say is, cool it. Probably written by his team behind him, you know, for Hollywood effect. Cool it, meaning the stock market, and he'd walk away again. And then they go overboard, oh my God the genius has spoken, he said cool it, wow, you know. M-m-m. The genius.

The man who literally didn't believe that anything was real. It was a kind of a religion he was going through at the time; it was big big fad that nothing was real. Everything that you saw was brought in to you through senses into your brain, so even if your senses were wrong, who's to say you even had senses, because everything's happening inside your brain, it's all getting made up inside your brain. He did an interview about that before they made him the Federal Reserve head and he says to the guy, how do you know if anything is real? He says, how do I know that even you're real? to the interviewer. And that's why they made him the chairman of the Federal Reserve, because he looked at all the debt and it wasn't real either. There ya go.

For myself Alan Watt from Ontario Canada, it's good night and may your God or gods go with you.

Topics of show covered in following links:

Lockdown

activistpost.com / 24 Mar 2020

Gordon Brown calls for global government to tackle coronavirus

theguardian.com / 26 Mar 2020

Yes, liquor stores are considered essential businesses in Massachusetts

boston.com / 23 Mar 2020

Lockdown

zerohedge.com / 25 Mar 2020

Cannabis companies pen letter seeking government help amid COVID-19

ctvnews.ca / 23 Mar 2020

A Brady Bond solution for America’s Economic Crisis and Unpayable Corporate Debt

paulcraigroberts.org / 25 Mar 2020

Nearly half of Canadians say they can't afford to miss work as coronavirus cases escalate

montrealgazette.com / 22 Mar 2020

Ontario closes all non-essential businesses, as the province confirms 78 new COVID-19 cases

cbc.ca / 23 Mar 2020

Over 1 Million Fled Paris Before Lockdown

independent.co.uk /

Apocalyptic Predictions

thefederalist.com / 26 March 2020

OPP says first uniformed member has tested presumptive positive for COVID-19

northernontario.ctvnews.ca / 24 Mar 2020

The Covid-19 pandemic has spawned another epidemic, of incessant celebrity attention-seeking rt.com / 23 Mar 2020

The Chinese Workers Who Assemble Designer Bags in Tuscany

newyorker.com / 16 Apr 2018

COVID-19 outrage as snowbirds flock across the border, shop and refuse to self-isolate nationalpost.com / 24 Mart 2020

Bhakdi

hitchensblog.mailonsunday.co.uk / 24 Mar 2020

The interview with Professor Sucharit Bhakdi

youtube.com (video removed from YouTube)

Beachside towns in the Hamptons start filling up months before summer with rental properties now scarce as New Yorkers flee the city amid the coronavirus pandemic

dailymail.co.uk / 27 Mar 2020

from domestic flights, intercity trains

globalnews.ca / 28 Mar 2020

Doctors urged to stop prescribing antibiotics for colds and flu

cbsnews.com / 19 Jan 2016

Some doctors prescribe antibiotics much more often than others. Ontario is trying to find out why

globalnews.ca / 13 Sept 2018

Location Data in Action: Heatmaps Help Track Coronavirus Across the Globe.

xmode.io

Vaccinations

21stcenturywire.com / 23 Dec 2019

Gates Tattoo - An Invisible Quantum Dot 'Tattoo' Could Be Used to ID Vaccinated Children

sciencealert.com / 21 Dec 2019

Invisible Ink Could Reveal whether Children Have Been Vaccinated

scientificamerican.com / 18 Dec 2019

What is the REAL death rate for the coronavirus?

dailymail.co.uk / 27 Mar 2020

Coronavirus Profiteers Are Worse Than War Profiteers

paulcraigroberts.org / 27 Mar 2020

COVID-19: Here are all the B.C. cases of the novel coronavirus

vancouversun.com / 26 Feb 2020

Who gets the ventilator?' Doctors say we need to decide now who gets care if COVID-19 overwhelms ICUs

nationalpost.com / 17 Mar 2020

Ray Bradbury-The Pedestrian

youtube.com

Alan's Materials Available for Purchase and Ordering Information:

BOOKS

"Cutting Through"
  Volumes 1, 2, 3

&

"Waiting for the Miracle....."
Also available in Spanish or Portuguese translation: "Esperando el Milagro....." (Español) & "Esperando um Milagre....." (Português)

CDs

Ancient Religions and History MP3 CDs:

Part 1 (1998) and Part 2 (1998-2000)

&

Blurbs and 'Cutting Through the Matrix' Shows on MP3 CDs (Up to 50 Hours per Disc)

DVDs

"Reality Check Part 1"   &   "Reality Check Part 2 - Wisdom, Esoterica and ...TIME"

Apr. 5, 2020 "Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt (Blurb, i.e. Educational Talk): " Masters of Disaster... " *Title and Dialogue Copyrighted Alan Watt - Apr. 5, 2020 (Exempting Music and Literary Quotes)

Apr. 5, 2020 (#1768)

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

(Blurb, i.e. Educational Talk)

Master of Disaster...

"The White-Coated Priests Predict Terror and Fright, From Models, Programs, Display Screens, The Light."

© Alan Watt Apr. 5, 2020

*Title & Dialogue Copyrighted Alan Watt - Apr. 5, 2020 (Exempting Music and Literary Quotes)

Information for purchasing Alan’s books, CDs, DVDs and DONATIONS:

America: Stripe, Cash, Cash App, personal checks, (Bitcoin and Ethereum for donations only)

Outside America: Stripe, Cash, personal checks, (Bitcoin and Ethereum for donations only)

Stripe Orders: USE THE DONATE LINK ON THE WEBSITE – AND –
Send a separate email along with the donation (list your order, name and address)

PayPal no longer accepted for donations and orders

Click the link below for your location (ordering info):
USA   Canada   Australia or New Zealand   All Other Countries

----

THE OFFICIAL WEBSITES OF ALAN WATT

cuttingthroughthematrix.com,   cuttingthroughthematrix.net,

cuttingthroughthematrix.us,   alanwattcuttingthroughthematrix.ca

MIRROR SITE

cuttingthrough.jenkness.com

INTERNATIONAL AND MULTILINGUAL SITE

[emphasis added to articles with underscore and bold]

Hi folks I’m Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through the Matrix on April 5, 2020. Now, this will be probably a long talk and so I should remember right now to remind you that you can donate to me @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. You'll see how to do it through PayPal, or you can send cash or send checks. It tells you how to get them to me.

Remember too that right now with all this, [Alan chuckles.] pandemonium, let's put it that way, this managed and promoted pandemonium that we're living through right now that most businesses are in a lockdown too. So, you have to wait if you ordered books for instance, you have to wait until I can get the printers to get them done because they are pretty well knocked down as well throughout this crisis. Well, the whole country is, isn't it? So, it might be a little while, but it will get you eventually once they get printed, don't worry about it.

You can order @cuttingthroughthematrix.com remember. You'll also see an address there if you want to post something to me and how to do it. And if you can't find that, just email me. You can find out how to do that too @cuttingthroughthematrix.com and how to get in touch if you're confused about anything at all and I'll get back to you as soon as I can.

But yeah, you can donate to me and that helps me tick along. I've got expenses here naturally and my equipment is really old, all of it. It's very simple but it's still expensive, to me that is, at my level of income. So, you can help me tick along as I say by sending a few bucks this way as well. You've got to remember too that all the big talk show guys out there use my archives all the time and never mention me whatsoever. Because I've been putting out stuff since the 90s in detail and believe you me, those archives are heavily, heavily used by pretty well everybody out there on the radio. So anyway, I'll get back to the talk now.

I hope you're all doing okay under these incredible circumstances, 'eh. And what a time it is to be, I don't say alive anymore, I just say existing, we're existing in a form of under lock and key pretty well across a good part of the globe. I'm pretty certain too, like most big big things that happen in the world, we're living through a time where things are not just happening, as we stumbled down through time, but there's a lot of planning goes into everything of course. What it does show you under this particular period of time is the global management of this whole system.

Which really, it's quite interesting because as I've talked before in the past about how stars are made from scientists, and even historians now, they make them too. And they make sure you all follow them all. They've got Neil Ferguson who has his, who is a guy that's often quoted by governments for his predictions basically, supposedly of what's going to happen with most things in life according to the past, past histories and so on. And yet, it's to do also with computer modeling. Very, very important. I was thinking about that just before I came on and everywhere you look, whether it's Toronto or the States or other countries in Europe, and China too, they're using computer models to predict the future.

It's quite fascinating really to realize that the talks I gave back in the 90s are all really coming true, to do with religion as they take religion out of the picture. They’ve really replaced it with the new religion, because that's what people seek, religion. They seek answers to things which frighten them, or they can't understand. Or the fact too that we live and then we die, and most folk don't like that. And the ones at the very top really don't like it because they love living, they enjoy it more than anybody else because they get the best treatment for everything. They even have life extension for, and that's quite open actually in very high circles even with talks they give in certain countries, that if you can spare $7 million or more they can keep you alive until 140 if you so wish.

So, we're living in amazing times as the elite go all out to make sure that they keep living forever [Alan chuckles.] for as long as they possibly can. Because life is pretty wonderful when you get up in the morning and you really don't have a care in the world. Most folk can't understand literally not having a care in the world. People who were brought up with butlers and servants and so on from childhood, where even the clothing is laid out on the bed for them and they're helped to get dressed, they simply sail through life.

They don't get up thinking about bills to pay, because it's all taken care of by managers and estate managers and so on that deal with all of that. They get into their chauffeur driven cars. They have no idea, and they care less to know, when it was serviced or just out of the garage and the other one was getting used in the meantime, you know. They have none of that. They don't even know how to, you know, where the oil goes, and they probably don't even know if there's oil in it or what it's for. These things are literally unimportant. It's all taken care of by other people. Little people. You know, that's what they call little people.

And they love life. They really, really love life because it's so wonderful to them. And they have the best medical care that money can possibly by. They don't even worry mainly at the top either about cancers anymore because they have the stem cell projects underway. That are really old projects going back to the 1970s but only now they are allowing people down the totem pole if you've got the cash to actually get in on it and get certain cures. But they've been using that since at least the 70s, maybe the 1960s, for the wealthy elite already which means they're onto something even further when they allow that level to be sold to the public.

So, we're living through amazing times as I say where we are being told by our masters really to be absolutely terrified. And there's so many things you have to notice about it all really. For years now, especially since the Levinson inquiry in Britain with the Lord who basically was given the task to censor all journalism in the UK. Australia followed suit with their own cloned version of this particular judge, and they passed pretty well the same things. Where suddenly journalism became flat, more flat than it had been for a long time. It's always been rather a... controlled, rather, very controlled in fact. Any journalist knows where his bread-and-butter comes from and he knows that if he wants to get the jam on top, you know, his paycheck, he's got to play the game according to his master.

And they don't have, you see most folk in the world don't have to be told on what not to do in their jobs. Again, it's like osmosis, again, you learn through osmosis, you catch on rather quickly. There are certain smiles as things are said, and knowing smiles, and you give knowing smiles back because you say I understand, you know. And that's how things really work. So, you have to be complicit in what you agreed to, even though it's never verbally spoken directly. That's how things really are in this world in which we live.

But after that, that so-called inquiry and they came out with the laws and so on, journalism became even flatter than it had been for an awful long time. So, for quite a few years now and I've given many talks on it, people had tuned out. And we all knew it, people were on the Internet and so on. The people had tuned out of regular media, it was so flat and unresponsive and boring and repetitive. And it wouldn't tackle any important subjects which were obviously, people were well aware of things were happening, but they wouldn't report on it. So, they were completely ignored and discredited. Big time.

But you understand, that happened as well even in 2001, it went flatter then too as the big lies took place. You know, the noble lies to conquer the world and all that, or conquer their enemies, and they call it the noble lie, you know, that enemies that live in caves did it all and stuff like that. So, you had to go along with the noble lie. It was for the greater good, you see. They talked about the need for the noble lie and they put it into University talks everything too for up-and-coming people who would be part of the future media, that's now in the flat response time that we are in today.

So anyway, you've watched it going down the hill and down the hill and down the hill. It was always biased of course. You had literally black-and-white newspapers that you always had the left wing and the right wing. Even their symbology is quite fascinating. And their terminology for what they call themselves, very very telling in the so-called Masonic circles as they play the game, hm. But really, they had lost all credibility, very rapidly, since 2001. It really escalated up until I'd say the inquiries in Britain and the laws were getting past and all that, and the rest of the world just followed suit. Since then it was just dead flat and boring, and they keep giving you heaps and bucketfulls of trivia and celebrities.

That replaced what used to be called news. Eventually people started to think that it is news, you know. But it's not. News is not something to do with personal lives of the rich and famous. Regardless how, you know, temporary they might be in celebrity status. But that's what they replaced it all with and we've all lived through this. They were completely disregarded. They were losing money. They had their hands out everywhere. They tried every gimmick on the electronic systems of the Internet to try and get people to subscribe and pay for the news that they would give you and so on. And often even what they give you now is still commentary. It's still commentary, and very weak and very politically correct commentary at that. So, it doesn't have the credence it used to have a long time ago.

D'you realize that literally almost overnight with this hype about oh my God, we're all gonna die, you're all going to die, the big horror story... Mass, mass hysteria was created. I've given talks many many years ago and not so long ago again about how horror stories work. It's to do with the limbic part of your brain, the so-called primitive part too that has all the different functions in it for survival. And all the basically uninhibited parts of you that has to survive at all costs. And it's not really a thought through process, you just do it and it happens, and the fight or flight and so on syndrome that kicks in too.

That's why you watched movies, especially horror movies that are pretty bad. I watched lots of horror movies that are awfully bad. [Alan laughing.] Some of the old ones compared to what they're putting out today are virtually classics with fantastic acting compared to what they put out today. But anyway, that's a different story. I'm talking about even the old Bs and Cs and so on. At least they weren't cussing and swearing every sentence, etc. But anyway, the reason you watch these horror stories is because you are, as I said before many times and have talked about the subject, you are in the position that the person that's getting chased or hunted or going to get eaten or whatever it happens to be, and you project yourself there.

And with every turn and twist as you're getting chased or whatever it happens to be, or getting set up to get killed or whatever, you're almost on high alert, like the person in the movie, you project yourself into them. And that's why you watch them, even when it's bad. If you turn your eyes away for a second, you see, and this is awfully important, you might, that's the moment you might find out, if you hadn't seen what was going to happen, or the movement of this creature or whatever it was that was going to eat you, you might get eaten, you see. So, your mind is the tuned for pure survival and you've got to be incredibly wide-awake to watch it all and see it all, so you can deal with it all in case it happens to you, you see. That's why you watch it, no matter how bad it really is.

Some of the things, mind you, are so bad today you might just want to die anyway. It really is so bad some of these movies. Actually, I often wonder if that's what they are meant to do is just kill you off out of boredom. But the old ones are pretty decent, you know. Even when they had little rubbery figures that were supposed to be monsters and stuff, it was quite good. Because they were enthusiastic the way they projected it across to the public. You kind of had to get into the Shakespearean type mood of it all where the audience would participate in a sense in the actual play. But it worked out okay.

So, you get fight or flight as I say through pure survival and that's why you watch it. Well, that's what you're getting today. That's the media’s resurgence, an overnight resurgence out of years, almost a decade or more, more than a decade of complete mediocrity. Overnight, through a terror event, you see, oh, suddenly, the whole planet is tuning in, in case they missed something, it might save their lives. And all they're doing is getting terrified and terrified to make sure they keep watching, one after the other, the next expert, the next. And they're all contradictory of course as they all vie for stardom, the different Dr. so-and-so and Dr. so-and-so on Dr. so-and-so etc. etc. and they all vie for the stardom, you see. It's interesting to really study humanity in these times, as we are all being studied incredibly minutely at the moment. It's astonishing to see them all come forth and their little, all the egos clashing and so on.

But getting back to what we're talking about and how the media has made its massive resurgence just out of pure fear and terror and all the rest of it. They won't even have to look for any, they were not even bothering to look for news before, mind you, but now it's even better because... Because all they do, they just give you doctors giving you terror events every day, you know. Oh, your eyeballs might fall out, or you know, if you suspect a symptom make sure you phone in, things like that.

Of course, the agenda, the agenda for sustainability is old. This is all what you're living through, agenda 21 is here, folks. This is it. As I said before, at the last climate meeting and I read the articles and the speeches they gave, that the public weren't listening to them. And the whole point of the climate thing was to depopulate the world, there's too many people, you give off carbon. That's the excuse they used was, the climate, you see. Before that they had other excuses for it, including global cooling. But still, too many people. It's always the same thing. Because the real thing you're getting at is there's too many of you and we want to depopulate you. It goes all the way back to before even the 20th century started, all the other organizations that were on board with it.

So here they are fulfilling it all. You see, they said at that meeting that people were not listening to them, they were not obeying them and consuming less and all the rest of it. They already got you into a post-consumer society, postindustrial type society, as some of their heroes of the left, that really are the heroes of the ultra-ultrarich at the top, like Maurice Strong who was picked up by Rockefeller, groomed by him and put in charge of oilfields to learn the trade. That's how they do it, folks, you know. Then they send them out there, are supposedly this kind of strange international socialist type character who is in charge of all the climate. He's in charge of consumerism and anti-consumerism and sustainability and biodiversity etc. etc. etc. Made into a star by the machinery again too.

Maurice Strong said the same thing, that by the time we're finished... When he was asked at one of his big meetings after, I think it was the Rio Summit, it was a famous paper put out on his speeches that he gave. A person who was there at the time asked him, who stood in for his son, his son had got ill or died I think and so the dad went up and attended the meeting and talked to Maurice Strong. He broadcast what happened, the conversation on international radio at the time, what he was talking about. He says to Maurice Strong, he says, you're talking about giving rights to animals and trees and everything else, he says, but what about the people, you know? And Maurice Strong said to him, he says, when we're finished, he says, you'll wish you had the same rights as a tree. This is not a people-friendly organization that Maurice Strong belongs to. He was a front man for the ultra ultra ultra ultrarich, you understand, a complete front man. And ruthless with it too.

So, you've got to understand what you're dealing with here. This agenda here is being rammed through, everything that you couldn't get through, sustainability agreements and the millennium projects and all the rest of it to reduce population and consumerism. Maurice Strong remember also said that we must destroy and just completely dismantle all progress the West made in industry. That's what he said, to bring you into a preindustrial society. Well, preindustrial, it was not a healthy place for most folk. Folk died quite often with colds and things and influenzas all the time because they were so unhealthy, and they were starved. Most folk were bulk starved basically and malnourished in places like Europe and different countries, especially Britain that never looked after its working people.

So yeah, we're dealing with an agenda here getting rammed through. Now it's under the guise of, we're all going to die if we don't just give up all your rights, stop working completely, obey immediately every order you're given by authorities of all kinds. And by the way, you've yet to see all the different authority agencies they are bringing forward. I mentioned commissars years ago will be in your area. Well, they're bringing them out now as they recruit them all in different areas across Europe and Britain especially again. And Australia. And New Zealand. And Canada. And they will be your local commissars that will, that's who you go to with any grievances, like, you're starving, you know, because you can't get food or anything like that. They've got all these kinds of things arranged.

A lot, even in the States too, they set them up for disasters, etc. after 9/11. You had ex-military people, anybody who had done any kind of service could volunteer for the same kind of projects. Well, now you've got them. And they're snooping on their neighbors in some countries and phoning the cops. Because in some countries know you're now only allowed maybe one short, actually in Britain I put a link up to YouTube where a fella is out there with his camera and he's looking at these empty streets. And two huge, these strange Doctor Who looking police vehicles they have now in Britain, these bright yellow and green things all striped, and one of them stops.

Because he's basically out there with a camera and the man, you hear the cop saying to him, because this is authorized in Britain and the cop says to him, are we out for our, are you out for your one short one walk per day, sir? That's what you're allowed, one short walk per day. Now, how short is a short walk? I'm not sure. And I guess the cops are relishing this kind of power they've got. And they are actually, if they think you're out for too long you’re going to get a fine down the road, they're talking about fining you next, if you won't run back from you short walk, your one short walk per day.

If you break quarantine you'll be fined $11k, says NSW health minister - timeout.com / 16 March 2020

It's out of sight, out of control. I'll even put another one up too with Nigel Farage who is doing it from his home like everybody else, but he talks about it too, this lockdown is like…

Nigel Farage - Say No to House Arrest - youtube.com

Because what's happening now, you're now a prisoner, you understand, and the police are your wardens, your prison wardens. And it's going to get a lot worse than this because they're going to extend it as long as they can possibly extend this big big movement, to save us all. Again, I'll just go back to a talk I gave years ago, when I was talking about the Green Party in Britain. Long history of it and I won't go into the beginnings of it, but they are quite fascinating themselves. It was a leader of the British Green Party, or one of the leaders, the other one is quite interesting too. The woman who was in charge, the spokesperson at the time for the party a few years back, maybe 10 years ago I think, she said that she had nostalgia for the way it was in World War II, when you were getting bombed from Germany, and everybody was rationed. And everybody had to go into, all the people in London had to go into the underground and they'd have these party songs, that's how they projected it in the old movies. Of course, it was miserable in reality.

But she says, it was wonderful and the people all pulled together and they didn't complain about authority and authoritarian system because it was wartime and they all had to pull together to get through and they didn't complain about rationing and all the rest of it. This is what she hoped to bring into Britain, that kind of obedience, you see. And you just quietly suffer things like starvation. But she thought that was wonderful. And here you go, what do you think this is all going to lead to?

What do you think it's going to lead to? And I'm not kidding you, I'm not saying, I'm not playing down what's going on, at all, with the actual virus. But the way it's getting played by those in authority, it's really interesting. And where it's supposed to go is even more interesting. Because obviously there is going to be no economy after this. I hope you understand that. It's meant to destroy, it's back to Maurice Strong, whatever economy was left completely destroy it. And that's how they're going to achieve a lot of their goals obviously.

And you might have eventually your little local commissars who will decide how much food you get for the week and so on, you know. And if they think you're looking a bit heavy they might just cut it back a bit. You think I'm kidding, 'eh? You wait and see. These are the times when you see the real control freaks coming forward rather openly. They already are, a lot of them. And the longer they can pull this off, the more confident they feel to really push further. That's how control freaks work, you see.

We don't have to go through the history of the world to see how it's worked in previous times. If you look at the incredible experiments they've done down through time in France especially with the French Revolution, and then you see the big experiment too with the Bolshevik revolution and the mass slaughter of the people, what they called excess, the middle classes. But really a lot of them were not the middle class at all. You were killed for your point of view. Because control freaks have no tolerance for any other point of view. Whatever title they give themselves like liberal or left-wing or whatever, or socialist even because don't forget, Russia was even a Soviet Socialist Republic, you know. So, you have to remember what we're going through.

During the entire communist era, especially Canada and the States vied every year to feed them, to sell them the grain, it was a big booming business. They decimated their farmers too in the Ukraine. Millions of them, 6 or 7 million were killed. Starved to death. Great old videos and photographs of the people, but the horror that you actually see. And by great, I mean a lot of documentation was taken. Because the Soviets thought, or the Bolsheviks thought that they were, well you know, you couldn't trust these people, because they are real peasants. It was supposed to be a worker’s revolution, 'eh, but the peasants were hated by the folk who really ruled them. Utterly hated. They even took their farm implements away too, guaranteeing total starvation.

D'you understand, I hope you understand, there's people who look back at that era and they have the same personality as the commissars that would go around and do all that. Every… I get fed up when I hear people, all they talk about is Hitler. Like he's the only person in history, right, who went on a rampage of war. What happened with Napoleon? Huh? What about the Soviet Union that spread its empire under the Soviet bloc? What are they saying here? Go down through time and in every generation you've got the high high-level tyrants with incredible, you know, dreams of dominating everybody. And that doesn't stop. It didn't just switch off after World War II. Every country has them. Most of them never get up there to command nations.

But sometimes they do. And at times like this you've got to be so careful because it doesn't, it doesn't mean that they even have the brains of previous tyrants, you see. But they have that spark where they want to dominate other people. It's a sadistic streak in those who decide that they know how you should be living. Incredibly sadistic. In fact, they hate you, I think. I think that's part of it. You know, a sadistic psychopathic system where a psychopath as we know will give complete allegiance to the officer above him, a rank above them. And complete contempt and arrogant nastiness to the people below, beneath them, including the next commission down basically. That's how they are. That's how they really really are.

And it doesn't stop through time like, oh, somehow, you're evolving. No, it's the same characters, same types of characters. I'm sure we've all met them in different occupations people have had in our lives. You meet them. You meet them at school even. And it's quite astonishing to talk to them. Sometimes they can be awfully, awfully honest with you. Psychopaths can be awfully honest at times. If they can't get something from you or they don't want something from you, you'd be surprised how honest they can be. And if they conquer or are caught conquering through even ones who end up in prison, because that's what they're really doing when they do whatever it is they pull off, it's a form of conquering, they've beat somebody, it's like it's a one upmanship thing. And they have tremendous egos. They are almost pure ego, a psychopath. The cleverer ones can hide it to a good extent and use it and excel in business and become utter tyrants in the business field. Ruthless too. We've all met them as I've said before.

I met one once years ago, of a fellow who had come up to Scotland. He told me one day, quite openly and honestly, he said, and I had beat him on all exams, you know. And he was quite open and honest and he says, and he was puzzled on his face. He says, you know he said I had no idea he says, that the education system had trained Scott's to be better. I says, what do you mean better? He says, I was taught about everything, when he was in England, and the reason he came to Scotland was he thought he'd do even been better and higher results in exams, final exams and all different things, by coming to Scotland where he had thought we were inferior.

And he wasn't being nasty when he was saying this. It was like a dilemma he was trying to figure out, you see. That's what it was to him, just a dilemma. And he had the same traits, the psychopathic type traits. That's how they are. But they can be as I say awfully honest at certain times. When they can't get something from you or get something over on you, they can be very very honest. When they're caught, the ones who are caught and end up in prison by doing something illegal or whatever, they love to boast then suddenly with what they've done because it was so clever, and aren't you really amused and impressed by what I've done, you know.

We are run by that type. And they do seek power. And that's the problem with all power, they tend to rise. Even police commissioners have thoughts on it too, they rise to that kind of level of power. And believe you me, if you wonder why political correctness rampages through the police world, apart from the training that they get too, to always be, look out for this and look out for that, or bad, or even hate stuff, you know. Don't forget that once you have something on the books and have their little courses taken, then they can start arbitrarily judging people for what they say or think.

I'll put up another clip today of a person in Britain, it was an inquiry with the Deputy police Commissioner of London I think it was. Because the police force now are literally giving visits to people or phoning them up according to their tweets and twitters or likes and dislikes and all that. I'm not kidding you; you're so well studied. They're phoning people up and putting them on hate lists just for a little, making a joke. And that's for life, folks. That's for life. So, this deputy police Commissioner, he is, you'll see him prevaricating, dancing around the questions all the time.

'You have become the Thought Police.' UK Police Chief questioned over recording of hate incidents - youtube.com

Because he himself has the psychopathic qualities and tendencies. And obviously no humanity because any decent person would know it's wrong to put somebody down on a... when it's not a crime by the way for what you think. It's not a crime. But it is thought crime now, you see. And characters like this deputy police climbed to the top by going along with every PC thing that was in vogue at the moment. These are the kind who end up being utter tyrants when you get into a Soviet type system of authority over, an arbitrary authority over the public. I'm not kidding you. You'd better look at these things and think about them because they're out there.

People who literally hold onto humanity and, oh, that's terrible, that's wrong. They don't get the promotions. It's the lickers, as you well know, we'll call it bootlickers if you like but these are the characters who get up to the top. And they have no problem with the fallout it causes on society as they go on the rampages and get little, more brownie points for their career for finding more folk. Did you know what so-and-so said? Do you know what their opinion is on it? Bomff, you know, a record for life. By them. Not even going through a judge or anything else or a jury or… Hm. We are here, folks. Honestly, we're here.

We already had countless articles from science magazines and so on over many many years, and business magazines too for those who read them and stacks and thousands of articles about what they'd like to do with, say, digital technology and where they'd like to take the world and have biometrics for everybody. Even the health organizations too and the big big industries of pharmacology, incredible massive businesses, and the vaccine industries too who are talking about what they'd love to have.

I mean, look at the CDC who are in and out, in and out of big Pharma all the time on the boards and back into the CDC. I did articles many years ago with the names of the people on the boards and so on, who literally came from the top jobs in pharmacology and the big big corporations and into the CDC. Then they pushed a certain bill. The same, the FDA was exactly the same. And once they get bills passed, they promote bills in politics and so on and they go back into the CDC again or whatever it happens to be. That's how it really is folks. Everything is so tightly woven with conflict of interest, corporations and politicians and so on, you can't disentangle it anymore. You have to literally clean out the house and start again because everything is so corrupt. I mean, every country is the same.

Every country is exactly the same. I can remember when Canada was going, oh, we're going to have the deregulated, you know, patent and regulated drugs, the older type drugs, generic drugs in Canada. And we said, oh wow, isn't that wonderful, thank God. Because folk couldn't afford the medications, you know. Then you find out one or two groups, or even families, end up getting the contracts for so much of it. And before you know it, they're almost the sole contractors for it all. In fact, they are. Including all the different opiate drugs, that's how that happened as well by the way. And the prices are through the roof, you see.

People who want to get rich don't wish about it, they do it. And they're very busy. And again, the psychopathic tendencies of them, they're not shy about coming forward, as they say, to get it done, get the job done. They'll call you up and say, you know, you have a corporation blah, blah, blah, I'd like you to do this for me and I'll do that for you. And they're quite blatant. Even though it comes to touching on any kind of illegal activity of the thing, they'll find ways around it. There are many ways to reward people that are in politics that keeps things off the books.

I'm not saying anything new here, that's the way it all runs in fact. When you look at many of them who start off and they get, you see what their salary is, which is always too big anyway for what they really do in politics. Then you see what they've got in five- or 10-years’ time, all the billions or millions. They didn't get for that from their paychecks. We all know it. Don't we? We all know it. And that's the way it really is. They get their gifts and presents and roundabout ways of getting things to them. Generally, it gets skipped over by any authorities and so on as long as it's not too excessively obvious. And even when it is excessively obvious like the Bidens, you know, the son of the Bidens and all that. Immediately, because so many of them are involved in the same kind of, what we would call corruption from the bottom level, that's how we see it, you get massive attacks by the like political parties now if you notice it. It's just so corrupt, isn't it? Everything really is corrupt, everywhere you look.

The same thing in Britain. It's like, growing up I noticed it, all the different lords that were up in the House of Lords especially, and a lot of the top politicians in the House of Commons that were involved in defense during the Cold War. It was a booming business. Booming business where they'd all have, they'd help to push for the contracts for the big companies that made the missiles especially, and tanks of course naturally and submarines, big business for submarines, nuclear submarines. But they keep pushing for new missiles, and antimissiles, antimissile missiles, and all the rest of it. Until literally you couldn't even follow it anymore it was so complex with the Russians have the latest blah blah blah, and ours is, you know, 5 km slower, so we couldn't reach it to knock it out, so we need another antimissile missile. Then you have an antimissile antimissile missile, and it went on and on and on. Into this ridiculous game of making missiles and massive contracts for expensive, expensive things.

Which really would never be used. You couldn't even test them to make sure they even work a lot of them. If they were nuclear, [Alan chuckles.] I mean you can't really test them, right. So, you take it for granted that the thing is what they said they were. But the shares that the big boys had in it, the political parties, were enormous. Enormous shares. And it was a great game. They really cried their eyes out when the Cold War supposedly ended because they came to an end. They never had it so good. Never, really. And the weapons wouldn't last that long, oh we had to dismantle them, they're obsolete now. The ones today are faster. The one from last year are just too slow. So constant making of new ones and new ones and new ones.

I don't know if you ever saw any of the good propaganda documentaries put out by the CIA for instance or the Department of Defense. All countries have them. They showed you these, the big minaret towers they have in some of the Islamic countries. Well, they all have them really, and that's really where they say their prayers from and so on in the morning and different times of the day. But they said, this is the latest one we've noticed, and then they'd pick out a Soviet bloc country. And they'd say, look at that, you know, inside there we know they've got a... And they'd reel off this long, you know, SFX blah, blah, blah, blah, blah missile built in there, you know. It was straight out of Mouse on the Moon, the old comedy movie, straight out of that. But they actually used that. And that was taught for like 25 years to every recruitment group that came in, in intelligence, and showed them, look at that, you see that, inside there there's definitely a... And they did it for different ones too. And so, we need another X blah, blah, blah, blah, blah antimissile to find it and kill and destroy it. Great business! Great, great business, isn't it?

And when it's done with governments, then, and this is the beauty of the banking system, Britain started it off with the Bank of England. Then they could lend to government, you see, for its projects and they put it on the people as the guarantors to pay it all back. It's beautiful, really, 'eh? Then the States followed suit with its Federal Reserve for World War I, they needed to get into the act, then the taxpayers are put down and income tax comes in and all the rest of it to pay it off, etc. It's quite an amazing racket we live in, isn't it?

Then you find out your governments are like semi bankers because at the end of World War II they'd already set up this Economic Development Corporation they call it. Every country had it set up to do with Economic Development Corporation and they'd appoint politicians in charge of it, you know. They would lend your money across the planet supposedly to help bring the Third World countries up to standard. They put factories in, or they'd build factories and that, wherever the work was cheapest, they used this money for the labor, they'd build the factories and all that. Then they used the taxpayers back home, as they cut their jobs back, there was no factories left in your own countries, they made you pay for it all. It's a complete racket.

A complete racket. And if the labor got too expensive in one country, they simply uprooted and bought another factory, using the tax money again and then borrowing from the central bank to build it somewhere else. And then your bank, you see, your bank, your government starts ending up like a bank. Your government ends up like a bank as well, it's lending out to countries now. Well, where did they sneak that one in, that you're electing in government, so’s they can lend money out, or even give it away to other countries without asking the people?

Well, that's how governments actually work. It's got nothing to do with democracy. They're hoping nobody is going to bother asking the right questions. Of course the ones who pretend that they're left-wing, are not going to stir, rake the muck up either and say we don't agree and we don't agree you're giving your tax money away to other countries, they'll never say that, will they? Nope. Which tells you a lot in itself.

If they're all for fairness, now, why should the people constantly pay money out so that your government can supposedly give it away, or lend it out to certain countries, knowing they can never pay it back? And then they have movements going back into the country that's a guarantor, to make you think that, well yeah that's a nice thing, it's a charitable thing to write it off. Well, it's not written off. You are now paying for it, the guarantors, meaning the citizenry of the country that lent it, are now the guarantors to pay it off. And as soon as you tear it up and pay it off your government immediately gives them another one. It's a complete financial racket by con men. That's how it is. And they use the left-wing too, oh it's good to write off the debts. Well, the debt is not written off, we're still paying them. We pay them, you see. It's never-ending racketeering really.

That's how the world really works because it's not Disneyland. It is not a happy little place with nice clean little middle-class streets and everybody on bicycles, and everybody knows everybody else and so on. It's really pretty nasty at times. And the characters around the world tend to be of much the same ilk. If they have the right qualities of psychopathy, it doesn't matter if they’re right-wing, left-wing or what they happen to be, they’re recruited by organizations, because they’re psychopathic and they've got a bit of brains in them, they can be useful, awfully useful to those who run the world. And that's how they recruit them.

It's like the civil service, most of the civil service in most countries that I know of, the people don't even go through into universities. They're often recruited right from high school. And that is their apprenticeship is once they get in at the bottom level. And they're there for life, you know. That's their job for life. They know what they have to do and they're well rewarded for doing it. Well rewarded. And they're often intergenerational, they marry each other a lot of them. That's because they don't have to have resumes put in, their parents are the resume, and their grandparents. Their lineage, it's like generations of bureaucrats and civil servants. That's what George Orwell, or Blair, his real name was Blair, that's where he came from.

So, the real world is, really, it's the machinations of real [Alan chuckles.] deceit and conning and pretense. And we who are being fooled have to participate in our own deception by deciding to ignore it, you see, and pretending that, oh well, you know, it's not that bad, is it. Really. This whole idea of having a Democratic system, which of course they've scoffed at for years at the top, is a nice, it's a nice, you know, myth basically, it's a kind of a myth of the past. Again, it's a utopian vision of the future that you're always working towards. You suffer now so's that down the road they're going to like it.

Well, most folk I think today are pretty sick of looking to the future, they want it now, you see. And each time you start to see a glimmer of things getting a bit better for you financially, you're dashed again with yet another bank crash with the conology. Or the dollar is just completely devalued anyway. Or your currency, whatever it happens to be, completely devalued by the ones at the top that you never meet. I mean, I'd rather vote for the folk at the top, wouldn’t you, the folk who really do things. Most of them you don't even know their names. They do exist but they don't run for politics. They really don't.

You might not understand this but the big big movements in your governments of the Western, and Australia too and New Zealand, the big big movements that change your system don't come, or the big moves don't come from the ordinary people, or the politicians for that matter. The politicians might rubberstamp them because they know, they get a clue how the system really works and it's not to ask questions when you get the nod or the wink as they say.

But when it comes to big things like, for instance, free trade, and the policies to do with all free-trade, which are binding policies to unite the planet under a financial system, a political type system, we've been through this before many, many times in my talks with free trade and the Royal Institute for International Affairs, the Council on Foreign Relation in Americas. They have one again for Europe now, the European Union CFR. And they have one for the Far East, and the heads are based in Japan for that, or were anyway. But they also have ones in China now, in the communist China. And as Carroll Quigley said, who did their history, because they have their own archives of how the world really is changed and he wrote his book Tragedy and Hope because he said, because they're so important in the development of where the world's come from and where it's going, because they create the history. Not the one they give to us at school, because they really make all the changes for globalism and for uniting the world into free-trade blocks and for central banking systems and the World Bank and the IMF, they created all of this, this private organization. And he said it's time the public knew about it and he didn't think the public would object.

So yeah, the free-trade deals including the old NAFTA deal, now it's USMCA deal, same thing, was drafted up by members of the CFR. Some inside politics, a lot outside politics, but most of them you've never heard of. They also drafted up the ones for the European amalgamation for the European Union years ago, private body and organization, with names most folk had never heard of. They always get a firm politician to push it through, but the ones who really plan it all and do it all never run for election or anything, they're appointed into a cabinet, or over a house or cabinet or department. That's how it's done. The free-trade for the NAFTA deal for Canada was an outside appointment. The man was put in, Simon Reisman, who looked over the affairs of, the preordained affairs of Canada. Canadians didn't know it, but it was a completely rigged thing from the beginning. Private organizations.

That's how the world is run. In these same private organizations with their guys in suits and ties and all that, when you see them smiling and grinning at you, you've got to remember that face can turn into a very evil entity if you disobey them because they are psychopathic, you understand. That's the real world. That's how it's run.

They come to the fore when power is up for sale, or up for grabs as you're seeing today. They're coming out of all professions too, it's quite interesting to see the professionals come out. And you get the sociologist ones, or, you know, there's too many people anyway, and the same with the climate change group, you know. But they're all friends for the big foundations behind them. And yeah, there's too many of you. And you know, clean the world. And, all the old folk will die, they say, you know, like it's a good thing. They're all coming out.

Because this is another thing I've noticed with psychopaths too, because they are ambitious you understand, some of them are more ambitious, and the really intelligent ones know when to keep quiet, they'll watch, they watch the course of things before they make a move. But the ones that are chomping at the bit, maybe a bit younger or whatever, they come out openly thinking this is the time they can express whatever they really think, and then yeah, it will help depopulate the world. Just like the climate change agenda wanted.

And if they bring you into austerity, then, your turn of sickness and malnutrition and more child mortality in childbirth, etc., etc. etc. It's just open, there's nothing secret about it if they bring folk into austerity. I hope you understand what I'm just saying about austerity here. The plan that they said they'd have to force on the world, and I gave the talks on austerity that they had at the United Nations and all the organizations associated with them to do with austerity and what it meant and all the rest of it. The politicians all signed onto different bills to rubberstamp it.

Well, bingo, here it goes. You’re hearing, we might have to bring in rationing. My goodness. Well, nobody's earning anything. Well, except for the big corporations that have got their hands out and billions are getting thrown their way, right. And amazing all the different, even the psychologists and the nudgers, the behavioral insights teams are getting millions and billions thrown at them, folks, to manage us and our minds as we go through this, and our behavior. They all got their hands out, all the real happy psychopaths that can grab it quite, without a conscience or guilt of any kind whatsoever. They don't have guilt, you see. This is when you see them come to the fore.

Do you know in some countries you've got doctors sending out notices, really, forms to patients who have disabilities, physical and they could also be like Down syndrome for instance, folks who are not dying, folk who have cancers who could live another 10, 15 years with treatment, saying that maybe they should consider if they get sick with this Covid thing, not to go to hospital or whatever, but they could request, they could request just no resuscitation. And it's sent to their relatives mainly for these people by the way, 'eh. Very clever, don't let the people know, sent to their relatives, so quietly they'll put you down as, well, don't resuscitate this person if they get sick with this Covid.

Coronavirus: GP surgery apologises for sending 'do not resuscitate' form to patients - news.sky.com / 1 April 2020

It's all coming out now, isn't it? Do you realize during the so-called racial hygiene programs of Germany, they copied really from the Britain and the US to do with sterilization and all that? But they also started to just kill the people who had psychiatric problems in mental hospitals and things, and deformities. How come they're always blasting Hitler, and yet we see, I've seen this kind of thing going on for years in all countries, when the government get uppity and give more grants out to certain segments of society? But it's done scientifically, you understand. [Alan laughing.] It’s nothing personal about killing you, you know. Nothing personal. It's just science, you know.

And they're all doing their computer modeling, 'eh. Our lives are run by computer modeling. I keep thinking about this computer modeling. And Neil Ferguson already, millions and millions and millions are going to die, you know. The guy that they make the star, who believes in Empire, and who was pally with all the neocons in America. Made into a star, star making machinery. And then he's giving advice to governments on what he sees and so on. This is the program you're going through, that type of, ha, computer modeling of this Covid virus, 'eh.

I was thinking, as I said earlier, without finishing what I was going to say [Alan chuckles.] But it was a thought about the song, The Sound of Silence by Simon and Garfunkel. Because the lines in it, and that was the big thing back then too when that was written, that song. It wasn't just the signs on the subway and so on, that were scrawled and painted, you know, like graffiti type signs, which they were talking about too. They were giving you all the warnings, the signs and the warnings of what was happening, at that time, and what was to come.

And science, really, they didn't mention the fact that science is rising and rising, except to give hints at it, if you want to think and decipher it. He said, and the people bowed and prayed, and this is again kicking religion out as I say. Because they say that you can take the people out of religion, but you can't take religion out of the people, they'll look for it elsewhere. Well, they've been given it by the ones who displaced it. And it's the scientists. Academia and the scientists, you see, the experts that are going to dictate how you're going to live, even why you should live, or maybe you shouldn't live, etc., the very things that George Bernard Shaw talked about and HG Wells and all the other great characters that were made into stars to by the same organization behind them.

So, in The Sound of Silence they say, and the people bowed and prayed, to the neon God they made. You see, that's your new God, is science. Electricity. Elect-tricity. I should say it too, electricity is the elect, you know, the trick of the elect. And it's true. Because it's dominating everything.

Without this, and I remember hearing a preacher who is dead now years ago talking about it and he said, this evil evil thing, this force, this entity called different names, he said, it couldn't achieve its goals without the computer. Computerization that can collect all the data on every individual, not just your names but everything about you, things you don't even know yourselves, it couldn't happen, and do it so easily and effortlessly eventually as the computers developed, across the whole planet, and bring it all together and bring you in. And I thought about that too because I could see that happening myself. And I thought yeah, I says, this certainly has the power to control everybody's lives minutely.

The greatest… This is the true, the true orgasm of the ultimate tyrant, that's never existed before, THIS kind of dream, total power over everybody. So, you build the thing with your own hands, 'eh, and then you worship it like a god. There was a science fiction put out about that years ago too, can't remember the author on that one, where they kept feeding into it, short story, they kept feeding into the computers, and they had a system of computers across the world but one major one you see, it was the God computer because it would answer all your questions. Eventually they'd say, is there a God? And then it was a quiet response, you see, quiet. Which it never, silence is terrifying too, remember that, the sound of silence. And eventually it lit up and across, and it connected to all the difference computers across the planet, this question fed into it, is there a God, and it says, there is now. These things are very telling in drama and stay with you. Because they're very pertinent.

Well, now you have governments not listening to people at all except select politically correct people. Everybody's out for something, even the anti-hate groups are out with the hands out there for billions. Literally, billions, 'eh. It's a business. So naturally they're going to see hate wherever, whenever, until eventually everything's classed as hate, a different point of view is hateful. You see. Now it's your thoughts that are hateful. Thought crime, hm.

So, everything is out there as I say for its own purpose. Because we live in such an incredibly corrupt time, a corrupt society. You've had a buildup since World War II increasing, increasing, a buildup of worship of celebrities and multimillionaires, and now it's multibillionaires. And the very fact they're multibillionaire's apparently gives them better status at dictating to us how we should live. Well, where did that come from? How does that correlate? It doesn't at all, does it? They are made into stars by machinery. They all are.

Celebrities, the people follow celebrities, hm. That's what we're told. The CFR brought celebrities on board with it years ago, like George Clooney and Angelina Jolie and others. Because the people who read all the gossip stuff, and that's what you had for years as a replacement, a substitute for news is celebrities. And therefore, what they're talking about, suddenly, they're in the CFR now. All the people who follow them and like them, you see, they like them, even though they don't know them, they like them, because they like the personas portrayed through fiction, you see, and well, so-and-so said this maybe they're right because they're... I like them. People are making decisions because they like them, not because of any intellectual component.

We are so manipulated today it's beyond overboard. It's beyond overboard. We've never had a time like this before. And today, I mean, over half the world, maybe three quarters is in lockdown? Do you realize World War II, and World War I and then World War II, caused havoc across Europe, especially Europe, absolute havoc, and massive deaths and slaughter that they never ever dreamed of before by tyrants, that kind of slaughter. And the energy and power that was expended through technology to do the slaughter. And then World War II came along and they'd already from Sandhurst in England, the officer training at Sandhurst were getting taught, before World War II came along, and they also brought officers in from other countries, including Germany, I remember there was a general from Germany, or he became a general eventually, who mentioned that, that Britain was teaching total war.

They had a whole, they had it worked out like a manual almost like total war, in the old wars, and it's true enough, the old wars were often almost localized type events that happened where a country would send a bunch of troops over, or mercenaries over to another country where the king was having a tiff with his cousin or whatever. A battle might happen outside of town even, and it didn't really affect the town much either. But as time went on and weaponry became more efficient and heavy artilleries etc., then they would lay siege to towns and demolish them like World War I.

They've got photographs of old, or spent shells, massive, massive shells for the heavy artillery guns. They're built, you see the people standing down below these things, are teared up, huge things, about 40 feet high some of them. The empty casings. Football fields full. And these would come from maybe one main bombardment that went on for 12 hours straight or more. You can't imagine the energy used to slaughter people.

Again, World War II came along, and they had total war. They said, well you see, now that we can demolish all cities like we showed them in World War I, then all the civilians are therefore legitimate targets. Because they will work in industries that produce enemy's aircraft and weaponry and all that. So, it's all legitimate now, it was all decided above, you see. Then they go on about Germany bombing targets in England. Mainly it was Scotland into the Clyde side, then they hit Edinburgh too as well, trying to get the fourth bridge at one time, this because they thought one of the main ships was there too. But anyway, they started bombing England but only after Churchill had totally bombed Berlin.

Then Dowding who was in charge of the Air Force was all for total war, and they slaughtered the working-class populations across many German towns and cities. Of course, they kept that quiet for many, many years after the war. Because you are the good guys, you see. But in reality, you know, we do live in a fiction. We truly do. And during World War II as it was almost ending, they had a meeting with King George residing over it about depopulation. They still wanted, they said there would be too many folks after the war. It hadn't killed enough! And meanwhile everybody was off fighting, thinking, for their country and their culture and their way of life, to protect it all.
And you see what happened in the 1960s.

But what a joke we live through isn't it? We do live in a joke, a complete fantasy that's so indoctrinated into us. And every young boy is so susceptible too, I must admit. Because you're brought up with, your country is just wonderful. And young guys admire guys in the military, you do that, and that's why you end up going up into the military yourself, that's what happens. And obviously think your country must be always in the good. Or you wouldn't go in the first place, except if you're really psychopathic. But you have to stop really now and say wait a minute here, that we live in a completely different system than the one we've been indoctrinated into. It's as alien as something from outer space almost, or Doctor Who. It's so alien to what you've been trained and taught to believe.

It's at times like this when these things happen, these events happen, that when things don't make sense to you that you've got to question it, what on earth are they doing? An example is, very simple, quarantine of the nation is not a new idea. It's almost chiseled in stone, that here's what you do if some terrible pandemic breaks out like a Spanish type flu. You didn't sit and wait for it happening. No, you know what to do. You close your country like an iron fortress in a sentence with an iron wall around it. You close it. Right away. According to the data you're given to call it a pandemic, you understand. You don't call it a pandemic lightly. Especially when you've been watching China frantically going around streets spraying stuff, they call it mists everywhere and so on and so on.

But you still allow all the planes to come and go into your own country? They're still coming and going by the way. I'll put a little clip up by Nigel Farage just for the little bit that's in it you might like, which he says in it, he says, they're still letting, Heathrow is still bringing like 20 flights a day or more from the infected areas. Right now. And I kept wondering why we're all getting locked down, while they're still bringing people in like this?

Well, if you want to make things, and it's not panning out with numbers and all that, then you've got to literally keep it going, until you get enough people in, to bring more infection into the country, obviously, to make it happen. Why else would you be doing this? Why else? Why else? Come on, you're going to bring more and more folk that are outside your country into your country?

Well, they're citizens or they're dual nationalities or whatever. Well, it doesn't, it wouldn't matter, you take your chances. You do take your chances during it, that has always been the law.

You're not brought in and then given a suggestion, before you even come into the country you're given, well maybe you should just go home and quarantine yourself for a couple of weeks, maybe, you know. They're doing it in England and Canada, without telling them anything, they are just coming and going. It's a joke. And if it's such a joke you're left with questions like, are they really that stupid at the top? No, they're not stupid. If it's happening, there's a reason for it. And it's to make it worse than it is. Really. That's what it seems to be.

In Sudbury here, just near me, 20 miles away or so, I read the articles I think last week, the week before where they said they were expecting a big spike to happened and it would happen around, you know, the end of March or beginning of April. Well, that's when the snowbirds came in from Florida mainly. And sure enough, they had different people in Toronto and different places, I think one in Sudbury, they came back as snowbirds, that had an infection.

I was reading about, from the official website by the way for Sudbury on illness and so on, and what they'd done is move a lot of patients out of the hospital, the main hospital in Science North, Sudbury, Science North they call it I think, they moved them out, a lot of patients out that had some kind of long term older people there and so on.

But they moved them to another place outside the hospital in preparation for, they expected this big spike. And I thought, well if they're expecting a big spike, I said at the time, it would be probably because they're bringing snowbirds in. How else are they going to get it? And they said there was no community transmission at the time, when I read that last article. I thought, well they must know there's only, it can only spike in one way in that case, you're going to bring them in. Or release something. There's no other way to think about it here. And sure enough, you had snowbirds, mainly in southern parts of Ontario and so on.

But after moving the people out of the hospital in Sudbury in preparation, I looked it up the other day there, Sudbury has one patient with it. One patient. And then I'm going to put the article up too, that Justin Trudeau is bringing thousands more from, he said that they're mainly pretty well Canadian dual citizenships and so on who must be living in other countries all across Africa and parts of India and places like that.

And he's giving massive loans out to help them get the money to come back and so on and to survive. He hasn't given loans out to anybody here that I know of. We're all still stuck in our houses. And if you're susceptible at all to it, they told you they won't treat you, oh we have to decide now who we'll treat before it happens, you know, people with pre-existing conditions and a certain age should be, you know, we can't really help them. Well, let's bring people from all over, right. And Trudeau's excuse for it was, well it's maybe better they come back here, he says, then be stuck in all these other countries where they've always been living, right, where things might be getting worse for them.

Well, what about the folk here? …who live outside the cities for instance? Well, here's agenda 21, you shouldn't be outside the cities. Do you understand how many things are going to get fulfilled here? Hm? It's really astonishing. And the biometric scanners and IDs and so on that China has been issuing. There's an app in China and to get into different places now you've got to show it, it's color-coded, that you're healthy and you're cleared of the virus. And if you're caught with a red, if it goes red, you've gotta show this on their cell phones wherever they're going. Everything's electronic there. They want to push it here now too, color coding for the same.

I gave these talks in the 90s this would happen, and eventually if you didn't have your proper vaccinations you'd be walking into a supermarket and alarms would go off and they'd come for you. Here it is. Because if you really study history and you understand humanity, and you understand the psychopaths that run the system, you can always tell where they're going to go with everything many years beforehand.

You understand, everything that's out there really comes from the weapons industry, the military-industrial complex. Your microwave oven comes from it, old technology they were using even before World War II to communicate even, 'eh. So, most things come from there. So they're looking at all these different, and I remember reading articles years ago after the so-called wall came down in Berlin and they said, you know with this going down and the fact that they won't need all the weapons industry as much, the big corporations are looking towards surveillance, a surveillance society and equipping governments across the world with cameras and systems and computerization to survey its citizenry. For the peace, to keep the peace. That's as soon as the Cold War was supposedly finished, right. So, any excuse will do for them. They never change agendas. Never change.

Now, last week too I mentioned that they, oh my God they'd made a superstar of a doctor that was giving her little diktat's on television in British Columbia, Canada. Again, the star making machinery, 'eh. And her own website with her likes and dislikes, and all the fake fawning that they've put in there. And folk do follow the majority, you know, even though it's fake, they join. That's what polls are, for instance. Polls are meant to sway people to join. Oh yeah, I didn't think about that but if all those folks are going that way, I'll go the same way. That's what polls are for. Look at the history, there's a history of polls and why it was set up. It's convincing people. That's how they really work.

I heard a person years ago, a Canadian, it was a woman who voted for Pierre Trudeau, the father. She said, I know he had a terrible reputation with communism and international socialism and so on. But she says, and proudly told me that she voted because she saw in the polls that more folk were leaning towards him that year and she thought she'd rather be on the side of the winner. Nothing to do with the policies. Isn't that amazing? It really works with a lot of people, that whole thing.

What do you think all the yeses are and the likes and dislikes are, as they monitor you by the way, for liking or disliking something? That's how they got one of the guys in Britain who's been taken for hate crime, or thought crime, to court with, because he initially put a like on someone's joke. And the cops traced him. I hope people remember, the next time they want you to go off and fight for your country, no, you tell these characters like that and the cops to go and do it instead. Hm? And by the way, all you have to do is just see the police chiefs and see who pays for their holidays and where they go.

Now as I say, I'll look here, and yeah, the U.S. Navy, right, under the guise of anti-drug laws getting pushed in Latin America, it's Venezuela they're going to, as we know, eh. This is the best time, I hope you understand this. So, this is the best time, I hope you understand this, for those, for the warmongers to pull things off, when folk are the weakest, you see. It's easier for you. We already know that the whole neocon agenda has always had the same list of countries that they want to bring down and dominate completely. And sometimes they'll resurrect the country if they need an enemy, like Russia. I gave that talk back in 1998, the bad bear, I said if they ever need it again, if they ever run out of enemies, because don't forget that part of the reason governments today pretend to exist is to protect you against everything, and it's hard to do unless you’ve got an enemy. So, you create enemies. Even financing a lot of enemies. And sometimes you feed them, for many many years. This is how the whole con game is managed.

But anyway, it's the same kind of technique they're using in Venezuela as they did with Soleimani the Iranian that they, when they, the week before whatever it was they passed the ruling in America that the Revolutionary guard, their official military basically in Iran was therefore a terrorist organization, which gave them the right then to kill folk. Because you're not killing enemies, or even friendly enemies, or even non-wartime enemies, you're killing a terrorist, you see. It gives it a bit of semi-plausibility in the different circles, well you know, he was a terrorist and...

It's hard to say that the US is going around the world is just killing folk they didn't like. Like George Bush Junior said in the official inquiry, you look it up you can hear him saying it. Oh, I never said that Saddam Hussein had anything to do with 9/11. Even then they kept saying it all through, for about a year right before they invaded. He said, he was just a bad man in the world's better off without him. Well, is that a legal, a legality for going around the world, I didn't like so-and-so so the military went over and killed him? We bombed them out of existence, 'eh, took them back to the Stone Age.

Other things behind it as we all know. And of course, we all know. Of course, we do. So, the same thing is happening with Venezuela, they don't like the Prime Minister that's there. They're against Maduro, they want a regime change, as they call it, regime. When it's their own politician inside, it's the government or President or Prime Minister, but when they want to overthrow it's a regime change. So, you get fed up with it, don't you? It's like Groundhog Day with different names, isn't it, over and over and over again.

So anyway, Navy ships are being moved towards Venezuela...

US to Deploy Anti-drug Navy Ships Near Venezuela

floridadailypost.com / 1 April 2020

The Trump administration is beefing up counter-narcotics operations in the Caribbean following a U.S. drug indictment against Nicolás Maduro.

So, there you go, it's a drug indictment. He's now a drug pusher, right, you see. We've heard all this before and seen it before. Listen, the CIA, and other organizations by the way affiliated with the CIA, are down all across the whole length and breadth of Latin America making sure the stuff is produced. So, let's not fall for, let's not even get into that debate about it. We know this from history. We know who's guarding the poppy fields too in Afghanistan. We know that Bush ordered, took off the order which forbid the growing of poppies by the Taliban, they forbid it. Once Bush got the troops in there then they dropped that law and encouraged it to grow again. It's just, aah, come on.

Remember the Oli North thing years ago? Oliver North? And the continuity of government under martial law that came up during that brief inquiry, you know? That everybody's forgotten about? [Alan laughing.] And guns-for-drugs and drugs-for-guns and hurrah hurrah? It goes on and on and on. And they were selling it, of course they were selling all the stuff across America, all the narcotics even from that. Your own wonderful government, that's there to save you with selling drugs across the country to young kids and everything. That was happening in Britain too, all through Edinboro and places. Because the London government was participating in it too. Of course, they were. Anyway, a different story again.

You always hit your enemy at the weakest point. And being the people who advised and belong to all the different strategic organizations for wartime or strategy, you know, geopolitical strategy, they never stop. And they actually, they're really, this is when they use this crisis to their advantage, you see, as they say, how can we? And they just, oh, they're just salivating here because this is a great time to start killing folk. And Iran, the war drum's bashing against Iran now because this is when they'll be really weak, when they're in a crisis, a terrible crisis with the virus and so on, while leadership is getting hit and all that. That's when you do it. That's when you do these kinds of things.

And believe you me, I have no love for communism either. I have no love for it whatsoever. But it's really something to see what's going on. Disease or no disease, it continues, it continues, it continues, 'eh. So, they've given themselves the right to basically arrest someone, pull them back to America and condemn them. Like they've done with others before him, you see. It's awfully, awfully good for them. And again, they've got the same characters, you've got Rubio and that.

... a Florida Republican who has been among those calling for a tougher stance against Maduro.

But that's only one story, one of many that's happening right now. Let's just go to a few articles here, I did save some this week. I have more than some as you well know. That's all you're getting now is tune in, tune in, be very, very afraid children, right. You've got all kinds of people involved with pro-China, against China too, this is going on as well of course as we know. And you've got the World Health Organization and China....

The WHO and China: Dereliction of Duty - cfr.org / 27 Feb 2020

Some are complaining, including Japan too, complaining that everybody's up to their eyeballs in debt to China, that China is taking over the WHO and you can't criticize it and all the rest of it too. So, politics never stops, and geopolitics never stops either. So, you can take whatever you want from these kind of articles.

However, here's travel vaccines, right, getting back to the basics here.

Travel Vaccines Enter the Digital Age: Creating a Virtual Immunization Record -ncbi.nlm.nih.gov / ?2016

...Right… Isn’t that just what you want to hear right now. Well, why not? Because China's doing it right now, hey. Why not. But this article, travel vaccines, it's not just travel now, it's going to be permanent wherever you are. This article is from March 2016. Yep.

You see, all these companies, look at the money made from the apps and the tracking and all the rest of it, it's big, big money. And government right now is throwing out billions, billions and billions to companies like this with their hands out, you see. And they can use that, oh, isn't this wonderful, we'll know all who's had their vaccinations. And they've got a whole list of vaccinations they want to give you, and new ones they keep adding too, I hope you understand that. And then boosters they want to keep doing every year or two years or whatever. We are the business. We are the business, aren't we? But this is...

Travel Vaccines Enter the Digital Age: Creating a Virtual Immunization Record

ncbi.nlm.nih.gov / ?2016

At present, proof of immunization against diseases such as yellow fever is required at some international borders in concordance with the International Health Regulations. The current standard, the International Certificate of Vaccination or Prophylaxis (ICVP), has limitations as a paper record including the possibility of being illegible, misplaced, or damaged.

So, they go through the reasons why we should have electronic ones. We know too, the ones we did last week on Bill Gates and MIT and so on working together to get even a chip implanted with your data in it and your immunizations, vaccinations and all that kind of stuff. And tattoos, they tattoo it on or put a chip in. And this is real, this is ongoing and they're testing it out and so on.

They had a showing of it at one of the, last year I think it was, maybe last year's, big tech shows of a guy getting a thing injected between his thumb and his forefinger. They implanted this chip into him that would have his, so much data on him, he was a volunteer supposedly. Anyway, they've been hoping for this for years and years and years. And China's got, as I say, an app on their actual phone. If you don't get the green light, I think it's a green light or blue light, you can't go outside without that turning blue or green. And if it's red and the police catch you, they'll arrest you. Or if you try to get in to pay for food or whatever, that red comes up, no, you're thrown out, then the cops are called.

Another one too is...

"The Plannedemic"?

zerohedge.com / 29 March 2020

A PLAN YOU CAN’T TRUST!

For the past decade, Bill Gates has been warning us about an inevitable pandemic. Conditioning us. Getting us used to the idea.

Apparently Bill’s computer simulations discovered that people would easily fold under government pressure combined with an unseen enemy. Billions of people are under lockdown right now. Half the world is shut down.

(Alan: Think about that. What they couldn't achieve with the Cold War or before that with World War II, or World War I, never in the history have they even had one country totally locked down day and night for weeks on end. And they've got it now, with half of the world locked down. Do you realize, this is breaking all kinds of records for tyranny? And for, again, acquiescence by the public. Well, they're just trying to save us all. You understand where this is going to go, to save us all? Think about it, 'eh. But half the world is closed down. So...)

Gates must marvel at how easy it was to do it. (A: And isn't that true, 'eh? And then they go into different things about…)

The coronavirus is real, but we’ve had many waves of flu viruses throughout the years.

That part is true as well, but this virus definitely is, it's more contagious, it's said. However, most folk that get it don't know they've got it or had it. And it is true, that the flus, I've got the articles here, where they give the official CDC records of the flu for the past few years. You wouldn't believe how many folk die every year of it. And it's true. But with these massive deaths before there was never a shutdown of the country, or any country for that matter, because of it.

This Is How Many People Die From the Flu Each Year, According to the CDC - health.com / 26 March 2020

So, hay is definitely getting made right now. But this is definitely a killer for those, for a lot of them that catch this thing obviously, but mainly again the elderly and pre-existing conditions. Most folk today have pre-existing conditions, starting around the age of about 40 and 50, for many different reasons by the way. We think we're healthy but we're not really. This article here also is to do with...

The Coronavirus: A Civil Liberties Nightmare of Orwellian Proportions

sydneycriminallawyers.com.au / 28 March 2020

Imagine a reality where people were forced by the authorities to remain in their homes under threat of steep fines, while outside the police patrol the deserted streets, ensuring that no one steps outside without official authorisation.

While this might sound like an Orwellian nightmare, it’s hardly 1984.

It says this is the scenario of 1984 that we are in right now and more of it's going to come in the coming days. It's going to be more than just in the coming days. You see, this is getting played by the book, folks and out of this is going to be a completely different system that's going to come out. What they do is they unroll it gradually. The system that we are in right now, they've got psychologists, and in real time they’re monitoring, monitoring the chats and so on to see how you think about things and what you plan to do about it. Or if you're unhappy with it. Or will you go along with the next phase, etc. etc. They know, within five minutes of putting out a trial balloon they know exactly what the chatter is. They know where to pull it back a little bit or extend a little bit or whatever it happens to be. They know exactly. This is, I'm not kidding you, I've read their articles with the behavioral insights teams and so on, and MIT too, in on the act and many others aside as well.

So, they unroll it out and say, oh well, and they say, you might be locked down for March, and it will peak, maybe it will start going down a bit. This is how they play you, you see. So, April comes, and it still hasn't peaked yet, you see. In fact, you wonder if it's peeking out at all in some places, hm. Even the ones with, outside the hospitals, I have to mention it too, with some of the hospitals in New York, some folks have gone there and they're not seeing outside what they think you would see. It's just… There's a lot of strange things going on, put it that way.

But now that it's April, they're putting out the next trial balloon, you see. Oh, it might have to go another month. You've already had, again, the little, the fainter voices behind it, steady though, these are the ones that get you eventually, to program you, this might last right into the fall. And then you get articles saying my goodness, it might reappear and resurge in the fall. Which means you're right through to what they said at the beginning, you're going right into next year. You understand? You see where it's all going?

In Australia they've already announced that. Australia really is quite interesting, the authoritarian manner that they really pushed everything through so rapidly without any, you know, consequence to those in power. They've lockdown the country with even more stringent totalitarian methods, in the terminology at least that they're putting across to the public, is very Orwellian. I'll put some things up tonight to show you some links to stories to do with that.

We are seeing it, so yeah, you're going to get locked down for a long time. This is how they play it. Some of them you almost see them rubbing their hands with glee as they say it with big smiles on their face. Because this is going to be wonderful for them. These nobodies are suddenly somebodies, you see. Suddenly they're somebodies. And you all have to obey them. Right. Oh wow. Isn't that wonderful?

Another one too that I'm putting up is...

If you break quarantine you'll be fined $11k, says NSW health minister

timeout.com / 16 March 2020

(A: New South Wales Australia hey. Isn’t that wonderful?)

The NSW health minister, Brad Hazzard, (A: So quite a name hey, a good hazard, I guess, there where his authority comes from.) has announced eye-watering fines for anyone who ignores a 14-day quarantine after entering the state from overseas. Those found to have breached quarantine could be fined as much as $11,000 or even face a custodial sentence of up to six months.

So that's for the ones… Here they just say to them, well at least Justin Trudeau says in Canada, just, well please go home and quarantine when you come into the country from abroad. That's what he says, 'eh. However, they're asking them at the airports in Canada, no one's told them anything, they're just walking around doing what they want when they come in from the different countries. It's just astonishing really, isn't it ‘eh? As I say, it makes you, they're not stupid at the top, don't think they're utterly really stupid at the top. I can only think they want a heavy, heavy loading dose of spread to make things happen. Why else would you do it? Why else would you do what you're doing?

But the guys at the bottom, the ordinary folk that are locked down can't even move. As I say, they're bringing it here too, I can tell it's coming, watching Britain. And the feedback and how they're handling the feedback from complaints in Britain. That's how they do things. And they can implement it more perfectly right off the bat in Canada where your police well be monitoring you. Are you out for your one short walk per day, sir? Then some honest folk will say, well I've had two short walks today, I'm sorry. And a big fine for that. They might take away one of your toilet rolls, 'eh? [Alan chuckles.]

But yeah, we're living through amazing times when you see what's happening. And then you have this one here too...

Covid-19: Normal life will not resume for six months, says Government doctor

thelondoneconomic.com / 29 March 2020

(A: Woahhhh. Government, and then the word doctor makes you quiver these days, you know, the TV version of the doctor, not reality but the TV one, hey.)

Normal life will not resume for at least six months, a key Government doctor has said, as the Government placed all parts of the UK on an “emergency footing” to tackle the coronavirus outbreak.

(A: Oh, my goodness, 'eh.)

Dr Jenny Harries, (A: Apparently, she likes the authority, [Alan chuckles.] just from what I've read.) deputy chief medical officer for England, said the nation will not be in “complete lockdown” for half a year but said social distancing measures will be lifted gradually.

Her warning at Sunday’s coronavirus press conference came as the NHS announced the first confirmed death of a frontline hospital worker with Covid-19.

Cabinet minister Robert Jenrick said “we simply cannot” ask health workers to go on to the frontline without adequate protective equipment,

(A: This all came out by the way in a test they did four years ago, the government then had a big big test on a possible coronavirus that would get released and how they would handle it in Britain. And they said they knew they would be short of everything, they said it would be an utter disaster, in the test. So, here's the real thing happening and who’s surprised 'eh? So anyway...)

Cabinet minister Robert Jenrick said “we simply cannot” ask health workers to go on to the frontline without adequate protective equipment...

You see, [Alan chuckles.] there's things out there, articles and YouTubes up there with people from China living in the West who make a living on exporting stuff back to China. And buying thousands of facemasks, sometimes millions, and sending them over there and making a massive profit on them. And leaving not one, one of them even boasted, leaving nothing for Americans. So, it's just astonishing.

And here we are. Now they're floating the idea as you all know, don't wear facemasks, you know, it's only for medical staff. Like you're too stupid to wear one or something, it's just technical or something. No, no, no. We are told that for a reason. To make sure that enough folk caught it, I think. And then, but now of course they've changed their minds, just... [Alan laughing.]   Are you going to follow these characters? And believe them? On anything here?

But yeah, for months they deny it, oh the facemasks won't help you. It's like, Yes Minister the old TV program about the ministers or politicians in Britain in charge of things. And the head of the civil service at the time in one program said, he said, never believe anything until it's been officially denied. Always remember that. Oh, it's never, that won't help you. No. No. It doesn't do you any good. It's good for the doctors and nurses but not for you. And now they're telling you, oh, the opposite, you could actually stop the spread so much. If you're wearing it at least you won't be coughing it out so much. But that also means obviously you might not be getting as much in from folk who have coughed out it. But there ya go.

These are your specialists. They get paid big money for telling you this stuff. I tell you. Yep.
So anyway, six months, right, six months spread they say, you know, possibly. M-hm. And then you get...

Coronavirus: Police can now enter homes to look for people gathering - stuff.co.nz / 26 March 2020

As I've said before, in New Zealand and Australia they got a bit ahead… It's interesting the so-called colonies, the old colonies of the British Empire, and Canada remember too is part of this Commonwealth of Nations that eventually came up with the expression, the Royal Institute for International Affairs, when the old ‘Empire’ went out-of-favor, but it's the same thing. India too. They're more authoritarian in the so-called colonies than at home in Britain. You know, the home of people who stand up for rights, land of the free, you know, all that stuff. But no, the colonies are more authoritarian. Because that's how they were run by Governor Generals appointed by the Crown. Whatever politician sat in Congress or Parliament were under the supreme chutzpah from Britain basically, appointed by the Queen, Governor General.

Well, that gave them an awful lot of power. They could have the complete authority of the crown to do whatever they wanted to do in times of any kind of crisis. Even when it wasn't a crisis. And that never went away. So, when you see this kind of thing, the same in war but now it's a war on a virus, so they all come out again of the foxholes and they take command, and so yeah...

Coronavirus: Police can now enter homes to look for people gathering

stuff.co.nz / 26 March 2020

New Zealand entered a four-week lockdown to break the transmission of coronavirus on Thursday. Overnight, police officers have pulled over people who were breaking the self-isolation order — apparently unaware it was in place.

Police Commissioner Mike Bush, in a series of radio and TV interviews on Thursday morning, reiterated people will initially see (A: Initially, this is how they're getting at you...) the "friendly face" of police during the lockdown.

?"But we'll be ensuring people will comply because if they don't, people will die," Bush said on RNZ.

(A: So, there you go. It's badly worded because you're almost thinking the police are going to be [Alan laughing.] killing folk. But of course, he's talking about the virus. I hope. It says…)

He said police already had to educate people on the self-isolation order overnight...

(A: ...etc...)

Police officers would first issue a warning, then arrest people if needed.

I've got articles here about New Zealand and Australia where they're going to go after the hoarders of food and different things and masks, or anything at all that they suspect.

Dutton says hoarders to be 'dealt with' by AFP, Border Force - smh.com.au / 19 March 2020

By the way, you're now in the Stasi system. Because governments now set up volunteers to snitch on all their neighbors if they see anything. And of course, you understand how the real thing happened with the old, the witch-hunt that they had, the witch-hunt that they had in Salem, Massachusetts where you get great movies made out of it. And I like the movies, they're kind of nice and scary.

But in reality, you had a lot of jealousy amongst the different neighbors and farmers who had owned better land or more of this or whatever, and they were all vying for, with jealousy and envy of their neighbors. Well, once that kind of things started, oh they know there's witchcraft, witchcraft. Then they get rid of neighbors, then they could go and grab the land, you see. Humans are really devious characters. Really. Come on. That's how people really are, rather devious.

Well it's the same kind of thing here. Once you get neighbors a little bit of power and snitches in this kind of situation, you'd be surprised who comes to the fore and starts snatching. And they don't like certain neighbors, of course that's the ones they're going to snitch on. Oh, you know, that's sod, you know what he's done, you know, I saw him eating an extra jammy sandwich, you know, and you're only allowed one. That's how it goes, you see.

So that's all started too and we’re living through this, and we've got organizations set up after 9/11 in the States for instance, in every community for disasters and all the rest of it, well now they're all going into action. Britain recruited, oh, it was 1/4 million or more of them actually, they asked for volunteers and they all ran forward to be the commissars over their neighbors and so on.

So, I'll put these articles up. Remember, the articles I mentioned I always put up the links to them. It's worthwhile reading some of them. It gives you an idea what's happening across the world. Because what happens elsewhere happens here. That's what happens.

We also too do know that amazing things are going on in Germany. German finance minister for the state, you know, their main finance minister kills himself.

German state finance minister 'kills himself' as officials claim he was in despair over the coronavirus crisis - dailymail.co.uk / 29 March 2020

Well, they shouldn't say the economic effects of the Corona. It's some other reason behind it obviously. You understand, everything's make-believe, even fiddling the books. Today every country's got magicians working your booking system for you, your financial books. And when something that upsets something before money goes back in, that technically is missing temporarily for some other purpose, then they lose out and they'll take the blame for it. There you go.

Australia's digital ID biometric capability to move into public testing mid-2020

msn.com / 6 March 2020

(A: You see they're all copying China that was the big trial for it all.)

The Digital Transformation Agency (DTA) (A: Isn't that wonderful?) is anticipating the biometric component of its digital identity play will be ready for public testing by mid-year.

Appearing at Senate Estimates Thursday night, CEO Randall Brugeaud said the agency is currently ensuring that the quality of the biometric is "exactly where it needs to be" before it is pushed out to the masses.

(A: ...to the masses. I like how they speak about us all, we are the masses, folks. Where have you heard that before? Well, that's what they call them in the Soviet system and the Bolshevik system, the masses. The masses have, they don't have names they have just numbers, you know.)

"The thing that we've been very considered (A: ...writing is so bad now isn't it, you notice so many mistakes.)

"The thing that we've been very considered on (A: [Alan chuckles.])

"The thing that we've been very considered on is the implementation of the biometric features to ensure that the facial verification service operates as expected," he said.

"It is operating as expected, but it is not production ready.

(A: I guess they've got the hands out again for big big grants from the very slaves that's going to pay for it all and be monitored. That's how it works, 'eh, we buy our chains. I've always said, we buy our own chains in the slavery system.)

Australian government is currently juggling 62 high-cost IT projects

(A: Oh, the money is rolling for the big boys, 'eh, the big corporations. With big big money getting thrown all over the place, 'eh. Wish lists as they call them. M-m-m.)

On the overall digital identity program, just over AU$210 million has been spent to date.

(A: They've already spent it. How can you spend $210 million to make basically a computerized program system? Come on. Hm? So...)

myGovID (A: [Alan chuckles.]   This is so, so, it's almost biblical hey. yourGovID...)

myGovID is the Australian government's digital identity provider -- handled by the Australian Taxation Office (ATO). (A: We’re all just slaves, aren't we? Hm?) It's like the 100 point ID check but on a smart device, and it allows citizens to have their identity verified so they can access government services using that verified identity, rather than being verified continually by each Commonwealth entity.

And it's true enough, one ID thing, even a chip, is better than a whole bunch of them, surely, just one chip, 'eh? Or whatever they want to call it. [Alan chuckles.] myGovID hey? Tied and numbered, 'eh? Quite something. N-n-n. myGovID. Ahhhh, what a world, 'eh?

What a world it is, pretty sad and so predictable really. That's the big thing about studying for many many years is that nothing surprises, nothing really does surprise you. Because everything really is predictable. Another article too…

How the coronavirus response shows we have lost our fundamental values

spectator.com.au / 26 March 2020

Australia’s response to the coronavirus threat reveals that we have lost our fundamental values. While our nation is faced with what is arguably the most significant peacetime threat since the great depression, it is worth reflecting on how we came together to overcome that tremendous obstacle.

(A: Then he goes into the brawls over toiletries in supermarkets and so on.)

As supermarkets witness brawls over toiletries, the Morrison government has unveiled a $189 billion stimulus package (A: That's a free-for-all for the big corporations, 'eh. And the ones again who want to ID you and bring out new computer programs to monitor you, and probably your color-coded like in China for are you safe, are you not safe, have you infected, or possibly infected. $189 billion, 'eh?) in an effort to keep our ailing economy ticking over.

(A: That doesn’t make your economy, that doesn't make any work at all for the people who can't work, is it? It's for the big corporations. And they're already...)

The government has also taken a stand to discourage panic buying and ensure that enough supplies are left on the shelves for the most vulnerable members of our community.

And it's true, the fundamental values have gone. I mean, even the stores in Canada some of them started to, you know, the big supermarkets, I guess because someone complained, but they said that older folk couldn't get their groceries because the rest of them are plundering the things before they can get in. So, they said we'll open them an hour earlier in the morning. So they have to get in, even from outside and miles away from it, the people outside the cities have to get to the grocery stores in the cities, right, an hour earlier, so they have to literally leave their homes about five in the morning. Only to find when they go there that everybody's pretending they're old, and there's nothing left. It's disgusting, really.

[Alan chuckles.] It's predictable, as I say, very predictable. With the hype and fear and terror that's being pushed on television, and even across the Internet too it's just… Folk are cracking up. Intentionally, they know what they're doing at the top. They know what they're doing. I mentioned before for change you got to stampede the cattle. The cattle like just to feed in a nice field and it's harder to get them moving and started to move when they're enjoying themselves. The longer they're there, and if weeks pass, you're going to have a hard time getting them, unless you like big explosions going off to terrify them but otherwise, it's not going to happen.

So, once you get them moving, if you want change, you just keep them going. And that's what they do with the public, you see, keep them moving and moving. And each time they're passing through good pastures and stuff, keep moving and moving because they're terrified. Just keep them terrified and you can direct where you want the public to go. It's quite easy. This is all stuff taught in the higher realms of behaviorism and management as they call it, social management. So yeah, terror is a great thing to get people to just freak out, forget their sensibilities and do what they're told. In order to save their lives, you see.

So, then they go on to again, they do, in the same article eventually goes into the kind of, like the green agenda type speech the woman gave before, very similar. You know, look back at the war and how we kind of pull together then, and the Great Depression, and ba-da-n-dut. Yep. This other one too is to do with...

Coronavirus live updates - COVID-19 death toll rises to 11 as Illawarra MP says to brace for 'martial law'

illawarramercury.com.au / 24 MARCH 2020

New laws adopted by NSW Parliament on Tuesday will allow supermarkets to open at Easter and all day Anzac Day (A: This is for Australia and New Zealand.), may see prisoners released from jail early and allow police to arrest people suspected of breaching self-isolation rules or any other public health directive.

The new rules are part of the new world order, which Keira MP Ryan Park - who supported the law changes - has described as "martial law".

I'll put up too a PDF on Australia's policies, it's actually like a martial law policy, for those who want to read it.

COVID-19 Legislation Amendment (Emergency Measures) Bill 2020 - legislation.nsw.gov.au

Because we're the same everywhere in Canada and Britain and everywhere else. It's pretty well the same, same agenda, martial law type thing. And it's wonderful too, you don't have to bother in pretending about politics anywhere as we go through all this stuff. Just obey if you want to live and survive, and obey, obey, obey. And also…

Dutton says hoarders to be 'dealt with' by AFP, Border Force

smh.com.au / 19 March 2020

Police and Australian Border Force have launched a joint bid to catch people suspected of hoarding supermarket goods and selling them on the black market in Australia and overseas amid the coronavirus outbreak.

I'll put that one up too. Quite a few from Australia that someone sent me. And…

Australia Post opens new 'concept store' that will only ship to China - smh.com.au / 24 March 2018

Quite interesting, published a year ago that one. And China too, because of their system, I can remember the milk scandal when the protein was getting taken out of it in China and some substitute was put in there. It was actually killing some babies and all that. Basically, melamine I think they were using as a protein. Because someone had, in the West too, some wise guy bribed somebody in the Food and Drug Administration in America I think it was, to classify melamine as a protein. So, they could start adding it to milk products. But it was kind of booed down even though it was passed. But China went along with it and did it because they could take the protein out and then sell the protein separately. So, at that time a lot of them were buying milk from elsewhere into China because naturally they wanted the real stuff that wouldn't harm them or their children.

I remember the same thing happened in China with diapers. It was just too expensive in China and so they were sent again in bulk from Australia to them. So, I'll put that link up too.

Coronavirus: Australia's face masks, hand sanitisers and vital medical items were shipped to CHINA as the coronavirus pandemic took hold - dailymail.co.uk / 25 March 2020

Well, there are articles too from America and Canada, even had articles praising them as wonderful, a woman in Toronto was sending them to China for her relatives, thousands of them. Well, how many relatives as she got? But it was praised as a nice thing. But I thought, there's nothing here for Canadians, now that we're supposed to wear them, or shortly, you can't get them. Because they're telling us, we're telling the peasants here who are going to pay for this, you know, you can get a scarf and put it around your face, it might give you some protection, at least you won't be spreading it if you happen to maybe not know that you have it.

So yeah, we can't get the real things because they've all been shipped elsewhere. But they want us to wear something. Of course, the biometric cameras now, apparently, they can tell who you are by judging the space between your, you know, on your forehead and your eyes to your nose and so on. So, they don't care so much now if you're wearing masks or towels or scarves around your face I suppose. It's amazing how they can change their minds about things, 'eh? And...

A quick guide to safe shopping during the Covid 19 pandemic - cieh.org / 31 March 2020

I have to laugh at some of the expert advice we're getting now, it's just like, my God, it's Idiocracy. It really is Idiocracy. That we even accept the fact that these highly paid BS artists, that's bothersome stuff artists, have got the gall to take the big handouts they get from governments to tell us stupid things that children know naturally. Ah Bertrand Russell, 'eh, he says the public won't be able to move without expert advice. This is an article too...

This Is How Many People Die From the Flu Each Year, According to the CDC - health.com / 26 March 2020

I've got a couple of articles like that. They've got graphs, the official report, it's just astonishing, we actually have lower death right now, across the whole of Europe as well, than we've had in some previous, last couple previous years. So, what's going on here? If these are official studies and official reports by the same official people that are terrifying us right now, you gotta wonder, 'eh, what's going on. But one is from Global Research.

It's from ask an expert, one of the official sites, it's explorehealth.com. They give you the flu ones and so on. But the Global Research one has the official ones from the organization that runs, it does all the stats for Europe, the whole of Europe, year by year. You'll see the graphs on it that I'll put up, and we're way down. We've actually got fewer overall deaths than previous years. Yep. Two years ago was a really nasty one across Europe. So, I'll put them up as well.

Official Figures: COVID-19 Yet to Impact Europe’s Overall Mortality - globalresearch.ca / 30 March 2020

I love too, have you noticed too, you get all these happy happy, you know, PR motivational experts that come on TV, radio now, I listen to the radio and they're on radio telling you how to, here's how not to go mad at home, and look upon it in a pleasant way, again, turn this crisis to your advantage and learn how to relax at home. It's hard to relax at home if no money's coming in. Hey? It's hard to relax at home if you're like 20, 30 miles from the city and by the time you go there there's nothing left, or there can be two cans of beans and you're supposed to go home. That's a lot of gas, you know, or petrol as they say in Europe. But that's a lot of gas.

So, it's kind of hard to go home and say, well, you know, I think I'll just sit here and take advantage of this happy time here, to keep myself… And they tell you these wonderful things, side effects. Oh, and you'll eat less, you might lose weight. Well, there's a lot of skinny folk too, that are not overweight or obese and so on. Apart from that, the kind of food we have these days too, it's so low in real nourishment. But, these things don't really matter to the guys telling you how you should just be happy and use it to your advantage, eh. I tell ya. Ask an expert. There you are, ask an expert. I-yi-yi!

Then we have Trudeau again, as I said before, is going to bring lots home. Still. There's not enough in the country at the moment to cause a problem, it seems.

Trudeau defends new flights bringing Canadians home from across the globe

thestar.com / 1 April 2020

Canadians being flown home from abroad must subject themselves to “rigorous” and mandatory 14-day self-isolation to keep their fellow citizens safe.

(A: They've been living abroad for years.)

Trudeau says Canadians must “look out for each other,” but they have a duty not to infect others.

(A: Well maybe you should take that to heart.)

Trudeau spoke as the government announced today that six planes carrying Canadians stranded in Africa and Europe are to touch down today in the effort to repatriate travellers stranded by COVID-19.

Global Affairs Canada says the planes will arrive from Algeria, Ecuador, Senegal, Democratic Republic of Congo, Hungary and Spain.

(A: [Alan chuckles.]   And Spain is a hotspot, some of the other ones are too.)

The department says the government is planning more flights from Ethiopia, Burkina Faso, Cote d’Ivoire, Peru, Algeria, Poland and Pakistan in the coming days.

Plans are also being made for several fights from India, starting on April 4 and continuing for the next four days until April 7.

(A: They're not really stranded, these people. I hope you understand, a lot of them live elsewhere. They live elsewhere, I think maybe come here once in a while.)

(A: A lot of folk, I mean, this is the way things are, you know. They'll come, they get their citizenship, then they'll go off to other countries to make more money. Because they can often get grants from Canada too across the world too, especially after the UN, and this is a big big part of it, the UN programs for changing other countries, these very countries mentioned in fact. They are trained and given courses and they're financed and even have houses, I remember doing an article where some of them in Africa, some of the women they sent back were given, there were massive estates built for them.)

(A: You can't believe what really goes on, 'eh. Anyway, here's what it says too, after telling you that folk have no work here, right, about a month ago it said that most Canadians could only survive financially for about a month. Well, it's longer than that now. But here it says...)

The government says it has approved 449 loans worth $1.4 million under its emergency program for Canadians abroad and is processing another 900 loan applications.

(A: Well whoah! 'Eh. What’s going on here? What's going on? What about the folk that's already here? And didn't live abroad [Alan chuckles.] elsewhere? Ah dear, dear, dear. These are the times in which we live, 'eh.)

Also, this article to do with everything you need to know about the virus it says today. There are stacks and stacks of these articles. And...

China is reportedly making people download an Alibaba-backed app that decides whether they'll be quarantined for coronavirus

businessinsider.com / 2 March 2020

The Chinese government is reportedly telling citizens to use a mobile app that tells them if they will be quarantined for the novel coronavirus. The app uses a color code, according to The New York Times — green means people can travel freely, while a yellow or red indicates they must report to authorities.

E-commerce giant Alibaba and its sister company Ant Financial run the app, which also reportedly sends people's information and location to police.

(A: That's what they're bringing out here, and Australia too.)

The app represents an unprecedented use of consumer smartphone technology by a nation-state to respond to a public health crisis — and privacy advocates worry it's giving the Chinese government an excuse to harvest more citizen data.

(A: Maybe we should wonder about them doing the same things they want to unroll here; from the previous articles I’ve just read.)

Amid the coronavirus outbreak, Chinese citizens are reportedly being required to use a smartphone app that tells them whether they should carry on as usual — or report to a medical facility to be quarantined.

But they've got to show it too, the color, when they go into stores there, a lot of them actually shows you that in some of the photographs they show you. Yeah, it's all to come here too. And make hay while the sun shines, well, don't let a great opportunity go to waste, to mark all the public 'eh.

Another article too, it's quite interesting, on financial systems...

Corona Capital: Jefferies, Abbott Labs, Fund deals

nasdaq.com / 30 March 2020

(A: The company has just landed a windfall as it bought over another company, quite recently they just got handed a massive contract. It's just… Not insider information. No. It's just pure luck, etc. But I'll put that one up. It tells you how much the company paid for this other company and so on and...)

THE OPPOSITE OF BUYER'S REMORSE. The market value of Abbott Laboratories, which obtained approval for a rapid coronavirus test, rocketed over $10 billion at the start of U.S. trading on Monday morning.

Some folks just read the tea leaves better in the teacup, you know. There ya go. And then you have…

Official Figures: COVID-19 Yet to Impact Europe's Overall Mortality

By OffGuardian, globalresearch.ca / 30 March 2020

The official figures for 24 countries across Europe show, not only that overall mortality is not increasing, but – so far – it is actually well below recent averages.

The statistics were gathered by the European Monitoring of Excess Mortality for Public Health Action (EuroMOMO), an international partnership of agencies from 24 European nations aiming to promote preparedness for public health emergencies.

(A: This is an official group here.)

They track "excess mortality", meaning the number of officially recorded deaths vs the average death rate.

And it shows you the maps, over the last few years, year by year. As I say, two years ago the deaths were incredible across parts of Europe, including Scotland I noticed. And parts of England too. They have color-coded maps to show you the infected rates and then the death rates for the last few years, including the present year. So there ya go. I mean you've got all these, again, statistics can just terrify you. M-hm. Absolutely terrify you. Because that's what they're used for often. And then…

Economic fallout mounts, along with competition for gear

myfox8.com / 2 April 2020

NEW YORK (AP) — The coronavirus outbreak has thrown 10 million Americans out of work...

(A: I think it's more than that now, absolutely, within two weeks.)

6.6 million new unemployment claims on top of 3.3 million last week — came as the competition for scarce ventilators, masks and other protective gear seemed to grow more desperate

You know, there's another one from, there's a few videos out there by doctors and professionals who are also part of, I think it's the Hoover Institute, giving you awfully good opinions, you should look them up on YouTube. One of them is explaining, who is a virologist and a specialist in the area for the government, but he said that they really don't, the stuff that Fauci and others are quoting, honestly, he says, they don't know how many folk have got it.

And it's true, very few folks get the test, you understand, very very few. And now I've got articles where, just like the H1N1 that happened, they actually, when the doctors were told, oh it's just overwhelming, just put them all down as H1N1 if they've got a sniffle. Well, they're doing the same thing now with this one. Naturally, they're doing it, which inflates the number. Then the ones who have got it, most of them don't even know they've had it. You see? So, it's a big numbers game going on for different purposes obviously. It just, things just don't add up properly at all, on any possible front whatsoever.

Including what the definition of a pandemic is. And the numbers, they were way way under the numbers needed at the time when they declared it was a pandemic, when you go through it all. Officially, I'm not talking about people's guesses, I'm talking about reality.

At the Hoover Institute they had the top virologist saying the same thing, that when he was asked the question what about the numbers? He said, they don't know, they really don't know how many people really have it. In the US or Canada. The real total, they don't know. It's all computer figures.

It's just like how they work out the future. Oh, the climate change thing, you know, we'd all be dead, there'd be no icebergs by about 10 years ago. No snow, Al Gore said you'd have to tell children what snow used to be like. Here I am, I've still got about 5 feet out there in the fields. And it's April, you know. You see, facts don't matter. It's computers that take the lowest thing that could happen to the highest, and it supposedly works out a thing, but I guess well… You don't need a computer for that, folks.

And the computer, they're all used, all these decisions come from the statistics from computers, they're all meant for political decisions or big corporate decisions at the very very top, to change policies, to use it as evidence. It's a magician's trick, really is what it is, because mainly it's guesswork. So, they're using, it's like Neil Ferguson as I've mentioned before, that's quoted by people at the top. Well, you know, this is the same guy who's been behind different things in the past that didn't work out too well for even farmers in Britain and elsewhere. But now he's about humans and they've got this massive, oh, millions and millions are going to die. Now they're bringing it down and down and down, 'eh? And we're still all under lock, we're getting worse under lock and key basically, but it doesn't matter as the numbers drop. There's a bigger agenda behind this. Obviously.

But computers, yeah, the people bowed and prayed to the neon gods they made. Yeah. The replacement, you see, the computer, the computer tell us what we should do... to save us... oh God, computer. M-hm-hm. And here we are, and they quote this stuff as though it's holy. Honestly, isn't it, it's like an Oracle... It's like an Oracle, the Oracle of Delphi where the woman on the chair would, where she's getting stoned with all the gases coming up in that area and she's hallucinating and she's asked questions and she says, oh yeah, yeah, come April you're going to find out that millions will die unless they obey the god Zeus.

This reminds me of an awful lot in fact what was said by Lord Bertrand Russell, who was a, he pushed what appeared to most folk at the bottom, they thought it was all for themselves, that he stood up for them. No, he didn't. He was looking towards scientific socialism on behalf of ruling the world with his own upper-class running it all of course. With the scientific Academia managing it all, every facet of it in fact. That's really what he was after, scientific socialism. And he said, IF there's to be a tyranny, meaning a tyranny over the world, to make everybody conform and do what they're told, he said, I'd much rather prefer it to be a scientific tyranny.

And so, when you think about what he said and what they've been working at all along, to promote the white coated priests, the scientists over the people's, they'll displace all other religions gradually. Then they bring you even diseases through their science and so on through laboratories, and oh, it escaped from here or escaped from there, they've had many in the past of course across the world, same kind of thing. And they brought you the atom bomb and other kinds of incredible weaponry, all through science. And with the present crisis again, supposedly from the laboratory, so we're told they could be, and seems to be sort of thing, according to the evidence we're given, at the moment, but we are not given much at all. Because were in the dark, we are the mushrooms, we are fed you know what and kept in the dark.

However, when you think about it, Russell said a scientific tyranny. And the answer to it all of course will be big Pharma and vaccinations down the road, including bracelets or ID implants and so on to monitor us. So, science, science, science. Science causes the problems, and science gives you the solutions. So yeah, he was quite right, it's a scientific tyranny we're under today naturally. And most folk think it's all quite normal because they've been brainwashed to listen to a constant array, as Bertrand Russell said himself, of experts, until the public can't think for themselves, they'll only obey experts.

But here it is, we're going through it all again, the same kind of thing. Even, again, the mayor of Toronto, I think it was the mayor of Toronto, maybe it was... Or maybe it was the premier of Toronto, Ontario, it was one of the two of them. It was Ford anyway. He says, well I didn't want to contradict the statistic given out on what might happen, he says, because all computer programs are different. They're all competing with each other for numbers, to get more ratings for each other, or the other, what are the important ones, we are right, no you're wrong. And he says, he didn't want to put out conflicting data from a different study.

So, this is… It's all… Honestly, it's like, these are like, these are the oracles. What did the Oracle say today? Well you know, we all have to have another month in quarantine, and maybe even the rest of the year. Yep. This is how it is, isn't it?

And then you get the...

Fever heatmaps hint turning point in US' Covid-19 cases soon: JP Morgan analysts

hindustantimes.com / 30 March 2020

(A: This is from J.P. Morgan analysts, the banking boys.)

The turning point in the continuing increase in Covid-19 cases in United States' hospitals may happen in a matter of days rather than weeks, two analysts at financial services firm JP Morgan have said.

(A: You see, they've got more optimistic programs in their computers, you know, they generally are always right, they always seem to profit from the prophets. So here you have it, it says…)

The analysts made the projection on the basis of data from kinsa Insights, the healthcare firm that has generated heat maps from over a million internet-connected thermometers used by people all over the US.

(A: So, they go through their formula from their great computer system, and they're more optimistic. It says…)

The amount of cumulative unexpected illness, expressed as additional share of the population affected by influenza-like illness.

(A: You see, everybody's getting put down as influenza -like illnesses, and often it's getting shoved into... Because they're not testing. You have to have a whole bunch of it, supposedly, the expected symptoms and to fit the criteria of their age group, blah blah blah, gender, yet-det-det, to even be considered for a test. This is how it's done. So, they're putting everybody down as, oh self-quarantine at home, stay there, and you'll be down as a ‘possible’ and then ‘presumed’ and then they'll just say ‘confirmed’, even though… There ya go. It's a numbers game. It says...)

The World Health Organization says 90 percent of COVID-19 patients have high fever as an early symptom.

(A: Well, that's contradicted by other stacks of stuff. This is one disease that seems to be, every possible symptom under the sun for every other disease that have got it. You might or might not have a runny nose. You might or might not have an upset stomach. You might or might not have diarrhea, you know. Hm? It goes on and on. It's just amazing.)

In a report, the New York Times pointed out how Kinsa’s data had recently indicated an unusual rise in fevers in South Florida, even though it was not known to be a Covid-19 epicenter. (A: ...at the time.) South Florida became a Covid-19 hotspot days later. But the data also pointed to spots in Florida, Michigan, Arizona and eastern Texas, where not as many cases have been reported, a report in the NYT said.

Analysts at JP Morgan, who have been tracking the fever data made available by the firm, found that the Covid-19 pandemic started spreading in March with atypical illness readings peaking in the third week of this month, and has been declining since then. The real time data leads the hospitalisation data by about 5 to 10 days, possibly the time taken by an individual to test and be hospitalised.

The analysts spotted an inflection of atypical influenza fly in the third week in real time data to conclude that it appeared the containment measures in the US were showing results.

(A: Mind you too, you've also got two others, at least two other flus right now prevalent. There's articles about the H1N1 type out right now as well.)

It was comical, I listen to late-night a.m. sometimes, good reception from the States. I'm not a fan of different talk show hosts, although some of them are kind of humorous too, you know. But one of them was Michael Savage. People know Michael Savage; he plays the right-wing pro Trump character at times when it suits him or whatever. But he mentioned that he had an upset stomach, which was one of the symptoms you might or might not have. Again, this disease, they wrapped in every possible symptom under the sun, to make sure [Alan chuckles.] that it's got big numbers I suppose.

But Michael Savage phoned, he was supposed to phone in, you see, the same in Canada, you've got about six different agencies that you phone through, and they'll decide whether to bump you up to the next one because you might have a symptom. Until you get the final one and then you might get to talk to someone that's got the authority to have you tested. So, in the States he got a woman doctor, he says, yes, she was kind of brusque and he said he knew from the start it wouldn't go well.

But he mentioned that she went through the symptoms, have you got this? No. Have you got this? No. What you have? I've got an upset stomach. She says well you don't fit the criteria. He says what do you mean, here's a list of official symptoms, he says, that might be one of them. And he got nasty, and she got nasty, and then she just hung up on him. [Alan laughing.] So, he said the same thing, you can't get tested. But his call will go down as having had it, you see. So, there's another number added to it. And lots like that too, you see. There's a lot of games going on here as well, obviously. But it's quite interesting what's happening.

And again…

Wuhan residents say coronavirus figures released by China don't add up - foxnews.com / 30 March 2020

Well, I guess everybody admits to the same thing. Even the figures we're getting here don’t add up. Yep.

Coronavirus: GP surgery apologises for sending 'do not resuscitate' form to patients

news.sky.com / 1 April 2020

(A: I mentioned that earlier. This is the actual article. It says…)

The note said those with severe illnesses were "unlikely" to be admitted to hospital and would "not be offered a ventilator bed".

(A: Well, that's in accordance with the guidelines for the hospitals actually, from the previous articles I've read for the last few weeks, where they admitted in Canada to that, you know, the people with pre-existing conditions and that would probably get less treatment if any at all, because they only give the medications and that out to, and the care out to those that are more likely that they could pull through. Meaning younger people or whatever. It's all eugenics of course. So anyway, here's one surgery GP apologizing for sending don't resuscitate to patients.)

The note said those with severe illnesses were "unlikely" to be admitted to hospital and would "not be offered a ventilator bed".

(A: There you go. That's comforting to know, 'eh. Mind you, I suppose they'd want your organs, they could always sell them.)

A GP practice has apologised after sending a letter to patients with serious illnesses to complete a "do not resuscitate" form in case their conditions deteriorated due to coronavirus. (A: ...if they got it.)

In the note, delivered to people with life-limiting illnesses, such as incurable cancer and motor neurone disease, (A: and that covers a whole wide field of things.) Llynfi Surgery in Maesteg, South Wales, also said that completing the DNACPR (do not attempt CPR) form had "several benefits".

(A: This is in Wales I believe. So, the...)

Llynfi Surgery in Maesteg, South Wales has apologised.

It claimed doctors and family and friends would know not to call 999 if a loved one's condition worsened, (A: 999 over there is like 911 here, you see. Which of course is 666 upside down, I could go into that area too. Anyway, it says…) and therefore not use up "scarce ambulance resources", and risk transmitting COVID-19 to others.

(A: So just stay at home and die.)

The letter has been published on Twitter, with a quote from a patient saying: "It made me feel worthless.

"I've lived with cancer for eight years and I want to live another couple of years.

"I'm not digging my grave yet."

The note started by saying: "This is a very difficult letter for the Practice to write to you."

(A: It's amazing that they want permission for you to agree to get killed or just die off, ‘eh. Very legalistic.)

It said people with life-limiting illnesses were at much higher risk of the virus and were "unlikely to be offered hospital admission", and "certainly will not be offered a ventilator bed".

It ended by saying: "We will not abandon you, but we need to be frank about what the next few months holds for us."

(A: So there ya go.)

On Wednesday, Cwm Taf University Health Board said the letter was not a health board communication and that the surgery was apologising to patients for causing "distress", saying that was not their intent.

Well, what else was it? What do you think of it? What kind of psychopath wrote that, 'eh? Hm? [Alan chuckles.]   There ya go. It's just astonishing really, 'eh. N-n-n. And they'll all be down as organ donors, I'm sure they'll snatch them if they can. If they could rinse out your organs, if you had the virus, and neutralize them, they'd sell off your organs regardless. This is the corrupt system in which we really live, I'm telling ya.

And...

Iceland’s testing suggests 50% of COVID-19 cases are asymptomatic

zmescience.com / 26 March 2020

(A: It's an interesting study. Iceland is very important; they've had documentaries out years ago about Iceland. Because they're pretty well a homogenous population, have been for centuries marrying themselves within themselves and so on. So pretty pure type genetic strain, it's very well mapped and so on. They know what illnesses they are prone to within their families down through the generations and what's likely to happen in the future.)

(A: But they always have a big big testing ground there for big Pharma, set up a huge, huge complex there actually, a big massive skyscraper at one point. They deal with, they use it like a test case for testing stuff on them, like different drugs, medications and all the rest of I because they kind of, they get more uniform results because of the basically homogenous people. But because of that too mind you, I'm sure, I think they're used an awful lot by giving them stuff they shouldn't be taking. We're here to help you, this won't harm you a bit... Then they study you.)

Iceland is a small nation of about 364,000 people with strong healthcare and a supportive social system.

(A: So, they tested all the different people, a good chunk of the people in it, it says, to get the statistics again, right.)

Iceland has currently carried out 10,000 tests — this is far less than what other countries have done, but on a per capita basis, Iceland ranks first in the world.

(A: So out of a population that size, you see, that's a lot.)

Not all the results from Iceland’s tests have come through yet, but the ones that have, show that half of all cases are asymptomatic (at the time of testing).

This would suggest that, on one hand, the virus is not as dangerous as we thought, but on the other hand, it would also suggest that it has spread far more than we are currently aware of.

These results are also indicated by a testing survey carried on an entire Italian town of Vo (population 3,300), where the results showed that more than 50% of all cases are asymptomatic.

The whole population of the village was tested, and 3% of the residents tested positive. Then, after a two-week lockdown, the population was tested again. The transmission had been reduced by 90% and the results were confirmed: the majority of cases seem to be asymptomatic.

(A: Interesting.)

This is still a rapidly unfolding situation...

... across the world, however, they give you these different studies that are showing, and it isn't just that so many are just asymptomatic, a lot of the asymptomatic ones don't show any, never get it. Some of them in China they noticed showed, would have no symptoms for weeks sometimes, and then they develop symptoms. But there's stacks of them coming out now with different countries saying that they never had any symptoms that they can remember. So, it's very confusing.

But it's definitely hitting, I think it will definitely hit gene sequences, it depends on your gene sequence for you, your own particular genetic makeup, maybe from ethnic group or mixtures or whatever, that will make you more or less prone to things. As I've said before, weeks ago, that the A-type blood group was more prone to it, for a bad outcome that is. Not necessarily, it doesn't mean you're going to get a bad outcome if you've got type A, but it says they are more prone to it. And again, there are studies too, have bad outcomes. But it didn't mention that it might also depend on your age group too, or other pre-existing conditions. Again, it can be awfully confusing and misleading. Unless you have awfully good detailed case studies and proper detailing.

I mentioned too that, before, last week or the week before I mentioned that they'll be using the patients that have had it and now have antibodies, and then they'll be taking the serum basically and getting the antibodies from it too. I mentioned too about the Red Cross doing a big blood drive, that was a separate article, but I tied it together. Because I know darn well that's what they're going to do and for the very, very important and wealthy, and maybe even the military.

You've got to remember these things, the pecking order of importance in a governmental system is, number one, preserve itself, continuity of government. And for that you need police, military, and everything else. So, they'll be given, they've got all the stuff on standby for the important people, as they call them. And we're just the masses at the bottom, so we probably won't get these transfusions if it's needed to give you the antibodies to kill it off.

It works awfully well by the way. This is nothing new about this, we know an awful lot about that. They've done it in previous, they even did some of that in fact back in the Spanish flu towards the end. There were trials getting done then, taking the stuff from survivors and it worked awfully well. It did the same thing in Africa. African doctors were so sick of the WHO that had just had doctors send over there to study them. The African doctors went to work and said we've got to try and save them. They did the same thing there with folk who had Ebola and they saved an awful lot of people. It worked like a charm for them.

So now they're mentioning it now, this week, they're putting the two together. I put them together a week before it saying they might try and do this in America. I'm sure they've already done it actually, to more important people.

'Immunity passports' could speed up return to work after Covid-19

theguardian.com / 30 March 2020

(A: Just like the Chinese. Isn’t that amazing? Just coincidence though.)

German researchers studying how lockdown restrictions could be lifted for some people

(A: ...just like China.)

“Immunity passports” for key workers could be a way of getting people who have had coronavirus back into the workforce more quickly, scientists and politicians in the UK have suggested.

Researchers in Germany are currently preparing a mass study into how many people are already immune to the Covid-19 virus, allowing authorities to eventually issue passes to exclude workers from restrictive measures currently in place.

So, there you are. Isn't it just coincidence that everyone just copies the same agenda, 'eh? Isn't it? And all the hands are out by the big high-tech companies that own them. And millions and billions are getting thrown around by like it like it was just, just, you know, confetti. And then this one here is…

.

UK police guidelines to clarify lockdown powers following criticism

theguardian.com / 30 March 2020

Police chiefs are drawing up new guidance warning forces not to overreach their lockdown enforcement powers after withering criticism of controversial tactics to stop the spread of coronavirus, the Guardian has learned.

The intervention comes amid growing concern that some forces are going beyond their legal powers to stop the spread of Covid-19, with one issuing a summons to a household for shopping for non-essential items (A: They go through your bags in Britain and you're only allowed to buy essential items. And the cop decides what's essential.) and another telling locals that exercise was “limited to an hour a day”.

(A: There ya are. N-n-n.)

It's quite amazing, isn't it, what we put up with and we just accept it, don't we? Oh, you know… It's like, it's like in World War II they always used to say, well, it's war, you know, oh, and you have to put up with all the hardship, well that's war, you can't get this, you can't get that because of war, we’ll get through it together for the greater good.

And here we have, this article continues with Lord Sumption who spoke out against what's happening in Britain. He was a high judge in Britain for a long time, I think. He's turned against what's happening in Britain. He said that it's turning Britain into a police state singling out Derbyshire police which deployed drones and died a lagoon black. They did.

Coronavirus lockdown spurs police in England to dye 'Blue Lagoon' black to deter Instagrammers - foxnews.com / 29 March 2020

They died a whole lagoon black for trying to shame people in using their undoubted rights to take exercise in the country, and wrecking beauty spots in the fells. This is straight out of Dr. Who this kind of nonsense, 'eh?

The Guardian has learned that the National Police Chief's Council of policing is rushing through guidance reminding the officers that despite politicians' warnings they cannot bar people from going for a run or drive. (A: They've actually been fining folk for having a drive. They will tell you, you know.)

You cannot give this kind of power to people. You honestly… It doesn't stop, you understand, it gets worse. And I guarantee you, they're going to drag this on as long as they can. As the little trial balloons, this might go on to the fall. And other articles say, this is how they feed it to you, psychologists are designing it all, then they'll have another article saying, close to the first one, it might go into the fall, you know, it might recur again, a second wave in the late fall, so it will take you into next year. This is how they do it, step-by-step. They treat you like children. And you've got all these behaviorists working with them and how to put it across to the public. I'm not kidding you, it's just, the companies have got batteries and levels of these, I call them conmen and women, with fancy titles. That's what their job is, to coax you along like an animal. And then of course once they want to give you, make you immune from it, they give you, they call it herd management in health, they do, they call it herd management.

I'll put a link up to, I think Lord Sumption's got, there's actually a video up on him too maybe.

Lord Sumption Destroys Shameful UK Police Force and Calls Out Fear Mongering Media On The BBC - youtube.com

But he talks about it, you can't give this kind of power to the police, they're turning into a police state. He should certainly legally know that, I mean, you don't have to be a judge to know it, but he knows what the laws are, and he says it's not lawful what they're pushing.

India's coronavirus lockdown sparks mass migrations, an economic catastrophe and a crisis of faith in Modi - theglobeandmail.com / 1 April 2020

It's just astonishing because about two months ago and three months ago, when Trump went over to and then signed his deal with India to buy armaments and stuff, they had articles. And don't forget that India is also part of these big free trade agreements, where we [Alan chuckles.] the so-called advanced, how can we even call ourselves advanced countries now hey. We pay for the developing nations. We're still paying for China through developing nations agreements and free trade and the GATT treaty, as we go down the tubes, you see, we are paying now for the whole Pacific region etc., etc., the other big agreements and so on, and India to come up.

Well, India had articles just before Trump went, how they were going to buy, you know, so many brand-new military aircraft and a whole bunch of ships, an aircraft carrier or two. And I thought, come on, come on. I mean that shouldn’t be, that's not your priority here. And here they are now going berserk because if enough folk get sick in India you won't get the crops in and everything else and yada, yada, ya. And suddenly, you know, reality hits home that you know, you got to start taking care of more important things first before you start thinking about spending all this money on aircraft and military weapons and all the rest of it and having big grandiose ideas. So anyway, it's going to, there's so many poor folks, an untouchable class there that they have no place to live right now. They can't get back to their, they are forbidden to travel on the roads, like walking hundreds of miles sometimes back home. Because there's no work for them now as everyone is in quarantine. Nowhere to stay. N-n-n. A disaster in the making right there.

And then this one here talking about Canada, or Ontario…

Dr. Peter Zalan: To protect the North, it’s time to close the roads to all but essential traffic sudbury.com / 1 April 2020

(A: After that judge in Britain says they can't stop you from going for a drive, you know. And it mentions Pinecrest nursing home…)

It happened at Pinecrest Nursing Home in a small community 150 km northeast of Toronto. It all started in mid-March with mild chest symptoms. Four patients were ill on a Tuesday; eight were ill on Wednesday. By Thursday, it was 12 and by Friday, 23. Three have tested positive for COVID-19. All nine are presumed to have died of the virus.

(A: And by the way, that actually does happen with flu seasons as well in these old folks’ homes, where they're crammed together. It's just waiting... I did talks on that years ago, same kind of thing.)

Seventeen members of the staff have tested positive and 34 have symptoms.

(A: So, it's quite something.)

The Quebec government announced on March 28 that it is moving immediately to protect some of the province’s more remote regions from the spread of COVID-19 by setting up checkpoints to block non-essential travel. If people attempting to enter or leave the regions are not providing an essential service, if they are not going for health reasons or for humanitarian reasons, they will be sent home.

Quite something, 'eh. And I've also got here more banning things on Britain and elsewhere. So, well as I say, it’s all behaviorists, it's just endless really.

Why is the government relying on nudge theory to fight coronavirus?

theguardian.com / 13 March 2020

(A: As I say, it's all behaviorists. The money that's getting thrown on at these, argh, I have no words for them actually. Because they got connections to government, these characters. They can get the billions thrown their way for, oh we can do our thing to really convince the public to go along with this, honestly, we can do it quite easily. Yep.)

(A: So it says here, they go into the social distancing and the banning live sporting it says, but instead, Britain is going the hardhearted way it says, it's using behavioral nudges such as washing hands, don't touch your face, don't shake hands with others, stay at home, etc. Then they go on about how it's a different approach used by Britain than in China. Although it's a lie because Britain is also using a lot of the things they are using in China. But they mentioned that they are still using it, and I read the articles years ago with Cass Sunstein, it was a guy who made a name for himself, I think he worked for Obama at the time. He calls himself a kind of a behavioral, an amateur or, you know, kind of lay type behavioral specialists, and all his pals that he hangs around are behavioral specialists and so on. So, he uses...)

“Nudging” uses insights about our mental processes to change our behaviour through coaxing and positive assertion. Rather than forcing us to do things, nudging tweaks the environments in which we make choices (A: ...you know, the Bernays technique.) – for example by requiring people to opt out of organ donation, rather than opting in.

That's what he does, he gets you to accept things. They brought him out in Britain a few years ago, Sunstein’s bunch too, and Richard Thaler, and paid them BIG money because they're so well-connected to government, these characters, they can get money for nothing literally, and big money at that, to con the public into doing what they want them to do. Including paying taxes. They can convince you to just feel guilty about it, and then make you offer money to charity and then make you offer your organs and stuff like that, you know.

I hate these characters, I really do. I have no time for them at all. They're disgusting characters. Anyone who wants to get into the subconscious of people to manipulate their behavior, I have no time for it all. Not at all. N-n-n.

So anyway, they're working for Britain's government and this is what the article’s about it. And of course, all the behavioral insights teams are right on board with it too, which I've mentioned over the years. Ofcom too was set up in Parliament in June 2001, you see. Just coincidence to do with, it would be a super regulator to oversee media, before 9/11 happened. It's just, again, on the tea leaves there and it says, you know, this would be a good thing to have here where we could stop, you know, and manage and police digital transmission on the Internet. So, they give them all this authority and it's based in Wales in England, [Unintelligible] part of the UK. Anyway, it says they've managed to, they've even knocked I think RT off of the news and the Internet for the British systems and so on. So, it's a censoring department who decides who's going to be on and who's not going to be on. Very much like some organizations in the States, do it for the States. Or thought police.

Ofcom new regulatory powers to police what is posted on the internet - independent.co.uk / 12 Feb 2020

But it happened in 2001 and now it's going the next step, the next step and the next step until they're really just a complete censorship department. It doesn't surprise me; everything is always going to come along that they talk about. Also…

Lines of fresh graves are dug at cemetery amid coronavirus pandemic as funeral directors urge the public to respect social distancing rules - dailymail.co.uk / 2 April 2020

Says this is Ireland. I don't think it's that level yet of death, but everything's terrifying the way they put it across, isn't it? And...

‘I am deeply concerned’: Toronto imposes mandatory COVID-19 quarantine rules for at least 12 weeks - thestar.com / 1 April 2020

12 weeks now, this is a new rule put out in Toronto apparently. I don't know if the person that's putting it out is already a star yet, another doctor or whatever. But that's what they do, they make them stars, then they dictate to you like some kind of, I don't know, celebrity. And again…

Chinese scientists isolate ‘extremely effective’ antibodies that may help treat COVID-19 - theglobeandmail.com / 1 April 2020

That’s the blood one that I was telling you about. Yep. And this whole idea with universal credit and unemployment money...

Universal Credit may need to change

news.sky.com / 4 April 2020

Nearly a million people have been forced to sign up for the unemployment benefit due to the coronavirus pandemic.

(A: I thought it’d be, was a lot more than that actually, there's more to come I'm sure. I think this one is in the UK. It says…)

The new welfare system is designed to provide an incentive for people to take up work, by enabling claimants to keep receiving benefit payments alongside income from a job.

This is all part of like the universal income, new, basic, and all that kind of thing. So now of course that's going to get hammered now too. You're going to bring in rationing eventually is what they want to do eventually, regardless.

I'm also going to put up, let me think now just before I finish off here. I'll put up the one as I say about Australia, which is the emergency laws that they put up. I've got them for Canada to and for the US. I'll put up, let me think now... [Alan chuckles.] A second company sent 90 tons of Australian medical supplies to China. Of course, they've got nothing left for themselves. The same, Canada did the same thing. What a world, 'eh? M-hm. And the Army has been called in, in Australia to help enforce strict new quarantine rules. We’re going to get them everywhere too. Initially they'll come in supposedly to help and to handout things and maybe give you a couple of cans of beans. But eventually they turn, the real purpose is to really, really act as policemen. M-hm.

It's amazing too, don't forget they're canceling a lot of elective surgery and essential things. Folk are dying for other reasons here too; they can't get treatment and so on. They're already talking about a lot of folk dying who are dependent upon drugs which are made in China. Because we make nothing outside of China anymore it seems, except debt, that's what we make. Ridiculous. Interdependent they called it, which means you're totally dependent on China for everything you need to survive. Yeah, quite amazing.

Now anyway here's another one too, is this article here which I'll put up for you, all have little clips to see.

UK police face allegations of being 'over-zealous' at coronavirus social distancing – itvnews, youtube.com

Delingpod: Peter Hitchens (Special) - youtube.com

Delingpole and Peter Hitchens, it's a talk they had amongst themselves. Interesting to listen to, the two points of view that they have. And Lord Sumption…

Lord Sumption Destroys Shameful UK Police Force and Calls Out Fear Mongering Media On The BBC - youtube.com

As he said, you know, well that's what it is, the whole panic has been a massively authorized, because the media is not independent, it really isn't, it's an arm of real government, the ones who really own it, above politics. They stampeded the whole world on cue. Literally it was like a switch getting moved and they suddenly went into action all at the same time together, way overboard, beyond any conspiracy stories that were before them, way overboard... You're all going to die. So anyway, Lord Sumption gives a good little talk on it. And then…

Trevor Kavanagh: 'Hysteria forced UK into lockdown' - youtube.com

Just total hysteria they've caused, isn't it? This is quite an interesting one…

Journalists R key workers too (allowed one short walk a day in UK) - youtube.com

You'll see the guy talking to the cop stopped to talk to him, and his big van that they've got in Britain. Are we out for your one short walk, sir? That's how it was worded, your one short walk. Hm. By God, 'eh, our wardens, the new wardens, 'eh? And...

David Wemhoff on COVID-19 and Globalism - youtube.com

And...

Australia should 'take back the land' from China as damages - youtube.com [Alan laughing.]   That was someone who's talking about it too, blaming China for it. And Farage is quite interesting…

Nigel Farage - Say No to House Arrest - youtube.com

And…

'You have become the Thought Police.' UK Police Chief questioned over recording of hate incidents - youtube.com

These are not crimes by the way. A thought is not a crime. But it is now apparently, for life, it's in your record. What a world, 'eh. What a disgusting system that's being brought in. And often because certain factions of society that are well organized and literally are, even the big foundations live on billions and trillions a year some of them, big foundations, literally, have their hands out for our tax money too. There's big money in these for hate or anything else. There's no money in love apparently. Unless you're running some kind of sex orgy place which apparently is quite legal now for swingers, 'eh. But for hate it's big money, big money, because then you can go after… There's organizations, there's people, even nations go after people, because it's a business, it gives you an advantage if you are in charge of what folk can say or think. And unfortunately, that's the world we live in now, when the average person's given no real power at all or rights at all, and whatever you did have you're losing it very very quickly.

Now, I think I've talked about enough here and I hope I haven't bored you. I'll put all these links up for people who want to wade their way through them. I'm sure you've all come to the same conclusions anyway. Because most folk are pretty well awake that listen to me at least.

And we know it's not pleasant. It's not meant to be suddenly over and done with either. And even if they bring it, if they start changing it towards the fall, into giving you less restrictions, it's been a massive exercise regardless. Then they'll know how to do it more. And you've been trained as well to go into it more quickly the next time they bring it out. Which might only be before the next winter hits. Oh, it might be back in the late fall, or this spring, you know. It's quite something.

Because the incredible data from countless, thousands of organizations right now are getting paid to map, monitor and all this stuff, and analyze it all. It's all to control you all the more perfectly. Unfortunately. And big money out there by all these characters, you see, since you don't make any real tangible goods anymore, all these organizations have got their hands out. And it's all paid by our tax money, to study us. Minutely. Because we are the business. The only business that's left really is us.

So, look after yourselves, folks. Don't panic about things. Don't panic. You can only do what you can best do to keep yourselves as safe as possible and away from this problem. And hopefully you have got other folk to help you out, if you get totally housebound completely and you can't get to whatever, and folk can get food to you, whatever it happens to be. Because the government especially in Canada, that I can see, has done nothing at all to help the average person. Especially those outside the cities, and those are probably more vulnerable in fact. There's nothing set up the find out, to check on them and see if they're okay. As far as I know.

Unless they belong to certain organizations. You see, if you're just an ordinary person today and you don't belong to any special group, you're a nobody. I said that would happen 25 years ago. Yep. You're a nobody. You have to belong to a group to get any rights at all or any notice. And that's happened of course as we all know. Sad but true.

Just before I finish I should mention again, because we have very short memories these days don't we, including me mind you because I keep, generally so many talks, sometimes I do 50 talks without mentioning donations and so on, I just forget all about it as I get carried away with the chat. So, remember you can order the books and so on @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. It will take a while because the printers are all shut down too, but it will eventually get to you. Discs still go out there, mind you. And you can just donate to me by using PayPal or send checks for instance or money orders if you can get money orders. There's different ways to do it. You can find out how @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. How to order and how to donate, it's all there. Plus, too, just email me, remember as well, if you want to know of other ways you can pay me or get cash to me. Because cash is acceptable too naturally and so are checks as I've said before. So, don't forget, you can send a few pennies my way to cover my costs as well.

Now, back to the talk again. So, take care of yourselves. As I say, don't panic. And I really check the mail that comes in, it's so much mail that comes in, email. And I know the people too, you get to know people and I do my best to get back to them as I can. But one thing I never lose sight on is the fact that they are real, real people, you know. Very important, that. And it makes it all the more worthwhile just knowing that real people are getting in touch with me, I get in touch with them, and you get to know them really fully as people. That's really a rewarding thing.

So, for myself Alan Watt from Ontario Canada, it's good night and may your God or gods go with you.

Topics of show covered in following links:

UK police face allegations of being 'over-zealous' at coronavirus social distancing

: Peter Hitchens (Special)

The BBC

Trevor Kavanagh: 'Hysteria forced UK into lockdown'

Journalists R key workers too (allowed one short walk a day in UK)

on COVID-19 and Globalism (link broken)

Australia should 'take back the land' from China as damages

Nigel Farage - Say No to House Arrest

'You have become the Thought Police.' UK Police Chief questioned over recording of hate incidents

The WHO and China: Dereliction of Duty

&quot;?

The Coronavirus: A Civil Liberties Nightmare of Orwellian Proportions you'll be fined $11k, says NSW health minister

Covid-19: Normal life will not resume for six months, says Government doctor

Coronavirus: Police can now enter homes to look for people gathering

German state finance minister 'kills himself' as officials claim he was in despair over the coronavirus crisis

Australia's digital ID biometric capability to move into public testing mid-2020 (alternate link provided)

COVID-19 Legislation Amendment (Emergency Measures) Bill 2020

How the coronavirus response shows we have lost our fundamental values

$5k fines, complete shutdown imminent as Illawarra MP says to brace for 'martial law'

Dutton says hoarders to be 'dealt with' by AFP, Border Force

Australia Post opens new 'concept store' that will only ship to China and vital medical items were shipped to CHINA

the Flu Each Year, According to the CDC

Trudeau defends new flights bringing Canadians home from across the globe

China is reportedly making people download an Alibaba-backed app that decides whether they'll be quarantined for coronavirus

Corona Capital: Jefferies, Abbott Labs, Fund deals

Official Figures: COVID-19 Yet to Impact Europe’s Overall Mortality

Economic fallout mounts, along with competition for gear

Fever heatmaps hint turning point in US’ Covid-19 cases soon: JP Morgan analysts

Wuhan residents say coronavirus figures released by China don't add up for sending 'do not resuscitate' form to patients

Iceland’s testing suggests 50% of COVID-19 cases are asymptomatic

'Immunity passports' could speed up return to work after Covid-19

UK police guidelines to clarify lockdown powers following criticism

India’s coronavirus lockdown sparks mass migrations, an economic catastrophe and a crisis of faith in Modi

: To protect the North, it’s time to close the roads to all but essential traffic

Why is the government relying on nudge theory to fight coronavirus?

new regulatory powers to police what is posted on the internet

Coronavirus lockdown spurs police in England to dye 'Blue Lagoon' black to deter Instagrammers

Lines of fresh graves are dug at cemetery amid coronavirus pandemic as funeral directors urge the public to respect social distancing rules

‘I am deeply concerned’: Toronto imposes mandatory COVID-19 quarantine rules for at least 12 weeks

Chinese scientists isolate ‘extremely effective’ antibodies that may help treat COVID-19

Universal Credit may need to change

US to Deploy Anti-drug Navy Ships Near Venezuela

Apr 12, 2020 "Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt : " Making Hay from the Dead, A Shameless Sacrifice, Old Agenda, Presented New, Freshly Painted Lies

Hi folks I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through the Matrix on April 12, 2020. I'm kind of hesitant to say I hope you're all doing well… because we're living through science fiction, aren't we?

Britain was good for the Sci-Fi's, the very cheap types. So cheap in a sense and so ludicrous, in the old ones that is, even though you watch them, there was a quaintness about them, but because it seems so far-fetched that you'd kind of laugh at them and their little cardboard sets and things like that. But they did show you scenarios that were really constructed by psychologists and behaviorists of course. Because they're famous for that in Britain. Even the long-running Coronation Street, it lasted generations, I think. They had lists of psychiatrists and psychologists and the behaviorists, and sociologists and all kinds of professionals that would deal with the different facets of life and bring them into writing the scripts, the real-life situations into the scripts.

But also, for things to come, that was the beauty of it. Very successful that, because they programed the generations before the big changes happen. So each big change planned every 20, 30 years was put in carefully, incrementally, in drama form, and when the things really happened the people, they'd adapt to it the same way as they had been trained to by the fiction basically. Very successful and they boasted about that too. But it wasn't just coronation Street. Britain had been doing it for so long with pretty good Sci-Fi's as I say, the ideas seem to be far-fetched but now they're pretty well realistic when you see things happening today.

It was generally about bending your reality, all completely bending your reality. And Britain had a lot of practice in doing that with wartime scenarios. You've got to remember that George Orwell, for instance, during World War II was employed at the BBC. He gave different programs out. One of his specialties was working with the group that broadcast news for the propaganda during the war to India, and to different British colonies by that time outside of India too in the Far East. Very successful at that as well.

But he also did talks on how to, this is interesting because it's back in the news again, on how to make food out of very little. Because we're going into austerity, this is the big austere plan we're into now, austerity times and training the public in a very drastic, fast way. And in a war scenario, this WAR terminology, against a virus, you see. It's all out there, and for martial law techniques too being used on the public under different terminology.

It's the same thing as martial law, of course it is. When they can fine you or even taser you as they're calling for now, or in some countries they're shooting you, I think the Philippines shot some people who broke their quarantine, even though they weren't infected they just refused to stay indoors. This is what you're seeing today, you're seeing wartime scenarios.

So, Britain had lots of experience with World War I and then World War II. And all the other wars before that too. Because since the Bank of England was created, they've had nothing but wars. [Alan chuckles.] That's really what the Bank of England was for, to lend to the governments for the wars, and the government had the right then to have an income tax bureau basically set up to get the money off the public to pay back the loans. A great scam. Then America followed suit, as I've said before.

But the thing is, here we are in the science fiction, right, and it's almost cardboard sets though, isn't it? Where every day if you watch… I watch the stuff on the Internet, if it's working all right, even though they've slowed my speed now to, for the good of all, you see, we're sharing our bandwidth apparently with so many folk at home, but with the same amount of folk at home in the evening as before so how come it's slower now? But again, we're living in conology, isn't it?

Because this is the time for big corporations across the board to just plunder us all in a free-for-all frenzy of looting basically that we have to all pay back down the road. But even at that we're told, you're not going to ever pay it off because now you're into the new system permanently. The new normal. This is what they're pushing for now and it's right in the open of course.

This was the intention before the thing broke out, obviously. And I mean obviously. And it was all done in the planning phases with the big exercises before this supposed Covid 19 broke out. Yeah, it was all done, the kind of world they'd want post-Covid basically and how they'd bring us into it. There's no doubt it all about it, this is the full agenda into the new planned society, the socially controlled, scientific socialism where experts now guide and rule your lives. It doesn't matter if they’re phony or if their doctrines are phony or anything else, as long as they're appointed there and they talk with authority, then we’re supposed to obey them.

In all kinds of areas, economic areas and police, military, you name it, and medical, you're just supposed to obey them, you see. How to live properly according to your betters. You know, like Bill Gates, people like that. People who came out of special wombs and who are elevated into stardom through the big money that they have. Because you pay to be made a star, you see, and there's a big club at the top that has all these different stars. In fact, they even create them to be what you think is very, very clever, etc. They're not at all.

They're front people for a bigger club above them, actually, even though they seem to represent billions of dollars. That's how the world is really run, the so-called Gods, the hidden masters as they call themselves, and they decide in their little clubs at the top how we are going to live. Every 20, 30 years, and where they want to take the world in every 10, 20, 30 years, all these long-range plans.

We're living through it right now.

Now, once again I've got to remember this will be a long talk and I should, I should really remember to request that you send me a few bucks once in a while. And preferably now because you forget later on, naturally. Go into cuttingthroughthematrix.com website and you'll see how to do it, how to donate something towards me, PayPal or send cash, or check or whatever it happens to be, and how to do it and where to send it to, etc.

Because as I say, times are getting tough for all of us, and I know that too, for all of us. Some people would reap fortunes, they're the sharks that make money while blood is running in the street, as Mr. Rothschild said a long time ago. And there's going to be a lot of money to be made off the bankruptcies across the country and the world through this planned system. Unfortunately.

A lot of folk, an awful lot of people, this is disgusting actually, how big plans are made, and they really are made this way, for war type strategies, and millions of people can be sacrificed to get big agendas through. They call them ‘noble lies’ and they work hard at it and so on. We could see how so much is going to be fulfilled through this incredible sacrifice of the elderly and the weak and the infirmed and all the rest of it – it's just really sickening – to get a big agenda a completed.

I've done talks for so long on this. [Alan chuckles.] I have literally gone blind reading all their stuff. And here we are living through this phase that the Green Party in Britain literally cried to have happen years ago, a few years back. If they could just get a wartime scenario and people would obey authority, and they would live under hardship conditions and accept it, and they'd all sing together cheerily, in the underground as they were getting bombed and so on in London. She thought that was fantastic. And you'd accept the deprivations and austerity and rationing at all that.

Here we are, folks, 'eh. Bingo. Bingo.

What did she have in common with all the rest of them? Well, she was put in place by the same folk that put Bill Gates in place with his organizations, that are trying to use, you know, the Club of Rome. All these groups are all ONE big bunch, a cabal, you see, one, all different faces of the same cabal, slightly different functions some of them, to fool mainly the public. Because the agenda, they're all on board with the complete agenda of depopulation.

Bill Gates: How the coronavirus pandemic can help the world solve climate change - cnbc.com / 31 March 2020

They tried to use global warming. Before that it was global cooling and the coming Ice Age. And a lot of them who really pushed that out there, like Ehrlich with his population timebomb and all that, did the ice thing, and then they turned to the global warming thing when that didn't quite work out. And Ehrlich's wife, remember, was on the board of the Club of Rome. They're all connected. It's just coincidence, though, really.

They came out with the big agenda, and oh, how they had to bring the world into a proper way of living where their betters would manage you. Exactly what HG Wells talked about. He was quite open about it. Anticipations, and so on, and A Modern Utopia, things like that. He was quite, completely, out in front with it really. You'll do what you're told. You'll obey your betters. And they'd eventually sterilize the inferior types, as he called it, HG Wells. He said it was more humane. He said initially we thought we would have to kill them. But we thought, no, it would be more humane to sterilize them and they'll die off in that generation and they won't be breeding any more of their own kind basically. You know, the inferior types.

That's been on the go... this is the second century of this thing, you understand, we're into now. HG Wells was involved in this in the late 1800s, the latter part of that. He was picked up early, you see, and he proved to his masters then that he'd be an awfully good propagandist, and they made him a star. With a lot of help because lots of them out there really have an awful lot of help to make them a star. Some of them today they're parading around in front of you didn't invent anything at all, they're just businessmen, or they're fronts for huge businesses. But they're made stars through the machinery. I can't believe how many people have got in touch with me, so sick of seeing Bill Gates face every day on the news. Well, they're quite right, you see, because he's playing the part of the technocrat now, the unelected but appointed by the better group as a technocrat to rule over us.

On what? I didn't vote for him, and I never will. And whatever he's telling us we've got to do; I'm not going to do it. And I hope you're all going to be the same.

This guy has been at this for years. Once you hit that strange ding-ding-ding number of billions and billions of dollars, you're supposed to think they just suddenly become philanthropists? with the same agenda?... oh, well, there's too many people, they all have to get vaccinated, but depopulated at the same time, y'know, etc. etc., and live sustainability, y'know, with the sustainability thing, the sustainable goals and all that, SDGs. And... they just know how to do it, how to make you all do it. But they need a crisis. And it's just re-familiarity, you start to believe they are an authority over you.

No, they're not.

No, they're not.

Bill Gates with all the usual suspects, you know, Friends of the Earth and all these big paid organizations, with literally CEOs with big, big paychecks, annual paychecks given to them by the big foundations. These front people with their armies of NGOs, it began with the top, it's almost like a military, the ones at the top are all paid lots of money. The ones, the bulk down below think they're actually doing it for the good of the planet and so on, for the right thing to do. Because they haven't grown up yet, you see, and they're easily used. Every youngster is the same, in every generation.

But today it's an art, and they've been trained since school for what's happening today. Literally. Radical little lefties who are quite willing to push for something they really don't understand at all. They've swallowed the indoctrination without a thought because they haven't been given anything opposing it, in, during the indoctrination. If you're getting one side of everything as you’re growing up, that's all you're going to believe, you see. And that's what they do believe.

But Bill Gates is funding lots of different groups of course with the usual characters who fund big, big groups of youngsters. It's fascinating to see the Club of Rome involved in it too. They all know each other. They all work together, you see, with the same goals, for climate, using the climate as an excuse to take all your rights and freedoms away. And eventually get you to stop even breeding, at least all the wrong people breeding, so's the right people like themselves can breed.

Like Bertrand Russell says, y'know, he had it all worked out, that they could only have a few females as breeders, they called them, selected, and the ones at the top would simply pass on the genes. Well, now they can do it all in the lab. Brave New World was ahead of it all, a long time ago with that kind of idea.

But they're going to breed out all the wrong kinds, as they say. They'll keep a few peasants at the bottom for really basic work just in case anything goes wrong. But for most folk of course, most folk literally in the West that grew up through the 60s and 70s and 80s were trained not to even have children. And they were trained that marriage was more than just a downer. Of course, they had the pill thrown at them, the so-called birth [control] pill thrown at them, literally like bags of them, I think, because they didn't want girls to have children.

Then come the 80s and 90s, the governments that told them not to have children, y’know, just do your own thing and be happy, then the government said, well, there's not enough people there to take over and so on, so we've got to import them. In comes mass migration as everybody else is getting phased out. It was all worked out in advance, for those who think it's all happening happenstance.

Nothing happens by happenstance.

The Bill Gates generation isn't the first of these super so-called gods, you know, the hidden masters we've had. We've had them going way back. If you look at, as I've said before, the members of the societies that Rothschild was involved with, including the scientific elite of his day, mind you, in the 1700s for instance. It's amazing how they were even then planning the kind of world they wanted to bring in for the next century.

They set up the left-wing groups and the right-wing groups. For everything you might think of, you might like to join, they've got a party made up for you. And if you want to rebel, and somewhere or another or just be rotten as a child, you see, as you're growing up, they've got the uniform for you, whatever it happens to be at the time. Spiked hair. Before that it's just the blue jeans. And before what that it was bell bottom jeans and beads and everything else. Whatever it is, they've got a uniform made for you. It's so perfected.

Nothing happens by itself in this system, I hope you understand.

And here we are. They couldn't get it all rammed through to get us living austerely, you see, stop driving altogether is what they really wanted. Agenda 21 has it plainly stated there, which all your governments agreed and signed onto. It says in it, no private vehicles eventually, it will be simply essential vehicles only. That's police and military and ambulances, government inspectors and things like that. So, in the meantime they're getting phased out with temporary electric cars. In the meantime. Until you're locked down. And think about getting locked down into your community. Well, you won't need the car now, won't you, if you're in the city, will you?

You understand how this is the big windfall they were looking for? They couldn't MAKE you do it voluntarily and give up eating this and eating that or even eating meat. So, you're going full steam ahead into authority, martial law type authority, to save us all you understand but take all your rights away.   The oldest trick in the book, to save us all you've got to allow others to make your decisions, every decision, really, for you. Like Bertrand Russell said, a world of experts. And of course, they're all politicized experts as front people who get paid awfully well to tell you a lot of lies. With an authoritative attitude though. As long as it's convincing, you'll follow it. And here we go into it.

Isn't that amazing to live through these times? Where, if you've read a couple of hundred years of their books and their different surveys and all their wishes and agreements, and the agreements they have signed on through the United Nations, y'know, all them come into fruition suddenly... when as I say, they couldn't do it through voluntary means.

Remember what Carroll Quigley said, awfully important, Professor Quigley. Because he was a historian for one of the private groups that still runs the world today – there's different levels of them, and the bureaucratic kind that work really as journalists, a lot of journalists who travel the world and so on, and they're often appointed within governments – the CFR. He was the historian for them, and he said, he said that they, we've changed the world so much through what we've done, this group, this private group from England initially, running the world now, and the CFR branch in America, it's all the same group, then you understand it's quite fascinating.

Quigley said that they changed history so much that he thought it was time that they announced it to the world, and the world would simply accept it. He believed, you see, that he and his own class and his own type had the right to rule the rest in a technocratic fashion. Being specialists, you see. And they already, that's what he, his job was, was to train diplomats and different people in the American government in diplomatic capacities basically on how to negotiate things with other people across the world, superseding the forms of government or democratic governments as you think fit. Because they have a different way of doing things in reality. It's not like what you think it is. Those who are appointed really don't see themselves as serving you, the people down below at all. It doesn't enter their head actually. They think they are superior, like benevolent dictators, that whole idea.

Quigley himself said, the thing is, you've got to understand, you got to constantly basically shape the minds of the public, the herd, the great herd, for what you want them to do, for you, without them knowing about it really. And he said that you can do more in five years of war, because you've got, you can take the reins of power over completely and people will obey you to save themselves. So, five years of war can do a lot more than 50 years of propagandizing in peace trying to convince the public, you see.

That's what they've been doing for the last, oh, 20 years with, oh, the world's going to fall apart with global warming, it's just going to fry, yada, yada, ya, and we're all going to die, die, die. And, it's all your fault, all you people, it's all your fault. And the ones who tell you that, like Al Gore, have you seen all the houses they have and all the electricity they use and so on? It doesn't matter. And the jets that they fly across the planet and stuff like that? It doesn't… Reality doesn't matter, you see.

You've got to be trained to be guilty and feel bad about it.

And it works awfully well, especially if the ones, the parents have been trained the same way before, you see. They'll, oh I guess it's true, oh yeah, we've got to save the world for our children because it's been all disrupted by our existence and… Things like that, you see. And it's all a big ploy by those at the top who want to rule the world completely by themselves. You see.

So, here you go, you've got five years, if they can get five years out of this, the world will change.

And getting back to the science fiction of Britain, when you saw the different movies they made, like Fahrenheit 451. It seems kind of quaint looking back at them at the time, in the socialistic fashion, where you have the firemen who go around the houses… much like today, y'know, only it's the Internet they use and try to just scrub things off the net, or even fine you for looking at things. Back then it was 451, the temperature they claimed where paper would just ignite, go on fire. And the firemen, weren't to put fires out. They went around like a Gestapo looking for people who were covert readers, actually read stuff, you see, and their minds were contaminated about the beauty of things. It was all forbidden in a socialistic autocratic system basically. So, that was their job, to find people who are secret readers who are therefore subversives, and you'd get their book collections that they had got hidden away inside the walls and things, you get the books out and put them on fire and destroy them. And you had to label them all, you couldn't take any home, or then you are a subversive, you see.

That idea eventually was incorporated into a much later movie, I can't remember the year it came out, 2000 and something [2002], to do with something similar, subversion, people reading books and all the rest of it. I guess that's where they got the idea from. It was called Equilibrium I believe, and everybody in the system, every citizen too and every cop had to be, take daily drugs to flatten their responses, emotional responses. Because emotion was a bad thing, you see. With emotion you might get angry about things or disagree vehemently about something, and it makes you much harder to control. So, it's much better when you're all agreed on the same things and nothing really bothered you really too much.

Getting back to Fahrenheit 451. Yeah, they'd burn your books there in that one too. In one scene they show you they're looking for the renegade, the guy who breaks free and realizes that he likes to read books and things and it's awfully interesting and important, and they're after him because he is one of their own, you see. They go around these housing schemes, typical little British housing schemes, all socialistic in little boxes, little boxes, one after the other. The people are ordered, or, they're ordered from the van going around with a big Tannoy system on it, to get out of their homes and assemble with their families in the front garden so's they could all be seen. And they dutifully all complied, you see.

Even then in Fahrenheit 451 drugs were profuse, especially for people staying at home, for home people because they're bored stiff. They had interactive television where you could take part in shows yourself from your own home and get drugged when you're doing it. In the other movie, the Equilibrium movie, the people injected the drug into themselves.

It's the same too, you find the same thing with Brave New World. Huxley knew, and he held hope out, actually, Huxley, that a drug would come out that would make people very compliant and happy, regardless of the circumstance, without too much side effects basically. He looked forward to that time because otherwise, if people had their own minds, you see, it takes a lot of... very careful management to keep them in line without taking all their rights away, because then they'll really rebel. But if you have them drugged, they're compliant, they're happy. People have been waiting and waiting for the drugs to come along and be forced upon the public. But they didn't do it that way, they simply made it legal when government financed it and subsidized it, [Alan chuckles.] until you by your own drugs, you see.

It's not coincidental, folks. It all happened just in time for this, 'eh? Where folks can stay at home and get lots of drink or take drugs. And lots and lots and lots of entertainment. It's interesting too that sex has always been used for control, as we all know. Anybody broke that went through the 60s and 70s, within the 80s, through it, with the sexual revolution, it was incessant. All promoted from the top. The BBC, the posh, [Alan mimics a posh accent.] the posh accents, you see, at the BBC… and they used to only bring people on who worked there at one time from Eaton, that was their favorite place to recruit all their employees from. So, they all talked with the posh accents, you see, very… kind of… sneeringly, you know, condescending to anybody else that was brought on.

But here's the BBC, the posh ones, you see, promoting for the people at the bottom to have sex and rock 'n' roll, and aren't we naughty, we're all on drugs. And they literally would bring on people, I think Benny Hill had a good impersonation of one of them who he [Unintelligible] [Alan chuckles.] And he was a drug star, I mean… same thing actually, he was drugged and a star, and he kept falling off the chair. Because they actually had people doing that at the BBC during these interviews.

The youngsters were seeing this, and they thought it was great that this renegade... And in reality, the real ones were falling off the chairs because they didn't even know where they were half the time. And that was promoted from the top!

Do you understand now? Are you starting to get it? Promoted from the top.

I did talks years ago about that when at colleges and universities the drugs were being thrown over, in bags over the walls by the secret services, y'know. In the States you had the CIA groups doing the thing too. To make sure that it took off, make them free and [Alan chuckles.] plentiful. That's how they really promoted it all.

But yeah, aren't we naughty, to the children. And the children hadn't the brains at that time and the common sense to say, wait a minute, why are the posh ones pushing this on the people? It didn't dawn on them.

So, you had sex and initially it was pop, they called it, for the music. Then it was rock 'n' roll. So quite fascinating to live through it all and see it being pushed, pushed, pushed. Because sex is a tremendous thing for disrupting all of the way things were. You wouldn't have a partner that you marry and have children with. The idea was to have multiple partners.

Like HG Wells said way before that, he said, if we encourage them to have promiscuous sex, by almost forcing the women, he looked forward to the, before World War II, looking forward to it he said. He said, if we can get the women into the factories to replace the men who are off fighting, they'll have more affairs in the workforce with the men who were still there, and they're less likely to stay with one man once it's over. That was the idea. Quite plain about it all, it was no real secrecy. They boasted about what their plans were. And they were awfully successful.

So, they know if they could stop the bonding process that happens naturally during sexual activity with a partner, if they could prevent that from happening, then they'd conquered the society. They generally wouldn't have children. Especially if you give them free abortions and things too for any mishaps, even though they had the pill and that kind of thing.

So, sex is a tremendous weapon because you can disrupt the family unit with it.

And here you go, it's right, it's there again too. As you're going through this crisis today, hm, you've got booze at home. You've got all these articles about how the police are to manage the public because they know there will be a lot of domestic violence. Not just the men but women too. If they've got enough booze and they're stuck at home and just and get cabin fever at home. Then they're on drugs as well, which they can purchase or have it delivered and all the rest of it. And the police are told to look out on how to manage it, but more likely under the circumstances, you know.

So, it's all... it's all... And then they're getting all this cheap porn, you see, pornography. Oh, they give you the big porn hub, it’s given free ones away in some countries in sort of free memberships. You can see it all in action at the same time. In the Daily Mail a few days ago they had, some of the best businesses are still working during all the supposedly lockdown and so on, and it was sex shops, y'know, what they're selling. I guess the folk are so bored with whatever else.

It's astonishing to see all the techniques, that we’re laughed at when they were first announced by people who were... conspiracy theorists, y'know, who were simply quoting from the books by the people who were planning it, who were all from Oxford and Eaton and Cambridge and so on. But it's astonishing, isn't it, to live through it all and see it all happening.

So, everything was thought out in advance. The drugs. Keeping you at home. And lots of entertainment, cheap and pretty well free at times too. Then suspension, a temporary suspension of rents or mortgages for a lot of people as well. They'll probably lose their shirt eventually of course along with their homes, but at the moment they can just have a sort of fun, as they look for more ways to amuse themselves as they're stuck in their homes.

So yeah, all the old Sci-Fi’s are here. The ones people used to laugh at and say, oh, isn't that ridiculous. Really? Is it really ridiculous? Who would have thought a policeman would be telling you to get home. You, if you are 70 years old, hm, what you doin' out? Y'know.

Are you a child?

No.

You're allowed you’re one short walk, 'eh? Or someone even 80 or 90 even, what you doin' out? Some young punk, y’know, with his little policeman's hat on, it could be a woman too, and that's how they're talking to the people.

Disgusting arrogance of authority. From idiots. There's no, you know, you can look at their examinations, they actually have, those used to be put out and published at one time. They actually have, if you have a certain IQ above, they won't accept you. I'm not kidding you. That's the facts. You can look it up yourselves. They want folk who will just get… stick like a little bulldog and annoy somebody, and just like a gnat going around your head until they… they upset you enough you will retaliate in some way and then they can charge you. That's the kind of characters unfortunately they've been hiring for a long, long time, especially in places like Britain.

And you would think there would be some kind of embarrassment or shame from the police in acting in such a way. But nope, not at all. They're all competing with each other and telling people, talking to people like they're children. Hm? Just amazing. That's why you can't give police that kind of authority.

Or the military for that matter, because when they get going, then the blood starts flying... That's what militaries are meant to do. They can't use them for anything else. They've tried that in many countries as policeman, and they slaughter people. Everywhere. That's what the military is trained to do. Under the new police type systems, it's not far off it either.

Don't forget, a lot of them now who are donning the uniforms and have the uniforms on as police were maybe 5 or even at the most 10 years old, say, when 9/11 happened. They are the policemen, men and women now, who think it's quite natural that you shouldn't be photographing buildings in cities, and you have no rights under this not quite stated martial law of 9/11, what followed 9/11. But they've been raised thinking, yeah, you just don't have those rights anymore. They think it's right the police have whole departments scanning folks’ computers, in police hubs they call them, intercepting information going back and forth. They think it's quite natural to be the overlords of the general public, the people they're supposed to serve but seem to have forgotten long ago.

That's the world we're in today. And what's happening in Britain is the same in Australia. Australia is astonishing, really, at the openness and the arrogance of those in power steamrolling ahead as though, and loving it, y’know, just chomping at the bit to get going with the next phase. And the money that they're getting thrown at them in taxpayers’ money, you know it's going to end up in a lot of pockets. We live in such an incredibly corrupt system today. Incredibly corrupt. It's hard to believe how corrupt it is and how greed, greed, greed…

Again, Carroll Quigley who was a member of the group pushing for this whole world order, this managed socialistic type world order. Socialism is not for the good of the public. It's for the ease of those who control you. [Alan chuckles.] That's what it's for, that's why they designed it this way. He thought it would be great. But he said eventually the greed factor of rising middle classes, as they come up to the middle class, and the competition and the market for greed, in medicine and everything, would be so corrupt, he says, that eventually the system would fall apart. That's one thing he was right about is, absolutely, it's happened.

The hospitals are short of money but when you see what's getting spent, not just… Forget the staff, the staff take a massive amount of it, especially doctors and specialists and so on. But the hospitals, remember, they're businesses. And they have big boards. And they have investors in them. And most of them belong to chains, they’re like chain stores, you don't realize that, and they've got a get more and more profit in, and in every possible way they can.

Here's the thing too, every generation is trained, especially the ones who are brought up in austerity. I mean in Britain, when I grew up, literally, you had ration cards at birth. The ration cards literally kept going for years after World War II. Then after that, folk couldn't afford meat anyway, if they could get it at all. And if you did it was very, very scarce, and maybe once a week, y'know. Maybe less. And that was normal.

Because you had two world wars and in between you had a Great Depression. Then there was a constant Great Depression from before World War I [Alan chuckles.] all the way through and then after it through the Great Depression into World War II, the rationing, and right up into the 1950s and almost into the 60s. It was about the 1960s they started to get a bit more pocket money, for a little while, for some of the people, not all of them.

And you had wages, prices and wages freezes, y'know, or wage and price, or price and wage freezes they call them, by government decree. Folks just couldn't get ahead if they were at the bottom. Prices still went up even though it was supposed to be frozen. But the paychecks didn't go up. Taxes kept increasing. They even had brownouts, which they're going to bring back again, which they've been chomping at the bit to bring in, before this happened, this present Covid thing. And here they'll start to do it under austerity programs.

I gave talks on this for years and years at this whole agenda. Because I read what they publish, you see. And there's no conspiracy involved in it unless it's what they are doing is a conspiracy. It's a conspiracy of keeping the people in the dark, that part is true. You often hear about governments meeting behind closed doors. Well, what do you think THAT is?!? if they're your public servants. Why would you be meeting behind closed doors, with supposedly, supposedly no journalists present. There's always select ones get in if they belong to the right organization. But behind closed doors? Well, it's so the public don't know what they're up to.

Because you might be after them if you knew what they were up to.

You can't… Where's the openness, 'eh? and the honesty? when they connive together, hm? It's all connivance, that's how we're really ruled.

D'you understand, if you're ruled, you're not governed. There's a difference. And we are now ruled. And when they bring the technocrats forward, the so-called, the big billionaires that are made into stars and suddenly they're philanthropists that pretend they're specialists in certain areas, and they're given all this airtime by other folks who own the media, and who also belong to the same big club, you understand, you don't have democracy and you're living through an agenda, their agenda.

They've been quite open about their agenda at their annual meetings and at the World Economic Forum, and they all belong to that too. All the same groups belong to each other's groups, you understand, and they're quite open about it. And the thrill of using this one too, this big crisis to get all the global warming agendas through and the climate change agendas through, and the carbon taxes increased across the board until we're all paying hefty fees in carbon for everything, just for existing, hm, to bring you into total austerity.

And giving you new things to eat, like crickets and bugs as opposed to meat, etc.

With economic crisis looming EU overlords legalize food made from worms and baby crickets. Are they going to serve that in Brussels? - rt.com / 5 April 2020

D'you understand where this is all supposed to go? Because you're going to go back into the 1800s, where life was HELL for most folk. And the lower you are down the totem pole, the more hellish it was. Into the 1700s even, in squalor and disease, etc. and ill health with lack of good proteins. That's where you start going down. Where all the...

Energy, remember, was the actual group that called themselves Technocracy Inc. back in the 1930s. Some of the well-known folks today are the grandsons of them by the way, these, again, promoted stars that you're supposed to all follow and do what you're told by. That was the idea, that there would be a price of energy. Everything was an energy price and money would be energy units. Whatever you bought or used would be all energy units. You yourself were an energy unit, you see. That's what it was all based on, energy units.

A credit system, like Bertrand Russell called it, a different name, the same thing. This is what it's all about. They bring into it with the cashless system. And maybe universal. Meaning world credit systems, you see, universal credit system with the new unit and all that. But anyway, it will be dished out by your big masters. Because you're going to save the whole world, you understand, it's all for the greater good.

You'll have your credits put into your bank account, your electronic bank account every month like Bertrand Russell said. And you'd better be good and do what you're told, or you'll be punished. They'll take, they'll forbid you from withdrawing money to pay your rent. Because you won't own much in the future, you'll be paying rents. You'll be on your knees because you couldn't even afford food then, until you behave yourself and you promise, you get penalized until you obey them. And you stop being so antisocial, you see; these are the terms they use too. You start, if you disagree with any of the rules and regulations, you're antisocial. And that's now a crime, you're antisocial disorder they call it in Britain.

So, it's all here. You're living in the Sci-Fi’s that they put out in the 50s and 60s and 70s. It's all here. And even further back to the 1930s with Brave New World. You haven't got to the utopic Brave New World bit. Utopic for the ruling class, that is, and the alphas and betas. You haven't got there yet. But that will come for the elite, because they are the alphas and betas, according to them. It's all their joke, you see. Or like Prince Charles, that says, well, I'm a member of the Olympians, he said, y'know. He's one of the gods, you understand. And you hear these things being said by these characters, and folk don't quite get it, do they? They really don't get it at all.

But yeah, the people you're meant to follow today are, they're technocrats. They're not… they're not specialists, by the way. Bill Gates is not. He's not. He's a businessman, a massive businessman with fingers in lots of pies. He doesn't give away anything for free that he doesn't get back a thousand times over through different companies that make things and so on. Including the things for the charitable companies that he does across the world. And he has big plans for the world, big plans.

I don't, I can't trust the man at all. I look at his face even and it's so, he looks so deceptive in his facial expressions, there's nothing I would trust about that man whatsoever, believe you me. Nevermind some of the statements he's made in the past in talks he's given. No, you can't trust a man like that. You can't do it.

But that's what we are in today. We're given these characters. One of them, some of them will know how we're to live, or not drive, or what to drive, or maybe their vehicles to drive. But all the rest of it is Technocracy basically. And here you are in it now, 'eh, where the government's going to give you your universal credits. They're talking about making it all permanent. Oh, just stay at home and don't go anywhere and...

I wonder if it will become like the troglodytes that lived in the caves in ancient times? We'll be so pale, y'know, like... like… like anemic vampires that need a good drink. We'll kind of come out once in a while, to get yelled at by someone in a police outfit who will taser you if you don't obey them and get back in your cave. Hm? Maybe that's how it will be.

Because look how fast they've got everybody doing... And that was part, that's part of retraining people by the way. You make them do incredibly ridiculous things, [Alan chuckles.] which ties into... Thoughts always tie into thoughts, you understand, which are all connected, in little groupings of connections and clusters of thoughts and thinking. Because topics are the same way. Look how you've been trained for the last umpteen years, but again from the top down, as to what you see, what you see with certain things, right? You all know what I'm talking about, you can't say what you see anymore. You might even get fined because you say what's obvious, self-evident. That term, self-evident, like the Americans have it in their constitution, you know, when they're talking about things, like natural laws, self-evident. There's nothing to be disputed when it's self-evident, you see.

But your brain is being scared, you've been frozen into denying your own abilities to discern things now. You're told, well maybe I am wrong, I thought that was… But you see, you're trained, and then you're bad, you're bad if you, if something is self-evident to you, something's wrong with you if it's self-evident. And you know where I'm going here.

Well then you take that, you see, you've been trained already into this aberration of not, of doubting yourself, doubting your discernment. That's imperative to change, you see. Then the next thing is, hey, you're not 6 feet apart, you lot there. And so, you're all walking down the road and kind of signing to each other because you're, the further away you get you can't hear each other talking. If you yell, a cop will stop you and ask you why you're yelling. So, here you are going into this new trained system of something that's utterly ridiculous. Utterly ridiculous.

Do you know that if you're outside, give or take… And you get fined if you do it, mind you, so you can't win in this system. If you have little bits of paper, take little bits of paper with you, just little bits, y'know. And if you're outside and a cop yells at you, right, drop a little bit of paper. And if he's down wind, if he's literally, if you're downwind from him, or her, you yell at them to get out the way, because their breath, even if it was 20 feet away is coming in your direction with a little breeze, right. You'll know where it's... You understand what I'm saying here? But then they'll get you for littering though. But you can say, I'm just trying to save my life, officer, y'know, because you're in danger by breathing and shouting in my direction, and that breeze is carrying it way past me as well. I mean, if those folks down there, way down yonder, you might have killed them... by your breath. That's real bad breath, isn't it?

This is how ridiculous it all starts to get. But when you get into the stores, it’s not so bad, you see. It's okay to go into a store, which is an enclosed environment, you're all breathing the same air, that's somehow okay. If you're allowed in for your rations, you know.

Then how they've trained folk too, to follow, it's like… Do you ever see, Oh What a Lovely War? It's a good satire on how war is and how the government gets you all riled up and use the young characters to join up. They're all called Smith in a satirical way in the movie as they join up and things like that. But towards the end you see a line of them in a ghostly kind of line going across the hill. They're following this tape. It was a yellow tape, I think it was, white or yellow. And that's all they could do, because they are blind now, they were all gassed you see in the trenches. Well, here you are going along to the Walmart places now, you're following the yellow tape. And just the same way, here, don't stand there, stand here, y'know. And here's all these adults doing what they're told. And there's no sense to it at all. There's no sense whatsoever.

D'you realize anything you touch, it doesn't matter how far apart you are, anything you touch on their shelves, someone stocked them. Hands stock them, those shelves. Are the items you're buying 6 feet apart? No. They've all been contaminated in some way by someone touching them. It's farcical what we are going through right now. But you see, the intent is not what they're telling you. The intent is to get you to accept the absurd, because we got a lot more training to do to you.

I really mean this. I honestly mean what I'm saying here. They've got a lot more training. They don't... They can't let this... A lot of planning went into this whole thing. A lot of planning. Never mind the Johns Hopkins big experiment with the Gates Foundation and so on in 2019, you know, two or three weeks before it actually supposedly broke out. Or the Rockefeller one in 2010. [Scenarios for the Future of Technology and International Development] Or the military one by the way for the Navy even just before, at the same time actually as the one that Johns Hopkins had. It was a massive exercise, y'know, all planned in advance.

But here you are living through it.

It was just coincidence that this all just kind of perfected what they would introduce, including the social distancing and all that stuff too. Just coincidence, 'eh? That was all in the Rockefeller one in 2010, the social distancing, and how the people would have to stay at home and get paid by government and stuff like that. Just coincidence again, you understand. They're good sci-fi writers, or whoever did it for them.

But that's the world we're living in, folks. And they've got a lot more to do. There's no way... They're almost pleading for folk to start keeling over with Covid 19. They really are. Canada's been bringing lots in, still coming, bringing them in from India and Africa and all over the place. Saying that these are folk who would get a pension and can't go over there, back home to live again, you see, and it's cheaper. So, trying to get them to come in, to get the numbers up with folk who've got it. That's the only thing I can think of, that's the only reason I can think of.

Because they've never followed any, ANY of the quarantine rules to defend the country. You don't, you never risk a healthy population, that's the first law. You don't, you stop all aircraft, literally all aircraft, to defend a healthy country. If you bring the infection in, then you've just defeated the whole purpose of it. You see? So, you know there's more at work when they don't follow any of the basic rules, as you well know.

Then the kits they've got, all the test kits are just a joke. Absolute joke. Even the labs are admitting that now. And so many of the tests are getting contaminated inside the labs now, y'know, that happens as well. There's even studies come out by the top virologist organizations admitting that even vaccinations for flu can influence these Covid results as well.

False-positive PCR results linked to administration of seasonal influenza vaccine - microbiologyresearch.org / 1 March 2012

There's all kinds of things going on here. But look at the incredible push that you've had to terrify the whole planet, absolute terrify it. And they made sure they were churning out these pretty awful pandemic and plague movies for years now to make sure you all got the message. Oh, there's that kind of tent they put up there with that white tent and there's that bit you walk up there, and you know the folk that will get in there just get wheeled out the other side of it, oh my God, you know. You've all been trained, you see. So, they go into action and they start putting all these tents up. The military put 120 of them up in the States in different cities, and they haven't used any of them. They're dismantling some of them now. They didn't have one patient.

BUT it really scared the people, didn't it? Because you, oh my God, the tents, oh, we better obey what they're saying because we are all going to die. I'm not kidding you; this is how things are really, really managed. It's astounding really. Astounding. I've got the old Socialist International plans for the League of Nations that morphed eventually into the United Nations. Again, they needed a... Again, HG Wells was very prominent in that. He had a big party, he was overjoyed, he wrote a book about the League of Nations.

He said now, he said, we can use the bureaucrats in the technocrats to bypass governments. Because bureaucrats in high levels, you see, they really are technocrats in a sense. They don't serve the public. They don't pretend to serve the public. They probably don't know most of them even exists. You'll never get their names or anything, but they're heads of all the departments that run the country. He said, now we CAN, THE bureaucrats in different departments in Britain can converse with bureaucrats with people in Germany and France and across the world, he says, and literally bypass all the politicians. Because you see, the politicians, no matter how they are all roguish and crooks and all the rest of it and terrible psychopaths, they have to put up a pretense on serving the public. Whereas now of course they could just bypass all of that and converse with each other and get things done, and even make their own laws and rules. That's what he wanted.

But better than that, though, they had it broken down into departments. I've got the old books from the League of Nations, you see. They had different departments already setup for running the world. And the regions too that eventually morphed into the 10 regions eventually for the United Nations. The Club of Rome even uses the same 10 regions today. All connected, there's no coincidence, not coincidental.

The League of Nations also had a Department of Health, you see, that would deal, again, with mass vaccinations and inoculations. They were so enthusiastic about the power they would give the scientists now, you see, in the early days. Back then they hardly knew what a virus was. They had all these plans and vaccinations from the very young, and how they would keep pumping things into your body your whole life long for every citizen in the world. They really had all these great big plans, you see.

They didn't really let it go. They're still at it today with their big, big plans, regardless of the rights of the public.

You understand, you've got to be trained that you have no rights, that public safety overrides rights, you see. And since you get a big pandemic or scares of pandemics, or even bogus pandemics in the past… And the things in the past with the H1N1 and so on that happened, came, and went, and the ones in 2009/2010 for instance, the WHO tried to get to scare things going but the numbers didn’t out. Some of the countries had more folks dying of the flu then, than you're having dying of Covid today. And even the flu. Have you found the numbers of the flus right now that are killing people? You'd be hard-pressed to find them because they're all getting lumped in with the other ones.

I've got the reports here, I'll put some of them up tonight because it's been admitted now they're lumping in suspected with confirmed, and then they’re admitting too, all the confirmed are not really confirmed because they break it into pneumonias, we'll add them in too, etc. etc. So, the actual cause of death is to be put down, they're telling them now to put them down as Covid.

Change to death certificates could boost COVID-19 counts - mprnews.org / 3 April 2020

FROM THE NUMBERS: Only 150 Americans to Date With No Pre-Existing Conditions Have Died From the Coronavirus or 0.9% - thegatewaypundit.com / 10 April 2020

That happened again with the previous flus actually. I remember them well, where in Canada, and I kept all the articles by the way, and I gave them over the air at the time as that was going on. They actually told all the doctors, and the clinics and so on too that were dealing with it and the hospitals, to put them all down as that particular flu that year, it was a few years ago. Under the guise too, well I couldn't test them all, just put them all down for it. So, anybody, even phoning in back then with a sniffle or for advice or whatever, was put down as having a particular flu, even when they didn't.

So, everything's always fudged, y'know, for the big agenda. And we are living through a massive agenda. Because the whole austerity program, the new way of living where rulers, or maybe experts, and every area would have experts, you'd all be monitored, maybe even chipped, you see. It's all right open, wide open, right on the cards, right in front of you now because it's in the open. And being hailed by again, from guys like Bill Gates that's got a finger in every pie when it comes to making money in business. All for the good of the planet you understand. There's nothing to guess at anymore.

It's fascinating to live right through all this and watch it happening. And watch the people being trained, so quickly. And yes, they will stop thinking for themselves. Bertrand Russell went through it again, you understand, there's nothing new with this happening. The behaviorists had their big experiments for the last 100 odd years on us all, to make sure the different techniques would work. And they DO work on us. When you deny your own sensibilities, you're wide open to be reprogrammed completely. Into even walking backwards if they tell you to do it. They'll give you some ridiculous, oh well, I'm walking backwards, and they say it's safer for society, you know. Yep.

That's really how it is. Russell said too, we can train children to believe that snow could be black. And if we keep them away from other children until they've grown up, they'll always think it's black. You can bring a whole generation up thinking it's normal to walk 6, never get close within 6 feet. Yep. And stay in your homes is much as possible. It's so farcical.

Then the police again too, they're stopping people, I'll put one up tonight too, a little clip from a YouTube where a woman in England was on her way to a store for, probably for a little grocery bag or whatever, and had a stop at the park bench and had a seat. Along come the two cops, y'know, like, what's she doing there, why are you sitting there? She told them, she says, oh I'm having a seat, y'know.

The whole point is, a short time. Like, the longer you're going to be out you're going to pollute the atmosphere? Do you really believe this rubbish? Huh? Do you really? Do you understand how ridiculous... You could put this in a movie and folk would laugh at it, a few years ago, it would be so ludicrous. There's even a church in the States where to get around the gathering together thing, they're going to drive around in a circle in some field somewhere and have a kind of a service in their cars, like a drive-in movie.

You see, you've got all these behaviorists behind the scenes working, trying to, and playing with you, trying to get you involved and make you think it's all exciting. That's what they do in wartime, the same kind of nonsense. Then they'll have the shows of healthcare workers outside, they're all getting applauded by the public. Meanwhile some of the hospitals are empty! Except for the ones outside clapping their hands. I'm not kidding you. And when some of the big stations were using clips, showing you how bad it was in New York, they were actually using the videos from Italy. That was the height of disgust and how low can you stoop to. There's no…

There's a big agenda here, folks to convince you of something. Because everything now, EVERYTHING is riding, everything is riding on this being prolonged as long as possible. If they can get it stretched into next year, it's permanently here. And they've already said that too.

And the money, again, when we bailed out the banks the last time, and all the crooks last time, it was a planned bailout, you see, before it all happened. The same thing again, 'eh. D'you really think you're going to go back to some kind of normal after this? I know the dollar in Canada lost a good 40%, almost 50% buying power. You need twice as many of the money to buy the same things, maybe even more at times for different things.

Well, guess what you're going to have left after this one? Look at the shark frenzy as billions and trillions have been tossed around, 'eh. And you'll never recover that lot. There's not even a check into where it's even going, you know that don't you?

Just like Halliburton, I remember giving the talks on Halliburton when they went into Iraq. Under the guise of really building roads and that for the military and restructuring the peasants' places that they bombed into the Stone Age and stuff like that. A big joke. Halliburton's got a big massive holding company, a massive conglomerate of all different subcontractors galore. Of course, the money was all scammed and creamed off the top level by level until guys at the bottom don't get as much of it.

However, it was so incredibly bad, you actually saw them, there was a video made of these big transports coming in and landing, every day for about a week or two weeks. CRATES of freshly printed dollars from the US treasury. Astonishing, 'eh. Then they even showed you the guys who managed it. They took it into a dugout underground. Not too big either. I think it was about 12 x 12 or something like that, no, maybe 20 x 20. That's where they kept the cash. Folk just came in with bags and they would stuff it in. There was no receipts, nothing.

It was the biggest free-for-all ever. You can't believe it. I mean, government… You see, don't forget the biggest crooks, folks, are governments. When you really find what they've got investments in, and they put their own children into big positions across the world, and they're scamming millions from other countries through grants and stuff and yada, yada, ya. So, when they pass laws during emergencies, oh, the billions just fly into black holes, y'know. Yep. Never to be seen again.

[Alan chuckles.] It's just amazing really, 'eh? And all the big hands are out now for the loot. This is the looting time. And you're left with what? The bill. And the chaos.

And d'you know how many people probably died because they can't get into hospitals now for other things? They can't get treatments for their cancers and their operations, hm?

Whatever it takes. Whatever it takes.

Now, before I go any further, yeah, there's something out there. There's no doubt about it, there's something out there. And it's killing people. No doubt about it. And it's being used for a big, big agenda, no doubt about that at all. But it's nowhere near as lethal in the numbers as it was predicted, like millions and millions are going to die. Remember? Fauci was saying the same thing. If you don't follow his, because he's part of the same group that Bill Gates is. I hope you understand they have some business arrangements as well. [Alan chuckles.] Everybody's connected, aren't they? Hm?

But if you look at the hype and the hype and the hype of where they said it could happen, it all could happen... according to computer models, you understand. It's such a farce. Millions and millions Fauci said and other ones said they we're going to DIE, millions will DIE. And they terrified the public with weeks of this stuff, you're all going to DIE, you're all going to DIE.

And they don't give you a God to pray to, they give you white coats to pray to. You see, that's the substitute today. As I said last week, you can take people out of religion, you can't take religion out of the people, they're still looking for it somewhere else, so they supplied it to you. Here's these experts, look, this guy is obviously an expert, he's a multibillionaire don't you know. Hm. Wow. You do what he tells you. He waves his hands a lot and has a little smirk on his face each time he talks so believe him, do what he tells you.

But Fauci, another one with a deadpan face, he also has little smirk once in a while. He said in an article, I'll put it up too by the way. He said offhandedly, and it was in a medical magazine, a virology magazine. He says, well it might be no more than, you know, than just the same, he was talking about the casualties, like a seasonal flu. Then about a half an hour later he goes on the television and tells you, they say, oh, thousands and thousands and thousands, and maybe even bigger than that is going to die. Y'know. There's a huge drama getting played out right now, I hope you understand it.

Covid-19 — Navigating the Uncharted - Anthony S. Fauci, M.D. - nejm.org / 15 April 2020

Unfortunately, people are suffering alright, they definitely are suffering. Because even a lot of the treatments they could give the people who have ended up in the hospital, with not just that but with things very similar to it, all the same conditions actually, or very similar conditions, they are not getting the treatments they're supposed to get.

Then they've got the bioethicists out, they're training them too, and training you... Well, we have to decide who should live and die. And getting the public used to the idea, well, they're old, y'know.

Coronavirus – a small victory: NHS hospitals and GPs are warned against blanket ‘Do Not Revive’ policies - voxpoliticalonline.com / 9 April 2020

D'you realize, do you realize up until this Covid thing hit with this massive, massive… folk have died every year from flus. That's normal, it seems to be normal. Winter is bad enough but winter takes away a lot of people in the colder climates, especially.

But we have something in our nature, we don't like to dwell on the fact that we personally could die. If you did think like that, you'd commit suicide, you wouldn't wait for it happening you'd be so depressed. They have terms for it and names for it, all about that particular mechanism that allows you to continue and ignore the fact that you're mortal. It's true, we all think, especially young folk, I mean, we've all been there, you're never going to die. It just doesn't, it might happen to other people, but it will never happen to you. Obviously. You tend to deny it, you see, most folk.

Unless you're working in the field and you'll see these annual flus go, sometimes 50,000 odd will go over a bad flu season, sometimes way more than that actually, within one country. That's regarded as quite normal actually. With or without the vaccine, it doesn't make any difference it seems as far as the deaths go. They generally hit initially, I can remember reading the articles on the air from different authorities years ago, where they'd look at, using Canada as an example and the States. Often the folk would get hit first in the elderly homes, homes for the elderly, caretaker homes type of thing where they're looked after. So, they're frail to begin with, but, the big puzzle is why would they break out in these places? So, they said it must be brought in by the people from outside visiting them.

That's plausible, and probably partly true as well. Not all the time though. But then they did tracers, and they did experiments in some of these homes where they found out that somehow or another a lot of them are just breaking out in the homes and getting carried into the community by folks that visit, pick it up there and carried into the community. It was the other way around, you see. Then they would go into, why would they start there? Well, certain things happening these homes, you know, mandated things, that might be behind it. And you can't say anything about it today because you're under martial law, you understand?

And you'd better take it seriously this martial law thing because honestly, they can do terrible things under wartime scenarios and lock folk up for just having an opinion about something. You're not allowed opinions anymore, you see. It's called progress into austerity and all that.

So, it was the same thing too with it breaking out in Canada. I really did check, and I put one article up, awfully good one, it told you about British Columbia. But most folk can't read between the lines, because a lot of things tell you things between the lines. Of what groups were actually getting it. The fact that a lot of them came from a different country, and the relatives came back from the countries that were infected, back-and-forth, back-and-forth, all through it too. British Columbia is a big multinational area, put it that way, and it's very traceable that way, you could tell what was happening. But that it really added to the numbers of folk infected and folk who died with it too. But they had great success as well, where they even had 91-year-old women surviving after getting it in British Columbia. Which again, negated the fact that it was death for everybody over the age of 60 pretty well, you see.

Fear of COVID 19: Overcoming the Hype - tenpennyimc.com / 5 March 2020

But the hype and hype and hype, they've made hay over this incredible hype and terror. Because the agenda is totally, it's just completely unfurled… Here's the real agenda here, we couldn't get it all through the climate change thing and sustainability and sustainable development goals, etc. etc., and you wouldn't stop breeding, and you wouldn't stop consuming things, and you wouldn't go into a postconsumer society, you're postindustrial but you wouldn't go into a post consumerist and start eating the crickets and all that and the insects, so we're going to MAKE you go into it...

..through saving you all...

...by terrorizing you all...

...by getting you into such debt that you'll never get out of it. And whatever you can manage to make for an income in the future is going to be peanuts. And you can probably live on peanuts, you may be lucky to even get some peanuts, under a martial law type system.

Personally, I'd rather they just got rid of the politicians. Just move them out of the way, pay them off, y'know. Just have the totalitarians that are managing us all, the technocrats I think, because then you know who's doing it, instead of going through the pretense that the politicians are there to help you. Because they're not helping us at all, are they? And they won't listen to the public at all, which proves there's no democracy. Quite amazing.

I listened to a little clip of a talk given by an ex-Deputy Prime Minister of Australia. He was talking to Peter Hitchens. It was interesting. The man seemed genuine enough. He didn't seem, but again, y’know, you can be misled too because a lot of politicians are psychopathic, and they can be awfully pleasant. But the man, he listens to this, he is agreeing that this martial law scenario is getting ridiculous. And he is agreeing that it would be bad for the country and all that.

A fiasco in the making? As the coronavirus pandemic takes hold, we are making decisions without reliable data - statnews.com / 17 March 2020

RCMP to enforce Quarantine Act, while Trudeau says no plan to invoke Emergencies Act - nationalpost.com / 10 April 2020

Canada in it ‘for the long haul’ with COVID-19, deputy health officer says - globalnews.ca / 28 March 2020

But as soon as he said that he was a true believer in free trade, the penny dropped immediately for me, my alarm system went off. Like the Council on Foreign Relations type group that, the club, y'know, that they always put their members into government. And the Royal Institute of International Affairs, the British company, or the British group that's the grandparent of them all, and the boss of them all actually, they make sure that these people are appointed into governments to make sure that the free trade agreements are done.

The same free trade agreements that made sure you can't even make anything in your own country, even to save your own lives. You can't even make swabs. Or gauze bandages, you know. Never mind facemasks or medical equipment. That's what happens when you become interdependent. Meaning, totally dependent on some outsider. And the same politicians signed all the deals for integration. So that's really what free trade's all about. Nobody forced the countries into signing. Every politician in every Western country and in the Eastern countries signed on with glee, against the wishes of the public.

But we never learn, do we?... Well, we're Democratic and that, though, we've got rights, y'know.

We're trained and trained and trained, always, for what's to come. The biggest training mechanism is indoctrination in school, for sustainability, and all parents are bad, and that consumerism is bad. Now, you've got Antifa groups that are all paid, again, their leaders are all paid awfully well. They have lifetimes salaries and pension funds for some of them. The followers are all just angry little youngsters that have been trained to be angry, about everything. They're little armies, you see.

I'll put up another clip tonight of a woman who was the head, at the moment, at the present, of a big group at the Club of Rome, and how she is, with glee again, praising this wonderful Covid thing for giving them an opportunity to push forward with the global warming and sustainability climate goals and so on that have to come out of it. She's just, oh, just having, almost orgasms I suppose, with the money that will be flowing. She doesn't mention the money, but you can tell that she likes it. They do like money at the top. The people, the people who are the biggest altruistic people in the planet, they're there to help you, love money. They love money. The communist hierarchy, even Lenin loved money, you know that 'eh? I hope you understand that.

But this woman praises Antifa and Extinction Rebellion group, 'eh. The other created group by the same… They're all connected, these groups, and they all get money from the same sources. They're all trained from the same sources. Your tax money helps a lot to train them too, to be rebels. Folk don't know how the world really, really is run. They really don't know. They don't know.

There's nothing out there that's not organized from those who own all the other groups at the top. There's nothing out there that's from the grassroots. If you’re from the grassroots you might be approached to join one that's pre-existing, you see, that's authorized. But if you don't agree, you'll get flattened. You’ll get cut off or defamed or something, but you'll fall flat. You're done for. That's how controlled the system is.

I can remember years ago, occasionally you would get asked to sing at do's, y'know, these do's for charities and that. And also, a couple of them I accepted, without knowing that all the top communist on the planet were going to go there. All authorized by your government. And most of the folk who organized it all, all worked for government, they were civil servants in Canada. I met lots of them. But I also popped into a place once I heard them singing, and it was in Toronto. It was interesting because someone says, do you play? I says, yeah, a little bit, I says; y'know, I don't want to say too much. I sang a couple of songs, and they liked it. But a woman came up and says, do you know anything really revolutionary? I said well what d’you mean revolutionary? You know, against the establishment. Well, this place where they had coffee and cakes and all the rest of it, and some of the other ones in Toronto that sold beer, they had licenses, were funded by the government to set up left-wing systems to protest the government.

D'you understand? Are you starting to catch on here how it works? And unless you're in the right places at the right time, you won't have the learning experiences. But that's how things really are. There's nothing at the bottom, I don't care what it is, that is not agreed upon from the very, very top.

Years ago, I gave talks as well about the fashions. You can go way back into the past and you can say, my God, look at Benjamin Franklin's day, most guys wore wigs and they had silk stockings. You see the pictures too of the folk, the paintings for instance of King James in Scotland, y'know. He had a name for himself, for other things, King James. But you always have one of his legs really pushing forward. He liked, he liked his thighs, that's what they said, y'know, he liked to show off his thighs, in his silk stockings. He thought he looked really, really good in it. So, I guess everybody has their vanity.

But every generation has some kind of fashion designed for them. And it didn't just happen by itself. I can see how the class system evolves; they want to be different. They even talk differently from the people. I noticed too, it was interesting in Canada, and in the States too, the ones who go to university adopt the kind of, a certain way of talking. [Alan is mimicking the speech.] It's kind of like that. And they think it's a bit posher than the ordinary people at the bottom. So underneath the pretense, we're all the same and we are all pulling together as a country and that, the class distinctions are always there. The you find it in all areas of life and across the whole planet.

So, people in the past used to dress differently. And they made it illegal at one time in England that when silk became popular, if the peasants got even cast-off silk that was torn or whatever, and started wearing it like a…, it was illegal, you'd be charged, you'd be taken off to prison for impersonating an upper-class person by wearing a bit of silk. That was in GREAT Britain, y’know, the land of democracy and freedom. So that's where folks stood to go.

Then in the 20th century, you don't realize that for many centuries the ordinary peasants, [Alan chuckles.] the peasant folk, the working classes that really made things work, all dressed the same pretty much for generations for a lot of the time because they didn't have the finery. And they WORKED. That's what they saw, they did real work you see.

It wasn't until the 20th century, and then into, just before World War II, that you started to get clothing made for TEENAGERS. The term ‘teenager’ was invented by the Communists, so that they tried to drive a wedge between not just the sexes, you see, everything is divide, divide, divide, but between generations. So, a child now was not a child anymore, he was a teenager, you see, once you hit that teenage year. The term had never been used before, teenager, you see. Then a whole fashion was set up for the teenager. You had jeans. The hippies of course came out with their beads and everything and the longhair fad as well. And drugs naturally, they always give you drugs along with things. So's you can't think straight anymore.

Then of course they came into, it was interesting, the Beatles you see, came out initially as the four young men from Liverpool nonsense, y'know, like they just happen to be there, a prepackaged, you know, product. And they had, again, the star making machinery, here's the Beatles suit. It had no collar on it. The Beatles haircut, the little fringe haircut thing, and little gimmicks like that. And the winklepicker shoes of course, the pointed shoes.

But eventually once they got people hooked on them, because everything is politicized, you see, and has got a reason for being there. Once they had a following then they started bringing the long-haired ones in, and then the anti-, oh, let's-fight-the-system, and there's-going-to-be-a-revolution, yeah-yeah, etc., and back in the USSR, hm, and things like that. Then you had the protest stuff. Then you've got the dirty jeans. Then you've got, y'know, things like that.

Then after that yet you had the glam, they called it the Glam Rock thing. Rock initially was anything but glamorous. It was meant to be, it was again a protest and so on in a way, but it was mainly for the music. And you didn't want to, you didn't care about them telling you what to protest, you just wanted to go yaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaa, and scream a bit. So that was successful for a bit. Then they turned it into Glam Rock. Where the guys started to, you weren't quite sure what they were. They wore silks and everything. And they probably spent more on their hairdos than Farrah Fawcett Majors did. Things like that, you see. And it was meant to be that way.

Then they put on a very effeminate kind of band type thing. I mean, lips come on, and makeup and lipstick and all the rest of it come on, come on, y'know. If you've seen Spinal Tap it gives you an idea, it was a good comedy. But it lost its way eventually. So eventually you came out again with the kind of punk, where you just went on and yelled a lot with the distortion, y'know, in your guitar and that was it, you didn't ever play much. Then you had the spiked hair cuts and all that would come out of it. Until they walked around looking like coronaviruses, 'eh, with the spiked hair everywhere.

Every generation is given something from above. It didn't happen amongst themselves, by themselves. They think they did at the time, even the music, they think they did by themselves. No, it was all given to them.

The rappers did the same thing. Once the stuff was put out by the machinery, the big stars and so on and tells you what the fad is going to be, the big boys at the top, it's always the same people, gave them suddenly the rap, you see. I can remember them even interviewing guys at the time and they said oh yeah yeah, we know what to do, yeah. Because it was all given to them by the first ones, they put out there and they all follow suit. They copy. It's all about copying, you see.

That's how we're trained. It's so easy to train us. And every group is given the things to protest, and the things that they want. Until now you have, again the Antifa groups, and in France you have the Yellow Vests, and the color revolutions too, etc. etc. They start with one protest and then they’re protesting everything, but they're never sure what. And even that's been quashed too with the Covid thing. Interesting, isn't it, 'eh? Same thing with the Hong Kong one as well. It all went quiet because, oh, you're all going to die.

So, what's happening today is a long process of management, and readying, and even practicing, by the way, and making it happen. Because every country in the West, Canada and the States, has been doing massive exercises for the last 20 years, together, on emergency powers. Even going into certain areas. You hardly ever see them because they're so quiet about it. They set up command headquarters under emergency powers, if anything happened, they'd have to go and help the people, you know, and take over and manage it, again, in a technocratic way. Not Democratic. Technocracy is not Democratic, it's the opposite. They've had these exercises every year across big parts of Canada and the States, with both countries involved. They’re already again to do the same thing.

You can tie so much into what's happening today including the militarization of the whole society since 9/11. The police in Canada used to have uniforms that didn't terrify people. They didn't look like, like, SS SWAT teams y'know, with all the black outfits in combat boots and combat pants even and all that. They didn't have that kind of stuff. It was done intentionally in the 90s to get you ready for what was to happen in 2001. All in advance, of course it was. They even passed the Omnibus crime bill in Canada a few years before 9/11 happened. Allan Rock was in charge of it. It was an anti-terror bill. Nothing happens by itself spontaneously. It isn't allowed to.

We're trained and trained in every generation, right up to the present, with a youth brigade that's like the young Communist Party really, that's how they've been trained. And they're full of anger and they're ready to go against the ones that are older because you ruined it all and you destroyed the planet and the climate and everything else, you see, it's all your fault. They've been brainwashed into being radicalized. And your tax money made them that through the teachers, who know darn well what they're teaching. The teachers are prostitutes. They’re social engineers. Change agents as it's been said in the US by some older folk who are dead now, Charlotte Iserbyt and people like that.

So, we're going to the next phase of it now, which is mandated austerity. You are going into it. And you'll have rationing, I gave these talks years ago, they want to bring in rationing. And here you go, along with it, and the electronic surveillance on everybody, including your movements by the way, and they want to give you rationing IDs and all that. It will all be on your cell phones, etc. And Bill Gates is just mentioning this day after day apparently, that that's what he's pushing forward, that you're going to have this before you can travel, you're going to have that.

Well, I didn't vote for this creep, did you? Did you? No. Have you ever seen the movie Idiocracy? There's a scene anywhere the guy is shot, from the past basically, he slumbers for centuries, wakes up into the future. And the world’s been run by, really, fools and idiots. He goes into a hospital because he's got a little problem. They don't even ask you what's wrong, they just point at things on computer screens. Like, here's the knee, and you see these little marks coming from it, like it's pain, and so he, oh yeah, it's not that, no. And they stick all these different things in different orifices, and of course they get them all mixed up, because they're not very bright these people, for temperature and all that. Then he goes into see the doctor there, who talks like a… yeah, yo, okay man, yo, whoa, whoa.

Then at the end he had to pay for it all and he doesn't know how to pay for it. The doctor says, where's your tattoo? And he doesn't... He says, you don't have a tattoo!?! Then the doctor freaks out and hits an alarm button, no tattoo! That's, your everything comes off that tattoo. That's everything that Bill Gates is pushing with this tattoo thing and all that. It was in a movie, Idiocracy. Folk who did the movie obviously knew it was coming, 'eh. [Alan chuckles.]

So anyway, yeah, you're prepared in advance for every step of what's to happen. And you will see, the longer they can keep this going, the more they'll become more authoritative, and keeping folks at home. And you might even get deaths down the road, if they keep you in for a long, long period of time and not let you out, etc., the people will crackup, etc.

But don't forget, and this is something you always keep in the back of your minds. Quite a few years back I remember doing the talks when the military, National Guard, even the Forestry Commission and different departments inside the US, all different departments, Homeland Security, were getting, were buying billions and billions of rounds, all kinds of caliber rounds for their weaponry. And stacks of hollow point, which can only be used internally. It's against the Geneva Convention to use hollow points in warfare against soldiers, they use the full metal jacket types for the soldiers. The hollow points are meant to create maximum impact and possible death, that's what they're designed for. They'll hit and expand and create a bigger whole, and more disruption, more shock, etc. So, they're only allowed to be used on your own populations. Because the UN has decreed this against all their treaties, the arms treaties, to use it in combat against foreign troops.

There was a big kerfuffle at the time, what on earth are they buying all this for? I mean, for goodness’ sake here. Well, if things were to drag out a long, long time, and they get more and more authoritative, and it's supposed to go that way, remember, and folks start cracking up, and then eventually a lot of them can’t get the food that they need, or anything else that they need perhaps... Then laws are broken and yada, yada, ya. Who knows? But they're certainly prepared for the worst if it ever came to that. You understand?

They certainly are prepared for the worst, and they've got all these treaties with Canada and the States, so I have no doubt at all, under the right conditions they actually send, it's in one of the old NAFTA deals, now it's the USMCA one I think they call it, that the States is to come to the aid of Canada too if need be. And even vice versa. Including Mexico too, mind you.

So, you've got a look at all these things that are happening today. If they want to push it and push it and push it, and they're testing with the latest gear, constantly testing us all in real time as I've said before, as they float the ideas from Bill Gates, etc., and within 10 minutes with the chitchat on the net and the cell phones and that, they know exactly how far to push something or draw back a little bit on any particular point or topic. Because they put out trial balloons all the time, you see. That's how perfectly things are managed today, I hope you understand that.

But if you notice, at the moment they're getting you trained that there's no input from the general public at all. You don't count. I hope you understand this. Because you're living through precedents. Things that never happened in World War I or World War II, or in the entire Cold War when you're supposed to be all getting blown to bits with atomic weaponry, none of this happened, and half the planet is locked down under martial law now. It never happened before. Never ever happened.

In some countries you had curfews at night, in totalitarian countries. But here you have people locked down permanently? Forbidden to work? You'd better start thinking about these things, and how you're ACCEPTING it so easily.

You see, the psychic driving of repetition, repetition, oh my God, look what's happening in China, oh my God, look, look, look, look, look, look has done wonders to decimate the people's common sense.

And you've got to understand something right now, history is full of people rebelling and even having revolution, to try to GET rights and freedoms from those that deem themselves superior, who believe they have the right to rule people. It took centuries to get rights for the people. And you’re watching it all go down the tubes voluntarily under the guise of the big psychic terror drive you're watching day after day after day. And you never get those rights back once you give them up.

Now, let's just start with, I'll put this up tonight too, the actual plan, Event 201, outlined it. Again, the Rockefeller one as well, which happened in 2010. This one happened one month before it supposedly broke out in China, Event 201, Call to Action. It’s a PDF, you can download it yourself. But it says…

Event 201 - Public Private Partnership Pandemic Call to Action - pdf

centerforhealthsecurity.org

The next severe pandemic will not only cause great illness and loss of life but could also trigger major cascading economic and societal consequences that could contribute greatly to global impact and suffering.

(Alan: Then they go into how they'll have to get public-private partnerships where, basically what they're talking about is how the private sector, they're talking about big corporations, will be part of the rulership for managing the general public basically. It says…)

The Event 201 pandemic exercise, conducted on October 18, 2019, (A: ...I mean, isn't that amazing, 'eh, it's halfway through October pretty well and the thing broke out in November in China, we're told, it might've even been earlier for all we know.) vividly demonstrated a number of these important gaps in pandemic preparedness as well as some of the elements of the solutions between the public and private sectors that will be needed to fill them. The Johns Hopkins Center for Health Security, World Economic Forum, (A: ...as well, so there ya go, you've got the World Economic Forum again, all the biggies, that you don't vote for and…) and Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation jointly propose the following:

1. Governments, international organizations, (A: Guess where they will be again?) and businesses should plan now for how essential corporate capabilities will be utilized during a large-scale pandemic.

(A: They go through the whole plan basically.)

2. Industry, national governments, and international organizations should work together…

(A: So, there’s the end of your democracy, right…)

2. Industry, national governments, and international organizations should work together to enhance internationally held stockpiles of medical countermeasures (MCMs) to enable rapid and equitable distribution during a severe pandemic.

(A: Then they bring the World Health Organization into it. The World Health Organization has been heavily a communist front for… its inception actually is kind of comical as well because the Rockefeller Foundation set up the Department of Population, it used to be called Population Control, just across the corridor I think from the World Health Organization place. So, it all works together. And you understand what I sometimes by world health. I mean, perhaps bringing down the population comes into the healthy population part, and some things that Mr. Gates mentioned before kind of ties into that as well perhaps. A healthy population, maybe a smaller one but a healthier one, y’know. Anyway, it says…)

The World Health Organization (WHO) currently has an influenza vaccine virtual stockpile, with contracts in place with pharmaceutical companies (A: …the big corporate, you know, [Alan chuckles.] the fascism, here it goes.) that have agreed to supply vaccines should WHO request them.

Then they go into all the nitty-gritty stuff too, not in great detail in this particular one, but you can go into the whole PDF and look it up for yourselves if you're... It's really interesting, and the videos are up there too, of I think it's a five-part series, often discussing how they'll manage the general public and the laws they'll have to bring in to make the public obey them and all that kind of stuff. Interesting.

Public-private cooperation for pandemic preparedness and response - centerforhealthsecurity.org

The Naval War College ran a pandemic wargame in 2019. That was coincidence too though, right?

The Naval War College Ran a Pandemic War Game in 2019. The Conclusions Were Eerie.

military.com / 1 April 2020

An infectious disease breaks out in a densely populated metropolis and is spreading rapidly, causing respiratory failure and death in its victims. As local containment and response mechanisms break down and cases multiply, it becomes clear that a global response -- spanning governments, humanitarian organizations, health agencies and the military -- will be required.

That scenario is not a condensed narrative of the COVID-19 pandemic that currently has much of the globe on lockdown. Rather, it's the premise of a war game run last September by the Naval War College (NWC) in Newport, Rhode Island. And its findings (A: …which are, I'll put the link up to it.) -- released in summary format Wednesday -- reveal prescient and sometimes troubling parallels to the real-world response effort that continues today.

(A: But that's just coincidence, folks. It's coincidental.)

Called Urban Outbreak 2019, the war game involved 50 experts who spent (A: …probably the same bunch again with the Johns Hopkins.) two days coordinating response, containment and messaging efforts around the notional pandemic. Some of the conclusions, such as the way forced mass quarantine can backfire (A: ...you see, forced mass quarantine...) can backfire and trigger additional disease spread, and how the mortality rate is better than the overall number of disease cases in assessing the scale of an outbreak -- have been proved out through the response to the novel coronavirus.

The Naval War College - Urban Outbreak 2019 - digital-commons.usnwc.edu / 1 April 2020

It goes on and on and on. If you want to read through it, you can do it. It’s not a bad little article, mind you. But it gives you an idea what goes on, in preparation for the thing that supposedly is the real thing. I’ll also put down this one here. It’s…

World Economic Forum - COVID Action Plan

weforum.org

COVID Action Plan

The Global Future Council, (A: I guess that's the name of the organization.) is the international organization for public-private cooperation. The World Economic Forum acting as partner to the World Health Organization is mobilizing all stakeholders to protect lives and livelihoods.

(A: Well, if you look at the characters that make up the WEF, y'know, World Economic Forum, it's a massive, it isn't just a... You always hear of them meeting. It's not an annual meeting. It's a massive organization with permanent buildings, a massive civil service running it. They sponsor, it's a big massive foundation that trains future leaders across the planet for their own particular agenda, I hope you realize that too, to make sure there'll never be anything called democracy. Of course, the WEF is just the FEW backwards, it's for the few, you understand. Anyway, it says here…

The dramatic spread of COVID-19 has disrupted lives, livelihoods, communities and businesses worldwide. (A: They're very clever, that, so they can tell you what you obviously know.) All stakeholders, especially global business, must urgently come together to minimize its impact on public health and limit its potential for further disruption to lives and economies around the world.

But the sum of many individual actions will not add up to a sufficient response. Only coordinated action by business, combined with global, multistakeholder cooperation – at exceptional scale and speed – can potentially mitigate the risk and impact of this unprecedented crisis.

(A: Then they go into…)

OUR CONTRIBUTION

The spread of COVID-19 demands global cooperation among governments, international organizations and the business community. (A: You’ve already said that, for goodness’ sake.) This multistakeholder cooperation is at the centre of the World Economic Forum’s mission as the International Organization for Public-Private Cooperation.

(A: So, they’ve decided that they themselves are the organization that’s going to manage the public and private businesses, etc. That’s very democratic of them too, isn’t it?)

Galvanize the global business community for collective action

Protect people’s livelihoods (A: [Alan laughing.] That's a good one.) and facilitate business continuity (A: What a joke that is, 'eh?)

Mobilize cooperation and business support for the COVID-19 response

(A: Then they give you a summary and all that and you can download it for yourselves and all that kind of thing. And you can...)

Embed their special Covid 19 transformation map (A: This is the age, remember, of change and this is the century of changes they call it, transformation, 'eh? Everything's transforming supposedly.) on your Internet or website enabling your employees or stakeholders one click access to the latest strategic trends, research, analysis and data.

There ya are. So, aren't you glad these unelected organizations are, they're all working on this before it even started, 'eh? it's just constant. Another article, it says here…

The Normal Economy Is Never Coming Back

foreignpolicy.com / 9 April 2020

(A: …just to make you happy again, that one. It says here...)

As the coronavirus lockdown began, the first impulse was to search for historical analogies—1914, 1929, 1941? As the weeks have ground on, what has come ever more to the fore is the historical novelty of the shock that we are living through.

(A: It’s shock and awe, you see. There’s a joke about shock and awe too but I won’t go into that right now. But shock and awe, and that’s what they’re doing. Psychic driving, oh my God, and oh look at that, oh, shock, shock, shock. So, we’re living through it all.)

As a result of the coronavirus pandemic America's economy is now widely expected to shrink by a quarter.

(A: Well, forget it, it's a little bit more than a quarter, I think.)

That's as much as during the Great Depression.

(A: They’re all happy about that.)

But whereas the contraction after 1929 stretched over a four-year period, the coronavirus implosion will happen over the next three months. There's never been a crash landing like this before.

There is something new under the sun and it's horrifying.

Then they go into it and all the rest of it. But the thing is, they don't plan on getting over a great depression. This is permanent. It's a whole new way of living. This is what they're going on about here. And it's in glee. As I say, that woman at the Club of Rome is in ecstasy over it all. And no doubt the money that's getting thrown her way as well.

This goes into it as well; it will never be the same again. To get you used to the idea, the whole agenda, sustainable goals, right, have to be fulfilled. It's beautiful for that. They'll never let this go. Nope. And planned or not, take your pick what you want to believe. But the fact is, they're not going to... They are in glee and ecstasy over the whole thing, they are quite open about it.

I’ve read the plans to reopen the economy. They’re scary.

vox.com / 10 April 2020

There is no plan to return to normal.

Over the past few days, I’ve been reading the major plans for what comes after social distancing. You can read them, too. There’s one from the right-leaning American Enterprise Institute, the left-leaning Center for American Progress, Harvard University’s Safra Center for Ethics, and Nobel Prize-winning economist Paul Romer.

I thought, perhaps naively, that reading them would be a comfort — at least then I’d be able to imagine the path back to normal. But it wasn’t. In different ways, all these plans say the same thing: Even if you can imagine the herculean political, social, and economic changes necessary to manage our way through this crisis effectively, there is no normal for the foreseeable future.

(A: Then he goes into…)

Until there’s a vaccine, (A: That’s what you’ve been told, you see.) the United States either needs economically ruinous levels of social distancing, a digital surveillance state of shocking size and scope, or a mass testing apparatus of even more shocking size and intrusiveness.

(A: M-hm. That’s what they’re telling you. And then he goes into the different bodies that are all working together…)

The AEI, CAP, and Harvard plans aren’t identical, but they’re similar. All of them feature a period of national lockdown — in which extreme social distancing is deployed to “flatten the curve” (A: … as they call this nonsense, you see.) and health and testing capacity is surged to “raise the line.” That’s phase one. Phase two triggers after a set period (45 days for CAP, three months for Harvard) or, in the AEI plan, after 14 days of falling cases and a series of health supply markers.

But the whole point is, he goes through the process they're using here. It's a whole new way of governing basically with all these different checkpoints that you must get to before you can get to the next level, next level. And that's what it's all about, you see, that the scientists are going to rule your lives, folks.

Because they know better with all their models that they make, y'know, these computer models, with scary scenarios, 'eh, scary scenarios. Isn't that what they said with all the meetings of the groups that were... I read them all for years, every year I used to read them, on the air, all the scary scenarios. That's what they call them themselves, from the different organizations for sustainability and depopulation, and sustainable development goals, is to give the folk scary scenarios about the climate or they wouldn't believe you otherwise. So, they had to terrify the public and tell them terrible scary scenarios. Well, this is what they do. And they've got all the authority to do it. That's why they get so much airtime.

Also...

The Fed Asks for BlackRock’s Help in an Echo of 2008

nytimes.com / 25 March 2020

BlackRock will advise the Federal Reserve on the purchase of billions of dollars in bonds and securities. The terms of the agreement were not disclosed.

The Federal Reserve has turned again...

(A: You see, that's what, they helped bail them out the last time supposedly. The Federal Reserve by the way, has become the bank to the world. They lend to all the countries. They bailed all the other countries out, including Canada, at the last big crash we had. BlackRock apparently is the big con job that bails them out, supposedly. However, the Federal Reserve is a private, maybe even foreign-owned, group of banks, and BlackRock is an interesting one as well.)

The nation's central bank said it tapped BlackRock, the world's largest asset manager, to help oversee the Fed's effort to stabilize the bond market amid economic turmoil caused by the coronavirus pandemic.

A BlackRock subsidiary will advise the Fed on the purchase of billions of dollars in commercial mortgage-backed securities and investment-grade corporate bonds

(A: Sound familiar? It's the same, a repeat scenario of 2007/8.)

— a decision that echoed a move from the 2008 financial crisis.

(A: It's interesting, when you really dig into who they are though, you just keep falling over and having a good laugh to yourself with the names that pop up, they're also familiar, y'know. It really is, it's amazing. It says…)

The last time (A: ...at the time, the last time) that arrangement prompted criticism for lawmakers and others who worried about coziness between Wall Street and Washington, as well as the potential for conflicts of interest.

(A: Because my God, there's really some amazing conflicts involved in all of this. But then, there always has been really with the Federal Reserve.)

Dennis Kelleher is the president of Better Markets, a nonprofit group that supports stringent financial regulation and the Fed needs to guarantee there is full transparency.

(A: What a joke. So, they've already got it set up, their pretended watchdog, etc., hm. N-n-n.)

BlackRock's advisory business is separate from its asset management business, which generates most of the firm’s revenue. Besides working with the Fed during the 2008 crisis, the advisory division has done work for the British treasury, the Swiss National Bank, the European Central Bank and the government of Greece.

(A: Ohhh [Alan laughing.] they can really floor you, can't they. Poor old Greece, and Italy too for that matter.)

New York Fed said in a statement that it selected BlackRock on a "short-term basis" because of its expertise in the market for commercial mortgage-backed securities which are backed by government-sponsored mortgage finance firms Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac and Ginnie Mae.

I tell ya, n-n-n. I-yi-yi. That's quite interesting too for those that want to go into the cons that go on in the world. [Alan chuckles.] And really, the legalized crooks, I call them legalized crooks because they run the law systems too, obviously. Everything is corrupt today. Wherever you look it's incredibly corrupt.

Banks To Make Billions On Small Business Bailout zerohedge.com / 1 April 2020

As part of the $2 trillion fiscal stimulus package that was signed into law by Donald Trump on Friday, the Small Business Administration will offer $350 billion in loans to US small businesses meant to preserve business solvency as part of the emergency federal response to the coronavirus pandemic; the loans, part of the so-called "Paycheck Protection Program" will be offered through banks and credit unions to cash-strapped businesses employing under 500 people (it's not clear how a company employing 500 people is a "small business" but we can assume that this is just a stealthy bailout of some not so small businesses).

(A: That's really what it is, it's the big boys getting bailed out. Yep.)

Borrowers will need to fill out a two-page form and document that they were in business as of mid-February. Lenders will not need to wait for SBA confirmation before providing cash in hand.

According to the SBA, there are 30m businesses with fewer than 500 employees in the US, employing 60m people, almost half of the private workforce.

Yet some may be "shocked" to learn (A: Maybe they will or won't…) that like in any government bailout package, the biggest winners here will not be America's vibrant small and medium business sector, which at best will get the bare minimum cash to fund 2.5 months of payroll (this assume the pandemic will be resolved by mid-June) but - drumroll - America's banks.

The big boys are getting all the cash as always, y'know. That's how things always work, 'eh.

Why it's no longer acceptable to pay with cash: Aussies are urged to ditch disease-spreading notes - as experts

(A: …again, there's these experts, 'eh. I wonder where that school is where they turn out experts? I mean, it's a strange priesthood, 'eh. I've heard about perverts, but I don't know about experts.)

admit coronavirus could kill physical money for good

dailymail.co.uk / 27 March 2020

(A: They're trying to make sure, trying to convince the public just to stop using it. So rather than ban it they're trying to JUST get you to give it up, you see. The big boys too have been putting out this stuff for years in Canada, of the end of cash, we must get the folk off it into electronic stuff. Then you can get really managed, a la Bertrand Russell, 'eh, the government will give you everything, it will be total control into your bank account. If you've been bad, an asbo as they call it, antisocial behavior disorder, by saying that this is not the best country in the world, then whoa! that's it, you're going to be fined immediately, you can't pay your rent. So, if you had some cash there at least you could pay cash, couldn't you, hm? You see, I keep saying, when your choices are gradually taken away, or narrowed down until there's none at all, 'eh, you are really under tyranny. In all areas, folks.)

Some retail stores are already turning away customers who use notes in desperate attempts to combat the rapid growth of the virus.

Well, who's bringing all this stuff you're going to buy into their stores in and touching it all? 'Eh? Get off it. Get off it. That's all been touched as well. Absolute rubbish. Then you've got this one here on…

Spain is moving to permanently establish universal basic income in the wake of the coronavirus pandemic

businessinsider.com / 6 April 2020

Spain is moving to implement a permanent basic income (A: Naturally.) as a measure to help workers and families battered by the coronavirus pandemic.

(A: Again, the Club of Rome is pushing this universal basic income. They mean universal, meaning worldwide, that's what they want. This is for global government; I hope you understand. So, we'll all get our funds like… a la Bertrand Russell, into our bank accounts. They were pushing that before it happened, remember? And again, the World Economic Forum, that we don't elect, was making all the statements at the time, oh well y'know, we have to start just paying folk to stay at home. Before any viruses. It's all coincidence though, isn't it? It really is. It has to be. What else could it be? [Alan chuckles.] You know, conspiracy theorist. I guess what they are imagining is about, and being right that this would come, and they could push it then, I guess THEY were really the conspiracy theorists, 'eh? They were pushing world conspiracies; they are making their own conspiracies happen.)

Nadia Calviño, the country's minister for economic affairs, told the Spanish broadcaster La Sexta on Sunday evening that the government was planning to introduce the cash handouts as part of a barrage of policies meant to help people get back on their feet.

(A: Well, why? You can’t walk anywhere, and you’re not allowed to. But this is the kind of stuff we’re living through, isn’t it, ’eh?)

And you really believe, something’s for nothing, ‘eh?! And your kicks for free? Money is not for nothing, folks. It’s always…

Government and opposition parties pass $73-billion wage subsidy program - nationalpost.com / 11 April 2020

Even loans by the big banks to other countries and the World Bank, it comes with all these different social policies you must introduce in your country, and cultural changes, and you know, all that kind of stuff.

Coronavirus West Australia: New $91m policing package will include electronic surveillance

7news.com.au / 8 April 2020

(A: I put a little clip on, it’s a YouTube, I think it’s on YouTube, or no, it’s from a newspaper in Australia. You see little clip there, it says…)

Coronavirus West Australia: New $91m policing package will include electronic surveillance

(A: That’s how they’re going to fight the virus, you see, by studying it, working through you. [Alan chuckles.] It’s amazing.)

The West Australian government has announced a $91 million policing package

(A: This is just the Western Australian government.)

The massive investment was announced by Premier Mark McGowan on Wednesday afternoon.

(A: And a woman came on who was the head of something that had to do with this, I'm not quite, I thought she was McGowan, but I guess not. Well, who knows? And I'm not kidding you, she starts off by saying how much they'd saved, before she tells you what they're spending it on, you see.

And I had a friend who used to joke about his mum who would come home with all these packages. And you know, they used to have these, from the better class shops you'd get these, they were kind of cardboard type, not quite cardboard but heavy-duty paper bags and they'd put their stuff in the bags, you see. And it had nice pictures and that and little prints on them and all that. But she would come home with stacks of the stuff on a spending spree. And she would always say that, right, because they got it from the magazines what to tell her husband's and so on. So, his mum used to come home and as soon as the husband appeared she'd say, you wouldn't believe what I saved today, you see. [Alan laughing.] That's just exactly what this woman said in Australia with the $91 million policing package. And you have to really hear this stuff, you know. And you could actually see them, oh, just smiling, just like, oh my God. You can tell a lot of money is going to help, a lot of people here.)

Of that total $73 million will immediately be invested to strengthen WA’s police force, including the recruitment of 150 new police officers.

(A: ‘Eh? $73 million, ‘eh? To help recruit 150 new police officers? What are they paying them? Well, it’s not for their pay obviously, right. That’s what I’m saying. I used to laugh when Canada would put up millions, like $12-15 million to give maybe 10 students window washers jobs for the summer. Well, where did the rest of the money go? I mean, this is what government does, ‘eh, their $73 million for 150 new police officers. That’s really what they need in these times, right?)

McGowan said the injection of new officers into the force would help keep the numbers up if police officers were forced to self-isolate because of COVID-19.

(A: Really?)

The fast-tracking of 135 existing recruits would allow new officers to go into support roles, freeing up more senior police members to go onto the “frontline”.

In addition to a total of 285 new police officers, the WA government is investing in forms of electronic surveillance to ensure people are not breaking quarantine rules or unlawfully trying to breach intra-state borders.

(A: You know, crossing over the state borders, inside Australia.)

Plate recognition cameras that are able to instantly read number plates will be installed at border checkpoints across the state.

The police force will also acquire 200 (A: …200, listen to this 200…) 200 GPS-enabled ankle bracelets to track people who may be breaching orders to quarantine or self-isolate at home.

(A: When you look at these 200 GPS, they're little things, you can look them up online, some of them you can get for as cheap as seven bucks! I'm not kidding you. But they're going to spend about 3 million, I think it's 3 million for these 200 GPS ankle bracelets.)

(A: You can't believe…. I'm living in, you see, I'm living in a time w… I mentioned earlier I was brought up in austerity in Britain, you see. I mean, REAL austerity too, it wasn't even middle-class, never mind austere times. So, my idea of money is, and what a normal income today is so incredibly low compared to most folk today that think nothing of a thousands of bucks here and thousands of bucks there. M-hm. So, I get kind of shocked, but you know.)

There are currently 30 regional road checkpoints across Western Australia.

(A: This is like, again, this is like the Stasi, isn't it? And checkpoints… just like the Soviet Union used to be too, they had checkpoints everywhere. In streets at times, and for no reasons. And the money, the millions they're spending just for make-work programs for the cops, 'eh?)

Since April 9, when the state was carved up into nine separate zones, (A: There ya go, that's what they do in totalitarian states, they put in the zones.) 106,029 people have pulled up at border checkpoints.

Of those, 104,716 have met the exemption criteria, but 1313 have been refused and ordered to turn around - a total of one per cent. (A: Whoa, that's really worth it, 'eh? Wow. Gee whiz, 'eh. There ya go. 1313 have been refused. Interesting.)

McGowan praised West Australians' "high level of compliance" (A: Again, they love that, under a wartime scenario you've got to comply and do what you're told.) but reminded people that "going for a drive down south or up to Lancelin" was no longer allowed over the Easter break. (A: It wasn't allowed.)

(A: You see how even the wording in it is, it's no longer allowed, over the Easter break, children.)

“Only essential travel is permitted, and travelling outside your regional area is not permitted,” he said.

“This Easter is going to be like none other, it will be very different.”

(A: No kidding. N-n-n. I tell ya.)

Then you get this one here. Let’s see…

How ‘war’ with coronavirus could lead to lasting government overreach

(A: Again, you're getting the message, getting the message, getting the message, 'eh?)

pri.org / 19 March 2020

Under war-like circumstances, history shows there is a very fine line between protecting citizens and eroding rights — and that line can be exploited or extended in times of great uncertainty.

(A: Well, that’s the whole plan, obviously, that’s why it’s all happening.)

So, say world leaders as countries struggle to cope with the coronavirus pandemic. The unprecedented outbreak has pushed governments to take extraordinary measures unheard of in peacetime — including closing borders and instituting nationwide lockdowns. People all over the globe are increasingly required to carry permits or face fines for leaving their homes.

(A: I-yi-yi. I tell ya.)

"This crisis could ultimately have an impact as serious as a world war in terms of the number of people affected, in terms of the impact on the economy and on people's way of life,” former US Ambassador to NATO Nicholas Burns told The World.

(A: That’s why he’s a bright guy, he says what’s going to happen. If you can’ go to work and stuff, you know it’s going to impact the economy and affect the way of life as well. That’s intelligence there.)

Governments have gotten the message.

French President Emmanuel Macron said Monday the invisible spread of the virus “requires a call to arms,” as he locked down the country.

Well, he had to do it because he was losing his country with all the riots before it all happened. Obviously. And this goes on and on.

Germany to introduce coronavirus 'immunity certificates' for recovered public

newsweek.com / 30 March 2020

(A: They're copying China, and from the WHO and the Bill Gates big plan, you see. I'd tell them to go and stuff it! Because you never had to get an immunity certificate for the flu and getting over that, did you? So, it would be the same for anything else. Once it starts, this is to be a whole agenda. It will go right into your ID card, and it will be imprinted, and Bill Gates wants it injected into you or tattooed on you. [Alan chuckles.]   Well, go and stuff it, Bill Gates! Yep.)

(A: So, they're... This is the researchers; the researchers are planning it. Well, I'd tell the researchers to go off and… Mind you, poor Germany doesn't have a democracy. They've been hammered for a long, long time, and they've got the ex-Stasi characters who've been trained by the Stasi running them for years. It says…)

The documents are part of a research project being conducted at the Helmholtz Centre for Infection Research in Braunschweig, which will conduct blood tests among the general public for antibodies produced against the virus.

The antibodies will show which of the participants have had the virus and have recovered, according to a report by the German magazine Der Spiegel. Around 100,000 people will be tested at a time, and certificates issued to those found positive.

If you start doing these things, they're going to make it mandatory. They always get the usual, you know, the curious cows and cattle to nosy up gradually, and when they get enough to do it, then the make things mandatory. Well, they all accepted it. That's how they do things, folks. And you always get the ones going out for it first, the same kind that bring apples for the teachers. You know what I mean, 'eh? You know those characters. They're snitchers, those characters. Well, it's the same thing again here. They'll say, well, look how good we are, we've done it, oh, and I'm clear now. Even though it can't actually prove that they've got antibodies for that exact virus, folks, y'know. But that doesn't matter. Facts don't really matter you see. N-n-n.

And then of course you'll have to have all the new vaccines that are coming along the pike, nothing to do with this one, but they've got on the list that they want to make money off of.

Mecklenburg County residents file hundreds of stay-at-home order complaints

fox46charlotte.com / 1 April 2020

MECKLENBURG COUNTY, N.C. — (A: That's in North Carolina.) Him New data from Mecklenburg County shows that some residents are growing tired of people violating the stay-at-home order and now they are taking matters into their own hands.

(A: Oh, Ohhh!)

The stay-at-home order was put in place last Thursday. You are still allowed to do essential activities like go grocery shopping, visit the doctor or go to a park to get exercise. You are required to stay six feet apart from other people.

(A: In Britain you can't even go to the park unless you keep moving, you see, you can't sit down for a break. It's not allowed.)

Since the order was put in place more than 600 complaints/violations been made through the CharMeck 311 center. County leaders stress you should not call 911 to file a complaint. (A: I guess the other folk are complaining about other folk, I suppose, that's what it is, 'eh? Hard to tell.)

It's just astonishing, it really is amazing. You understand, what are they expecting you to do? You're breathing, 'eh. If you're nowhere near anybody, what's their problem if you're sitting on a park bench? Or on the grass for that matter? What does it matter if there's no one near you? In fact, the cops have got a bit more of a problem. They're more in danger than anybody because they'll get closer than 6 feet when they come up to annoy you. They could be carrying it and passing it on. But you see, facts don't matter, and sense doesn't matter with this, you see.

It's the training of the public for things to come, that's what it's about.

You know, they are even charging people, in some places where the cops have noticed, that you're walking to a grocery store when they know that you've got a car, they want you to drive the car there. Huh? You see, you understand, they can interpret it in whatever way they want according to the county. And cops chomp at the bit for that kind of authority, y'know. Why are you driving your car? Well, I thought it would be safer that way and it wouldn't be… But here you are, he's got his face stuck inside the car asking you questions, 'eh? That's really healthy. But this is the sort of thing that's happening. So, you're damned if you do, you're damned if you don't.

It's a fear exercise to instill terror into the public. This is how it's done. This is how it's done, folks.

Aren't you fed up with these massive psychological tactics that are used on you? ...as though you're some animal in a maze? That's how they see you. And you go here, and you get shocked. And you go there and... It's like Skinner's box, y'know, shock, shock. And Pavlov, the great, the great scientist Pavlov that made a fortune and a great name for himself shocking and terrifying, and to the death, of animals. Psychopaths, psychopaths, psychopaths.

Anyway, this is where it's going. Mind you too, if everybody in the warm climates are driving, have you noticed their windows are down? And they're breathing! My God, they're breathing… and that's getting sucked away, and along the streets with their breath. My God, 'eh. You see, it's all, it's a complete farce, farcical nonsense.

Another one too is…

Queensland - Home Confinement, Movement and Gathering Direction

health.qld.gov.au / 2 April 2020

Direction from Chief Health Officer in accordance with emergency powers arising from the declared public health emergency.

(A: Oh, it's all authoritative stuff. And scary stuff. Direction home confinement movement and gathering part one, etc. etc. This is Queensland Australia, they have a preamble and everything about it, and the citation…)

Public Health Act 2005 (Queensland)

Citation

This Public Health Direction may be referred to as the Home Confinement Movement and Gathering Direction

(A: This is the stuff that petty little bureaucrats dream up, ‘eh, with your tax money. And restrictions and private residence directions, as well, oh my God here we go, oh yeah, a whole list of them here. This is the stuff that petty little bureaucrats dream up, ‘eh, with your tax money.)

(A: - restrictions and private residence directions… as well. Oh my God here we go. Oh yeah, a whole list of them here. Home confinement requirements in Queensland. They got a whole list...)

(A: -To obtain medical treatment maybe you can go. Or to engage in physical exercise, but if it's a short walk, 'eh? Maybe you can get out and shake a leg and run back in again.)

(A: -To perform work or volunteering, or to carry out conduct as essential business activity or undertaking, blah, blah, blah. The average citizen is supposed to read this rubbish, y'know, paragraph 9, subsection what?)

(A: -Education and early childhood workers may travel to and from their home center over the term break.)

(A: -To visit a terminally ill relative or to attend a funeral, or a wedding, subject to any applicable restrictions under other relevant… You understand, you've gotta have papers with you and stuff to prove where you're going. I-yi-yi.)

This is super Soviet. You see, this is a more refined Soviet that you're into now, folks. You're going into whole areas which the Soviet era didn't manage themselves.

And you're doing it all voluntarily.

Until it's mandatory.

Then it will be normal.

You see? Yep.

Another one too… You're supposed to stay, they want you, this is to go on forever until they find a vaccine a la Bill Gates, you see, y'know how Bill Gates is really saying that.

NSW coronavirus social-distancing to stay 'until vaccine is found', Premier Gladys Berejiklian says

abc.net.au / 6 April 2020

NSW Premier Gladys Berejiklian (A: Strange name. I can't really pronounce it properly, or I don't know how it's pronounced.) has warned the state's tough coronavirus social-distancing restrictions will stay "until a vaccine is found", (A: You understand, that's like forever, folks.) after Australia's death toll climbed to 46.

(A: 46! 46. There's more folk die of the common cold! 46. That's incredible. What's happening is incredible, folks.   But it's a big agenda, 'eh, big agenda.)

Key points:

There have been 21 coronavirus deaths (A: …21…)

2,686 cases in NSW

I guess that's the tests, y'know, which means nothing. We can't correlate the deaths to the cases here because most cases are not tested. They even say in other articles there could be 100 times, 100 people to everyone that is tested, that also has… Most folk don't get any symptoms at all, not even the slightest ones, you know. So, they are determined to make sure it's permanent, 'eh. And unfortunately, a lot of folk go along with these things, and that's what happens.

Cancer Surgeries and Organ Transplants Are Being Put Off for Coronavirus. Can They Wait?

(A: Well, what do you think, 'eh? Hm?)

propublica.org / 6 April 2020

So, they're talking about cancer patients and they have stories here about certain people who can't get treatment, and surgeons that can't even treat them. There's breast cancers that are malignant and all the rest of it and every day counts actually when cells start spreading and yada, yada, ya. But there ya go, all hospitals are on the same…

I'll put up the link to a clip in Bristol in England where a guy and a couple of people from his family drive into hospital car park. They go into the underground part and the whole thing, and they drive past admissions an emergency and so on, and everything is empty. There's nothing happening. The only people they see are a couple of unemployed folk dressed in their gowns and that who will do any testing for anybody that wants to do a drive through just out of curiosity. There's nothing happening. And yet, there's no, y'know, everything's closed down, the regular surgeries and stuff, in these hospitals are all closed.

Empty A+E Bristol 05.04.2020 11:30 - youtube.com / 5 April 2020

I hope you understand what's happening here. It's quite interesting what is happening. It really is interesting. That's the whole wait and see, it's interesting.

I really do want to say this. One of the biggest technocrats up there, Technocracy, and the Trilateral group of course, which is a specialized group that comes, they're generally picked from the Council on Foreign Relations in America. But the Trilateral group really appoints high level technocrats in banking and different areas and social engineering to different countries. They slip them into even running countries at times, like they did when they crashed Italy and Greece, they put two technocrats straight in there to run the country, like dictators basically.

But one of the top ones we've seen in that level of engineering wars and manipulating people and all the rest of it was Henry Kissinger. Of course, Henry, who really, if you really do well, you're given a lot of good life extension. You really are. Honestly. I mean, Henry Kissinger is not known to be a good jogger or exerciser but he's still going yet, y'know. And out he comes on que, and it's called...

Henry Kissinger - The Coronavirus Pandemic Will Forever Alter the World Order wsj.com / 3 April 2020

The U.S. must protect its citizens from disease while starting the urgent work of planning for a new epoch.

(A: So, there you go, here's it is from the horse's mouth…)

…the urgent work of planning for a new epoch.

By Henry A. Kissinger, April 3, 2020, 6:30pm.

The USNS Comfort Hospital ship...

(A: That's what they show you on the picture I guess, you know, I don't have the pictures here, March 30. And it says.)

The surreal atmosphere of the Covid-19 pandemic calls to mind how I felt as a young man in the 84th Infantry Division during the Battle of the Bulge. (A: I think he was talking about his tummy at the time, y'know. But you actually see him, he was a driver. I think he was even one of the drivers for Eisenhower. You can see pictures, old pictures of him, I'm sure that's him. He's definitely drove different generals around. It says…) Now, as in late 1944, there is a sense of inchoate danger, aimed not at any particular person, but striking randomly and with devastation. But there is an important difference between that faraway time and ours. American endurance then was fortified by an ultimate national purpose. Now, in a divided country, (A: …interesting, 'eh? You understand, these guys never, they've got their fingers in all the pies, always quietly too.)

American endurance then was fortified by an ultimate national purpose. (A: M-hm.) Now, in a divided country, efficient and farsighted government is necessary to overcome obstacles unprecedented in magnitude and global scope. Sustaining the public trust is crucial to social solidarity. Sustaining the public trust is crucial to social solidarity, to the relation of societies with each other, and to international peace and stability.

Nations cohere and flourish on the belief that their institutions can foresee calamity, arrest its impact and restore stability. When the Covid-19 pandemic is over, many countries' institutions will be perceived as having failed. Whether this judgment is objectively fair is irrelevant. The reality is the world will never be the same after the coronavirus. To argue now about the past only makes it harder to do what has to be done.

(A: Are you getting the picture, folks? Hm?)

The coronavirus has struck with unprecedented scale and ferocity. (A: Although personally I think it's more noise in reality in most countries, not them all, but in most countries.) Its spread is exponential: U.S. cases are doubling every fifth day. (A: Which is not quite true actually. Because now they're lumping in untested people, in the statistics, along with the statistics, for Covid, by the way. I've got the articles about it from the top saying that.) At this writing, there is no cure. Medical supplies are insufficient to cope with the widening waves of cases. Intensive-care units are on the verge, and beyond, of being overwhelmed. Testing is inadequate to the task of identifying the extent of infection, much less reversing its spread. A successful vaccine could be 12 to 18 months away.

(A: They never had one, remember, when it was any big, say, heavy flus in the past. We never had one given to us yet for the SARS, y'know. So, what ARE they going to pump into you, I wonder? And if it keeps jumping strains and strains and strains, then, into new strains, then you've got the same problem with all the flus. So, you know, it's just awfully… Well, no one really is taking this the way they're presenting it here.)

The U.S. administration has done a solid job in avoiding immediate catastrophe. The ultimate test will be whether the virus's spread can be arrested and then reversed in a manner and at a scale that maintains public confidence in Americans' ability to govern themselves.

(A: Do you understand what he just said there?)

…and at a scale that maintains public confidence in Americans' ability to govern themselves.

(A: Are you getting the picture here? You see, he doesn't believe, he's never believed you had the right to govern yourselves, or the ability to govern yourselves.)

The crisis effort, however vast and necessary, must not crowd out the urgent task of launching a parallel enterprise for the transition to the post-coronavirus order.

Leaders are dealing with the crisis on a largely national basis, but the virus's society-dissolving effects do not recognize borders. While the assault on human health will—hopefully—be temporary, the political and economic upheaval it has unleashed could last for generations.

…the political and economic upheaval it has unleashed could last for generations.

(A: You're getting austerity, folks, you're getting the idea of austerity.)

No country, not even the U.S., can in a purely national effort overcome the virus. (A: Isn't that amazing, 'eh?) Addressing the necessities of the moment must ultimately be coupled with a global collaborative vision and program. (A: Global.) If we cannot do both in tandem, we will face the worst of each.

Drawing lessons from the development of the Marshall Plan and the Manhattan Project, the U.S. is obliged to undertake a major effort in three domains. First, shore up global resilience to infectious disease.   (A: You see, they're not saying this one, they're saying this means ALL diseases, 'eh, infectious disease.) Triumphs of medical science like the polio vaccine (A: Oh, here we go.) and the eradication of smallpox, or the emerging statistical-technical marvel of medical diagnosis through artificial intelligence (A: That's really good, 'eh, the picture things like in Idiocracy.), have lulled us into a dangerous complacency. We need to develop new techniques and technologies for infection control and commensurate vaccines across large populations. Cities, states and regions must consistently prepare to protect their people from pandemics through stockpiling, cooperative planning and exploration at the frontiers of science.

(A: So, he's all totally on board with his pal Bill Gates and all that, y'know. They're all on board because they're all in the same club, you see, you know, the real managers of society. Unelected.)

Second, strive to heal the wounds to the world economy. Global leaders have learned important lessons from the 2008 financial crisis. The current economic crisis is more complex: The contraction unleashed by the coronavirus is, in its speed and global scale, unlike anything ever known in history. And necessary public-health measures such as social distancing and closing schools and businesses are contributing to the economic pain. Programs should also seek to ameliorate the effects of impending chaos on the world's most vulnerable populations.

Third, safeguard the principles of the liberal world order.   (A: What a joke. What does this man know about liberal world order!) The founding legend of modern government is a walled city protected by powerful rulers, sometimes despotic, other times benevolent, yet always strong enough to protect the people from an external enemy. Enlightenment thinkers reframed this concept, arguing that the purpose of the legitimate state is to provide for the fundamental needs of the people: security, order, economic well-being, and justice. Individuals cannot secure these things on their own. The pandemic has prompted an anachronism, a revival of the walled city in an age when prosperity depends on global trade and movement of people.

The world's democracies need to defend and sustain their Enlightenment values. A global retreat from balancing power with legitimacy will cause the social contract to disintegrate both domestically and internationally. Yet this millennial issue of legitimacy and power cannot be settled simultaneously with the effort to overcome the Covid-19 plague. Restraint is necessary on all sides—in both domestic politics and international diplomacy. Priorities must be established.

(A: Then he goes back into the Battle of the Bulge…)

We went on from the Battle of the Bulge into a world of growing prosperity…

Well, we won't see that again because we're supposed to be postindustrial. Remember too, Maurice Strong with his, and the Club of Rome too, the same agenda actually, with sustainability, where they went into the deindustrialization of everything, of the whole West in fact, is what they wanted.

But there's Henry, here's Henry. I'd like to hear him saying it himself, y'know. You used to strain your ears. When I was a child, he used to, you'd also have the presidents there, but he was always speaking on their behalf, you see, he was really running the country. He'd come on, and in Britain, he'd come on there too when the Vietnam War was on and things like that. They'd say, well Mr. Kissinger, what is your predictions of the future outcome of this war and the impact on America for the future?

And he would sit there, and everybody would just strain their ears and he would say, wu wugu wa wo wanno boh bah an de oh ba jur a bu. And no one had an idea of what he was saying. So, they always had somebody afterwards to tell you after he was off the air what he'd actually said. Wu ju but n but n jut and buut and buut. And that's all it was, y'know, it was astonishing. It was like a famous, it was a comedy act but a famous man at the same time, it was just… Who knows if he actually said what the woman said afterwards, or the guys said? Who knows if that's really what he said at all? Maybe he was just saying ohm bu n but oo butn but. [Alan laughing.] Who knows? [Alan laughing.] I mean, that's the characters they give you.

It's like Brzezinski, and I put the link up years ago from a talk he gave. I mean, he literally went over to Afghanistan when the Russians were going in there and the whole thing. You hear him saying to the tribesmen, he says, we are creating a holy jihad! And he's got his fist up there in the revolutionary pose in the whole thing, 'eh. These guys were part of the same teams, y'know, the same club changing the world. You know, for the greater good, you understand. And somehow a lot of pennies seem to fall in their own pockets in the meantime, in the process. But that's just how it goes.

But it's quite a little interesting article that one. And let's see now, I might also put up one by Rockefeller, you know, their groups big plan 2010, their big 2010 pandemic control and their big exercise as well.

Rockefeller Foundation Paper Published in 2010 Predicted How a Pandemic Can be Used as an Excuse to Establish Global Authoritarian Power - needtoknow.news / 16 March 2020

Rockefeller Foundation - Scenarios for the Future of Technology and International Development – pdf - ia802609.us.archive.org / May 2010

Sweden just saw 77 new deaths, hardly much at all there. They haven’t shut anything down so far as far as I know. It will be interesting to see where that one goes.

Sweden sees just 77 new deaths from coronavirus and number of new infections drops by a quarter to just 544 as nation continues to resist lockdown - dailymail.co.uk / 10 April 2020

And also, I want to put up the modeling, as I say, Delingpole in Britain goes on about…

Delingpole: ‘Trust the Experts on Coronavirus’. Sure. Which Experts?

breitbart.com / 9 April 2020

Britain could suffer more than 60,000 coronavirus death by July, warns the Daily Mail.

But there’s a massive tell in the first sentence of the report: “…leading scientists say.”

(A: You see, they don’t tell you who. It’s either experts or scientists, that’s all they need to say now, you see. They can make it up as they go along.)

And there’s an even bigger warning in the second paragraph:

“Modelling by researchers (A: …researchers and modeling, the computers…) at the University of Washington predicted 151,680 people would succumb to the virus across the continent.”

Well maybe they will, maybe they won’t. No offence to the University of Washington but when I read the phrase “modelling by researchers” I know we are operating in the realms of purest fantasy.

That’s because I’m a climate sceptic and I’ve seen it all before.

…all the stuff they put out with the climate, it’s all done with the same guys, and come up with scary scenarios, isn’t that amazing, ‘eh. Oh, my God, we’re all going to die. That’s how it’s done, for those who don’t know.

I’ll put some links up to… You understand, another thing I realized, and it hit me the other day when I woke up and I took a breath, I went, wwwwwwwwwwwwooooooooo. You realize you’re still alive, you see, and you say, my God I’m alive. And it hits you, like I said earlier, most folk never think they’re going to die. They don’t think they’re going to die. You know that. If you dwelled on it, you really would be, oh my God, I’m depressed. And you say why? I’m going to die. When? I don’t know.

But that’s how we are, it’s a kind of a safeguard, it’s a mechanism that makes us just push ahead, you see. But because of that, you see, and even though we’ve had flu deaths in the 50,000s, 60,000s, 70,000s, sometimes more, in previous flus that are pretty common, very common, and annually and all that, and there’s never a big fuss about it. Except for the poor souls that die and the relatives grieving and the whole thing. That’s… It’s never mentioned generally. And if it’s mentioned, it’s meant just to terrify the public to get more authority over you for some reason or another.

But anyway, as I say, when I woke up with that big gasp, you know, you inhale the air and whhoooooooooooohhhhhhhhaaaaaaaa, y’know, I’m alive, it hits you, you see, that we’d all forgotten, we all forgotten until this pandemic started that we die. Have you realized that? Here we are going on, along with our little lives, and then suddenly, we’re all going to die, suddenly we’re all going to die. And the media have, boom, boom, boom, boom, y’know, scary stuff, scary scenarios.

And they showed you all these graphs that come out of these computer models too, and even the premier of Ontario said he wasn’t going to use it, the one, the firm that he was using the graph on because it conflicted with the other politicians. They are all different stories, with the statistics. Because they all use different types of gathering the information. Some of them lump pneumonia cases in with it. Some lump regular flu cases in with it. If they die with similar things, you know, lower respiratory problems, they all lump it in as coronavirus and yada, yada, ya. They did that with the H1N1, I remember doing the stories at the time when they were told by the authorities in Canada just to do that because they couldn't keep up with testing.

Déjà Vu: Why the WHO Faked the H1N1 Swine Flu Pandemic in 2009 - globalresearch.ca / 5 Feb 2010

So, they're all fudged, you see. Mightily so actually. That's how bad it's become. So, I'll put up some of these, just to remind you, that death wasn't, is not a novel thing, regardless of the coronavirus being novel, this particular one.

Deaths: Leading Causes for 2017 - cdc.gov / 24 June 2019 – pdf

(A: The national vital statistics report. This is from the CDC. It gives you annual deaths inside America as an example. It's got a whole list of what folk die out. And it's really scary. Yep. Do you know that roughly, like 2017, 'eh, all causes of death? Because you never think about it, 'eh. Because you hope you'll never get any of them.)

(A: All causes of death, 2,813,503 people died. D'you realize that's what happened, whoof, in one year? Then it's got all the different ones, diseases of the heart…)

All causes . . . 2,813,503

1 Diseases of heart . . . 647,457

2 Malignant neoplasms . . . 599,108

3 Accidents . . . 169,936

4 Chronic lower respiratory diseases . . . 160,201

(A: ...which is what we're talking about here. I mean, even with that in 2017, 160,201 died. Yep. M-hm. And then...)

5 Cerebrovascular diseases . . . 146,383

(A: They're getting, climbing too with the cell phones, I'm sure a lot of them will have tumors and so on. Alzheimer's is up there too; it kills a lot of folk.)

6 Alzheimer disease . . . 121,404

7 Diabetes mellitus (A: ...of course....) . . . 83,564

(A: Then again, you've got a separate one for…)

8 Influenza and pneumonia . . . (A: ...another...) 55,672

(A: Now, they're getting lumped in now a lot of them with the coronaviruses and so on. It depends on which kind of study you're looking at. It goes down the whole list of deaths that are recorded in the US by the CDC. Again, you have their lovely graphs and all that, and we like pretty pictures, don't we?)

But yeah, when you realize that folk die, every year folk die, it really does terrify you.
N-n-n. So, when you do wake up and you hear, you have that gasp in the morning, hhhwwwoooooooaaaooooo, you should be grateful, you see, it's reminding you, life certainly is precious, especially when it's yours.

United States Life Tables, 2017 - cdc.gov / 24 June 2019 – pdf

CV: CDC Issues New Guidelines To Doctors On How To Fill Out Death Certificate ... Fraudulently - yotube.com / 9 April 2020

I'll put up another one too, I want to talk about...

Washington State Coronavirus Field Hospital Will Be Dismantled Without Treating a Single Patient

thegatewaypundit.com / 10 April 2020

(A: I mentioned before about how they're, the big, big show from the movies, 'eh, oh God, we're all going to end up in that hospital and get carried out of the other end of it.)

Washington State Coronavirus Field Hospital Will Be Dismantled Without Treating a Single Patient

(A: But yet it terrified a lot of folk into the grave, though, when you saw that, my God. As I say, we've all seen the movies, we all know what to expect, though, don't we? Yep.)

But the field hospital never saw a single patient to treat.

And on Good Friday the entire field hospital will be dismantled.

The massive army field hospital that hundreds of troops built inside a Seattle convention center last week…

(A: But as I say, nothing happened so they're all going home.)

Nearly 300 soldiers from Fort Carson, Colo., and Joint Base Lewis-McChord (JBLM) near Tacoma, Wash., built the makeshift facility inside CenturyLink Field Event Center.

"We requested this resource before our physical distancing strategies were fully implemented and we had considerable concerns that our hospitals would be overloaded with Covid-19 cases," Inslee said in a press release.

Well, nothing happened. And that's the end of that one, you see. Yep. Quite something, 'eh? Quite something. And then we go into, let me see, let me see, let me see...

Emergence from emergency: The case for a holistic economic recovery plan

clubofrome.org / 24 March 2020

(A: They're all in on the act together at the same time, all these different organizations are all part of the same club actually, as I've said before. It's the Club of Rome.)

Climate change, biodiversity loss and deforestation are contributing drivers behind pandemics. Like COVID-19, these cross-cutting challenges do not observe national borders and can be managed only through collective action, (A: Right, the ‘collective’, you always see ‘collective’ everywhere now, ‘eh? ‘collective’…. ‘collective societies’, ‘eh?) write Sandrine Dixson-Declève and Johan Rockström.

Sandrine Dixson-Declève

(A: I’ll put the link for her up, you’ll hear her talking. Oh, she’s in glee when she’s talking about this.)

is co-president of The Club of Rome and co-founder of The Planetary Emergency Partnership.

(A: It sounds very official, but you didn’t vote for that either, did you?)

COVID-19 is infecting millions of people around the world, claiming thousands of lives, with numbers likely to rise exponentially in the coming weeks. The virus is also causing massive disruptions in the global economy and financial markets, amplified by a trade war on oil, which is already starting to cause economic hardship for people around the globe.

While we fully commend the European Institutions, ECB, EIB (A: European Central Bank, European Investment Bank) and member states for their swift efforts to confront the immediate threat of the virus (A: Can you imagine government being efficient at confronting anything, ‘eh? Really, hm? Except lockdowns and stuff, that's all they can really do, just the old strong-arm stuff.) and direct well-needed capital (A: …money, it’s always money, ‘eh …) to economic recovery, we call on EU heads of state to ensure that recovery plans do not undermine climate neutrality pathways and European Green deal objectives due to clear feedback loops that will impact future public health.

(A: You see, it’s all the same agenda, folks.)

It is important to acknowledge that the planet is facing a deeper and longer-term crisis, rooted in a number of interconnected global challenges.

Recent research on the ecology of diseases suggests (A: GIVE us all this stuff, lay it out to us, and it doesn't do it, you see.) that climate change, biodiversity loss and deforestation are contributing drivers behind pandemics, interacting with high levels of global travel, trade and high-density living.

Outbreaks of animal-borne and other infectious diseases such as Ebola, SARS, bird flu and now COVID-19, caused by a novel coronavirus, are on the rise and this is only the tip of the iceberg.

(A: If it's on the tip of the iceberg, it will get frozen and it would go into stasis for a century or two, so why don't we just create more ice?)

Like COVID-19, climate change, biodiversity loss, and financial collapse (A: …and she's smiling the whole time she's talking…) do not observe national or even physical borders. These problems can be managed only through collective (A: …that word again, collective action…) action that starts long before they become full-blown crises.

They must be acted upon not as singular threats but as a potential series of shocks and long-term risks to human health and livelihoods, economic prosperity and planetary stability as targeted by the World Economic Forum this year.

(A: You see how they're all just partners in the same big club, 'eh. 'Eh? The Club of Rome, the ones who came up with the idea, because they were tasked with finding something to make us all terrified and bring us all together, a big crisis. And they actually said it, y'know, I've read that article so many times. We looked at all the different things that we could terrify the public with and what would be more plausible, and they said, we came up with, we hit on the idea that famine, plagued, (A: ...plague and famine...) and drought and so on would fit the bill, that man was the enemy of the planet, so man was the problem, that would fit the bill. That's what they hit upon. And that's what they stuck with ever since. The Club of Rome. Now she's got a plague. Now will come famine and all the rest of it, you see. Lots of money. And...)

Green Deal should be Europe's new Marshall Plan

There ya go, the whole agenda for sustainability, sustainable development goals, and don't think you're going to have prosperity, folks, because they want you in austerity and they are quite open about it. [Alan chuckles.]   But mind you, if they can make you believe certain things are the opposite of what they actually are, they can make you believe you're actually doing really well when you're living with rags on you, and it's called wellness, how do you feel about it? I don't feel too bad at all actually.

There ya go. There ya go, folks, 'eh. M-m-m. That's how it's done. So, I’ll put that one up, it’s a little interview with Declève talking about it.

Club of Rome Co-President, Sandrine Dixson-Declève, speaking at the Global Ecovillage Network's Communities of the Future Online Summit 2020 - youtube.com / 27 March 2020

And A Green Reboot after the pandemic, and holistic economic recovery plan. Isn’t that just wonderful? It sounds so quaint and lovely. It’s for the good of us all, y’know. Unless you’ve got allergies, green tends to get you then. M-hm.

A Green Reboot After the Pandemic - Club of Rome - clubofrome.org / 24 March 2020

As I say I’ll put up the other links too for the woman who was arrested for being on a park bench. She should have been up walking, you see, her short walk instead of just sitting that bench there, halfway to the store for goodness’ sake!

Arrested for being sat on a park bench! On my own! - youtube.com / 6 April 2020

Yep. In Canada, in Canada right, guess what? Well, it’s a surprise, the doctors are still waiting for the big surge of Covid 19 patients.

"That is a surprise": Doctors still waiting for feared surge of COVID-19 patients in Canadian ICUs

nationalpost.com / 11 April 2020

Doctors, nurses and other staff who run the nation’s intensive-care units have feared for their own safety, too, amid shortages of protective equipment

They have been bracing for the worst, a deluge of desperately sick COVID-19 patients who overwhelm resources and lead to (A: …desperate choices over how to ration care…) chilling decisions over who gets life-saving care.

Doctors, nurses and other staff who run the nation’s intensive-care units have feared for their own safety, too, amid shortages of protective equipment.

But, perhaps surprisingly, some critical-care physicians in the hardest-hit provinces say they have yet to face that feared surge of coronavirus sufferers.

So far, at least, there is no flood, and plenty of available ICU beds.

The latest report from Ontario's critical-care system on Friday showed just two additional coronavirus patients admitted to an ICU anywhere in the province the day before, despite having to treat over 530 confirmed or possible (A: ...or possible, you see, here you go, confirmed or possible...) Covid 19 people.

In Ontario, almost 78 per cent of the province’s expanded intensive care capacity remained free.

Quebec has seen a modest eight to 10 COVID-19 admissions a day to the ICU recently, and none at all from April 7 to April 8.

(A: So, change their schedules, it says…)

We changed all our schedules, our ICU schedules three weeks ago, to be on call.

(A: ...and they're just waiting and waiting and waiting. Oh well.)

There ya go, 'eh. It didn't happen.

ICU admissions are now LOWER than before the virus crisis began - dailymail.co.uk / 10 April 2020

Now, what else have I got? Oh yeah... Dr Fauci, Fauci…, here we go, and I’ve got the article here where he actually said that, he said that it might just be another flu, like another flu. Before he got on TV and said millions could die.

Dr. Fauci Says US COVID-19 US Deaths Could Be As Low As 60K After Warning "Millions Could Die" - zerohedge.com / 9 April 2020

…MILLIONS… That's right. Now it's down to thousands, now it's down to maybe even below flu levels now, I think. And it doesn't say that it's not a shame for the folk who died, absolutely. Absolutely. Yeah. It's definitely an oddball one, there's no doubt about it. And the age group that it's hitting. But again too, we've had flus in the past, and I've got articles here in the past few years, that come on similarly and hit very quickly and can kill rather quickly too with lower respiratory infections as well. This oddball disease is going around, two of them weren't named in fact, in Canada and the States just a couple of years ago, going out and they did notice it and record it. But there ya go.

Fake Corona data in a fear campaign

globalresearch.ca

Don't be misled by the fear campaign.

Scientific assessment of the health impacts of Covid 19 have been withheld and they do not make the headlines.

They go into different ways of testing, etc., how they're padding statistics.

False negative coronavirus tests could be due to how healthcare workers are collecting samples, as the virus may be in a cavity swabs cannot reach - dailymail.co.uk / 8 April 2020

Oh! By the way, I'll put another link up as well. There's a doctor talking about the fact they're getting paid more, they're getting paid more to diagnose the patient as having Covid in the States, A LOT more. The hospitals are getting about three times as much for the patient if they can bring them in than for a normal patient. Money, money, money, folks, you wouldn't believe it.

Minnesota Senator Dr. Scott Jensen: Hospitals Get Paid More to List Patients as COVID-19 and Three Times as Much if the Patient Goes on Ventilator - thespectator.info / 9 April 2020

It's just incredible. It really is incredible. Money is behind so much of everything in our reality. We live in a very corrupt time. A very incredibly corrupt time. Corruption seems to be the norm, really. Here's one here on, where governments were looking for volunteers to go to New York. Amid the big chaos, oh my God, New York is going to get hit harder than anybody else and can we get volunteers and staff and so on. Some volunteers came from Atlanta hospitals to New York, they were going to work for free, right. They were hospital staff and people really wanted to help there. So, it says…

Just 8% of the 90,000 medical workers from across the US who volunteered to come to New York to help fight coronavirus have been assigned a job dailymail.co.uk / 9 April 2020

Bevin Strickland, a former pediatric ICU nurse form North Carolina, offered a similar account to The Times, describing her efforts to sign up as an unpaid volunteer online and via email, but getting no response from anyone.

She ultimately got assigned to Mount Sinai Queens, but only after contacting the hospital directly and being instructed…

(A: Now, here she is volunteering, and here’s what’s happening to these volunteers, right.)

…being instructed to go through a private recruiting agency handling temporary hires.

(A: Now you see, it’s all people who know… you understand, for the hospital staff somebody’s got a big business here for the temporary agencies that charge big bucks and stuff. Everything’s corrupt. Everything is corrupt, folks. So, here’s folk who are going to volunteer for nothing, who have to go through, are directed to an agency, right, a private recruiting agency handling temporary hires. So, she’s going to work for nothing…)

Strickland was given a salary (A: …listen to this…) of $3,800 a week (A: …which is $3800…) for three 12-hour shifts, (A: …right…) even though she said her plan was to do the work for free.

'I don’t feel like I should be walking out of this scenario with any money,' she told The Times. 'It feels wrong.'

(A: Another one too…)

Registered Nurse Elizabeth Schafer, 36, of South St. Paul, Minnesota, left her home to volunteer in New York where she says the situation inside the hospital is grim

(A: ...in the one that she was in she tells the story where it's really tough and the whole bit. But they're getting so many volunteers and only, only a tiny fraction have actually been used. Only a tiny fraction of them have got any work to do. It says here that...)

Some 90,000 medics have signed up to volunteer at New York hospitals overflowing with coronavirus patients, but more than 90 per cent of them were still waiting to be called up

Well, how bad is it? You see what I'm saying here? Things don't quite tally up, do they? They don't tally up. I'll also put an article up about China. You see, China is a model state for the world, for those who never quite caught on to it. I used to give the talks years ago from the big boys themselves, always praising China as the model state, we've all to adopt and copy basically. So, here's Bill Gates pushing the very same systems they're using in China. And Germany is using them now, y’know.

China is reportedly making people download an Alibaba-backed app that decides whether they'll be quarantined for coronavirus

businessinsider.com / 2 March 2020

Amid the coronavirus outbreak, Chinese citizens are reportedly being required to use a smartphone app that tells them whether they should carry on as usual — or report to a medical facility to be quarantined.

The service, called Health Code, (A: …one of them that they're using, there's other ones they're using in China too, some people sent me articles about them from China.) is being run by the Chinese government using a platform owned by Ant Financial, sister company to the $500 billion-dollar e-commerce giant Alibaba, (A: ...that run some of these apps.) according to The New York Times. People can sign up through the Alipay wallet app. Tencent, the Chinese tech giant that owns WeChat, has also reportedly partnered with the government to host a similar health code system on its app.

(A: So, you have to show this wherever you go now, though. It's color-coded on your phone.)

People using the health code are assigned a QR code along with a color ranking — green means the user is free to travel, while yellow or red means they must be quarantined. The code is based in part on people's answers to an in-app questionnaire, but little else is known about how people are classified, leading to confusion and fear among those who receive a red code, according to Reuters.

(A: If you get a red code your phone will automatically call the cops. Well, this is what they want to bring here, folks. There you go.)

Well, don't forget, you see, something you must always remember. China is still a communist country. And if you're going the same way as them, then, it's because your rulers have decided it's the most efficient way to rule and use you all and get what they want in the system they want to bring in in the future. That's why they're doing it all. I hope you understand all this. That we shouldn't be following China on anything right now. Even the ridiculousness of, yeah, their policy, they'll obey their leaders so quickly, in China, they're very uniform that way, very, very unique that way.

But no. We fought communism for a long time. Even though, and they should never have fought out in Vietnam, America, because the Communists were in America at the time. That's where they were, in the government and the State Department. That's a fact.

They never really left.

The US is getting used now as the big battering ram across the world to make everybody comply into a globalized system. And at the same time the leaders inside America are using the same system as China. Interesting, isn't it? The same people who signed you on and gave all your manufacturing to China. [Alan chuckles.] Hm?

And they want you to copy them now? Well, I don't think we were designed to be a collectivist little... little slaves, y'know, as communist China is. It wouldn't work here, not the same way. Maybe for some people today it would, I don't know, maybe look around you, y'know. But not for everybody. Definitely not. We can't go that way. That's disgusting in fact, the very thought of it. M-hm.

And also too, how doctors and so on are being warned not to ration the care, they've been going overboard and just writing folk off with their bioethics now, this new part that's been grafted onto healthcare, where they… Well, let's be practical about things, you know. It's all down to money and dollars and cents and don't spend money on this one here when that one, that person, they might only live another few years, where this one here could live a few more, etc. Or, who's going to miss that one? Or, this one is more important. That's more like it actually. That's how they really decide a lot of the stuff, for those who don't quite know that. It's disgusting, and we can't go that route.

As I say, it's maybe time to start looking around to countries that won't be utterly authoritarian permanently. Because that's what they want to do in North America, and across Europe and Australia and New Zealand. They're all under the same big club, by the way. It's nothing to do with what the system that you think you vote in is. It's completely way above that [Alan chuckles.] and they have the power, you see, and they really run the country, the countries, they really do. Yep.

So, I'll put these articles up for those that want to peruse them. I hope I haven't bored you all because there's a lot more I could have read tonight in fact to do with this and other things related to it. One too from the Greenpeace founder who has come out and said the global warming is a hoax, etc., how it was completely hijacked by the same group we're talking about now.

Greenpeace Founder: Global Warming Hoax Pushed by Corrupt Scientists 'Hooked on Government Grants' - breitbart.com / 7 March 2019

Another article, I've got to put this one in before I get off the air too.

Minnesota Senator Dr. Scott Jensen: Hospitals Get Paid More to List Patients as COVID-19 and Three Times as Much if the Patient Goes on Ventilator

thespectator.info / 9 April 2020

(A: I'm not kidding you here, folks.)

Last night Senator (A: ...and he's also a medical doctor...) Dr. Scott Jensen from Minnesota went on The Ingraham Angle (A: A show, I guess.) to discuss how the AMA is encouraging American doctors to overcount coronavirus deaths across the US.

This was after Dr. Scott Jensen, a Minnesota physician and Republican state senator, told a local station he received a 7-page document coaching him... (A: Now, he's a doctor getting sent this, right…)

...coaching him to fill out death certificates with a COVID-19 diagnosis without a lab test to confirm the patient actually had the virus.

Dr. Jensen also disclosed that hospitals are paid more if they list patients with a COVID-19 diagnosis.

(A: Money, money, money, 'eh, you see, if they put a diagnosis down, 'eh.)

And hospitals get paid THREE TIMES AS MUCH if the patient then goes on a ventilator.

You wonder what that push for ventilators is? 'Eh? Mmmm, okay. You hear him talking about it, I'll put the link up for those who want to listen to the show. He lays it out there. He's an intelligent man and he knows what he's talking about. It's quite something.

Another article too from Canada and another one from the States I think similar, where the ventilators are actually causing the hemorrhages in the lungs, a lot of them. Because the lungs, once they get inflamed with this disease, get filled with blood very easily. Which stretches the very thin, thin tissue of the alveolar tissue, little air sacs, even thinner, it makes them more fragile, you might say too, because they’re inflamed. And when you put it in a slightly higher pressure they can actually, and force it in, they can try to force the oxygen in to the lungs through all of this to open up the alveolar pathways basically with tiny little ducts in them, in the sacs. And they're causing hemorrhages.

Then they're finding that a lot of the patients end up with strokes, you see. Because they're getting clots end up in their, circling through their body and up into the heart and the brain. So it's... It's just astonishing. There are regimes for treating this that are not being used. I'm not talking about the ones you've heard. It's the ones which are standard, actually, in the hospitals to treat this kind of thing. To stop the massive attack on the lungs, you can pretty well stop it dead very quickly with a particular medication, as long as they're on antibiotics at the same time to stop bacteria from setting in. But yeah, it's not being done. It's just amazing, isn't it?

'Different than anything we've seen': ICU doctors question use of ventilators on some COVID-19 patients - nationalpost.com / 9 April 2020

Now just rather than bore you anymore I should just mention too that the last few nights I've gone down to about 10-15° on the Fahrenheit scale. Because of global warming, you know that 'eh? At least the snow has been melting gradually and it's getting quite, getting scarce now, which is good. I had some the other day mind you, but it didn't last that long.

I should just mention before I get off that I thank the people who keep in touch. Because I like to know what they're doing. If they're surviving. Including all the things that happen to people, because it's the little things in life that make us human, isn't it? We’re all making mistakes and doing things and things happen you understand, and how they're doing with their families and all that kind of thing. That's what life is about really, you see. Real life, that's what it's about. So, I thank them for getting in touch with me. And again, sending me occasional links and so on and stories that are happening in their own lives, it's interesting to know. Because that's what real stories are, people that are experiencing things. Like a person who went to Walmart and noticed the tape and everything, and I could kind of visualize it, what it's like. And they're told to stand here, and there's little crosses on the floor taped down, you can move... maybe...

By the way, Walmart apparently, at least in some places, has cordoned off the areas going into where the seeds are. For growing vegetables, y’know. Now, why would they do that, 'eh? Well, it's because you can't be self-sufficient. They want everybody locked down and dependent on their rationing system that's coming in. Obviously. Why else would you cordon off the seeds? If folk are to stay home, they can stay home and do a bit of gardening, for goodness sakes, really. But then they might have their own food then, 'eh?

Independence is antagonistic to totalitarianism, you know.

Remember too, you can help me tick along here by donating to me @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. List all the other sites I have that's listed on that one site, that's all my official sites. You'll find out how to use PayPal or whatever or cash or check, to send cash my way and help me tick along. Because it does, as I say you've got a bunch of websites there and they're heavily used, believe it or not. They're really heavily used by, I hear people on the big talk, [Alan chuckles.] on the big so-called talk shows, and literally using my stuff verbatim, y'know, every week from my archives. It's just interesting to see that. And then telling you that you hear it there first from their show. [Alan laughing.] But again, it's quite a joke.

That's how life is, isn't it? There's no honor in the so-called what used to be alternative media, they are just political movements. You'd be surprised how much out there is actually managed by forces you have no idea about, folks. Honestly. As I say, nothing is allowed to come from the grassroots. If it is, y'know, you get bought off or excised out of it, it's simple as that.

So anyway, help me out and send a few bucks my way. Hopefully I can keep going here too and keep you informed about what's happening, where it's supposed to go and the characters that are all getting together to make sure it goes into their totalitarian world state. Then you know things make sense as they keep stretching it, oh it might be about another month or two, okay, it could be two, it might be six months lockdown. Okay. It could go into next year, y'know.

Because they're not going to waste this big opportunity, whether it's been made by them in the first place or not, it makes no difference. They're not going to waste that, believe you me.

So for myself, and I hope you're all doing well and getting through this one way or another, I really hope you are, I'm Alan Watt from Ontario Canada and it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Topics of show covered in following links:

Minnesota Senator Dr. Scott Jensen: Hospitals Get Paid More to List Patients as COVID-19 and Three Times as Much if the Patient Goes on Ventilator (alternate link provided)

Covid-19 — Navigating the Uncharted - Anthony S. Fauci, M.D.

Low As 60K After Warning &quot;Millions Could Die&quot;

False-positive PCR results linked to administration of seasonal influenza vaccine

&quot;That is a surprise&quot;: Doctors still waiting for feared surge of COVID-19 patients in Canadian ICUs

Emergence from emergency: The case for a holistic economic recovery plan

A Green Reboot After the Pandemic - Club of Rome

, speaking at the Global Ecovillage Network's Communities of the Future Online Summit 2020

Washington State Coronavirus Field Hospital Will Be Dismantled Without Treating a Single Patient

: ‘Trust the Experts on Coronavirus’. Sure. Which Experts?

Rockefeller Foundation Paper Published in 2010 Predicted How a Pandemic Can be Used as an Excuse to Establish Global Authoritarian Power

Rockefeller Foundation - Scenarios for the Future of Technology and International Development

Just 8% of the 90,000 medical workers from across the US who volunteered to come to New York to help fight coronavirus have been assigned a job

Sweden sees just 77 new deaths from coronavirus and number of new infections drops by a quarter to just 544 as nation continues to resist lockdown

ICU admissions are now LOWER than before the virus crisis began

China is reportedly making people download an Alibaba-backed app that decides whether they'll be quarantined for coronavirus

Coronavirus WA: New $91m policing package will include electronic surveillance Arrested for being sat on a park bench! On my own!

Change to death certificates could boost COVID-19 counts

Fear of COVID 19: Overcoming the Hype (alternate link provided)

No Pre-Existing Conditions Have Died From the Coronavirus or 0.9%

Déjà Vu: Why the WHO Faked the H1N1 Swine Flu Pandemic in 2009

A fiasco in the making? As the coronavirus pandemic takes hold, we are making decisions without reliable data

'Different than anything we've seen': ICU doctors question use of ventilators on some COVID-19 patients

RCMP to enforce Quarantine Act, while Trudeau says no plan to invoke Emergencies Act

Coronavirus – a small victory: NHS hospitals and GPs are warned against blanket ‘Do Not Revive’ policies

Greenpeace Founder: Global Warming Hoax Pushed by Corrupt Scientists ‘Hooked on Government Grants’

Bill Gates: How the coronavirus pandemic can help the world solve climate change

Government and opposition parties pass $73-billion wage subsidy program

Canada in it ‘for the long haul’ with COVID-19, deputy health officer says

False negative coronavirus tests could be due to how healthcare workers are collecting samples, as the virus may be in a cavity swabs cannot reach

With economic crisis looming EU overlords legalize food made from worms and baby crickets. Are they going to serve that in Brussels?

Cancer Surgeries and Organ Transplants Are Being Put Off for Coronavirus. Can They Wait?

says

Queensland - Home Confinement, Movement and Gathering Direction

Mecklenburg County residents file hundreds of stay-at-home order complaints

Germany to introduce coronavirus 'immunity certificates' for recovered public

How ‘war’ with coronavirus could lead to lasting government overreach

Spain is moving to permanently establish universal basic income in the wake of the coronavirus pandemic

Why it's no longer acceptable to pay with cash: Aussies are urged to ditch disease-spreading notes - as experts admit coronavirus could kill physical money for good

Apr 19, 2020 "Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt (Blurb, i.e. Educational Talk): " Behold the Devil's Crossroads Juncion, Where Scientists Meet Gain of Function

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through the Matrix on April 19, 2020. I hope you're all still hanging in there because, I think you've all realized [Alan chuckles.] this is the big one, 'eh, this is the real thing… as we get completely retrained like animals in a zoo by our betters, you know, those that have just appointed themselves Masters of the universe, and certainly Masters over us, without being elected most of them actually.

The politicians are really fronts. The ones at the top of politics really know that, they're quite aware of that. There's much bigger institutions above them. They just seem to gradually solidify over time, like, the World Economic Forum and big clubs, like the Bilderberg Group as well and many, many others, the G8, the G20, and G-wiz. There's lots of them out there and strangely enough you don't find it in any country's laws of governance or anything to do with them. They just appear there and become official… without anything getting put to a vote to any of the people who think they're actually living in a democracy.

It's quite a strange system, isn't it, where people can be so blindly in belief. They believe the propaganda they're given so easily and don't question it. It's kind of like if you had, which is happening now of course, it's very akin to the idea of how do you catch and capture wild boars, wild pigs, how do you do it? The old story is actually… [Alan chuckles.] it actually works in fact apparently.

A guy said, I'll do it, this is in a different country, it was Hungry or somewhere. He says, I'll get rid of these things for you, I'll catch them. He just drove up to where these things would gather, y'know, he would follow them and find out where they are. Y'know, don't go right up to them, just park off so they can see you in the distance, and don't go towards them. Get used to you, do that for a few days. Wherever they happen to be, just drive up, keep yourself within visual contact but well away from them, and they get used to seeing you. Then you simply start dropping off some food from your truck every so often, then drive away and watch them. They'll come up to where the food was dropped once you've gone and eat the stuff. Most wild animals will do exactly the same thing, y'know, even squirrels do that kind of thing. They get used to you and used to you. Each time you get closer and closer, and eventually you put the food off in the truck, and you put a fence post in, just banging it a few times, not too heavy, not too noisy. Over time they get used to you putting more fence posts in, and you put the wire in eventually. Of course, you've corralled them eventually. That's what happens, it's quite easy.

So, in other words, one day you wake up and there's a wall around you and that's where we are today. It's been going on for a long time and you've been trained well in advance to accept when the wall appears around you that you will obey it and it's normal. You'll think it's quite normal, it just happened over time so it must be normal if it happened over a period of time, as opposed to suddenly, you see.

Even the little experiments that are going on now in SUDDEN dictats over to the public, and instant obedience, and in real time studies with all the big BITs, the behavioral insights teams and many, many more organizations that have been given access to the Internet from the beginning actually. They study us in real time now with chitchat and their Twitters and all the rest of it that people go through. Including their phone conversations and so on.

Nothing's ever been private. From the beginning it was a lie you'd have any kind of privacy, long before they even gave you the first computer. That's how you control the world, you don't give away anything to the public without knowing exactly what you're doing beforehand, and you're set to control ALL of it, absolutely all of it.

You can see today we're treated the same way. You don't find the police today in most countries, especially Europe, calling you sir. Y'know? Or whatever they're supposed to... Maybe they're scared to call you sir now in case they get sued, you don't know. But the thing is, the used to call you sir, or Madam or Ma'am. And of course, everything's offensive to everybody today apparently, so maybe they're unsure. So, it sounds rather nasty when they come up and just order you like, where are you going? Without saying who they are, excuse me I'm so and so, I'm police officer so-and-so. They just tell you what to, and they just immediately interrogate you. And that's become normal with this terror campaign on the public of Covid-19. And believe you me, it is a terror campaign, and it has been a terror campaign from the beginning.

That's another thing too, before I do forget it, there's way too many coincidences happening here of people [Alan chuckles.] definitely publishing, and big magazines and so on, stuff before this that this would come along the pike in at least 2019, and long before that too, and many, many other articles down through the years I've read on the air in fact when I was on the air, many articles to do with what was coming and what was supposed to come. Because I've read their articles. They publish them. Including, you know, right down to the chipping of people. This wasn't an imaginatory thing from me or anybody else, this was published.

In fact, they had lots of publications put out by DARPA itself to do with chipping people. It's always, it was always, it's always for your benefit. It's the same as imprisoning you today, it's for your benefit, to save everybody. Back then one of the first articles that DARPA published about the chipping was also to control your nervous system. Well, we could put this in a paraplegic, they're testing it out to see if you can use a computer eventually by just thought alone, you see. But of course, the chip had all the other data collection equipment inside of it and it was monitoring this whole, this guy, this poor guy’s complete pathways and neurons and thoughts and all the rest of it. They're trying to map the brain.

Of course, we also saw that happening with a big project when Obama was in. A department of government was set up to collect information, so they were going to map the entire human brain. It's awfully important to... You understand, you're awfully important to your masters. You're terribly important. Because you can be an awful problem for your masters, and if they can't understand you completely, that one unknown unknown, as Rumsfeld used to say... He says, there are known knowns, and unknown knowns, and know unknowns, and unknown unknowns.

In other words, they're trying to cover every possible scenario and every possible, possible imaginary event that could happen in a real-life situation. They had all these different plans and wargames, and God knows what else all worked out in advance and tried out, and tried out, and tried out, for things that had never happened, you see, so if anyone of those events did happen they'd have some way of reacting to it and still keeping control of the situation. That's what control freaks do. And the best control freaks really are successful psychopaths. They're up there managing you on behalf of the Masters above them. So, nothing new about that at all.

But as I said before, even the Masons got in on it with the Masoni-chip. That's what they call it themselves, they had the ads in the papers, newspapers about Masoni-chips. They even had little videos out for parents to get their children chipped and starting with their clothing. They wanted to go all the way eventually as you get used to it and the parents got used to it to eventually, embedding the chips, like the ones they put in pets. But I guess we are pets in a sense, y'know. The only difference is, you see, our owners don't love us. Someone who owns the pet generally loves the pet.

So, Masoni-chip, yeah, they had videos of them putting these little things in the coats and the clothing of the children. And to make the parents feel safer then if the child gets kidnapped by some pedophile ring, that's probably up there somewhere amongst the folk [Alan chuckles.] that are managing all this stuff, then maybe they could trace them. Maybe.

So, you can't dismiss this kind of thing getting promoted by little societies with secrets as they like to call themselves. And they certainly know when to shut their mouths, you see. That's awfully important across the board if you're running a system that tends to sometimes really stir up the public angst against them, and you've got people who are already trained to keep secrets, you see. Awfully important.

That's why all the high-ranking members of the military and right down to the middle levels too are encouraged to join Freemasonry. The same with the police too. Because the police will stand up for their brothers, they'll cover their brothers if they're in trouble. Even if the person is in the wrong, they've got to save them first. They are more important than telling the truth. That's the law, [Alan chuckles.] you save your brother at all costs. It's a great insurance policy, absolutely. That's why a lot of them join it in fact. Because you get a sense of safety in a situation, and situations which will happen as policeman and different kinds of awkward positions.

But when you get into the higher echelons of military, etc., of officer type ranks, like the Knights Templars, the real Knights Templars, the high-ranking bunch in London, weren't the riffraff at the bottom. It was the higher group above them that ran the Empire and had all the top bankers in it too and the top Governors, Lieutenant Governors and Governors Generals that were sent over to manage this Empire on behalf of the City of London. That's really what it was. Britain was a business based in London. The rest of the people were just part of the business and didn't know it. That's how things really work.

I used to give the talks years ago, and I ruffled a lot of feathers, believe you me, I wasn't supposed to go on at the time. I wasn't officially authorized to come out. I managed to get in by a backdoor in a sense, because I had a lot to say... and I got on eventually. I could go right into the occult without a problem because I had studied it really immensely. That kind of gave me an entry into the whole system. Now, as soon as I did that then everybody's after you to use you. Immediately. Y'know, they'll try and use you. I got offers from all the biggies at the time.

I always said from the beginning, I had to walk between the raindrops. Because I knew darn well, I'd read all the articles that were published, and declassified articles on the CIA's takeover and even promotion of a kind of Patriot Movement, a parallel type that would take over the original one, in America especially, and it was set up during the Cold War. There were articles even in the Toronto Star, which I read on the air in fact, [Alan chuckles.] which is amazing, and I got away with it, talking about the different organizations that were set up using radio, and it was generally shortwave radio, worldwide, to counter the communist propaganda, you see. That was the original story.

But don't forget, that if you're involved at all with the CIA, you'll never figure out what they're up to. It's nothing what you'd ever imagine they're up to. And people who are really true believers in the CIA get left holding the bag eventually and they're caught. Because their agenda is nothing to do with what Americans think is saving America. It's a completely global agenda, and vastly, vastly different in its allegiances than you'd ever imagine.

But anyway, they take over and run, try to run the culture of all countries. They also, if there's not a resistance to a system, they'll set up what appears to be an opposition to it and try to run both. That way a grassroots one won't emerge itself and do what has to be done and say the right things that have to be said and so on. That's how information is completely manipulated.

Eventually too, I know that one of the stations I was on was leaned on, actually a couple were leaned on heavily by authorities to get me off. They tried to initially shove me off into weekends and I wouldn't go for that either. I knew darn well that money obviously would be involved. Another one too outside North America completely, which I helped, they got on initially when they were starting up, I did a lot of talks to get them, to bring in an audience, which I did. Then one night I was supposed to go on and one of the fellows there said, I'm sorry, he says, we, they'd made a big deal with a certain person, that you all know, doing a series of DVDs, like films of them, big money, but part of the stipulation was, from this character, was that they wouldn't have me back on again. He was really almost broken up, but at the same time he took the cash obviously. That tells you a little bit about the person, which I won't name.

But that's how things really work in what you think is the alternative media. It's nothing what you generally think it is. Honestly, it really isn't. The patriot ones for the West, for the Americas, as I say, the CIA did staff them up. That's all declassified stuff. Long ago. It doesn't mean they're all the same today, but I'm sure there's a big, big hand still in there. The all-seeing eye doesn't like to close itself and go to sleep. Why would you give up another outlet to media that's been awfully successful in finding out what any, all the people who are [Alan chuckles.] y’know, in opposition to the system, find out who they all are and then guide them into circles back into politics. That's what they did very successfully mainly after 9/11, they started to go into, really, heavy to work.

Back in the 1990s there was so much information out there getting published by the authorities, and the establishments that were attached to the authorities. In other words, the outsourcing departments, the different authoritarian type groups and so on that would be managing us all. So many articles getting published by them themselves that people were getting a bit paranoid then. People, afterwards, they don't know this, [Alan chuckles.] they don't know how it was lulled down, lulled. It didn't go away, it got worse in fact, but they kept it quieter and quieter.

But they used to publish a lot of articles about where they were going to take the world. You had the speeches with George Bush Senior, the president who was also at the head of the CIA at one point, who gave his speech, his famous speech about the new world order, a new world order coming into view he said. Everybody's wondering what this... It was a disclosure speech. It was for the public and for a big audience. And none of the reporters really tried to decipher it for the public. It wasn't really meant for the public in a sense. It was an official declaration, so it was meant for them that way, because if you don't know what it is and you don't oppose it, then you've accepted it through your silence, that's how legalities work with these characters. But of course, he was talking about this whole globalist New World Order with America being the dominant force, for the American century. Then his son came out exactly 10 years later, to the date I think it was, with the same speech pretty well. Updated a little bit, but it was still a New World Order speech. This is published. They were talking about a new world order, you know, it wasn't just one day, oh the Cold War is maybe, may be finished now, now that the old Soviet Union has dissolved, supposedly. It wasn't that. It was literally about creating a world order.

Then of course you had the PNAC group, the Project for a New American Century, how they would dominate the world. Don't forget too, don't be fooled by titles like, y’know, America and the new American century. Until you realize that that which runs your country doesn't see you any differently than when they ruled London and used the whole of the British Empire as a battering ram [Alan laughing.] against everybody else. Because you need the bodies to fill the uniforms. And you need the big tax base, you see.

The goals that they have eventually are complete eugenics and everything else. They believe in evolution. They've always believed in evolution. No problem with that at all. That's the real belief they have. They have no, they really have no qualms about telling you that at times. Unless… Except after World War II when even Julian Huxley, a great big eugenicist who believed in population reduction and worked towards it and helped start Planned Parenthood and all that. Of course, they knew Bill Gates dad and all that too. It's just amazing, nothing goes away, the same clique, y'know. And they all have their same functions. They’re front people to an extent. They can be set up as geniuses even but they're not. We still get them today, these so-called titans that we're supposed to talk about all the time because the media tells you to talk about them. But in reality, they haven't really invented anything. They're just businessmen. Obviously, I don't care what they say, one person doesn't accumulate that kind of wealth by themselves. It doesn't happen. There's big money behind it. Big, big money.

It's like the CIA that set up after World War II, they set up real legitimate HUGE corporations, especially in the war industry and so on. Some of them are still in existence today as, and they produce real things and real goods, but they're owned by the CIA. And of course, they could put front people out there with the massive funding that they have, for other parts of the agenda too. That's really how it really does work, for those who think everything just happens by itself.

I've mentioned so many times, you cannot have the same things we we're talking about, talking about say 50 to 60, 70 or 100 years ago happening today, pretty well on queue, to do with this global order, this world order, you see, and if they can't get it one way, they'll do it another way. What you see are many of the same players, like Kissinger, the big technocrat talking about the divided world, they don't want it to be fragmented. Again, they want it to be a world order and if they can't it get with what's happening, well guess what, you'll get a crisis and then you're going to have it anyway.

You can't make this kind of stuff. If you mention the truth today, it's VERY evident, VERY evident, or if you're in a particular organization that opposes something, you're going to be hammered, completely hammered when what you're opposing is a part of their, what they call their necessity, the necessity of their agenda, and you're opposing it, so you're a problem. And you will be lambasted for it.

You're going to be literally, actually worse than that, it's out in the open now, even the practice [Event 201] with the virus pandemic that they were on about in 2019 with the Johns Hopkins group with the Bill and Melinda Gates foundation. They actually said, if you bothered to look at their own videos, on how they would handle people who opposed them. Right off, they start off with cautioning, maybe cautioning people to shut up, y'know, and they're talking about opposing parts of their agenda. It wasn't, you've got to understand what's happening, what it's really all about.

It's not just a virus here. It's a whole way of living and a complete change forever, a permanent change they're after here that they couldn't get through trying to train you into sustainability and so on. So, bingo, you get the very thing that Bill Gates talked about in the 90s as well, that a crisis might bring you to your knees until you accept these kind of things, he said in one magazine, you see.   And here we go with it all. The same characters, the Gates family, intergenerational. If old Rockefeller was on the go today, I mean, if they could extend his life another 40, 50 years, he'd be out there making the same speeches today as he had done for a 100 years pretty well. [Alan chuckles.] So, it's always the same people, intergenerational families.

They grafted on more that have proven their worth, as they call them, their ‘worthies’, that's one of their terms that they use. They use them too. They'll finance them to be prominent people and give them made-up backgrounds of how much of a genius... So that you'll follow the geniuses, you see, and you take their word that they are geniuses. That's how it is, it's very simple, the star making machinery.

Anyway, back in the 90s it was very evident big things were happening inside America. Because we had the publications, had come out before that from the Council on Foreign Relations and many other articles from the CFR as well and their Foreign Affairs magazine, talking about the future and how they were changing it all to bring it, and you're going to merge with China. That was a big thing too, China's to be the model state for the entire planet, and they would build it up through free trade.

They did, they used, they gave all your factories, we financed all the factories, the big corporations, literally financed them completely to uproot their factories and move them all to China. We paid for that through the agreements, with your own politicians in every country, and we paid for it all, to lose all your jobs and your manufacturing so that they could get cheaper labor in China, and build China up at the same time as a big partner with the 'most favored nation trading status'. That's what it's called in free trade and the GATT treaty. Before you knew it, everything was made in China and it became normal very quickly. Most folk didn't seem to notice, so you certainly wouldn't talk about it with the people that you knew. Y'know?

So, things were big in the 90s. Even had the Patriot Movement in America at the time labeled as the most... I think the FBI through its agencies or its supposed civilian, certain [Alan chuckles.] watchdog agencies that are multimillionaires again, said that the Patriot Movement was the most, it wasn't terrorism or anything, they were the most threats to, they presented the most threat, possible threat to America and the USA. What they meant by that is, they were going to stop all these changes to the Constitution.

As I say, the CFR published, and one of their prominent writers published an article. He said we've got to stop hitting the American Constitution and the Bill of Rights head on, trying to challenge it head on because then you can get lawyers debating it point for point, you see, and you can't get it changed. So, he says, we have to put laws around it and put bridges over it with laws. He's talking about international agreements and such that just bypass everything. And that's how they did it. He said, stop hitting it head on, we'll just bypass it all and build bridges over it and around it and so on. That's what happened.

So here you are today, and because people knew it back then there was a lot of people saying, no, you're not. The people knew what their rights were in the States at that time. But they had no idea of the counterintelligence that was going on, big time, with massive funding giving you new champions to follow. That's how things are really done, for those who don't know.

I remember Bo Gritz who was supposedly, that was presented as the most decorated Vietnam veteran, who loved to talk about what he, y'know, about killing people, he liked it, y'know, he enjoyed it. They gave him a show on the radio, worldwide radio. For a few years he collected data on [Alan chuckles.] the people out there and the whole thing. Of course, he, yeah, you gotta stand up for your rights and all the rest of it and all that and dut-dut-dut. Then when 9/11 happened he, there was a little clip of him going up congressional steps right after it happened, and he was asked by the camera folk, or, there were stacks of camera people around at that time because of what was happening and they recognized him and asked him where he was going. He says, I'm going to talk to some of the Congress, and he said, I know who probably did this, he says, it was those crazy patriot people in the US, in our own country, he said.

So, he had been a plant all along, you see. That's what they give you. And people fall for it immediately, you see. Remember, it's the same old idea with the rat poison. You've got to give them real data, the people who are genuine, just grab their stuff, that the genuine folk have, and they repeat it all and they'll say it's theirs, that's what they do. Then they tack on the little bit of poison. That's how you, that's how counterintelligence works. Then you get them back into the fold of playing politics and just voting again.

When you're losing your rights bit by bit by bit and you can vote all you want, but what you're voting for is a completely different system eventually. And yeah, they can still have flags, as I've said before, the flags and the symbols of the country and the brass bands with the right tunes. But you don't realize that you could be literally, culturally and every other way you could be 180° in the other direction of how, of where you started. But most folk don't recognize that.

You take the first Gulf War, Desert Storm. We know, we know what happened there too. We know the whole saga before Saddam Hussein invaded Kuwait. It was in the newspapers and it was in magazines, how the horizontal drilling from Kuwait was going underneath into Iraq, literally hundreds of miles some of this stuff, into Iraqi territory, and siphoning off their oil. Saddam Hussein did give interviews and newspapers had published some of the interviews where he actually asked the US diplomats to Iraq for permission, he says, I've got to go and stop those guys. He was told, well, we won't stop you from trying, y'know. And he went ahead.

That happened, I can remember it all well and I kept all the documentation, it was hard copy, before all the computers were really there for the public. So, you had hard copy. But yeah, it was all out in the open. Of course, once he did it all then they went in attacked him and blasted his... Because there were other things on the go. Everything's a chessboard and you get the guy to make a move because of something, you make them do, right, you make them do it, they goad him until he retaliates and then you've got an excuse to pound him. Because you've got another agenda for the country of Iraq of course.

That's how things really work in geopolitics. It's nothing to do with, oh, we're really offended by what you... No, no, it's just a game that's done against people that you want to plunder, really. And to certainly neutralize, get out of the way if you have other plans for the Middle East. And since then, really, with the next one, Operation Iraqi Freedom... Remember that one? Remember that operation there, when you invade a country to give them freedom? You've had a 30 years’ war on the go. And into Afghanistan too, but a 30 years' war beginning with the first Gulf War, that had quite a few years of just flying overs and no-fly zones, but still, it was a war. And it hasn't stopped. It hasn't stopped.

I read in advance the articles put out by Kissinger and Brzezinski with their different opinions, they were generally allied on most things. But they talked about the different plans for the Middle East and Iraq and so on and Kissinger really said that he'd much rather have basically all their infrastructure completely annihilated and destroyed - put them into the Stone Age basically - and then fund other groups amongst them to fight each other forever, and so it could never unite as a national country again. That's been the policy since, for those who don't know it.

This stuff was all published back then too by their own interviews to newspapers. And no country can continue these kinds of wars. Remember, the cost of everything, even the, okay the big corporations get the plunder of oilfields, etc. Tony Blair, I remember reading the article too, when Tony Blair had admitted eventually years afterwards that, yeah he says, the big oil companies came to see me before they invaded Iraq and they literally worked out a deal of who was getting the different parts of the oilfields. They literally divvied them up before it happened. That's how things really work. And that was in one of the big papers, probably the Daily Mail, at the time.

So, we're kept living as little naïve mushrooms, 'eh, where your fed you-know-what and kept in the dark. That's how the general public are kept, with minimalistic reports on things, and often just handouts especially today to what's still classified as news, or what used to be called newspapers. But it's just handouts straight from the authorities in the different departments, put straight in by really grateful reporters who sit at their desks and take them and [Alan chuckles.] just put their names to things and republish them. So that's how it's done today. You don't really get what used to be investigative journalism.

Investigative journalism today is even more dangerous I think because, as I say, you've got the hint at that practice for the coming Covid back in 2019 [Event 201], where they talked about, it wouldn't just be some people get fines, or for people who wouldn't shut up or people would oppose them. It doesn't matter what the facts were, facts don't matter when you've got a war agenda on the go. Right down to completely stripping or closing all your bank accounts and all the rest of it. Or even imprisoning you. And maybe even worse. You see.

Because what's riding on this whole thing that we're going through today isn't just getting over a pandemic. It's a whole agenda that they couldn't get through, and they TRIED to get it through from 9/11, with the complete alteration of the system then and having no privacy and training the public in a new system. It's like a semi-pseudo-martial law type system where you're frisked and checked everywhere you go, and you’re taught you've got no privacy. All the youngsters accept that. They're the ones that grew up, you don't realize it's almost 20 years and they grew up thinking this is all quite normal. Then they became the police that are frisking you and all the rest of it until... It's going to get worse and worse. Of course, it is.

They think it's, they think themselves, how dare you, how dare you question a system which to them is quite normal. And that's what… These studies are all done, you wouldn't believe how dissected we are. All our thoughts, our emotions, our reactions to all different kinds of things, on a daily basis, just from the data from the Internet alone. Especially now. They actually published all the findings. They are just happy over-the-moon in behavioral teams on how people have just oh, cooperated so fast. Oh my God, they're all staying at home. There's a few oddballs and nuisances out, but the rest of them are staying at home and complying.

How EASY it was, 'eh? How EASY it was. N-n-n.

Then we are going to go the whole way now. The WHOLE way, 'eh, into sustainability. All the things they talked about at the last umpteen different climate meetings, 'eh, which is just a front for the eugenics movement and depopulation and the technocrats, cutting your energy from you including your food sources and so on and types of food and proteins. Then you start getting sick and etc., etc., and you bring back really the 17th and 18th centuries is what you bring back. Preindustrial, remember. What d'they keep talking about, they'll bring it back to preindustrial climate. Really? Really? Like it was all happy and sunny then, was it? Is that what you're saying? M-m-m.

I got fed up reading all the articles on the air, and believe you me, as I say, I wouldn't be a cheerleading person either for, for, oh we can just beat them, rah, rah, rah, look what's happening, rah, rah, rah. No, I don't play politics. I don't even pretend to play politics. Because I've lived long enough, and long ago I just knew it stunk. I was well aware of the big forces that really do manipulate societies and what their agendas were. Because as I say, they couldn't help but publish it so much, especially biographies.

Soo many people that really are honored, they're honored, and they're given honorable titles, etc., the big players all through the 20th century, and from the late 18, 19th century onwards in fact, even before that. But you had these amazing biographies out, and they love to boast about how wonderful these people were and how they shaped the world and where they're going to take the world and all that. And because it was mainly written for their own class most of the public wouldn't read it. And it is boring stuff. I mean, it's dry and boring. But when you dig through it, and you get shocked when you see, well, these people really mean what they say.

Once in a while you get something less boring, as I've mentioned before, Charles Galton Darwin. Again, a member of the Darwin family and the Galton family. When you realize that they were already breeding with each other for a few centuries, if you know that with the Darwin's, it was already… No, they weren't the only ones by the way. The Darwin's have got the proper breathing, long before America had it with the Rockefeller foundation with the Better American Families. They used to have a magazine for the ones who had picked properly, the proper gene makeup of a partner and have children by them and so on. Way ahead, way before Adolf Hitler came along and took the fall for them all.

But yeah, the Galton Darwin, the Galton's and the Darwin's eventually mixed. But the Darwin's were primarily intermarried for generations with the Wedgewood family. The grandparents were married to the Wedgewood's. The parents and their dad was married to the Wedgewood's. The grandson is married to the Wedgewood's. Darwin, I think it was Darwin himself, it was either him or his dad, when the wife died, he then married his Aunt who was a Wedgewood as well. All Wedgewood's. For better breeding, you see. Good stock, as they say, good stock good breeding stock.

They weren't the only ones. You have lots of experiments on the go. You had the one at Oneida as well, awfully important, because you had presidents mixed up with it, the breeding program, who had all been to Yale at that time. Yale was a leader in eugenics, and it taught eugenics, for the better future, get rid of all these peasant classes and so on. You find that they set up an Oneida community, with Mr. Noyes, as he was. They bred on the spot there, they picked who they were going to breed with, and they wouldn't let them breed with anybody else, so that they could keep records of the children and offspring and so on. Do away with marriage. And intergenerational sex they like to have as well. It was quite an amazing experiment. That went on for a long time, into the end of World War II.

It was claimed of course that it was a fire that destroyed their records. But no. It's because after World War II in the stink of eugenics that came out of it, then I'm sure that they were transporting the files elsewhere. Mr. Noyes himself fled to Canada eventually apparently. But you can still go and see the old buildings that they used down there.

They used to have a crematorium there too. Because if there is any, any unauthorized sexual activity, you had to have sex when you're authorized with whoever they told you to. But if there was any unauthorized sexual activity going on, or if the child was born that was inferior, there was a big kiln out there, outside the premises where they would cremate the bodies. Of course, they had that going on there.

You have no idea. Most folk have no idea. Mr. Hayes, I think initially he was somehow related to by marriage or something to Noyes, but related to him. He was a governor of the state at one time, then he became the president I think, Mr. Hayes. I remember reading it all years and years ago.

But anyway, yeah, these things are big things on the go and they're leading families, that's what nobility is all based on going way back to the Normans and before. Nobility, it's all interbreeding. And breeding within the groups. That's why you get so many psychopaths at the top. Because the daughters that they marry, isn't just to marry into money and more money, it's about more control, but it's also the daughters of offspring are of a psychopathic father. So, you got psychopaths intermarrying so it's no surprise at all you end up with these ones.

Then occasionally you'll get ones that are classified as successful creative psychopaths. And if you really look at eugenics with the cold-blooded, or, they're cold-blooded, through the eyes of the cold-blooded psychopaths, like Julian Huxley, they really saw people as just animals and insects in fact. Even in their own peer group they had lists of people that they said would help them get in, and they're the scientific socialism as they like to call different names for the same thing. But they said many of them would help them, and they wouldn't get in themselves, they'd be so shocked. George Bernard Shaw said the same thing.

So, you're living through an ongoing agenda. Then of course you had Kissinger many, many years ago, I think in the 70s came out with his greatest threat to the State. Yep. It wasn't just America, but the greatest threat America had he said was overpopulation. And as usual folk thought, well I guess he just means it's the Third World, because they're always publishing different figures of growing populations. But it was also your internal populations of course. Britain was exactly the same. They had already been doing it in Britain even before World War II ended, they were talking about depopulating again.

So, the first, you have many steps to go through. You've got to be, they've got have enough people for wars if they need wars, right. Then the sciences get higher and higher with efficiency in killing especially, then they need fewer and fewer people to do it all. Although they still like to just have boots on the ground as a show to the public that war hasn't changed that much, war has changed tremendously. And they can really do great wars with even satellites alone without even using troops, if they wanted to. And that might come one day, who knows.

But we're really going down the path where they decided long ago, they really don't need us all anymore. I hope you understand that. They really don't. And they're quite open about it too. And not just the Georgia Guidestones. I remember even listening to Manly P Hall as an old man giving one of his later, almost last talk. I don't know if it was his last or not, but he was a very old man at the time. He got so agitated as he was talking. And he knew he was on camera talking to his own group. Of course, he himself was Rosicrucian and Freemasonic. But he got really agitated, and he was shaking like a really old guy does when he's getting agitated. And when it came to the planet, and what he was wanting to say but not quite getting out was... You understand that these organizations also have a great, a natural, it's a natural thing for the earth, naturally, you can't destroy your home.

But they also had this problem about, I hope people understand that if you go into the occult, and even simple humanistic Freemasonry at the bottom, the bottom is basically like humanism, we are all brothers, we can all get around our differences, and the fellowship, brotherhood of man, etc. Sounds wonderful. If you start going up the ranks, you'd find that you’re getting introduced into a NEW way of seeing things, and superiorities, you see, inferior, superior, etc. They'll start talking about the profane, you know, those folk out there who don't know anything, the profane. We are so enlightened, aren't we, as they swig their beer and so on. We all know these characters. I'm sure you do.

But it gets worse and worse at the very top until it isn't just the guy swigging the beer. The guys at the top swig brandy, and very good Brandy at that, and are quite blatantly blatant. There's no real emotion behind it, it's not like they're angry about things. People at top don't really show feeling and emotion because they're psychopathic. Psychopaths cannot tolerate frustration and anger. They tend to help stir up arguments between people and sit back and watch different people arguing with each other. They play out their aggression and their frustrations through other people. That's why they also like wars and things, you know.

But we're living through their agenda today because, as I've said so many times, Carroll Quigley, Professor Quigley talked about that part of his role with training people to shape the new world on behalf of the elite group that he worked for, the Council on Foreign Relations, Royal Institute of International Affairs group worldwide. They churned out the diplomats and so on and people who are in the State Department for the US. They train them, pick them from University for their roles as leaders and shapers of the world. People that you never hear of most of them, but they're the people who shape the world. They are the technocrats behind it all. They shape everything. And they're not really responsible, they don't get hold up to the voters. The voters never know this is even going on, that's how it's always been.

But Quigley said, and it's absolutely true, a truthful statement about it. He said, talking about the amounts, incredible amounts of work for an agenda that sometimes takes 50 years, like a 50-year plan to get culture to change one thing from here to there, you know, 50. But he said under wartime, as we are in today, we are at war with a virus they say, 'eh, martial law, emergency powers, 'eh. He said, they can change everything culturally, legally, because they just make the rules up as they go along, and they've got the force, you don't, legally make you do whatever they want to do, quickly. Under threat of annihilation, we're here to save you.

He said you can do more in five years of war than 50 years of peace, meaning peace and propaganda and education of the next generation of children. You always indoctrinate the children so they grow up, and they will. That's why, why do you think children grow up and they're always arguing with the parents for instance? Why do you think that happens? Hm? Why do you think that happens? About pretty well everything, why do you think that happens? Because they're getting taught a completely different set of values and cultures and ways of looking at things then the parents had. Each generation. And by generation doesn't mean a whole lifetime. They can work it out in 10 and 15 years plans, with massive changes. You understand?

So what you're living through today is a massive, massive change and push for utterly different values, that will conflict with, not so much now because the last couple of generations, really from the 50s onwards really, or 60s onwards definitely, you had the cultural contamination as it was called. So, you introduced a disease of the completely new way of looking at everything, including life itself. Including children. Or even having them or not having them. Or, is life sacred, is it not sacred? And all the things that Julian Huxley talked about. He said, they'll have to knock people off their pedestal, humanity off its pedestal. Meaning, the people where they think they are the most supreme being on the planet. Teach them that they're not, they're just another animal. Once they believe that, then you can do what you want with them, they'll accept it more easily.

When you think you're sacred and you have rights, you fight things, you see.

It's all being done. He was into Planned Parenthood and many, many other things, and a member of the eugenic societies and the Darwin's club, and so on. So yeah, you're living through an agenda right now. They couldn't get it all done. They tried, and they did raise it. Look at all the different groups that they've trained, these armies of youngsters who are almost ready to kill the older folk. Because they've been trained the older folk destroyed the planet for them. That was their heritage then and you all destroyed it, all you privileged folk, as they call people who scraped to get up there. They didn't go through, there was no heaven, believe you me.

They've trained them, almost like a Bolshevik army, ready to slaughter the people. Or, a Chinese cultural group where they just let them loose on the adults and their teachers to eradicate under communism. The cultural Revolution they called it. It's all the same tactics used by people who are well steeped and then trained in the same thing, you see. Because they use many groups, and they always give them ideals. But the ones who run it all have different ideals and different agendas at the top, and different outcomes ultimately.

So, you're living through it, again, and here you go, another crisis. I said, it's like 9/11 Part 2, you'll come out of this with a vastly, they've already said it over and over, why do you think these articles are appearing from the elite themselves, that the world will never be the same again. And you'll never go back to the way it was. And my God, all the things they couldn't achieve, like austerity, remember, I did talk after talk from the United Nations publications on austerity programs that they were signing into law in every country. I've got them here in front of me right now. Yeah, all these austerity, how they would teach you that, to get off meat. And you would obey them. They would teach you what to eat. They would give you substitutes for meat and so on and all the different insects and yada, yada, ya. That's all made a massive resurgence, hasn't it? It really has, massive resurgence.

The folk don't even know it's even happening. They float through it in a... ... It reminds me, it reminds me of I think it was, was it Oscar Wilde? when he made some statement that everybody picked upon, a newspapers from one of his books. He was talking about women and at the time he says that women, the housewife and so on, the married women, back in his day, he said that they live in a life of quiet desperation, something like that, to paraphrase it.

But do you realize, your masters have got the whole planet now in a form of almost quiet kind of control desperation. Because folk know everything is wrong. And they're going along with so many things which they really shouldn't be going along with.

You cannot fight for centuries to gain your rights that we've got, [Alan chuckles.] temporary rights, y'know, and just give it away, because your terrified, because you’re never going to get them back again.

And I think every country has seen the police forces out doing their thing already, and just losing their heads when the public won't obey them. They want OBEDIENCE. That's not what police was about. At one time the police were called the police service at one time. And they were supposedly public servants. Then they changed it, people, did you notice the changes years ago, it's called the police FORCE, you see, a police FORCE. Okay? And then you saw the change into black outfits with combat boots and all that, like a police Army. And now you're seeing them dictate to you, and with threats. And they've got women there, because we're equal, you got equal bullies now. And some of the women are worse, actually, they actually see the people like schoolchildren, like, [with scorn] do what you're told, and that's how it's supposed to be.

It's quite astonishing, isn't it? And they've got all these different, do you know how much money, do you realize how well-planned this was long before Covid was let loose in the public? All this stuff was waiting to get pushed, you know that. And all the, it's like wartime propaganda, how to wash your hands? Huh? What? Bertrand Russell said, he said we'll train the public they can't make a move for THEMSELVES; they won't know how to do anything without expert advice, on everything.

Then you've got policeman deciding on the spot what the laws are. You've got more danger, if it's all real, and it's going to spread so easily by folk that have no symptoms, and the police are the worst carriers and culprits for spreading it to the rest of the public because they get right, look at all the videos up, they're getting in the faces of everybody who's just out for their one-hour walk. That's what you give people in prison, y'know, the little walk outside in the yard, for like going around in circles. And everybody's obeying this.

They want to keep it going. Believe you me, if they can keep it going right into next year. Once it's into next year it's never going to change. And I've got a funny feeling they're going to try to terrify you again with a double whammy. It's like a one-two punch, you see. You get the first one, oh my God we’re all going to die, this Covid, oh, we're all going to die. No. Then you're not all going to die. Most folk, won’t know they’ve had it. Most folk. Then they'll say, well, we can start gradually getting you, some of you back to work if you got...

You've seen it all floated in your faces, where you're... [Alan chuckles.] with you're ID, you got an ID card but primarily one that will be an app, you see. There's an app for everything. D'you realize how many billions are getting tossed around the world to these rip-off merchants that jump on like vultures, vultures on top of the public, shamelessly, 'eh? That's the system we live in, folks. There's no morality of any kind in this system where greed rules and people will cut other folks' throat for greed.

They want you all chipped. Everyone knows that I'm talking to the choir and they're seeing the same articles, I'm sure. Many folk will refuse to accept the articles... I don't really want to believe that. Even though it's coming from all the top sources, who have the actual factories set up to churn out different things they're going to, y'know, and the telephone app. The cell phones of course they're still making but they've got the apps as well. Some from China. Some from Israel. Some from Britain. Some… Everybody who's got an app, can make apps, has got their hands out for their companies.

This freebie, 'eh? I mean, and governments are just throwing it out like confetti. All the cash that you've got to pay for down the road. You're never going to get out of this hole. Even if they stopped it all tomorrow, you're never going to get out of this. Your currency will be literally, is taxed into the ground what's left of it, and your dollar or your pound or whatever currency you have, you already lost about 35% almost 40% with the 2008 crash in purchasing power, so you need more of it to buy the same things. Well, you're going to drop down until, you know, until the dollar is going to be, you might get a loaf of bread and maybe some jam to put on it if you got maybe 10 bucks, maybe 15, actually.

That's where they're going to go with it all, into austerity, the very things that they talked about putting you into in a postindustrial civilization, a la Maurice Strong and the big meeting he had in 1992, y'know. Again, we didn't vote for these characters. We didn't vote for their meeting or what came out of their meeting, where the politicians all signed it into law over us all from these private so-called sustainability groups. Man is the enemy, the Club of Rome.

Now remember, and we do float through life. most folk float through life and they don't want heavy news as they call it. When they hear things which are too heavy, they tend to just close their ears. They go into denial and they say, I don't want to hear that, that's too depressing. They can't really mean that, somebody would stop them. How many times have you heard that, somebody would stop them? Who? Who's going to stop them? But it's never going to be they themselves that do anything to stop it, is it? That's why things really happen.

It's like Leni Riefenstahl who, she lived a great, to an amazing age in fact. She had been an actress before World War II broke out and then afterwards, she had another career making films and so on, and documentaries across the planet. But she was asked by I think it was John Pilger, I've got a documentary somewhere, where he interviewed her when she was old. He asked her about her time during World War II and before it, and how did, how was it allowed to happen that a group could arise within a country and take over? She was quite candid about it, that most folk really were not involved, y'know, involved in what was happening.

In reality in other words, just like today, I mean, how many folk were involved when the transfer of all your work went over to China? I lived through it, it's not ancient history, and I did talks on the government signing all the different documentation to make it all happen. And even financing companies to move there lock stock and barrel and set up in China. We paid for it all, everyone of them. And we paid for their losses that they claimed that they have until they are on their feet. And they would be tax-free for at least 15 years, and it could be extended for another 15 years, along with China itself with their companies, if they found out they weren't making what they expected to make.

We paid for all this. This is corporate fascism! That's right in your face, y'know. So, I mean, where were all the folk sent in there who were watching it? Most folk didn't even talk about it in the street, and people that you knew, they didn't seem to be interested. So really, Riefenstahl said the same thing about Germany, how it ended up under a Nazi party. And of course, the big story leading up to it of course, there was a lot more going on that made it all happen or it would have never happened in the first place.

But the fact is, most folk slept through it. You don't think of the consequences. You don't think of where it's going to go, you see. And here we are going through the same thing now, 'eh, with all the scientific, the scientific fascism on top of us. Because that's what it's supposed to be according to Bertrand Russell. He said, if there's going to be a tyranny that runs the world, I'd much prefer it to be a scientific one.

That's what you're under, scientific tyranny, the technocratic system. Because democracy has served its purpose according to the Club of Rome. It's now inefficient, they can’t get things done because we complain and object of what they want to do, you see, with democracy. So, under technocracy, and technocrats are just appointed in times of war [Alan chuckles.] to run everything efficiently, and nevermind your feelings or your rights or anything else. That's what you've got now.

Hm? More done in five years of war than 50 years of peace. It hasn't even taken five years. There are studies out now, they're just over, overawed by the response to public complying about this. I'll put a little link up to Peter Hitchens talking about it, from his point of view in Britain, and how they're just stunned at the compliance of the public. The domesticated compliance is just astonishing. It really is.

Peter Hitchens: 'Never before have we imposed quarantine on the healthy' - youtube.com / 13 April 2020

Peter Hitchens: Hysterical reaction to Covid19 and public support of lockdown is scary and dangerous - youtube.com / 17 April 2020

But again, fear and terror, like I've said before, to change the people to get them to move you've got to give them terror and fear of imminent death. Then you step in, as I say, the Savior, and, we'll take your rights away, you just do what we tell you or you will die. And people comply with it and go along with it. Like the Green Party had said a few years ago, the woman who was in charge at the time in Britain. She said, I look back with nostalgia to what's written about World War II, everybody obeyed authorities. Everybody lived on very, very little food and they didn't grumble, because it was wartime and they obeyed and got on with what they were told to do and so on. She just thought that was wonderful.

Well, here you are, 'eh? Terror, fear, comply or you'll die. And everybody literally ... they've just given up centuries of fighting for rights, just like that. Until literal morons are walking around the streets bossing the people about. Even if they go into their garden, 'eh, their own garden? Even though the law states that their garden and their property is their property, they can be on any part of their property they want. But you've got these morons chomping at the bit, that you see in any tyrannical system, in any country, even the Third World countries, chomping at the bit to have you obey them. And they really get ticked off, especially the special constables that are like temporary or young or whatever or just part-timers, they're chomping at the bit. Because they watched, they've been brought up on all these cop shows, these fiction shows on TV, and that's how you're train to be a little tyrant, through fiction, you see. Because in reality you're supposed to SERVE the public, hm. M-hm.

But yeah, there's so many clips up there on YouTube now, some of them are farcical and funny. But over and over again you've got these nobodies, literally nobodies, people, and believe you me, Britain is so politicized like every other country with political correctness that for decades they've watched, they've watched pedophile gangs being created and run, and they've turned a blind eye. Because they're scared of losing their jobs because everything is so volatile politically to do with certain groups and so on. But they'll go after innocent people, even someone, a woman having a seat on her way to the store on a park bench, because she's lingering too long, things like that.

Nasty' busy bodies emboldened by police lockdown - youtube.com / 11 April 2016

Corona Arrest for Breach of 1 hour rule - youtube.com / 17 April 2016

What constitutes a reasonable excuse to leave the place where you live - college.police.uk

Come on! Do you really want... These are thugs, people! These are thugs. These are not humans, they are thugs. And the old police have gone long ago. The old police were people you could walk up to in Britain and chat with or as questions or ask directions. You daren't do it now, they're ready to, they're like gnats, just want to dive in and get you, y'know, on something. That's not, these are not police. No. They want to, it's like the sparring, they want to spar with people, and that's not what they're supposed to be there for.

But again, everyone's trained through fiction and they've all watched their, they've been brought up too in their science fiction movies in the future, and here's how it's going to be, dystopian societies and authorities and nobodies. And the public are the nobodies, 'eh. Unless you're really wealthy and well-connected, then you're a somebody, and then they'll grovel to serve you. Quite something, 'eh? Quite something.

So anyway, I'll put some of these links up, as I say, tonight. Because you are in a system that was carefully orchestrated. You see, I've got articles here where we know the authorities knew, and of course the CIA would know what to do, y'know, [Alan chuckles.] and all the other agencies that were in China. They knew the thing broke out long before they told you it broke out. I've got articles here from California where they, they swear they knew it was there at least in December, in California. Some of them are even talking now, there's more like evidence again showing it was out in September, you see.

And sure enough, I mean I've said before, even the last few years, I watch these very carefully and keep data on all these different, what the CDC does and the WHO does and what they're following, and all the little irrelevant things you might think are irrelevant. But you'll see patterns. Because every other year, for years now, we've had these oddball viruses come out that hit the respiratory tract, and the lower respiratory tract causing pneumonias. And they often don't even get labeled, as far as we're told anyway, as new. They know they've got new somethings, but it depends on how many people seem to get it, according to the attention it's going to receive, and notifications and publications, etc.

But they're coming out more and more frequently and I really, being the character that I am, who've studied the nasty, nasty, nasty, nasty stuff of governments down through the ages in a sense, a very real sense, really, I'm watching. I'll tell you where the worst culprits are. They're the biolabs. I'll put up again the article that I put up a couple times already from Harvard with the Professor Lipsitch who is an expert in his field in teaching biochemistry. He teaches those that eventually work in the labs and so on. I'll put up the, if it's still up there, his talk to students on, and his title of the talk, one of these talks is...

Should we be Making Potential Pandemic Pathogens in the Lab - Marc Lipsitch (2016) - youtube.com / 24 Feb 2016

Now, I'll say that again for the hard of thinking... Should we be MAKING, hm, not finding or dealing with, but MAKING these possibly pandemic viruses in the lab? Because that's what they do. And don't forget what I just said, I've been watching this for years, these things breaking out, that's oddball things that are in the virus strains. Where do you think they're coming from? Hm? And now it's getting more, more common, supposedly, just by itself, 'eh, in a time when there's never been so many biochemists churned out from universities, all wanting money for research and so on, or for vaccines or whatever else they are into, all the spinoffs of it. And they live on grants, remember.

Well, you know, is a make-work project on the go here? Is it? Because any logical person would have to eventually ask that question. We live in the most greedy society that's ever existed, with, who have the power to create things which are deadly to the whole planet. And they're so greedy, like everybody else today, and probably psychopathic because if you understand the kind of work they do and what they do, [Alan chuckles.] there's a lot of psychopathy involved in this too.

I'll put up by the way the movie Andromeda, or a link if I can find it, the Andromeda Strain it's called. It was from the 1970s I think the first one was put out. I think they did a second one as well, about an outbreak in a small town in the States, and from a satellite that comes back from space, that's how they put it there. But it shows you the real kind of biolabs that they use. It's like level four, or five even in that one, and the so-called safeguards that they have. And all the animals they test it on too, and they gas one after the other, or the put them in with the infected, the infection itself to see how long it takes to kill them and so on. Observe and then dissect them and test them. People who do that continuously, including the fact if they're making these things, like they're making possibly potential pandemic diseases, making, again, do you really think they're just average people? Do you really think that? Do you?

But what's the temptation to make something and release it and then have an antidote there for it? And the world is at your feet, isn't it? The whole world is at your feet. It would be awfully tempting, 'eh? Awfully, awfully tempting. In 12 Monkeys the movie the guy who released it, the virus that kills most of the folk on the planet, he works in the lab, he does it for ideological reasons. He's just, he's an environmentalist that thinks in eugenics, that man is a scum, so kill them off. Quite easily.

We have more folk who live on greed today than you'd ever believe. And there's no doubt about it, there's question being asked, and they'll get hammered by the… Do you realize we're not living in a democracy? And the authorities who have all the money in the world and all the power in the world, because you buy it, you buy whatever you want, you can even buy guaranteed silence if you want from other people by force, using force against you in all kinds of ways, or worse even, 'eh.

So, you have people today who have no problem releasing something here and there and then coming out with a solution to it. And don't forget, that the whole big agenda, the people who are involved in all these things are eugenicists. The people who come out who are the biochemists, who work for these labs, are geneticists generally, completely wrapped in with genetics and eugenics. And it doesn't matter what group you look at, the agenda is the same, too many people, too many of the wrong kind of people, they are elitists, yada, yada, ya. Hm?

They wouldn't go along with sustainability. They wouldn't cut back on their consumption. A la the Rio meeting that Maurice Strong was the head of. It was literally drafted up by the Rockefellers with Maurice Strong as their front man. He had them all sign it into law, the Rio Summit for Sustainability and Biodiversity as it was called. That's complete sustainability, the Millennium Project and Agenda 21 all came out of that. And the present agendas of the climate agenda, which are the exact same agendas, too many people, cut them back and the climate will be better. And they've got to stop eating meat. They've got to stop this and stop that. I've got article after article, the same agenda getting pushed right now because you wouldn't do it voluntarily when you were told to do it. Hm. Here's one article, just one from last year, one of many.

Population control policies to combat climate change prove deadly, demographer says

pop.org / 11 Nov 2019

A group of over 11,000 scientists are calling for population control measures to avoid severe human suffering from global climate change, (Alan: It will save, if you can just kill off a few people there will be less suffering, you see.) a notion a demographer says is heavily tied to money and not actual science.

The alliance of scientists signed a paper declaring a climate emergency is at hand and that in order to limit the damage to the environment caused by greenhouse gas emissions, (A: Most of the emissions by the way of greenhouse gases, you know, is water vapor, 'eh. M-hm. And carbon is, carbon dioxide is a TRACE gas… a TRACE gas. Anyway, facts don't matter. It says…) there must be "more control over the massively booming global population, currently increasing by over 200,000 people a day," the Daily Mail reported on Tuesday.

At the head of this international cohort of scientists is Oregon State professor of ecology William J. Ripple (A: I guess as part of the ripple effect, 'eh?) and researcher Christopher Wolf. (A: …who probably is one.) The paper, which includes signatories from 153 nations, was published in the journal BioScience, (A: …another eugenics paper.) and calls for the replacement of fossil fuels with low-carbon renewables, a shift in the world's diet to plant-based foods, and the "stabilization" of the global human population, (A: stabilization, 'eh?...) among other things. (A: I wonder how they're going to stabilize the human population?) The paper portrays as a positive development the decline in recent decades of the global birth rate.

(A: Hm. It's positive, that, because it's mainly through abortion, 'eh? Mind you, if you can increase poverty, fewer and fewer folk can afford to have their children, and when they're offered what they call birth control, abroad in Third World countries, they take abortion.)

"We are encouraged by a recent surge of concern. Governmental bodies are making climate emergency declarations. Schoolchildren are striking. (A: Yeah, no kidding, 'eh? They're all getting trained, brainwashed at school.) Ecocide lawsuits are proceeding in the courts. Grassroots citizen movements (A: Who are all funded by the usual characters…) are demanding change, and many countries, states and provinces, cities, and businesses are responding," the paper reads in its conclusion.

“As an Alliance of World Scientists, we stand ready to assist decision makers in a just transition to a sustainable and equitable future.”

(A: Equitable for whom?)

Steven Mosher, president of the Population Research Institute in Front Royal, Virginia, told The Christian Post on Thursday that it’s their ideas that prove destructive.

“In fact, their proposals to reduce the number of people born to reduce the amount of fossil fuel used, to reduce the amount of food produced, to reduce the amount of land given over to the production of food, all of these things will cause untold human suffering,” Mosher stressed.

(A: And that’s what it’s supposed to do, folks.)

Mosher is well-versed in China’s long history with population control, including their one-child policy that entailed state-mandated forced abortions and sterilizations. He’s also the author of the 2017 book, Bully of Asia: Why China’s Dream is the New Threat to World Order.

“The Chinese Communist Party has eliminated 400 million people from 1980 to 2016, 400 million of the most enterprising and hard-working people on the planet have been eliminated through forced abortions and infanticide after birth,” he said.

(A: He goes on and on and on.)

When asked why scientists and others who push depopulation by making predictions of catastrophic events that fail to materialize — such as those set forth in Paul Ehrlich’s 1968 book, The Population Bomb — are never held to account, Mosher said it comes down to the role of grant dollars in scientific research.

“They keep getting funding to propagate these scary stories,” he said, adding, “in part this is money-driven research.”

The Population Research Institute president, who has an advanced degree in oceanography, elaborated that if he were to conduct a study and ended up concluding that the mild increase in the Earth’s temperature did not portend a global crisis, his grant would not be renewed. But if another researcher came to the different conclusion, particularly that a disaster is imminent, he would receive additional funds. With more money, he will purportedly be able to research more and solve the problem, Mosher explained.

So, this is one of many, many articles coming out, you see. Of course, I put out the study put out by the last climate change meeting they had, the global meeting, and their Conference of Parties as they like to call themselves for the climate change group. They said the same thing, there's too many people, that you're the problem. Because they're following the Club of Rome agenda where the Club of Rome came up with the idea on behalf, they were tasked with finding something that would fit the bill of justifying why you have to reduce population. And that's what they said, that man is the enemy of the planet. Man, you see. So, it's still ongoing.

Paul Ehrlich too, his wife was on the board of the Club of Rome; it's a small world at the top, really. I've read many articles like that. So, you've got to bring people down. You cut back farming as he says there. You cut back on energy costs and so on. That also helps the farm [Alan chuckles.] and transport and everything else. And you go back, as I say, until you get ill health, where you're ill health and you're malnourished, then you end up catching the diseases that were eliminated, primarily because of better hygiene and better food, that's why most diseases started to wane off, wane away. That's the real reason. I really believe that. But you go backwards just the same way. Now, it won't take that long, by the way, y'know. Your body starts to lose what it needs very quickly if it's not replenished all the time. And you're going to see big, big changes of things you don't want to really see. So, you bring it in with this agenda here.

And already again, you we're all waiting for it. What happens when you stop folk working, 'eh? Including people who work in the farms and so on? What d’you think happens? Hm? Everything we're talking about here. Malnourishment. And now they're destroying the food. Oh, you can't, milk, just pour the milk down the gutters, you can't get folk to deliver it. Destroy all those eggs.

Mind you, the elite do without nothing, there's nothing they don't do without. Nothing at all. This is all planned, folks. It's like Brave New World, and it's also like what you saw in 1984. With 1984 having Julia, y’know, and she's asked about what the elite have there. Because she's up there amongst the elites who have all the best foods and stuff. She says, there's nothing those b's don't have. Real coffee. Real meat. Real this, and real vegetables. Real potatoes, y'know, not that mush, the artificial marsh they give the workers in the canteen where there's not a bit of meat in it. It looks like meat, y'know, it's supposed to taste like meat, but there's no meat in it at all.

Old agenda and you're living through the start of it now and we'll go into it very, very quickly through the food situation, no doubt about it. Now, Bill Gates is a eugenicist. He doesn't make any pretense that he's not. He's all for helping the people, and depopulating at the same time.

But he's also into the alternate food for you all, again, you see. Because you see, he's part of sustainability, he funds sustainability. Meaning, there's too many folk, you see, but he wants the ones who are too many to eat artificial food. I call it artificial food. So...

'Artificial egg' made from PLANTS backed by Bill Gates set to revolutionize cooking goes on sale at Whole Foods - dailymail.co.uk / 10 Sept 2013

That’s 2013. The guy’s been involved in this for years. His whole life actually. And getting you off all the things… He wants farming destroyed basically, especially anything to do with animal farming, and proteins, etc., and milk and all that. Here's another article…

No more beef and cheese: Go vegetarian, by order of Government food police

dailymail.co.uk / 22 Oct 2010

(A: This article is from 2010.)

Wholesale changes to the nation’s diet, with a move towards vegetarian food and away from beef and cheese, have been recommended by Government advisers.

A report commissioned by the Food Standards Agency suggests radical changes to what we eat and even how we cook.

These include eating more seasonal produce to reduce transportation and switching to microwave ovens and pressure cookers (A: If you want to destroy your food, put it in a microwave oven.) to use less energy in preparing food.

Out would go beef, cheese, sugary foods and drinks such as tea, coffee and cocoa. In would come vegetables and pulses, together with yoghurt.

Beef

Rare treat: Beef should be excluded from our diet, according to the Food Standards Agency

(A: D’you understand, this is a big agenda, and all these agencies that you hear that seem to be an authority, you just gotta kick them out and say get off my back, y’know, I’m not voting for you or your agendas.)

The FSA says the switch is necessary as part of a move to a diet that is low in greenhouse gases (GHG), which are associated with climate change.

(A: That was the big one, oh, it had to be you causing the climate change. Nothing to do with the sun or anything, oh no. And again, it’s all computer modeling with worst-case scenarios, ‘eh. Just like the virus here.)

The report, compiled by a team from the University of East Anglia, (A: Remember that one too, where they literally had scandals where they, with their emails, all came out, got published when they’re telling all their scientists they fudged, to fudge all the statistics, with the hockey stick and the whole bit with the graphs you had. Kind of like what we’re seeing now with all these graphs coming out. Anyway, it says…) suggests that schools, hospitals and other public bodies should be expected to lead a change in national behaviour by putting low-GHG food on their menus.

(A: No kidding. I think they should tie some gas balloons to these characters and send them on a long journey across the sky somewhere.   Anyway…)

The university was at the centre of allegations last year that it had manipulated climate change data to magnify the problem.

(A: They’re all on massive grants, and they’re dedicated to their own pockets, that’s their dedication is the grants that they get.)

Its report, called Food and Climate Change, will be controversial given that many people may baulk at being told what they should eat in order to meet greenhouse gas reduction targets.

However, the recommendations will be welcomed by vegetarian campaigners (A: Now, who are the campaigners?) and those who support organic farming…

(A: No kidding, ‘eh? How many can afford it, how many folk can really afford organic stuff, y’know? Nevermind see it now with the lockdown, ‘eh? [Alan chuckles.] I-yi-yi-yi.)

Anyway, that's that article too. You've got many articles like this. But again, folk float through it, they float through all of this and through it all, they float through it and they don't notice it. Or they choose not to notice. There's a lot of choice involved in not noticing things. Like I say, when the jobs all went to China as an example of I-don't-want-to-notice-that. Hm?

Or sustainability. Or, we're going to increase all your food. After the 2008 crash, you notice the beef got priced out of sight in Canada. That's part of this agenda, it wasn't just because it was... No, it's the agenda too. Priced out of sight. Until folk literally can hardly afford it. And in Canada we don't know what we've been eating, for years actually. Most of it is tasteless anyway. We've had in Canada, I did articles years ago, before the crash in fact and read them. They had articles about a joint of meat in Canada, it was literally glued together pieces from all over the world, the cut offs from all different countries, and they would glue them up here, GLUE, and sell it off as…

This is authorized by government to be sold to us peasants, as like a joint of meat, y'know. And you have no idea what it is or where it came from or what animal it even came from. And everything now, and I said it years ago, they slap sauce onto everything, it's all tomato, everything's got tomato sauce in all these ready-made foods too. To train you that that's normal. Because eventually that's all you'll get, if anything’s got meat in it at all, it covers any... As I say, you don't know if it's pork or beef. It's kind of bland, irregular bland kind of taste. And they've been at this for a long, long time.

Folk... folks just don't... You understand, when you end up caged in, and in a prison cell, it's because you allowed yourself to step-by-step get pushed into it. I hope you're understanding what I'm saying here. And they're almost ready to set the real [Alan chuckles.] police dogs on anybody who speaks out about it. They can see how vicious they're becoming with it, and swaggering, 'eh? as they boss their so-called fellow citizens around like peasants, they're talking to peasants, 'eh.

This article too...

Robert F. Kennedy Jr:

(A: That’s part of the Kennedy family, Robert F Kennedy Junior.)

Bill Gates Is Obsessed With Vaccines And ‘Seems Fueled By A Messianic Conviction’ That He Is Destined To ‘Save The World With Technology And A God-like Willingness To Experiment On The Lives Of Lesser Humans’

cloverchronicle.com / 9 April 2020

(A: That's a recent article, April 9.)

On Tuesday, Robert F. Kennedy Jr., the nephew of former President John F. Kennedy, took to social media and shared a lengthy message about billionaire Bill Gates and his “obsession with vaccines”:

“Vaccines, for Bill Gates, are a strategic philanthropy that feed his many vaccine-related businesses (including Microsoft’s ambition to control a global vac ID enterprise) (A: A vaccine ID enterprise, that's Bill Gates idea too, right.) and give him dictatorial control over global health policy—the spear tip of corporate neo-imperialism.

“Gates’ obsession with vaccines seems fueled by a messianic conviction that he is ordained to save the world with technology and a god-like willingness to experiment with the lives of lesser humans.

“Promising to eradicate Polio

(A: He talks about some of the history of this and so on. AND the fact that somebody, he was getting sued by other countries where polio broke out. And these articles, I’ve got the ones even from the World Health Organization where they have to eventually admit that’s some of that was live viruses and so on. But anyway, [Alan chuckles.] it’s just a bit of a horror show when you read some of this stuff.)

But yeah, this guy isn’t just who you think he is. Remember, his father was into, began as a eugenicist. He talks openly about population reduction. M-hm, quite openly. Also, there’s an article that ties in with it in fact. You can find lots of articles and interviews about Bill Gates and with Bill Gates, over years, where he’s talked about his feelings. More openly again in the 90s, and that’s why people were really getting on edge in the 90s and why they had to get you back into just voting in politics and stuff like that.

Because these characters, these technocrats, these front people for big, big, a big secret society above you all, that you'd rather pretend that you didn't know about, that manages depopulation projects, etc., and really runs the world, y'know. Just like the IMF and the World Bank, all set up by one institution, the Royal Institute of International Affairs. And the IMF set up by them too. All private institutions set up by this one group that makes the future, the plans the future.

That's what Carroll Quigley said about it. He said he was a member of it, the American branch, the Council on Foreign Relations, and he agreed with all of its agendas; he just complained occasionally about some of its methods. But he literally was the historian for what they did. They planned the world, and the future, and how it should all be, and what happens, and the cultural changes, generation to generation internationally. Massive organization. It didn't go away. It's still here, big time, running the world. With the Lucky Gene Club, etc. that Bill Gates and some others are members of too.

In one article back in, I think it was 1997 it was, George Magazine. A person put it up recently on a blog, he's got the copy of it. But it's George Magazine, it used to be popular in 1997. He did an interview with Bill Gates. And who did it, who did it then? It was John Kennedy Junior, had the actual interview with Bill Gates back then in 1997.

John Kennedy Jr.'s "George Magazine" Breakdown: Survival Guide to the Future Issue, Feb 1997

youtube.com / posted 3 June 2019

Then there’s Microsoft, a company that gets involved in very few political things. (A: And there's Microsoft again, they don't, they MAKE policy. They don't bother with politics. Politicians are for YOU to believe in.)

My own views are those you’d expect from somebody who feels like he’s been very, very lucky and that the resources under his command are really society’s resources. And I have to be clever about how I’m going to funnel those back in. I fund education projects, (A: And you can tell what he funds, the type that have now grow up, they've now grown up and now they're the Antifa's and so on, these characters.) I fund population control (A: ...control, that's how it's worded, I fund population control...) I’m very big on the United Way.

And don't forget his dad also was up there with Julian Huxley with Planned Parenthood. Small world, 'eh, it just doesn't... They just keep coming back to the same names and same people and same families and have these agendas, and they're made awfully rich in the front if they go along and push the agenda for the real guys, there's even ones more real above them, folks, y'know. There's lots of articles like that going back, way back. He loved to boast back then.

You understand, it's almost like people were in a kind of a never-never land back then. It's true, it's a fact, I've noticed it. They didn't really, they kind of floated through the time they were in back then. And massive changes in the world were happening, but they were kept kind of cushioned from it by the guys that manipulate the money and the banking system, and so they wouldn't, the full impact wouldn't be noticed so much.

But people really accepted change and change and change, until you had change is good. They had all these ads out, change is good. Training you into change, change, change. Of course, for the 21st century it was to be the century of change, of transition. The great transition, here you are. A very occultic term as well, because man himself had to be transitioned, literally in some cases. M-hm. You're living through it today.

So anyway, I'm going to touch on some of these articles. But I'm going to remember too, to ask those folk who send a few bucks my way @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Because I need the cash to tick along here. And for years and years and years, believe you me I have turned all the biggest offers down because I wouldn't compromise on pretty well anything in fact. Most folk buckle around you, and they do compromise, and they accept the money from this that and the other until they're... And I've had the big speaking engagements offered to me too, the big organizations. World organizations. But no.

Because I'm a crazy stubborn guy, as they say. And I guess it's a genetic thing as well. Maybe that's why they keep trying to stamp out the people that rose up. I'm talking about the Celtic peoples, like the Irish and Scottish who... we've got an allergy against tyranny. It just… you immediately have an allergy against it. It's awfully, it's definitely genetic, I think, and you just can't go along with it.

So anyway, if you can send a few dollars my way @cuttingthroughthematrix.com website. Please make a list of the sites listed on the @cuttingthroughthematrix.com website. These are my official sites and you can go into them and find out how to donate money to me. You can find how to send money, even cash or check, it doesn't matter. You can also from some countries you can still get international postal money orders, from some countries. You can't do it inside the States to Canada, they've done away with them now. Maybe, I'm not sure. Your post office will tell you. But anyway, you can still send cash my way and find out how to do it. Or you can use PayPal, we'll take it from there.

Because I've got to keep soldiering on, especially in this time because believe you me, as we're going through this there's so much disinformation, that what you've seen already and disinfo is nothing to where... Counterintelligence, one of the first laws of being a counter intelligent agent is to make sure you confuse something that's detrimental, a truth that's detrimental to whatever organization you're working for, or country you're working for. And you always find them, with anything that happens, immediately put out people too, first divide, divide the people who are against what's happened.

It's like 9/11. 9/11 happened, right. But very, pretty quickly you had ones coming out, oh, there's no planes hit that tower. Y'know? So, the camp is divided. Before you've got all these voices ready for petitions and protest and demanding, and suddenly, now you're halved in two. Some are they ones to see something, the other one who saw nothing, yada, ya. Then you've got another one came up with different weaponry and you... Rather than just stay united, right, which gives you power to get something done, you instantly must muddy the waters, divide/conquer, divide/conquer, divide/conquer until they all can't get along with each other anymore. Then the whole thing falls away. You've just dissolved your problem, the opposition, you see.

It's the same thing with this coronavirus. And they're bringing politics into it, 'eh? As though all this is done supposedly just to get rid of Trump. Do you really believe that? Do you really believe that even Donald Trump is his own boss? Do you really believe that too? Do you really, really believe that?

I mean, we've seen the PNAC group run America for well over a generation or two. Easily. And publish their own, [Alan chuckles.] boasting about it in articles and so on. Hm. And there's no politician looking after the public. There is none. They'll all play to the galleries, as they say, and play to the crowd and the audience. That's what they do. They're so much prostitutes as politicians that they pretend they care just to get a voting base to back them. So, whatever they can shout and complain about is what they'll do. It's nothing to do with helping the public at all. N-n.

But they help themselves, don't they? They all end up being multimillionaires, on salaries of, what, $70 grand a year or something? It's... I guess they're just more thrifty, 'eh? But we live in a corrupt time, a terribly corrupt time and there's bosses above all these people, ALL of them. That can make or break them instantly too. Even using the press alone, they can break them with scandal if they want to, ANY of them. Or blackmail them into doing their bidding, ANY of them.

So, you've got to remember that it's vastly different than what you think. Look at all these new institutions that now are supposedly familiar, and they've been there for 10 to 15 years, so they're going to be called OLD institutions, that now run your life. Because all the big part of governing has been farmed out to private agencies. In every country. Then these private agencies are like international cartels, in chains, that run the world with policies and everything.

Well, did you vote for any of this? Of course not. So why even pretend they're Democratic? Why are we even pretending go through this farce? Hm? It's just rather sickening, isn't it? Terribly sickening.

So let's get into some of these articles here. And before I get off the topic here to do with chips and tattooing, hm, before I forget this here. Sometimes you have to just drawback and just...

silence your mind and think…

very easily…

easily, don't force anything…

Because most knowledge you already have inside your mind. It's astonishing how much you'll soak up with your bits and bytes of information. Is the ability to just pull it back into different areas and put them together quickly, until it becomes natural. That really makes a difference. And you can certainly do it if you try.

But you've got to still the mind first of all, out of all the nonsense and the hype and the noise out there, I call it noise of information. I used to give talks on data, how your manipulators, your behaviorists said that they would overload you with data on the Internet. That was another way of disabling you, naturally. Nevermind the fact you're directed off of what you're trying to search for into things which are kind of associated with it initially, and then they go off into different tangents until you're again, your counterintelligence, you've just been annihilated, diffused basically. That's how it's done.

But you've got to keep your mind just still initially and get the noise out of it, all the useless data. Because that's all it is, is just useless information, most of it. And concentrate on that which is important. You see.

If you have animals in the wild, they don't hang around, wild animals, if you start playing a brass band, or loud record even, y'know. They just want to get away to think. Because their survival as a wild animal depends on silence and thinking. You can't do it with the noise. They wouldn't even hear predator coming towards them because of the noise. Their mind would be so shocked out of its natural guarding stance in the wilderness. And we are the same.

You've never seen so much incredible data thrown your way by all media at the same time. As I've said before, the media literally were getting handouts from government for years now because folk didn't want to read it anymore, since the Levinson inquiry in Britain and the laws they came out with, until literally the media was, any real journalism was just neutered. There wasn't a lot to start with, but it was completely neutered then. Australia did the same thing. Canada did the same thing again. So since then no one cared about the trash that they put forward as news. Substituting celebrities for news, that's not news. No. That's entertainment. Who cares about them really, y'know?

That's when they gave you, again, the only thing... When they started coming back to life is when the people were putting out the warnings of this coming disease, early on, and the media were told to ignore it. Then they were told to hit back anybody, who was a conspiracy theorist, who was saying there was some terrible disease out there, just call them nut cases and conspiracy. That's standard routine basically intelligence type warfare, that's what they do. And the media is quite happy because they're getting paid for it.

Then of course at the press of a button, I remember putting a show out not that long ago, when the media all went into action. And they went overboard, beyond any conspiracy theorist, with TERROR, TERROR, FEAR, TERROR, you're all going to die!!! And it's been the same ever since, you see. Because they were told to do that, terrify the public. They did it.

Until the public literally are so obedient, as I've said, Peter Hitchens in that YouTube video has said that, that they're all shocked at how fast the folks all complied and gave up all the rights and freedoms and obeyed them. Ha. Really something, 'eh?

That's how training works awfully well, especially a good campaign of terror. And we've been through a terror campaign. It's still ongoing.

But think back on it, think back on it... all the rights you just tossed out the window. And you’re suddenly obeying silly cops. Silly cops telling you, you can't sit in your garden. Huh? You're only allowed out, if you take it literally verbatim, outside for one hour at a time for a walk, for exercise. You can't sit and have exercise if you are doing yoga. Which sometimes you’ll do that if you’re doing yoga. So, you've got all these ridiculous arguments with cops, from all over the place with different things happening. Or someone who can't walk that far, having a rest on a seat somewhere halfway between their place, where they live and the store to get their food... getting harassed by these thugs!

That's what they are, they're thugs, folks. Thugs. You understand that the police are no different than the military. There's laws they’re supposed to obey, and when something goes against good conscience or is detrimental to the public, they're supposed to refuse to do it. I hope you understand that. So, the ones who are not refusing it are thugs. And if they're thugs, they’ll do a lot worse than that when they're told to. You'd better get that through your heads too, this is coming down the pike.

And if this does, if this first breeze of this does fly over, remember, don't forget it because it will happen again, you've got to start working to start putting it back under law, right away, instead of these rules and regulations, that's not LAW. That's not law. A big difference. So, don't forget it, whatever happens.

Getting back to what I'm saying, think back to your propaganda you've had for years and years and years and years and years, you see. Because you're told what things in the past were horrible. And there's always, y’know, different groups and special interest groups, the ones against the communists for instance and the massive slaughter of people with the communist, or the Bolshevik revolution. Millions were slaughtered with it, including you know, shot in the head. There were even awfully good documentaries done on it if you can stomach them. The brutality was horrible.

Because again, Lenin dictated they must have a reign of terror. Just like the French Revolution. And they are connected by the way, it's not happenstance either. A reign of terror on the public to make them obey. Then they slaughtered everybody who could be a problem to them. They had the lists of everybody who could be a problem. Even though there were people who didn't know they were a problem yet, and students who just came from middle-class families, or even lower middle-class families, or religious people, lists and lists of them, they brought them into basements and shot them in the back of the head. And they ran it like a factory.

And folk walked in when they were given summons to go and see them. Guards didn't have to drag them into the basements. They... okay, okay, I'll obey authority.

But millions were slaughtered.

There was 60 million, maybe more, during the entire reign of the Soviet era, in all the Soviet bloc countries. I did the documentaries with Bulgaria and so on, I put them up years ago. I know the folk who survived it are still horrified yet, as they were digging up more mass graves. Because that's what they do, folks. That's the real world. Don't think it's some foreign thing from… that it would never happen to your country. Well, these people in these countries didn't believe that would ever happen in their countries either. And it DID! It did.

Now, here's the thing though. You think about Bill Gates and his amazing agendas and his depopulation, that he's vocal about. DEPOPULATION is the word, right. A la Julian Huxley type and eugenics, hm. And he’s got the money and power and the connections, because there's a big club at the top, you see, that's doing all this, a big club, he's not the only one there. That really run the world. They can sink countries overnight withdrawing money or causing catastrophes within countries through financial means. Quite easy to do.

Just like Soros did it, remember, he boasted about it and it was in the newspapers. He did an interview a few years afterwards, boasting about how he, I found a couple of my friends, he says, we all arranged to put in investments that would sink the country, and then Britain would have to bail itself out and borrow from the banks, [Alan chuckles.] them probably. But he boasted about it quite openly. And Gates is the same ilk, you see. All the real villains in the Bond movies were not countries, they were these rich strange folk who belong to these strange clubs, big clubs, very powerful people. That's closer to the truth, you see.

Now you take again Germany, that literally praised the work of the eugenicists in Britain and in London in the Darwinian associations. It's still there yet, the Eugenics Society. They changed its name twice, I think. A lot, I don't know, a lot of its publications were listed there in fact, you could read them. They tried to tone it down and change it a bit because of World War II, when Germany actually put it into practice, openly. Whereas the West and America, they'd got to the stage of forced sterilization and abortion for what they called certain families that just weren't up to par. Hitler went further along that road, it was scientific socialism, right. That's what it is, scientific socialism, and secular humanism, all tied together, you see, where the technocrats should just be efficient and get it all done and wipe the out the problems. Very simple. And they went ahead to do it.

Well, of course they gave, it gave eugenics a bad name. Julian Huxley wrote volumes of stuff trying to cover the Eugenics Society in Britain and trying to hide what they were really up to for a while. That's even been admitted to now by the same societies that still run eugenics in Britain. I've got the articles right in front of me in fact but it's too long to read.

‘Julian Huxley and the Continuity of Eugenics in Twentieth-century Britain’ - ncbi.nlm.nih.gov / 20 March 2015

You think about that. Now, you take in Bill Gates, who, now, I don't watch TV, 'eh, but apparently his face is everywhere as a savior. Because he wants you to use his vaccine down the road, you see. It's not just his. I think even Fauci has got some say in the thing too. Because now he, again, they all have their own private corporations that are worth millions. And Gates is kind of joined at the hip in some ways to Fauci as well, or vice versa. Gates has given massive funding towards Fauci's group. They're all involved. There's nobody here that is not compromised in some way, with the big, massive profit motive here. And other things as well obviously.

But you take, I can remember Bill Gates, there's articles there too where IBM used to, used to have lawsuits out there about people stealing their different programs, etc., and Microsoft was one of them apparently, y’know. Now, think about this. IBM are often claimed to be running the Cardex system of, for the German Nazi party at the time. Including all the people who went into forced labor and into the camps and all the rest of it. They had them what, supposedly? Tattooed, a lot of them.

Is it starting to, are you seeing a link here somewhere here? …tattoos in their arms? Isn't that exactly what Bill Gates is... I've read the last few weeks here one of his companies along with MIT working with a tattoo for the arm, that is your ID with your health and everything in it, kind of experiments perhaps, is that may be tied in with it too?

Ding, ding, is something connecting here, 'eh?

So, IBM, again, a system that went into, again, computerization, Bill Gates, computerization, and IBM before that was into business machines including just keeping tabs on people, data collection back then, World War II, for the people involved. And yeah, big tattoos, and on the arm. It's all recycled stuff back again. And people are NOT connecting the dots here. Huh?!?

And Bill Gates is population control. Okay? Population control, 'eh? Hm. Because there's too many of what? It would be the wrong people I suppose, 'eh. And he works with all these big foundations that work with population control and abortion and who knows what else, 'eh. But he wants to help the people.

Would you trust a guy like this?

Or any of these characters?

After all what you've learned here, 'eh, and what's freely available to read, it's not conspiracy theory here, this is published stuff including from MIT and from other articles praising Bill Gates for his ideas for a chip, y’know, implanted... in the vaccine and tattoos, etc. with your ID and all your medical information. Are you starting to get the picture here?

But he wants to depopulate the planet.

What part of this doesn't compute here? Hm?

And why is he getting all this incredible airtime everywhere? Is he just buying the airtime? Or does he have a hold over every country? You understand, the politicians do what they're told from more powerful sources than you or I. Well, how come this isn't getting tied into what it obviously is?

Hm-hm-hm. It's surprising. I'll tell you what I was thinking too, y'know, about the, you understand, this is the new Klondike as well, where your slavery for the future is guaranteed with the massive bank bailouts and the devaluation of currency that's inevitable right now, 'eh. You'll never ever recover that. Never, it's not meant to be recovered. Because you're going in, it's all to bring about the new system. You're being forced into it because you wouldn't go along with it before. You kept spending. You weren't sustainable. You kept consuming. Can't have that.

I thought too, I thought, my God, Bill Gates and computers, and data collection, and tattoos on your arms, and for the children too, 'eh. With all the ID, digital electronics, and records of their health, who they are, everything about them. It isn't just for your health folks, this is everything. And scannable by THE authorities, 'eh. [Alan chuckles.] This is horrible.

There's so many Syfy's were put out too, even like Fortress where they'd scan you and had you all chipped and everything else too. The same kind of thing, dystopic. Well, here's your dystopias, here right here in front of your face and you're seeing it being put across like evangelism of science. You've got evangelism of scientists in scientific tyranny that Bertrand Russell said that they'd bring in. Here we are. And they've trained you that it's going to be a wonderful thing. What a miracle that is, 'eh? A miracle from hell. So slickly done and folk can't see what it is.

[Alan laughing.] It's just astonishing. From someone who says he's for population control and reduction. M-hm.

He's just the front of a massive organization behind it all.

I thought t'myself too, about that other movie that was out, V for Vendetta, y'know. Entertaining as usual, as these kinds of movies always are. But again, it was a dystopic society. That could be presently here, 'eh? Same type, where you're locked in your homes in a sense, y'know, and you have a tyrannical authority that's an emergency government that's now permanent because it formed itself after a plague was released upon the public.

Of course, the whole plot of it is that it was deliberately released by the ones at the very top of this tyranny that took over under the pretense of saving you all. They would go after anybody that was a conspiracy theorist, meaning someone who understood what had happened and could write or talk about it, and they would imprison them and so on. The guy, V for Vendetta was one of the people who were made prisoners at one point. He was a problem. Like all the other prisoners. But most of them had their spirits broken.

There's a scene in it and where the doctor, one of the doctors that worked with this group at the top with experimental vaccines and so on, that killed most of them, 'eh, horribly. All for the, y'know, for the interest and the betterment of science. So, when the V character goes after her because he's got a mission to, you always get people who get vengeance in these movies. You never get it in real life, but they have vengeance in the movies.

Kind of like an opera, you know. I can remember operas at one time, certain ones who got played in Italy, and they didn't have good endings in one or two of them. And the people in the towns and the people that went there went rioting through the streets. So, they changed the end of the operas to make it a happy ending. Because that's what we want as humans, isn't it? Where justice, real justice is done, 'eh. But we never really get it in reality.

Getting back to V for Vendetta, he was after the doctor and she says, well yeah, these people eventually I came to despise them. They looked at the floor when they stumbled in for their shots and so on. And I began to despise them, she says, as not human. And that's how they see you eventually. That's what science sees you as, like another animal. The very fact that their spirits were broken made her feel disgusted all the more for them. And that's really how humans are. Especially the scientific crew and those who have authority over other people, that's unfortunately where it tends to go. It's very elitist. And if you're into eugenics in any way at all you're completely elitist, your viewpoints, and either way you'll discuss things that are elitist.

It's like when David Suzuki, and I put the talks up years ago, there's clips up there of him giving talks to students way back when he was young. And it's eugenics, he was, again, a eugenicists. He said that people are just maggots, he says. You can actually hear him; you can look up the link. He says, different layers of maggots, he says. At the top you have the people who are maggots and they excrete and the people down below them eat what's left and so on, and then they excrete. So, it's a trickle, like a trickle-down theory he was explaining, until the ones at the bottom, the great mass of just these other ones at the bottom were just the masses of maggots. That's how he explained it. It's very much, it goes along with the territory of being a eugenicist. They'll call themselves realists, by the way, and they'll try and rationalize everything that they do by saying, well look, this is self-evident and blah, blah, blah, you know.

I've mentioned before years ago I knew someone, casually really, as a woman who worked in school systems in Canada. Very pleasant, very nice person. But she'd somehow get pulled out every so often and go off and work for the United Nations and travel parts of the world. And I always wondered how she could even do that and still keep a job back home. I guess it's like being in the military in wartime, your job is kept open for you coming back, if you're essential or you're important. Put it that way, important is the word I guess. Because it really didn't happen in real life in wars before, the guys came back and found their jobs were all filled.

But anyway, she'd been off to China and getting all the, the real indoctrination about how they managed to keep the population down with the one child policies and how they'd literally pull the women in that were trying to keep it secret they were pregnant with the second child. They would drag, they had even trained the public, you see, in China at that time in the villages and towns if they saw a person with another bump there they would literally drag them out and drag them to the abortion clinics. They had the public trained to do it. It's easy to train the mob to turn on you.

She thought that was great, you see. I thought, what d'you mean. I says, what are you doing over there? She says, because we've got to use the same process everywhere else in the world. And I says, what d'you mean, you want to promote this even mandatory abortion if... She says, well it has to come, she says. I said, what on earth gave you the right to even do this and decide for the people? She says, well, somebody's got to do it.

These people see themselves as pragmatists. They believe that the easiest way to solve their problems is the shortest route to it. They have no qualms, you see, efficiency is a technocratic term, and the world is to go into technocracy run by experts for efficiency's sake. I gave talks in this years ago, many of them too. In-depth.

As I say, it's just astonishing, that folk don't know what's even going on around them. And who a lot of these people actually are even, they might even know themselves. And because you might like the person, you'll say, well that's, oh, well. You won't think bad of them. Which means you're not thinking bad of what they're actually up to. But if you really sit back and you… you put it in a movie form or a book form, or even a novel, you'll say what a bad character that is, y'know. That's how it is, folks.

There's a professor from Australia, I put up the links for his talks years ago too, where every year he'd pop up as a, and give his talk on the population and it's time that people stop retiring, they should just die at 65. He's talking about euthanasia, folks. Because after the last bank crash, isn't it amazing, 'eh, that's the answer to it? Just stop collecting pensions, then that money can be used for other things. And the younger people can get jobs then, he says. What a liar. Forget any excuse they give.

They are murderers, these people! They want to kill you all.

Because they aren't any jobs for the public! How can you have jobs, but before even this coronavirus, that they were already testing out Universal Basic Income, also called Universal Credit for some countries, and keep, oh, just staying at home and pay them just to be unemployed. So, their excuses fall flat. You can't have it both ways, die off and leave jobs for the young, when the jobs aren't there anyway. They're all over in the Far East where the cheap labor is. For your corporate leaders, 'eh.

So don't fall for this, yeah, let's all get tattoos, and by someone who's going to number you all and have all your data, and treat you like a child or a lab rat or an animal, and make sure you're up to date with every possible vaccine that's out there. Because that's what they want to do, folks. Huh? And you won't be the $6 million man, believe you me, that we can rebuild. No, no. Whatever they do, y’know, I... no way.

When you give up your right to decide what goes into your body, you're done for. You're done for.

And that's a right, folks. That's a right.

Don't forget, the vaccinations that they’re working on, they've all been working on, I've got all the articles by the characters at different universities, and all have their own businesses just like Fauci as well, same thing. Ones in London as well. And yeah, they're all working fervently. Because it's Klondike time, right? It's vaccine Klondike. The billions are getting tossed everywhere. If you get a handout, if you've got a scientific lab somewhere, oh yeah, sure, give me the billion and I'll try this and I'll try this and I'll try that, no problem. You want an app who can trace the public for you with the apps ‘eh, give us a few million for this and a few million for that. EVERY, every.... every piranha in the planet is in on this act here right now. Disgusting! Disgusting! To enslave their fellow humans for profit. N-n-n.

But yeah, I really am surprised [Alan chuckles.] if folk are watching this with Bill Gates every night of the week, without the fact of, who's putting him on? Hm? He's no expert! He's no expert in running the lives of other people! I didn't vote for him. Did you vote for him? Do you know anybody the votes for Bill Gates? And he's going to, what, give himself the authority to maybe do all this to you? And have your governments mandate it, you know, that you get it all done? Really?!

And these vaccines aren't just little vaccines. These types are going to change the cells in your body permanently. That's what they're for. [Alan laughing.]

Just like V for Vendetta, line them up there and they'll all look at the floor, any of them look you in the eye, just hit them in the head with a rifle butt, y'know, that's the peasants. Yep, that's what they do. It's not a bad movie in some of the areas it goes into. Also, too, they show you the standard technique of how they rule the public. They always have the guy at the top, I think it was John Hurt was the real bad leader type, who had arranged to have the disease released upon the public, killed a whole bunch of people, and that was the excuse he used to get into power.

Of course, they had a lot of PC stuff too, which was, you know, themes that really didn't even belong in it to be honest with you, y'know, with special interest groups of different kinds. As far as I'm concerned, you know, the public all, we're all part of the public, but the fact is, we can't even get together because of special interest groups, everybody's so divided into their own little thing, you see.

Sad, isn't it?... divide/conquer, divide/conquer, divide/conquer, there's no opposition to anything really.

But in V for Vendetta they also had below the chief guy they have the radio propaganda station giving you the news, what would they would do, and the guy who would practice in gesticulating and being loud in front of the camera and the microphone, [Alan's voice amplifying] how they're going to crush these enemies, and do his screaming and yelling like a, you always get a globalist type, it doesn't matter what, the CIA uses them too, that type of technique across the planet. So, it's the same technique over and over again, of how things are done. That's just... They follow a formula.

They have their scientific group as I say, the ones that experiment on prisoners and kill them and dissect them and study the dissection. Just like, that's what you do with lab animals too. All animals that are used in experiments are dissected afterwards. You can't allow live ones to go out. It's interesting, I've even got articles from quite a few years ago when people were actually caught from the lab in China, that Wuhan one, selling animals for food, huh, that had been used in experiments.

There's many ways to get stuff out of the laboratory in a country where people can't get a lot of money for certain kinds of food. Think about that too. There's eggs used too in the making of vaccines, you know that as well, 'eh. And they can have a lot of eggs left over, that have been partly [Alan chuckles.] processed along that route for vaccines. Imagine eating them later! So, there's a lot more to this than meets the eye, folks, y'know. When you have criminal activity and people are, [Alan chuckles.] there's so many folk have tendencies for criminality, you're always going to have things like this happening. Always.

It's no different than the Harvard professor, the one that was caught working for China. He worked also for the Department of Defense in the US, the Pentagon, departments for that too, biowarfare type thing. But he also worked for the Chinese. They knew this all along, for goodness sake. They knew what he was up to. Then he was arrested. It's astonishing what comes out.

And people forget it so quickly. Because again, then they overload you with data to take you off the targets of what's really happening. And to disable you with ridiculous stuff actually.

Divide/conquer, divide/conquer, divide/conquer.

If you just stuck to the basic facts, this thing that came out of you know where, this particular one, and China did admit it initially, y'know, pretty soon after it came out. Then you stick to, then you find out what it's for, these labs. You had other experts come out and say what these labs are for, they CREATE the viruses, well, just in case they should ever jump from an animal to human, we should do it first, you see, and that way we understand the process of it if it actually broke out, maybe we could create a vaccine before it happened.

Do you really believe, do you really swallow this rubbish? This is taught to them; they'll parrot this off to you. I remember doing the talks when they send out guys to look for the corpses, frozen corpses from 1918 flu pandemic. I remember doing the articles, I'd saved them from hard copy, then they did it again. Then one of them published in his newspapers and magazines, oh this is wonderful, this guy who was dug up, he found some frozen corpses in Alaska and some in Canada, north of Canada, and they've got live samples that were frozen of the lung tissue. Then of course they took it Fort Dietrich and other places and revived the darn thing! Then a few years later, they said my God, we've actually made it more potent now, just in case it should come back and jump and become more potent by itself, we've already done it!

Do you realize what you're dealing with here? And d'you realize what incredible temptations for people who run the world to get a hold of this stuff? Or do it, or even pay for this to happen? They're very ambitious people, and they really mean what they say. They really do. The one good, [Alan chuckles.] it's one good thing about the atom bomb, [Alan laughing.] the Cold War. The one good thing is, that the leaders of all sides didn't want to die either. You see? But with this thing, you see, if you create the darn thing and you have a quiet antidote somewhere, you can be immune to it. It's never going to affect you, and a select group of military, etc., and scientists and technocrats that will be around you. Y'know?

It's like that movie Moonraker. Remember Moonraker, the James Bond movie? Again, another multi billionaire type megalomaniac who found a kind of fungus from, I think it was from, was it a plant or something or… But it was deadly, and from Latin America, it was from I think an orchid of some kind. So, in Moonraker the mad businessman/scientist billionaire, multibillionaire, had created a space station way out too, and he was going to put all, two by twos, y'know like Noah's Ark type thing, the best physical types of humans, male and female. He was going to set off globes that would go back to the earth containing a type of very rare orchid, I think it was an orchid type thing, and it would mix within the atmosphere as it burned up. It wouldn't quite burn completely, and all these little spores would come down and kill and sterilize the general public.

Quite a plan, 'eh?! [Alan chuckles.] I'm sure there's more eugenicists today who just drool over that kind of idea. But that was the theme of this story. It's much the same again where the guys, there's too many people and the wrong kind of people and they're just basically useless eaters, etc. etc. All the better folks should have the world for themselves, you see. And nothing changes, 'eh, with this mantra. Because it's the same organization that's been around for an awful long time. I hope you understand that.

I hope you understand this is an old, old idea. Now they have the power to do it. Starting with the power of money. As I say, every country is now interdependent, as they call it, through free trade and all the treaties they signed on to which they should never have touched. But again, we're not run by your politicians. Your politicians are puppets that are told what to do. And you sign away all your rights to be self-sufficient. Look at us now, we can't even have facemasks. You got people trying to make facemasks at home now. You can't make anything.

In fact, you can't even get food anymore [Alan laughing.] in some places, there's a big story coming up. Because again, this is all part of the war, isn't it? That's what you get in warfare, when you get the food supply reduced. And now you're into that mandatory austerity that I gave talks about that folk laughed at. That was all signed into law years ago under sustainability by your own politicians. Well, here you are. You're not laughing now, are you?

So, I'll read a few of these articles here. Again, the spin that comes out when big money is involved has them all pointing in certain directions. Because they've been all told to get the blame away from anybody else, etc., right down to even where it came out from. [Alan chuckles.] Which negates the fact that China has said already that it came from the lab. Eventually they said that. Not that long ago.

Of course, we know that it took a route to the lab as well. It came from the US as well. It was pretty well given to them and then they were given money. That is true, they were given money by the US and other countries too, I have no doubt, to develop this stuff. Because the US, The gain of function, I have the articles here on the gain of function to do with coronaviruses. It was too dangerous for it to even do inside America, ‘eh, so let's give it to the Chinese, 'eh?

Here's something I just... Before I do forget this because sometimes you get ideas on the periphery of your mind, that just kind of revolve slowly around there and you see it once in a while. But I can remember again years ago reading on the air speeches, as I've said before, speeches from the president of China. Y'know, boring stuff. But what struck me was, I've mentioned this before, what struck me was his insistence that the West keep to the treaties that had been signed to do with population control.

It was never elaborated upon because it obviously is meant for the leaders in the countries to go, okay we signed this and we're implementing our own agenda. I hope you understand, that this is how they talk to each other, it's just that you don't read their stuff. It is boring stuff, but you'd be surprised the nuggets you get inside of it. Because you've never heard of these treaties getting signed that you must go along with depopulation too, etc., have you?

Now, let's say we make a movie here, 'eh, where a bunch, it's very biblical in a sense, a passage in the New Testament says that, I think it's in Revelation, and the people, and the Kings, leaders of the world, you see, the rich men, the Kings and so on, conspired against their own peoples. So, it's like a club that they'd formed, where the leaders are all in a private, really, like Spector or something like that, the James Bond thing again, they conspire against their own peoples. In other words, it's for nefarious purposes. Of course, the last thing you would ever think of because you're trained to be naïve forever, y'know, that your leaders are really there for you. But they're not there for you. And they're not really your leaders either. They are there to serve a much higher powers than you, and it's not what you would think of as a God in the sky or somewhere. It might be God's in a sense in the humanistic form that they are gods - that's what they think that they are - and in earthly form.

But think about it. Supposing everybody's working in this together, [Alan chuckles.] and a good novel, we're talking like a novel form, like a movie or something. So, these guys get together and sign on these quiet treaties and agreements with each other and promise not to tell their peoples back home. Then they go to work on figuring a way to depopulate. So one country gives another country the virus [Alan chuckles.] that's partly worked on already, right, and it gives them the funding to kick it off as well, some of the funding to start it up as well. Then you have other ones involved in the same group that work to get a vaccine for it, you see. Because they gotta protect themselves first, right. And it's a law in biowarfare that they're supposed to, every stage of the gain of function that they make something utterly lethal, you can take something that's very, very innocent and harmless, as most viruses are, y'know, and give it a gain of function, which really means you've now altered it to attack whatever target you've altered it for to attack, animal or human, and you're supposed to have an antidote to it at every stage of change of the gain of function, you see.

And you do find, yes, coincidently in real life you'll find people have patents on parts, including the inserts by the way. [Alan chuckles.] It's quite interesting. [Alan chuckles.] Who d'you see every day on TV, has got the patents for the inserts, putting inserts into it? Have you heard of the HIV inserts were put on the thing, or very similar, there are some of them will say, very similar if not identical to HIV inserts? You wouldn't believe who's got the patent on that, would you? So, you put that in it too, you see, with this private club at the top. And they would make an antidote to it as well.

But they would also achieve their goal of depopulation for the rest of the public. And so, cause a form of chaos for a while as they depopulate, and things go down and folk riot. They've already worked out how to take care of the rioters over a period of months, years or however long, and starve the rest as well, y'know. You could do it, awfully good movie.

By the way, while I'm talking about that too, remember Maurice Strong, this oddball Maurice Strong that was picked up by Rockefeller and put in charge of oilfields and trained in how the world really, really works, a la Rockefeller and his elite club that's part of the same big world club that still runs it all today. Maurice Strong actually talked about that, remember, he was at the World Economic Forum and the World Bank and all the rest of it, right, he was at the United Nations. He had the red-carpet treatment, literally the red carpet unrolled for him where he visited countries. No one would explain why he got this treatment. But I know his history too and his family history.

But anyway, Maurice Strong quipped, this is in the newspapers and magazines at the time because it was kind of unique in a sense, a guy of his status, where he never had a job in his life that he wasn't appointed to, y'know, by this club that he worked for. But he says, he was musing, and I think it was at the World Economic Forum. He says, what if a band of terrorists came in here and took over this place eventually and held the whole world to ransom, etc., financially, etc. unless certain conditions were made and blah, blah, blah? And he rambled on. It was almost like he was rambling about a dream that he'd love to have fulfilled in a sense about the general public and the planet and the changes they would bring in and all the rest of it through this takeover of the entire world's economy. And he mused that like a, what he was going to use it for a, like a novel he said, y'know, it would be a good book, a good novel to read.

Well, coming from a guy who attended all these big meetings and made decisions that could make or break nations, it was a bit scary to some people when they actually saw this coming out of this character. But that's what they muse about, these guys, y'know. Maurice Strong, who said after the Rio Summit and then out came the Treaty on Biodiversity where all the animals and insects have rights in treaties and that but the people have none at all. He was asked openly, he says, well there's nothing in it about right for any human, y'know. And he says, by the time you're finished, you'll wish you had the same rights as a tree.

Well, no one elected him to anything. They're just appointed, you see, by the people who really run the world. And then they put their drafted-out parchments out into every government to sign into law... on biodiversity and sustainability and depopulation and all the rest of it, folks.

Where on earth do you get this idea you've got rights and you've got democracy? Where on earth do you get that? Where do you get it from? Where have you been? Hm?

Now, the articles... [Alan laughing.] I'll get back to them again. I'll put some up tonight. And some YouTube's as well. Because it's nice to see what your prison wardens are doing as they go around your streets and order you indoors and say, how long have you been out now, we know you've been out for longer than one hour, I saw you already an hour ago. I'm not… I've got one doing that too. It's just disgusting, isn't it, treating you like little children with no rights at all, 'eh? And threatened to arrest you, hm?

A guy in Australia too got arrested because he took his car to the car wash. Then some cop thought it was a frivolous thing, it wasn't an essential thing to do. Well, the same with shopping, y'know, they go through your shopping and say, you don't need this, and you don't need that, you can only get food and medicine and essential things. And they decide what's essential, 'eh?

You're putting up with this stuff? Well, you know something? Eventually you're going to get all that you deserve. Because it's not going to just stop.

The big kicker is too, even if they go, I've got a funny feeling they're going to start easing up a bit, you see, because there's too many folks kicking back. And it's part of the agenda, the plan, they always have their little scenarios worked out, plan A, B, C, D, E and variations of them. If they folk get too ticked off and get cabin fever locked up at home, they'll start to say, oh we'll introduce certain, you can get out for a bit longer. Some folk can go back to work. Some folk can do... As they tried to, they've already tried to get you all to take your tattoos and your chips and get tracking things in your cell phones. Come on, for goodness' sake! That's what you do for animals, you brand animals, 'eh. Hm. Think about it.

And if you cave into it it's never going to stop. It's going to be more and more demands. You know that too. I hope you know that too. There's no such thing, you don't appease tyrants. You can't appease them. Because there's no satisfying them. You have to learn to keep walking backwards from now on if you go along with it.

But yeah, you're literally just getting into absolute disgusting tyranny. And it doesn't end. I think they'll probably say, well okay, we'll ease up a little bit, then we'll hit it harder again and give them scarier figures, oh it's come back and it's worse than ever before. To get you into, oh my God, well okay, it's going to be into next year then. And maybe the year after that. Then you see, that's how they, they might just play it that way. They might just do that. And it will be agreed upon at the very top, y'know. Until you cave in and just do what they tell you. And hand your body over, ha, for scientific experiments. Which are not really experiments, because they'll know exactly what's it's going to do, eventually.

One article says…

SECRET ORIGIN Coronavirus outbreak ‘could have started in SEPTEMBER’, (A: …last year.)

scientists warn

thesun.co.uk / 17 April 2020

Scientists say the initial outbreak occurred in a window between September 13 and December 7

(A: It's funny how they, I love how these scientist come out with these, like, September 13, December 7, hm.)

However, researchers from the University of Cambridge have now claimed the outbreak could have begun six months ago - and much further south than the central Chinese city of Wuhan.

(A: Give them money and they can, give me and I'll give you a thousand guesses a day if you want, I could make that up, yeah, no problem at all. Always got their hands out for it.)

The team analysed the different strains of coronavirus using a phylogenetic network – a mathematical process that can map the global movement of organisms through the mutation of their genes.

(A: These folks are lost with their computers and all these programs that give you scary scenarios, 'eh. And lots of guesses. It sounds better having guesses coming from a computer, well, it's scientific you know, it's a scientific answer. I-yi-yi. I'll put this one up too. And as they go through their findings...)

It has been found to share 96 per cent identical genes with a coronavirus isolated by Chinese scientists from bat droppings in the southwestern province of Yunnan in 2013.

They were bringing bats in from all these areas, folks. It's already been published elsewhere from different places. Of course, they were. There's thousands of different kinds of bats at that area apparently in the southern part of China. An endless supply of coronaviruses, of all kinds in fact. And I'm sure given gain of function, you could probably make them all deadly to humans or whatever species you want them to be deadly to. Imagine paying folk to get that done, 'eh? Can you make that deadly? Okay. You know, just in case it ever did it by itself.

Coronavirus has been in California 'a lot longer than we believed' with cases as early as DECEMBER - dailymail.co.uk / 12 April 2020

Another article here's to do with, the Business Insider says that…

British scientists say the coronavirus outbreak may have started as early as September - businessinsider.com / 17 April 2020

Again, that one’s also got it there and then you've got this one from Nature Magazine.

Chinese infiltration of US labs caught science agencies off guard

nature.com / 20 Nov 2019

The US Department of Energy headquarters in Washington DC says the US science agencies’ slow response to the threat posed by China’s talent-recruitment programmes has allowed China to divert US government funds and private-sector technology to further its military and economic goals, a US Senate panel has found.

Its report, which lawmakers discussed at a hearing on 19 November, describes new details of China’s efforts to infiltrate US research institutions — including contract provisions requiring participating scientists to work on behalf of China.

(A: That's that China's Thousand Talent Plan it's called where they recruit scientists and professionals from different countries and different sciences and so on.)

The analysis focused on China's Thousand Talents Plan, the most prestigious of more than 200 programmes that are designed to recruit leading academics and promote domestic research.

Despite the fact that many of these programmes were hiding in plain sight, federal science agencies were caught off guard and must now coordinate efforts to protect the US research enterprise, lawmakers said.

(A: This article was done on 20 November 2019.)

It's just, y'know, do you really think that no one has got a clue what's going on? Do you really believe that? They know everything YOU're doing. They know everything, every thought in your head pretty well, if you voice it on Facebook or you chat and you're doing twitters and all the rest of it. They've got you pretty well down pat, exactly what you're thinking and doing and all the rest of it.

But do you really believe they just don't know? They just don't know all these massive agencies that have got football fields and football fields and football fields of acreage of massive buildings storing all the data of the whole planet? And duplicated and triplicated by the NSA and the FBI and the CIA and God knows what else, in the US alone, they just don't know what's happening? Do you really believe that rubbish?

I'd rather just accept the fact there's a big [Alan chuckles.] a big [Alan chuckles.] conspiracy at the top where they're going to, they're all helping each other, conspiring as they said, y'know, against their own peoples. Because they all have signed on, they've got all countries signed on to sustainability and depopulation, folks.

And again, these sharks, these utter vultures…

Apple, Google to harness phones for tracking virus infections

timesofisrael.com / 11 April 2020

Companies to add new software to their smartphones to make it easier to locate those who may have been exposed to coronavirus; say their plan factors in user privacy, security.

(A: Again, getting back to that article by Bill Gates, y’know, back in George Magazine, in what, 1997. He said the same thing about security, and he says, and freedoms and how the Americans, it would be hard to get them to give up their freedoms, he said, that they wouldn’t do it voluntarily. Maybe with a crisis of some kind, he says, or terrorism, they give up their freedoms. This is all discussed in an interview, ‘eh, y'know, a casual interview.)

(A: So here we are again and these vultures as I say and pariahs are all going in for this massive, again, Klondike, this financial Klondike where they just stick their hands out to literally, literally bury their own populations... with the disgusting scientific slavery that the shackles of smart phones and their apps to track and trace, and right down to even, and they'll have, they've got trackers for Australia in different places. Trackers.)

(A: You saw them in China with the big nets, they go out, if a person doesn't voluntarily bring themselves in, they net them. Well, this is where this is to go to, you see. I hope you're understanding where it's all, it's all connected, folks. It's one agenda for the planet here. So here they are, all to help you, it's all to help, you see. So…)

Apple and Google launched a major joint effort to leverage smartphone technology to contain the COVID-19 pandemic.

… and it's going to contain the Covid 19 pandemic. Who's kidding who? Meanwhile the countries are still bringing people in from all over the planet. Canada's bringing them in from across Africa now. People who have got dual citizenship, but they prefer to live in the countries that they actually came from in the first place, cheaper, but Canada's bringing them in from some of the most heavily infected areas. And from India too. Right, [Alan chuckles.] and giving them millions of bucks to help them come back. Well, how can you have a quarantine when you're going to still keep bringing people in from heavily infected areas?

You see, if things don't make sense, there's a different agenda on the go. There really is, folks. [Alan chuckles.] I hope you understand that. People are not stupid at the top. Don't ever… They always want you to think they just slipped up. But there's no slip-ups here. The whole nations are locked down and going bankrupt and no work, let's bring more people into the country from infected areas.

Why are we locked up then if they're still bringing folk in? Well, they're going to promise to go home and quarantine. And if they don't have a place to go and quarantine at home? You see, a lot of them don't because they're living outside the countries, they don't live here. They came from India a lot of them, or Africa, and they can get a pension very quickly and go back and make more money over there, even get funded for different programs. And I'm sure Mr. Gates will be connected with a lot of them too, in those countries. A lot of them are actually, that's what Canada does, we recruit a lot of them and fund them to go back to push these agendas. It's just astonishing. Nothing is ever what it claims it is, folks. I hope you understand that.

So yeah, they mention Apple and the rest of them. They're all in it too. This one here mentions Israel. Israel's getting into it. Everybody gets into it because there's big, big money and when the government's supposedly pretending to panic by tossing billions across the planet here, billions, you wouldn't believe the money that they're getting even for a simple app. You could probably retire for the rest of your life and live in utter, utter luxury. Huh? Anyway…

The technology works by harnessing short-range Bluetooth signals. Using the Apple-Google technology, contact-tracing apps would gather a record of other phones which came into close proximity.

(A: Remember, they used the same thing with some of the apps, and they found folk were getting stopped, it was a few years back. Oh, we're finding people with the same phones that you've got, and folk were getting literally harassed by people just turning up, knowing where they were going and the whole thing, or where they were. It was a STALKER TOOL. Well, this is just the same thing with a different name on it. We'll find it's going to the same phone. Well, this will find anybody who's been near anybody else with this thing.)

Software developers have already created such apps in countries including Singapore and China to try to contain the pandemic.

(A: You contain the pandemic by stopping folk moving into your countries. Even if they ARE citizens, you can't let folk in. You either do something completely and properly or not at all. It's pointless doing it like piecemeal. So, there's no intention of stopping it that way. But it's definitely intended to crash the economy and retrain the public into the new world order as they call it. And they do call it ‘the new world order’ by the way.)

In Europe, the Czech Republic says it will release such an app after Easter. Britain, Germany and Italy are also developing their own tracing tools.

In Israel, the Shin Bet internal security agency has carried out a controversial mass surveillance campaign to monitor the coronavirus spread and issue quarantine orders using private cell phone data.

(A: Everybody's ticked off with them. But this is the agenda for the world, 'eh. This is the agenda for the world.)

The tracking, which uses cell phone location data, credit card purchase data and other digital information, aims to alert and order into quarantine people who were within two meters, for 10 minutes or more, of someone infected with the virus within the past two weeks.

There's another one too by the way, I think it's Ford Motor Company has developed some kind of buzzer that goes off, I think you wear the thing, I don't know if it's a bracelet or what it Is at your workstation, and goes off if you break the 2 meter barrier to the person nearest you.

D'you realize there's nothing, where is the humanity? This is inhumane. All of this is inhumane, folks. And I was thinking about that, I was thinking, again, I get these little pictures sometimes in your mind, that's how, it's good to have, you picture things, when you read things too. I thought of the movie Metropolis, y'know, where they also have the working population as slaves. They're trudging drearily in the masses, the masses, the mass workers, step-by-step, and everything's been ordered by diktats in time and efficiency, you see, because technocracy wants efficiency. It strips you of all humanity or human needs and so on until you're just another machine yourself and when you're broken and done for, they just toss you way.

Well, I was thinking about that too and there's Ford putting these things in, you've got to wear the darn thing. And each time a baaaaaang-baaaaaaaang will go off, you don't, you'll jump, and you'll jump like with a… No doubt too, I hope you all sue Ford if your hands are in anything that’s caught in the machinery or anything. I hope you start to do that, folks. Because you definitely will jump when you hear this baaaaaa-baaaaaaa, this hooter going off, 'eh. How stupid, 'eh? But that's, it tells you what they really think of the people. This is what you, they did with Pavlov's dogs. And do you realize too there's a psychological thing working, I'll get into that in a second, the psychological techniques that's getting worked with Pavlovian style here.

But back to the buzzer, and Metropolis, then I thought about the Brick in the Wall, Pink Floyd, y’know, and the movie version of it too. But the song, y'know, and then it had a bit in the song and in the little video that went with it in the movie, a cartoon type thing. Of course, it's a real actor playing headmaster. Britain used to have these vicious headmasters at one time. They really ruled you literally with leather straps, they'd whack you with on the hands or elsewhere. And canes and so on. That's how it used to be and so on in some of the schools. A lot of the schools actually. It was very militaristic.

In Pink Floyd's The Wall they have the Scottish guy, the headmaster, and he shouts, how do you expect, what was it, to be healthy or to grow up, if you don't eat your porridge, he says, you've got to eat your porridge, and he’s screaming at them and the whole bit. And when I saw that thing with Ford, I thought, I thought of that cartoon. And I thought of the headmaster too shouting at the workers there, how do you expect to stay safe if you don't stay 2 meters apart! Just like that, the same kind of thing you see. It's the same thing. You're a brick in the wall, 'eh, do what you're told. Obey the bullies, the real abusers, hm.

And getting into the Pavlovian stuff. Again, counterintelligence must get people off, number one, stop them from being unified on anything. Because if they're unified there's power there. Create all kinds of little differences, start off with silly things, and then promote, and even pay folk to join it. They do that too at the top, they give you the leaders to follow. Then you split up the main group until it's all fragmented and there's no power left, you see, to complain and do something. That happened with 9/11 and the Truth Movement and different movements that came out of that too. That's counterintelligence, that's what you do with it.

But have you noticed how many articles with professionals, 'eh, wear masks, don't wear masks? And for months you had, don't wear masks, by the top guys saying, don't wear facemasks, y'know, you don't need them, only doctors need them. The facemasks will know it's a doctor wearing it, I guess that's the logic behind it, you see.

Meanwhile all the masks that were in your own country were getting sold off back to China. [Alan chuckles.] There was this [Alan chuckles.] woman with a YouTube that was selling create loads of the stuff back to China, big bucks, and leaving nothing in the US. Same thing what's happening in Canada and in Australia.

But the thing is, no, don't wear facemasks. No, you're supposed to all be vulnerable to it and spread it too, nevermind inhale it, so don't do it. Then suddenly it's ordered, oh do it, do it, some places are saying do it, right?

So before, you've got police ready to hit you in the head with a baton if you even had a mask on, you see, like, we want to see your face, you know, for cameras and everything, we want to see your face. But I'm trying to protect myself and stay alive. It doesn't matter, do what you're told. You see, eat your porridge. Then you get into the same cops, where's your facemask? Y'know? You see, your Pavlov, this is a big experiment going on here to destroy your ability to discern and decide for yourself with logic, using logic. This is all Pavlovian technique. This was used in Russia, Soviet Russia. It wasn't to, they weren't trying to find out what they could do with dogs. They were trying to find out what they could do with humans. And they had human experimentation going on big time too by the way. All the countries in the West shared that information because they love all these techniques of control and so on.

But anyway, when you’re assaulted by authority figures demanding, and who put you in fear, and threats of force, or fines or imprisonment, right, for either doing something one day and not doing it the next, and vice versa, until you literally can't make a... That's Pavlovian technique. The dog was trained initially when the bell rung to go to this corner, and there's the food, it would come out, you see. And it would go on for a little while, and one ring would happened and the dog would do it. Then one day the ring would go, he'd go over there, but as he was going over there it would get shocked before he got the food.

So, here's the logic, I'm doing the right thing, I’m being good, and zap. Right. And then you show them where the food is, put it at the other end of the cage and they'll go there, and do that for a little while, and then zzzzzzzzzzzzap again, you see. Until eventually the dog doesn't know where to stand. Utterly neurotic, total breakdown.

This is psychological warfare. I hope you understand it. This is really happening. I've been reading some of the reports, the masses of information. Again, the billions and millions are also going into studying you like you would not believe right now. They've always done this but now is a real boom in information for them and they're making the best of it. They're just astonished as they're studying you all. And oh, how they're all, if they can conflict the information from the SAME experts often too, in the same articles you're getting two opposite opinions on anything from supposedly the world's experts. All deliberately put out there until you can't make your mind up or discern anything for yourself.   This is pure Pavlovian psychological warfare. That's what's happening, folks. I hope you understand it. I really do. Because that really, really is what's happening.

Now another one here too…

Spies are already in your phone. A highly controversial private firm may be next.

timesofisrael.com / 6 April 2020

(A: Again, it's about the NSO group from Israel. And this is from Israel, this article. It says…)

With unemployment at 25 percent, and most Israelis confined to a hundred-meter radius of their homes amid the coronavirus pandemic, few have paid much attention to the government’s program to track coronavirus patients using cellphone data.

In a survey last week by the Israel Democracy Institute, 63% of Jewish Israelis and 38% of Arab Israelis said they trust the Shin Bet and other government bodies to use the cellphone data they collect responsibly, and only for purposes of preventing contagion.

(A: So, this is… don't forget that these kind of polls or studies are propaganda studies to convince the rest. Most folk follow... Oh well if 63% says it's going to join, then I'll do the same. That's what polls are even FOR. They're meant to convince people. And people throw their weight behind it, they join them, y'know. Psychology again. Anyway, it says…)

But Tehilla Shwartz Altshuler, a senior fellow at the Israel Democracy Institute, and head of the institute's program on Democracy in the Information Age, believes this trust is misplaced. She warns that amid the chaos and confusion of the coronavirus pandemic, Israel's government has undertaken "an extreme and massive human rights breach, allowing a secret service which is the most non-transparent body you can imagine, to gain access to all the digital personal data of Israeli citizens."

Not only has the Shin Bet been given unprecedented access to the data of all Israelis, including their location history and information about their phone calls, text messages and websites they visited, says Shwartz Altshuler.

Mind you too, don't forget too, they're already monitoring all your phone calls too, if you mention something about headaches or anything of the symptoms, you might just get a visit. I hope you understand that. This is the old program where it's activated by certain words, algorithms looking for certain words in use and sequencing of words too. This is all getting shoved into the smart apps and so on for your smart phones. Yep.

One day you might get a smart net coming over your head, [Alan chuckles.] smart net over you're not so smart head, 'eh. It might just happen.

This article too, Wikipedia, you can look it up yourself, the NSO Group. It's got a dirty name and…

NSO Group - en.wikipedia.org

I think it's all guys who have worked with the intelligence agencies for Israel. They've been in trouble before, so-called trouble, for really invading other countries' territories too. They'll sell the information data, the information gathering data to the highest bidders at times too apparently. That's who… I think they even had vans in some countries that were spotted at one point, these white vans were just loaded with equipment in other countries. But anyway…

Contact tracing for coronavirus (COVID-19): how it's done in Queensland (A: Australia.)

health.qld.gov.au / 23 March 2020

When a person in Queensland is diagnosed with an infectious disease like coronavirus (COVID-19), we use contact tracing to figure out where they caught the virus and who they might have passed it on to.

Contact tracing is not really anything new for those who don't know that. They used to use it when they really did go after to try to stop diseases spreading, they would use it. I think they still use it for sexually transmitted diseases, for gonorrhea and syphilis and things like that. It's interesting too that I can remember when the AIDS thing really broke out, and because it was so... became politicized, so it was the only one that can be passed on sexually that they wouldn't go and trace because it invaded certain people's privacies. And that was a big stink at the time. It was a break in routine and formula for handling diseases that were pretty deadly diseases, you see, untreated.

So, this is just, this is a big move on now because they've got the cell phones and they're going to start using it like, almost like, what d'you call it? Well, it is a SPY, of course it's a spy that you're going to be locked onto before you get your, eventually get your chip and all that for Gate's tattoos, etc. But that's where you're going with it all. You buy your chains, I keep telling you, you buy everything yourself, don't you? We'll, it's so convenient.

Now, here's, this is Queensland now, I'll put this article up about Queensland as an example. Because they tell you how they go through it with tracing, etc. How they can trace them back to confirmed cases and so on, try to find the root and how many folks got infected by even one person for instance. Which is kind of ridiculous if they're bringing people back in that were in the countries that, from highly infected areas. It's rather ridiculous. And most folk don't show temperature at the time. A lot of folk too won't even know they've got it.

What gets me is that if most folk have had it very mildly or not at all, there are no symptoms at all, most people, how many folk end up being carriers of it? I hope you understand that certain people often are asymptomatic carriers, that are like all permanent, hm? For most viruses it might mutate within them and change again, and hopefully get completely harmless. But you've got all these other factors that they're not even talking about here. It's quite amazing. And then…

Convincing Australians to use government-sponsored coronavirus-tracing app a tough ask

abc.net.au / 15 April 2020

(A: Not an ask, it's a dictate from them.)

We live in the world of big data. It's a world where governments and private companies know more about us than ever — and we've never been more suspicious of them.

(A: No kidding, I wonder why?)

While many are oblivious or uncaring of the data being amassed about them through every click of the mouse, every notification "liked" or every online purchase, some citizens fear an Orwellian future where state collection of information leads to repression.

And if it's not governments' use of that information that triggers suspicion, there's the omnipresence of tech giants who've become expert at monetising users' data.

(A: Then they go through community anxiety and how to stem it...)

Stemming community anxiety about the use and misuse of personal data...

(A: So, the federal governments work of course trying to make you all calm about it, and don't be so suspicious that we know everything about you, y'know.)

With a view to keeping a closer eye on the coronavirus outbreak, the Prime Minister's tasked development of a smartphone app to help monitor the daily interactions of Australians.

It's not an original concept. China, Hong Kong, Russia and Singapore all have COVID-19 apps.

(A: Well, you see, there's the standard thing they get you to go along with... well, they're using it in all these countries. Well, in some countries they take the heads off people in public, should we do the same here? You see, that's no argument at all. But they always use that when the public don't want to go along with something... well, they did that in this country, and they do it that country...)

But the Government needs at least 40 per cent of the public to voluntarily sign up in order for it to be effective. And that's going to be a significant challenge.

(A: Well, I don't know. I think most folk will probably, oh well, you know, it’s free, you don't have to pay for it. Yep. Even in Singapore, which it says...)

In Singapore, which perhaps has a more compliant and obedient population, just 20 per cent of people have signed up to the TraceTogether app.

Well, they're hardly more obedient because they're showing they really don't want it even there. And they really are scientifically socialized, social experiment in Singapore. They don't know that, but they are. They were picked for it long ago. Well studied too.

Then Moscow is launching an app as well to track movements of people in the capital.

Coronavirus: Moscow rolls out patient-tracking app

bbc.com / 1 April 2020

Moscow is launching an app to track the movements of people in the capital diagnosed with coronavirus, who have been ordered to stay at home.

The city's IT chief said the service would become operational on Thursday.

Germany is expected to announce its own app that ties into the scheme shortly.

...etc. etc., worldwide, same agenda, same agenda, 'eh? What would have happened if we had no phones? We wouldn't be talking about this nonsense of monitoring everybody, 'eh? Wouldn't it? But you remember, once these apps are out there, it's to collect ALL data on you, and you'll give them permission eventually to accept this taking all data about you and it will be normal. Everything is getting normalized. New normals, hm? I remember talking about new normals years ago, until folks started using the same term. Because I went through the whole technique of creating new normal, and here we are living through it all.

Illinois county must hand over coronavirus patients' names to police, judge rules

foxnews.com / 15 April 2020

(A: ...judge rules, that's the interesting part too.)

An Illinois judge has ordered that the McHenry County Health Department hand the names of those who have tested positive to coronavirus over to police.

(A: And I guess there's no symptoms, right. You think you go in there just to do these little drive-in things, just to put you at ease. No, there's other things behind this, folks, believe you me.)

The Health Department in McHenry, approximately an hour outside Chicago, had originally refused to hand over the names, prosecutors said. Health departments typically cite privacy concerns in withholding such information, specifically the federal Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act. (A: That’s what they’ve got there specifically, the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act.)

State’s Attorney Patrick Kenneally’s office filed a lawsuit last week on behalf of Sheriff Bill Prim, who had asked the Health Department to provide the names and addresses of those infected to 911 dispatchers. The information would be relayed to officers assigned to each call so that they could take necessary health precautions.

“This was a no-brainer for the Health Department, a common-sense, confidential, and entirely lawful way they could have worked collaboratively with police departments to assist in enhancing the safety of officers and the community in these dangerous times, and they strangely refused,” Kenneally said, (A: …strangely refused? Really?) according to the Chicago Tribune.

“The fact that we had to spend precious time and public resources, clearly best spent elsewhere in this difficult time, to get a court order in our favor is beyond disappointing,” Kenneally continued.

Do you realize too, why not just expand it, which it will, hm? When you've got all this data handed out and you've got, you're track and traced, it's on your cell phone and all these different agencies have access, they'll have your whole history there. Suppose folk, what about folk who have different kinds of hepatitis? or have had it in the past? How about the people who got certain types of herpes infections, hm? How about folk with AIDS? Etc. etc.? Do you see where it's all going to go? I hope you understand what I'm saying here. Hm? It's not going to stop here. That's your entire health record here, stamped and monitored, 'eh.

An army of coronavirus tracers takes shape in Massachusetts - boston.com / 16 April 2020

Here you go with the food.   Well, what happens when you stop everything working, 'eh, and there's no money and blah, blah, blah, blah, blah? and you're being cut back with the food supply and yada, yada, yada?...

COVID-19 to have 'immediate and drastic' impact on Canadian meat supply: industry group

ctvnews.ca / 13 April 2020

(A: Well, that's because, I've already read the articles from the last crash when they said they wanted to do away with meat altogether. And so, they stop you eating it, right? So, it's a really great thing for them now, they're really happy.)

TORONTO -- Some of North America’s largest meat producers have been forced to close their plants or reduce production amid the spread of the novel coronavirus, prompting industry leaders to warn of “immediate and drastic” effects on Canada’s supply chain.

Beef processing capabilities have been reduced at a number of facilities in Canada and the U.S., including a temporary reduction at a Cargill meat plant in High River, Alberta., where dozens of employees have tested positive for COVID-19.

“This single facility represents just over one-third of Canada’s total processing capability, so the impacts to the Canadian beef industry are expected to be immediate and drastic.”

So, I guess that’s it, and they’re getting the whole agenda through very quickly, the meatless society and Bill Gates' rotten burgers and stuff, which have got about a thousand chemicals in it. Here’s another article…

Why Americans may see a meat shortage during the coronavirus outbreak

abc7chicago.com / 17 April 2020

Some massive meat processing plants have closed at least temporarily because their workers were sickened by the new coronavirus.

The meat supply chain is especially vulnerable since processing is increasingly done at massive plants that butcher tens of thousands of animals daily, so the closure of even a few big ones can quickly be felt by customers.

It goes on and on and on. You've got to understand too, there's a lot of folk that don't even... if the folk who drive it are sick, or are told to stay home, no one's driving this stuff to delivery, etc. etc. etc. etc. etc., right. And a lot of these cattle too have other kinds of feed than just eating out in fields, these days, and what happens when that production stops too? On and on it goes. It's a domino effect. Inevitable. Another article…

Coronavirus may cause some food shortages, warns government task force

news.yahoo.com / 3 April 2020

(A: Governments are now warning, and they've got their taskforces, oh my God, they got taskforces on, oh my God, we didn't realize this might happen. Oh, wow. Do you really believe that nonsense?)

WASHINGTON — The nation could begin to see food shortages for some products if the people working on the supply chain lack personal protective equipment, warns an internal Trump administration document obtained by Yahoo News.

Empty supermarket shelves have become one of the most jarring images of the coronavirus pandemic.

It goes on and on here. But what do you expect is going to happen? They're already dumping meat and potatoes and everything else, and all you're left with is the heavily, heavily, heavily soaked industry of vegetables today. Unless you can afford the purely organic. And again, you can't even get purely organic now unless you grow them yourself, maybe. And even then, you've got all the, hhhhh, polluted, certain polluted types of clouds raining down on you and your crops and so on.

But anyway, most of the stuff now, seeds and everything is owned by certain companies with the terminator genes, etc. built into them. It's amazing how it's all worked in advance, 'eh, so you just can't even save seed anymore. You could almost swear someone had planned it all, 'eh, y'know, you could almost think that, wouldn't you? if you were kind of suspicious about things, wouldn't you? And here you are when you need all these freedoms and rights etc. and you just don't have them. It's rather, hm, what can you say? Interesting at least. So…

Global Food Supply Chains Beginning to Erode, Crisis Looms?

goldtelegraph.com / 13 April 2020

It was announced yesterday; the world's biggest pork producer is closing a primary U.S plant indefinitely after a coronavirus outbreak amongst employees.

Smithfield Foods Inc. will halt its pork-processing facility in South Dakota. The company also warned that closures across the country are taking American meat supplies "perilously close to the edge" of shortfalls.

(A: Well, of course it is. It's obviously meant to happen because what else? If you also stop all the workers, and the drivers, and the facilities where you store stuff, etc. etc., there you go.)

However, there is a dramatic difference today. Prices are not dropping; in fact, grocery bills are getting more expensive by the day. Supply chains are being disrupted due to the transportation and of course processing of a vast selection of foods.

So, everybody's making a profit off misery. That's part of the human condition that always leads to hell, a living hell, y'know. Australians also…

Australians risk shortage of basic grocery items amid coronavirus - news.com.au / 12 April 2020

This is a good one, 'eh? You know, there's a whole bunch of… in wartime scenario... I was watching some old propaganda stuff from Britain, an old disc I have there with documentaries of propaganda from World War II, on rationing. It was really interesting. They show you 2 inches of butter for a person a week, that's what you got, 2 inches of butter. And a bit of meat that you could have probably measured with the size of your thumb at times, you know, starvation diet. That was the white privilege back then... [Alan clears his throat.] where folks literally into the 1950s and 1960s had rickets, the children. The working class of course. But this article here says, and they're giving you the same…

You see, they're giving you the same propaganda, how to cook this and how to do that. The same stuff that George Orwell talked about. Because he had a show on the BBC radio during the war and he said, I used to have to try and convince the public that previously discarded items of food, certain beef and things like that, things that were thought unfit for human consumption, he had to convince them that this was the best food they ever had. They put out articles saying that the people in Britain had never been healthier. I was watching it last night; it was quite fascinating.

That's what you're seeing again as they unroll the same trash and the same recipes to you, to make you… And then they'll come out and say, you've never been fitter than you are today, y'know, as you watch all these different diseases come back again and your bones start to go all wonky in the children's legs, etc., and the keep telling you how wonderful it is. The same kind of thing. The same rubbish. We're pretty well there.

But yeah, now they're creating all these new ones again for you, how to sunbathe, etc., y' know, so…

Italian Beachtowns Plan "Plexiglass Cages" To Enforce Safe-Sunbathing This Summer

zerohedge.com / 16 April 2020

(A: Right? Can you believe this? Can you imagine being baked inside a Plexiglas cage? You'll die. So...)

Once the quarantine is over, there will be time to explore and observe how society has evolved rapidly. (A: No kidding you.)   Well, by the time everyone makes it out of the house this summer, we all might be ushered back into quarantine by fall as the second coronavirus wave could be fast approaching.

...you see, that's how they're going to play it here, same thing. You wait and see. Because this is to last for at least one year, maybe into the next year, and maybe even the following year. And then it's permanent. Then you'll have to have your ID and prove you had all your vaccinations, your recent vaccinations before you can venture out. Or you'll get, you know, tasered or worse. If you allow this to even continue any further. Never mind poverty, massive poverty. This will be worse than the poverty of the 1920s, folks. It will. Another article…

Trudeau defends new flights bringing Canadians home from across the globe

thestar.com / 1 April 2020

(A: This is how they word it, bring Canadians home. Well, these are folks who have been LIVING almost like permanently across in other countries like India and Africa. That generally came into Canada from there, three years in the citizenship, maybe a little work and some kind of pension, or work, or they go back with missions into Third World countries. That's often what they use them for. So, he says…)

OTTAWA—Prime Minister Justin Trudeau says Canadians being flown home from abroad must subject themselves to “rigorous” and mandatory 14-day self-isolation.

(A: Well, who’s going to watch them? Nobody. This has happened already ...as we're all locked down in prisons, 'eh? Right? So, it says…)

Global Affairs Canada says the planes will arrive from Algeria, Ecuador, Senegal, Democratic Republic of Congo, Hungary and Spain. (A: …and other countries too.)

The department says the government is planning more flights from Ethiopia, Burkina Faso, Cote d’Ivoire, Peru, Algeria, Poland and Pakistan in the coming days.

Plans are also being made for several fights from India, starting on April 4 and continuing for the next four days until April 7. (A: That’s actually still on the go. And it says here…)

The government says it has approved 449 loans worth $1.4 million under its emergency program for Canadians abroad and is processing another 900 loan applications.

You'd be surprised how Canada is working for a lot of foundations, a lot of these people are in foundations, and the Gates types and other ones too across the world. To change the cultures and [Alan chuckles.] the systems and the populations maybe of the different countries as well. They send them out there. They're all over the place. It's like a training place for them here in Canada. So, there's the money, $1.4 million emergency program for Canadians abroad. N-n-n.

Meanwhile there's no, there's nothing, if you don't have someone to get your groceries for you, if you're high-risk, I guess you just starve here. Because nothing's been said as to what to do or who's going to help you or anything. That's just how it really is. So, you just put yourself at risk and just, if you live here, it's just tough cheese if you get it if you have to go out and shop for yourself. The folk in the country have got nothing given to them at all, no help whatsoever.

And...

U.S. government gave $3.7million grant (A: Of course, you all know that one.) to Wuhan lab that experimented on coronavirus source bats

dailymail.co.uk / 11 April 2020

REVEALED: U.S. government gave $3.7million grant to Wuhan lab

Y'know, the guys you're seeing now on the TV are involved with all this, agreeing to get all this done, you see, for this happening in the first place. It makes me… You understand, they're not going to save you, these guys. These guys that are out there telling you what to do have the agenda, a whole agenda to fulfill and they also enabled a lot of this to happen in the first place by giving this stuff first to China etc. etc., from the labs in the US in North Carolina.

Another article…

Coronavirus Vaccine Could Be Ready in Six Months: Times

bloomberg.com / 11 April 2020

(A: They’re all publishing this stuff because it’s so, because it’s so lucrative, y'know, every hand is out there.)

Scientist leading U.K. team says she is “80% confident”

(A: I guess just throw them the money in, maybe that will go up more confident.)

Sarah Gilbert, professor of vaccinology at Oxford University, told The Times on Saturday that she is “80% confident”

It generally takes years to develop, she says. But you see, they are onto a new type. As I say, it's not the old type vaccine. This stuff is going to alter your CELLS permanently, genetically reorder your own cells.

When you see this woman Sarah Gilbert, she's also got her own private vaccine company. They all do this, they use universities too, with grants galore, blah, blah, blah, blah, blah. But she's up there too just chomping at the bit hoping to get another few billion, no doubt. Whoever gets the vaccination contracts is just set for life, and about 10 generations down the road too. Incredibly lucrative.

She actually mentions it in an article which I'll put up too, if I can find it again, how again, these new vaccines actually work to alter the cells in your body that produce the different enzymes and so on that often get... You see, viruses are almost like little robots that are kind of inactivated until they hit certain enzymes in your own lung tissue, these proteins, 'eh, which activates them. So, they're going to alter that, the actual different cells in your lungs and your body, folks. [Alan chuckles.] I hope you understand what I'm saying here. Huh?

What happens in a few years time from it? Well, they'll find out, you'll all consent to it. Remember too, laws since the days of Ronald Reagan changed that you can't sue the companies anymore for the damage that they do. There's always damage. In every X amount of vaccines, X amount of people in every vaccine trial is damaged. It just happens.

There's nothing that you can take into your body that's perfectly safe, folks, especially with chemicals, and viruses and bacteria, etc. and adjuvants as well of all kinds.

And even, you understand, what you're getting if you get an injection into your body? That's an invasive process. It used to be classed along with surgery. Anything that breaks your skin to get into your body is an invasive type surgery. And you can sue them. So, during the Reagan times, because there were so many screw ups that were made with different vaccines that were put out at the time, with all of this, the initial swine flu one all the rest of it. And folk died of injections, that the fascist governments, which you have, they're all fascist, I don't care if it's communist or whatever you want to call them, they are all fascist in the end. If it looks like a duck and quacks like a duck, it's the same duck, sure it is, that's imitating the rest, you see, a good ventriloquist type duck, they're all the same.

So anyway, I'll put all these articles up tonight. Also, an article I ought to put up too, this is April 13th and it says…

In March, US Deaths from COVID-19 (A: …right...) Totaled Less Than 2 Percent of All Deaths

There's been so much scandal come out recently from folk working in the hospitals and that being told just to put it down, like that Senator, I'll put that link up again to the senator who is also a doctor in the States, who he said that he received instructions from the health service to just put people down as, y'know, dying of coronavirus, even when they weren't. He said how much the hospitals get paid if they put them down as coronavirus stuff as opposed to death by other causes, like pneumonia or whatever by other viruses and so on.

Minnesota Senator Dr. Scott Jensen - Hospitals Get Paid More to List Patients as COVID-19 and Three Times as Much if the Patient Goes on Ventilator - thespectator.info / 9 April 2020

Big jump that they get, the hospitals get. So much corruption across the board, 'eh? They're getting told to put it down and to fudge all the statistics. So, this is part of the Pavlovian technique as well, ‘eh, you get all this different conflicting information. So…

In March, US Deaths from COVID-19 (A: …right...) Totaled Less Than 2 Percent of All Deaths

ronpaulinstitute.org / 13 April 2020

About 2.9 million people die in the United States each year from all causes. Monthly this total ranges from around 220,000 in the summertime to more than 280,000 in winter.

(A: That's normally what the average is.)

In recent decades, flu season has often peaked sometime from January to March, and this is a major driver in total deaths. The average daily number of deaths from December through March is over eight thousand.

So far, total death data is too preliminary to know if there has been any significant increase in total deaths as a result of COVID-19…

In a March 30 article for The Spectator, former UK National Health Service pathologist John Lee noted that the current number of deaths from COVID-19 does not indicate that the UK is experiencing "excess deaths." Lee writes:

The simplest way to judge whether we have an exceptionally lethal disease is to look at the death rates. Are more people dying than we would expect to die anyway in a given week or month? Statistically, we would expect about 51,000 to die in Britain this month. At the time of writing, 422 deaths are linked to Covid-19—so 0.8 per cent of that expected total. On a global basis, we’d expect 14 million to die over the first three months of the year. The world’s 18,944 coronavirus deaths represent 0.14 per cent of that total. These figures might shoot up, but they are, right now, lower than other infectious diseases that we live with (such as flu). Not figures that would, in and of themselves, cause drastic global reactions.

Then they give the ones to the United States as well with similar comparisons. So, there's a lot of fudging going on right now. And let's be honest, the ones at the top that have pushed all this, including the ones that are not in-the-know, who are not quite at the top, they're not quite in the big, big agenda here, you'll find with them too that they can't backtrack now, they've sunk everything into it. They'll be laughing stocks. And there'll be a lot of shaking fists towards them from the public if they think they're being deceived or whatever.

After that you end up with a perpetual world of poverty for this because everything's crashed. That your governments have given trillions of dollars away, trillions literally, and to all their favorite pals, y'know, like food chains and big… Someone got… [Alan chuckles.] One of the things that have been passed in the US to do with bailouts, and is basically to keep big chains going, like not grocery stores but big fast food places and restaurants, are the most well-known ones, by the way, the most expensive ones. Most folk can't go to ones that are $40 for a steak or something, each, y'know. I don't think you can buy a steak in Canada, even raw, for that. But the restaurants, some of these restaurants got bailed out there. And the money was supposed to go for small businesses, and these are big long chains, massive chains, y’know. Multimillion-dollar enterprises. But again, we live in a corrupt system and I’m not, it doesn't shock me at all. I don't get upset with these things. I never expected anything different to happen, y'know.

It's quite astonishing what really is happening, though, too, and in the open right now too. But people forget them very quickly, all these things, as time goes on, they forget. So, what else? Now, I've got to do this one here… Ron Paul, a good article.

A Healthcare PATRIOT Act?

RonPaulinstitute.org / 13 April 2020

According to a story in Politico, the White House Coronavirus Task Force is considering creating a national surveillance system to track Americans’ health information. Supporters of this initiative claim it would enable the federal government to quickly identify areas in need of additional medical supplies and other assistance because the areas are coronavirus “hot spots.”

In March, US Deaths from COVID-19 Totaled Less Than 2 Percent of ALL Deaths

RonPaulinstitute.org / 13 2020

About 2.9 million people die in the United States each year from all causes. Monthly this total ranges from around 220,000 in the summertime (A: Again, as I say, the same article pretty well from him as well.) to more than 280,000 in winter.

But yeah, it just... It just really... The death rates are much lower than what they're telling you. What you've got too in Canada, it's very obvious with the homes for the elderly, and especially in Montréal and British Columbia. A lot of them are really big, well, expensive private homes, 'eh. One of them in Montréal, they just found out that the guy who owned them should have been prohibited in the first place to even get into that kind of line of work. He was convicted of some horrible stuff in the past. Apparently, the staff all ran off and left the patients, for quite some time, wrapped in their own blankets and sheets and waste, etc. Because the great campaign that the media did to terrify everybody, terrified the staff, they just ran off.

You'll find lots of these places, you see, they'll hire temporary staff because they don't want to employ anybody who ends up being full-time, then they've gotta pay more money for their insurance and coverages and so on. That's a lot, you see. So, they put them on part-time basis and so you have a constant turnover of part-time workers. Their hearts are never into it, y'know? If you pay people enough money and give them full-time jobs, train them, you get a different thing. But often the people are just, they're just like assistants, that they help to clean them, all that kind of thing, and basic functions. They haven't had backups to help them or even protective equipment and clothing or anything, so they ran off and left the patients.

Some people were complaining, I didn't know that in these private ones some people were paying $6000 a month for one person, for one of their parents to be put in and taken care of and so on. Other ones have $10,000 a month per person. That's what it cost to put them in there, but they'll be hiring and paying the lowest, y'know, denominator for the staff that do the basic work at the bottom. And they're not trained to deal with this kind of thing at all. But there you go, it's just amazing isn't it? But yeah, the media did a good job terrifying the public so much that they just vamoosed from the nursing homes. Probably not just in Canada, in other countries too. It is true, I've seen ones in the States as well that this happened.

Another article too is to do with a study…

New Study: The Flu Vaccine

(A: It's dangerous to even talk about this now because you're dealing with the big boys that run the world at the top here, who own all these companies and so on, right, and they don't mess around.)

Is "Significantly Associated" With An Increased Risk of Coronavirus

collective-evolution.com / 16 April 2020

On March 12th, 2020, Anderson Cooper and Dr. Sanjay Gupta held a global town hall on “Corona Facts and Fears.” During the discussion, Anderson encouraged the audience to get a flu shot, suggesting that it may help with the coronavirus. Is this true?

Greg. G Wolff, an Epidemiologist with the Armed Forces (A: And I've got all the articles from the Armed Forces by the way.) Health Surveillance Branch (A: They have their own one because sick troops are no good for an army, right, so they’ve got their own Health Surveillance Branch.), recently published a study in the Journal Vaccine titled, Influenza vaccination and respiratory virus interference among Department of Defense personnel during the 2017–2018 influenza season. The study examined virus interference (A: …this is what it’s called with different viruses.) in a Department of Defense population, this refers to the increased risk of other respiratory viruses as a result of, in this case, the influenza vaccine. The study found that virus interference varied among vaccinated individuals for individual respiratory viruses, and found that for a coronavirus in particular, in this study, those who had been vaccinated with the flu vaccine had a 36 percent higher risk of contracting it.

This is an official publication, y’know, and the link is here. I'll put that up too, it's from sciencedirect.com. Maybe by the time this goes up it will be pulled.

Armed Forces Health Surveillance Branch study in the Journal Vaccine titled, Influenza vaccination and respiratory virus interference among Department of Defense personnel during the 2017–2018 influenza season - sciencedirect.com / 10 Jan 2020

But this is quite a common thing to happen actually with different types of coronaviruses, and you do get interference between them too. They are all competing now and like going to war with each other as well so, I'm not surprised.

Chinese Doctor Shi Zhengli Ran Coronavirus Research in Wuhan After US Project Was Shut Down by DHS in 2014

(A: This is what I was telling you earlier, how the US literally shut down the gain of function on these coronaviruses in the States and gave it to China. I think it was, and again, probably during Obama's time too it was given to China. But anyway, it says...)

for Being Too Risky

(A: This is what they said at the US State Department and so on. What they also knew is...)

— Prior Leak Killed Researcher (A: Okay?)

Chinese Doctor Shi Zhengli Ran Coronavirus Research in Wuhan After US Project Was Shut Down by DHS in 2014 for Being Too Risky — Prior Leak Killed Researcher

thegatewaypundit.com / 9 April 2020

Chinese Doctor Shi Zhengli was part of a team that working on a coronavirus project jointly with US doctors in 2014 before it was shut down by the DHS for being too risky.

(A: I'd say so. I'd say deadly.)

After the US research project was shut down, Dr. Shi continued her coronavirus research in Wuhan, China.

Chinese Doctor Shi Zhengli was part of a team that working on a coronavirus project jointly with US doctors in 2014 before it was shut down by the DHS for being too risky.

Doctor Shi Zhengli from China was part of a team, including Doctor Ralph S. Baric, that published an article (A: …and the link is here…) in a 2015 edition of Nature Medicine.

In the article they discussed bat coronaviruses that showed potential for human emergence. The article was published in 2015.

The HHS in 2014 sent a letter to the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill where they announced they were going to defund the program.

Dr. Ralph S. Baric was identified in the letter.

After the work stopped in the US, the Chinese moved forward with the project and ran research and development in Wuhan at the Wuhan Virology Center. From Shi Zhengli’s papers and resume, it is clear that they successfully isolated the virus in the lab and were actively experimenting with species <-> specie transmission.

This information provides a basis that contradicts the theory that COVID-19 is a variant that just magically mutated in a bat.

It goes on and on and on. This is quite a good article actually, and there's more down to it, Harvard Professor, remember, that's the one who was arrested, you've got to remember this too, who worked for, I mentioned earlier, he worked for China as well as the US. [Alan chuckles.] It says he was amongst three charged...

U.S. charges three, including Harvard researcher, with lying about China ties

reuters.com / 28 Jan 2020

(A: That was back in January 28. It all happened at the same time, 'eh, or in the same time of all this kind of stuff, isn't it? That was…)

Charles Lieber, chair of Harvard University’s Department of Chemistry and Chemical Biology

Big money, big money for these guys, 'eh. And...

Lab-Made Coronavirus Triggers Debate

the-scientist.com / 16 Nov 2015

The creation of a chimeric SARS-like virus has scientists discussing the risks of gain-of-function research.

Update (March 11, 2020)

(A: ...on Ralph Baric again and more on that about his publishing and his...)

Ralph Baric, an infectious-disease researcher at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, last week (November 9) published a study on his team’s efforts to engineer a virus with the surface protein of the SHC014 coronavirus, found in horseshoe bats in China, and the backbone of one that causes human-like severe acute respiratory syndrome (SARS) in mice. The hybrid virus could infect human airway cells and caused disease in mice, according to the team’s results, which were published in Nature Medicine.

(A: The links are all here by the way as well. This is not a conspiracy's stuff, folks, y'know.)

The creation of a chimeric SARS-like virus has scientists discussing the risks of gain-of-function research.

Here's another one too.

Medical Student Charged With Trying To Smuggle Cancer Research From Boston To China - boston.cbslocal.com / 31 Dec 2019

A lot of these labs have got a lot of Chinese students over working in them, and that was December 31, 2019. That's the one that they found in his socks, he smuggled them in his socks. Again, kind of like 12 Monkeys, only in 12 Monkeys the guy had it in a case and well-padded. This guy's [Alan chuckles.] literally putting these very fragile things in his socks and he was caught at the airport on his way over to China with this stuff. And no doubt he'd been making a career out of doing this stuff too. And...

Coincidence? Imperial College in UK is Origin of Coronavirus Panic and Global-Warming Panic

technocracy.news / 29 March 2020

(A: At the same time, the same place, 'eh. That was April 10, 2020.   Technocracy News, a good one, the guys that look and study the technocrats as they're making their big moves.)

Technocracy Rising by Pat Wood

It is perhaps not a coincident that global-warming hysteria and coronavirus panic are both based on discredited computer models generated at Imperial College in the UK. In this article, Patrick Wood, Publisher of Technocracy News, delves into the history and personal biases of the faculty of this institution.

(A: He goes on and on and on about it too. It says…)

The culprit? A world-class Technocrat in Britain: Dr. Neil Ferguson, PhD is a professor at Imperial College in London that bills itself as a “global university”. It is thoroughly steeped in Sustainable Development and more dedicated to social causes than academic achievement. In fact, Imperial is very well-known for its alarmist research reports on climate change, carbon reduction, environmental degradation, loss of biodiversity, etc.

I think Neil Ferguson was the guy who was putting up... It says PhD, is a professor at Imperial College in London. I think he is also the one who, he’s had accolades from the granite stone universities, the Ivy League universities as they call them, y’know, he was inducted very early. He is, if it’s the same one, he knows, he’s a pal of Kissinger. He likes the establishment. He loved the old British Empire system. And the London Imperial money system as well. Quite interesting. If it’s… I’m sure it’s the same one.

Also, Ford, [Alan chuckles.] I mentioned it before, the brick in the wall.

Ford Tests Buzzing Wristbands To Keep Workers Six Feet Apart - zerohedge.com / 16 April 2020

I-yi-yi.

No more beef and cheese: Go vegetarian, by order of Government food police - dailymail.co.uk / 22 Oct 2010

I've mentioned that one already, by order of government food police it says. 2010 that goes back to. I mentioned…

Population control policies to combat climate change prove deadly, demographer says - pop.org / 11 Nov 2019

I'll put that up again. I’ve got other ones I won’t put up just yet, because… I’ve got lots of stuff, studies on you right now… Improving human life, and one behavior at a time, etc. etc. And you wouldn't believe the money that's being thrown at them studying us all, complying. And they're just, oh, over the moon how quickly Britain just buckled under and obeyed them. We’re all going to die; you're all going to die. N-n-n.

I'll put up Julian Huxley, I mentioned already...

‘Julian Huxley and the Continuity of Eugenics in Twentieth-century Britain’ - ncbi.nlm.nih.gov / 20 March 2015

Good article actually. How it really, really works. And also, ha, Australians…

Australians risk shortage of basic grocery items amid coronavirus - news.com.au / 12 April 2020

Like everybody else too. What d'you expect when it's all shut down, 'eh? You're going to see the whole agenda is getting pushed at the moment into, and we'll have to wait and see. They keep, oh another month, oh another month, well, you wait and see. How far will they push it? As long as you accept it, they'll keep pushing. That's as simple as that. It's that simple, folks.

Remember too, hopefully you can send a few bucks my way @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. You can get discs at the moment and I'm going to get books made up shortly, I think, I might have a chance to get some books made up because even the books, even the printers were shut down. We'll have to wait and see if they do lighten up a bit in the next week or two and give them a chance to start printing some stuff. I can still send discs out though for those that want to peruse what I've got on the website @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. How to order and how to pay and so on, and you can also donate to me. Because as I say, I got quite a few websites there. I don't, I'm not backed by anybody. I don't sell anything. I'm not selling you cures to all of life's ills or anything like that. I depend upon you to just maybe tick over. And I don't, I really don't live in a luxurious lifestyle. I certainly could have been long ago, but I don't.

Because this was too important. That's the only reason I came out years ago was to tell the public what was really, really happening and where was all supposed to go, and where it is going, and where it is now.

And yeah, folk used to laugh at you, oh, come on, they can't be that... I says, yeah. I wasn't pessimistic, I don't get pessimistic about things. I'm too, I understand it too well to even get pessimistic about things. But I'm not, I don't go over the board with all, we, or, who's we, we are winning what? I don't see people winning anything, to be honest with you. I see incredible forces arrayed against the public, as I say, to divide/conquer, divide/conquer, and divide/conquer until there's nobody left to stand against things.

That's really how it goes, 'eh, who can stand, 'eh, who can stand. That's what it always boils down to.

We have a very evil system running the world and it is very well orchestrated and managed, like a pyramid, y'know, with all the building blocks and the levels down below them from the very capstone at the top. That's how it's organized. And the pyramid cap is slightly above the rest of the body because they have to have that space there, the ones at the top who know the whole agenda. The ones down below can only see what's around them, left, right and downwards. That's how it's arranged.

But above the light, you've got the ones who are above the light, as they say, the ones who watch it all coming into place and dictating it all, etc. etc. while connected with… And it's meant for the public, they think, oh, here's an individual person, an individual multibillionaire there, oh here's another one, they're not connected with the other multibillionaires and so on. You find they all kind of know each other and they all work with the same philanthropies as each other, and they're all on board with depopulation. All the same agendas, folks. All of them. ALL of them. That's not coincidence.

Don't give up. I mean, we're still alive, and kicking, and breathing. And what will come out of this will be a different system, again. And how far it will go with severity, again, it's up to all of YOU. It really is up to you what you're going to put up with.

You'd be surprised too, their studies know, they know with the studies that you will actually, if you start walking backwards and putting up with a little bit more, you'll accept more and accept more and accept more. They've done all this before, as I say, with world wars. Britain was a prime example of starving the public into, [Alan chuckles.] pretty well skin and bones. Incredible studies they did, right down to suicides. They come out with these amazing things, you wouldn't think they're studying people, like suicides, during wartime. Well, you wouldn't believe how they study you. Farmers always study their own animals, y'know. They found there was less suicide in wartime because there was a cause, there was a purpose for a lot of folk as well. Isn't that amazing, 'eh?

As I say, if you look at some of the documentaries they'll put up on, or the talks on YouTube that deal with that very thing in Britain, you might find it interesting to see how they're astonished to see how compliant the public are. It reminds me, I think it was Thomas Moore who wrote a kind of Utopia himself in fact in the middle ages. The one thing he did say was, he said, the people in Britain, he says, are not people who are rebellious by nature. They tend to obey.

So even then [Alan chuckles.] people were studied, the different kind of stocks were studied awfully, awfully well. And they don't really, y'know, they're more likely to follow a cause as opposed to just to rebel. A rebellion is not a revolution. A rebellion is, I want to keep the system as it is, and you're changing it, so you rebel generally to try, they take more off you generally through taxation or whatever it happens to be. Or even food, like they're doing now, 'eh? And privacy. And freedom. You'd rebel to keep your freedom, because you liked the old system. It wasn't perfect but it was better than what was coming in, 'eh. Whereas a revolution is for a different cause, for a different system you want to bring in. That's how it works.

What you're living through now is the elite’s revolution, another part of one of their many revolutions, always for themselves in charge, the next phase of the New World order, you see, coming into view, said Mr. Bush.

So that's all the time I suppose I've got time for right now. It's been snowing on and off for the last week I think here, in the north here, because of global warming of course where I am in northern Ontario.

I hope you're all doing okay, hanging in there, you're not going stir crazy and getting cabin fever. And remember, it is up to you to start protesting in which ever ways you can. Because if you don't make them listen to you, they're going to go the next step and the next step. And you won’t come out of this, they'll keep it going. They will keep it going.

There's already folk dying all over the place that can’t get operations. There's heart specialists talking about folk, they can't even get into the hospitals that are having heart attacks. Then they’re having more heart attacks at home and dying. There's cancer patients can't get treatments or even surgery. There's all kinds of things happening. Everything else has stopped for this, you understand, and it's causing havoc. And causing more deaths.

But if you want to get back to any, any semblance, any semblance or even approaching, with a massively devalued currency after it, a system, then you have to start getting organized and making your voices heard.

Or you'll be ruled by your specialist, your technocratic specialist forever, that's what they want, and to do away with democracy. That was the goal, remember, of the Club of Rome, the big, big think tank that's still on the go yet, who is rejoicing at bringing in all the sustainability programs under this guise of Covid 19, according to their own articles which I read last week. Overjoyed at it. MAN, then is the enemy, you see.

So, for myself Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada, hang in there, keep in touch and I really try and get back to everybody who emails me. Because it's the real people from all over the planet and it's interesting to hear what they have to say and their own observations and how they're coping themselves, it's very, VERY important.

Because you gotta keep your spirits up regardless through thick and thin. And keep your wits, don't panic about things.

So, for myself Alan Watt, from Ontario Canada, it's good night and may your God or gods go with you.

Topics of show covered in following links:

SECRET ORIGIN Coronavirus outbreak ‘could have started in SEPTEMBER’, scientists warn

British scientists say the coronavirus outbreak may have started as early as September

Coronavirus has been in California 'a lot longer than we believed' with cases as early as DECEMBER

Chinese infiltration of US labs caught science agencies off guard

Apple, Google to harness phones for tracking virus infections

Spies are already in your phone. A highly controversial private firm may be next.

NSO Group

Contact tracing for coronavirus (COVID-19): how it’s done in Queensland (alternate link provided)

Coronavirus: Moscow rolls out patient-tracking app

Convincing Australians to use government-sponsored coronavirus-tracing app a tough ask

Illinois county must hand over coronavirus patients' names to police, judge rules

An army of coronavirus tracers takes shape in Massachusetts

COVID-19 to have 'immediate and drastic' impact on Canadian meat supply: industry group

Why Americans may see a meat shortage during the coronavirus outbreak

Coronavirus may cause some food shortages, warns government task force

Global Food Supply Chains Beginning to Erode, Crisis Looms?

Australians risk shortage of basic grocery items amid coronavirus

No more beef and cheese: Go vegetarian, by order of Government food police

'Artificial egg' made from PLANTS backed by Bill Gates set to revolutionize cooking goes on sale at Whole Foods

This Summer

Keep Workers Six Feet Apart

Trudeau defends new flights bringing Canadians home from across the globe

U.S. government gave $3.7million grant to Wuhan lab that experimented on coronavirus source bats

Coronavirus Vaccine Could Be Ready in Six Months: Times

In March, US Deaths from COVID-19 Totaled Less Than 2 Percent of All Deaths

Minnesota Senator Dr. Scott Jensen - Hospitals Get Paid More to List Patients as COVID-19 and Three Times as Much if the Patient Goes on Ventilator

Increased Risk of Coronavirus (alternate link provided)

Armed Forces Health Surveillance Branch study in the Journal Vaccine titled, Influenza vaccination and respiratory virus interference among Department of Defense personnel during the 2017–2018 influenza season

Ran Coronavirus Research in Wuhan After US Project Was Shut Down by DHS in 2014 for Being Too Risky — Prior Leak Killed Researcher

U.S. charges three, including Harvard researcher, with lying about China ties

Trying To Smuggle Cancer Research From Boston To China

Lab-Made Coronavirus Triggers Debate

Coincidence? Imperial College in UK is Origin of Coronavirus Panic and Global-Warming Panic

Vaccines And ‘Seems Fueled By A Messianic Conviction’ That He Is Destined To ‘Save The World With Technology And A God-like Willingness To Experiment On The Lives Of Lesser Humans’

Population control policies to combat climate change prove deadly, demographer says

‘Julian Huxley and the Continuity of Eugenics in Twentieth-century Britain’

(2016)

Apr 26, 2020 "Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt (Blurb, i.e. Educational Talk): " No Need to Fear, Beastly Choice is Quite Clear "

Hi folks, I’m Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through the Matrix on April 26, 2020. Of course, we’re still mainly all here I think, ‘eh? As I said before, you pinch yourself in the mornings, because if you really, really believe in all the incredible hype that’s going on, you’d have to pinch yourself, you know, or get somebody else to pinch you perhaps. Maybe you can’t trust yourself because that’s the whole message now, isn’t it, that you can’t really use your own common sense and observations? Your rationality isn’t allowed anymore. Facts don’t matter. Facts really don’t matter when there’s big agendas at play. I’ve lived long enough and through enough big agendas, or parts of the same long-lasting agenda actually, in different parts, parts one, two, three, etc., to know there’s a massive agenda, preplanned, getting rammed through right now. I’m sure most of you already know it too.

You can always tell when there's a big agenda on the go because it's generally the same agenda under different guises, a different excuse to ram it all through. We've seen this already of course with the beginnings of it, the real rumblings that happened back in the 90s, I've mentioned this before, when Bill Clinton was in. There was a big change, and a lot of messages went out to the American people, especially, because now you had the events televised. When you see televised extravaganzas, there's a big message behind it for a change, you see.

I can remember a lot of folk getting shocked when the Oklahoma City bombing went off. And nothing made sense, again. Of course, you had different explosives experts on different shows trying to figure out how this particular kind of blast came from a fertilizer bomb inside a van, I think it was, supposedly parked outside of it. Whereas the direction of the blast just didn't seem right at all. It took them I think a couple of years before they found a part of the van to prove there was a van there. It was apparently lodged between two buildings; they hadn't noticed it before. But this is the kind of stuff that goes on.

But out of that, it was so interesting because you see, they tried, Bill Clinton had tried to get this anti-terrorism bill through back then. At the time they didn't have all the wars on the go, you know. That now is normal, then new... I came out with, the new normals, I came out with the phrase; of course everything is getting new normals all the time now. It didn't make sense, this whole Oklahoma City bombing thing. Especially when [Alan chuckles.] it's true enough, the characters in it had much the same names as the characters in a book. The getaway guy was caught eventually in the car with similar things on him, found in the car too, according to the characters in the book. It was like a script, really. Then we find out too, sure enough, the CIA, I think it was Clancy, was one of the books that it came out under, came out and admitted that years later that they handed a whole lot of books written already by their teams for this publication actually under someone else's name.

So yeah, you're living through incredible times when you have such manipulation. You can't fathom it; it's just overwhelming really when you start to get into it. Years later, I've always said this, you find out the truth years later when different things are declassified. Very important. If you live in a free society, which is an awful joke of course. But if you lived in one or even a democratic society, which is a part of the awful joke, then you would obviously have the data at the time, you couldn't keep stuff back from the public. But of course, the whole point of government is to keep everything back from the public for as long as they can. And after 20 years, 30 years, folk don't really care, the next generation is growing up. The other generation is so burned out with the financial collapses and everything else that goes on and wars, etc. that they have no time to be bothered anymore, and they're ready to die eventually. So they always go for the next crop of youngsters to get them into wars.

I used to wonder in fact I thought, you know, the timing between World War I and World War II was amazing. Because after World War I they had pretty good film made at the time of groups that sprung up trying to stop another war happening like that. It was such an incredible mass slaughter that people were in shock for that generation, what was left of it. These little cenotaphs went up in every little town and village across Britain with all the dead. Sometimes whole families were wiped out. Quite common for the men all to get wiped out, the father, sons and uncles and so on. So it ended supposedly about 1918. But really, within 20 years, with another crop of young bodies to fill the uniforms, they have another one. You couldn't really plan this any better.

Of course the second war, the top, top journalists of the day, the ones that were still honest enough anyway, who attended the Paris conference to do with the Versailles Treaty and all the rest of it, and the divvying up of all the losses and putting it on the backs of Germany, the top ones said, the top writers from the Times and different papers said that this will probably lead to another war because Germany will have no option but to fight its way out of it. In other words, they would collapse and starve to death if they, you know. If that wasn't prophetic, I don't know what was. But again, 20 years later you get the same thing happening again. It didn't have to happen.

There were a lot of different people, even, even in the House of Lords in Britain that said, you've got to just forgive this debt and write it off... and write the experience off, for the experience that you had of what happened and the terrible disaster and suffering thing that it caused. So of course that was thrown out the window and the big bankers got in on the act. Again, a good movie, it's quite good in some ways but you've got to get the book too, the nonfiction book [Alan chuckles.] of Paris 1919 of what really happened. Because they did actually put a bunch of bankers in. They brought them in and gave them the reins to just go to town and divvy up the debts. No doubt a lot of it came their way as well, all the rewards. Everything is so corrupt, so corrupt in human societies you can't get truth, really. If you did get truth, I was going to say, pigs might fly, but again, with the genetic engineering, who knows what they'll come up with next.

However, again, it's just astonishing to watch all these incredible wars. You can't, you... they go on about conspiracies. When you see what the lengths that governments go to, to get the public riled up to go to war, it's no different than this Covid idea. Massive, again. Carroll Quigley went through the records from the group that is behind a lot of it, the Royal Institute of International Affairs / Council on Foreign Relations group. They have their private, he was a historian for their private collection of true histories. They have their own version of it because they've been so involved. All the way from the Jamestown Raid, which they rigged for South Africa and the Boer war that came on. They've been behind so much of this kind of thing and creating wars to get change, you know, planned changed. And if that isn't a conspiracy, I don't know what is.

Quigley publish a lot of this stuff in Tragedy and Hope, and in The Anglo-American Establishment book. He went to town on it and let a lot out of the bag. He was all for the whole thing, the idea of creating wars to get what you want for a planned future, you see. He did go through the scenario for bringing on World War II, when the RIIA/CFR group/Asian-Pacific counsel group, because they have groups for every block of the planet, the blocks that they created in regions. They said they had a board meeting with all the big moguls who own the media, all the media at the time, they are all part of it, in London. They decided that the only way to get the public on board, they were so lethargic and wary of war after World War I, and of course the Great Depression, right... [Alan chuckles.] that was just a continuation of it, and it was part of the problem with it too, wars create incredible debt. So they said, we have to get the people on board by terrifying them.

You see, terror is a great, I mentioned it before years ago in the 90s in talks, on terror and how it's used to get the cattle running and stampeding. Once you get them going then you get a few horses in the front with riders on them who can steer the direction of the herd. If you let them rest for a minute they'll want to stay for a while, so you keep them panicked and keep them running in different directions, but YOU decide where they're going to go. That's how simple the technique is. You're all going to die, and everyone loses their sensibilities. You see? It happens all the time.

So, for World War II the group met in London, the magnets and moguls and all the rest of it and the media barons, and they decided to terrify the public and tell them a lot of lies. That's why everybody in Britain had to have gas masks. They were told, first thing, that Adolf was going to come over and gas you all to death, and they had massive stores of gas all made up. Which was all a lie. They knew it was a lie. Because Germany too was under incredible observation all the time from after World War I, and terrific inspections like you wouldn't believe, the old idea of treaty, treaty, treaty, treaty, treaty, etc., as they went through all these disarmament projects, etc.

So anyway, they would terrify the public. They'd say massive air raids, massive air raids would come and kill everybody, and they were going to come in and sterilize all the males. Naturally the males weren't too happy about that one. They stopped digging the trenches in London when they heard that news, because they said my God, you know, maybe I should gird myself or something. Or should I just dig the trenches, you see. Of course [Alan chuckles.] why are you digging trenches if you're going to get bombed from the air? [Alan laughing.] They didn't stop to think about that, they were so terrified. But they pay people to do all this work, you see, you always get people in the front, you get the public relations experts on board and you put them to task with plans.

The same thing is happening today with all the dancing folk at the hospitals. They have nothing better to do than dance? Is that the...? Do you really, are you swallowing all the stuff here? Hm?

And they must get the terminology of war going too, when you terrify the people. So, you get, you're all going to die. They immediately point to the enemy, the culprit, you see, getting you ready for it. And out of the, at that time back then you didn't have much in the way of news except the radio, apart from the newspapers, but the radio was your form of television, so much in Britain. You found that they would bring on people who were spokespeople for the military and people who were still in the military, are getting well-paid to give out propaganda, oh, the terrible things that were going to happen blah, blah, blah.

And this is, they say that, and Hitler was quite right, Adolf Hitler. He said to get the people on board to follow the party, the Nazi party... and he wasn't creating a new idea, it was well understood in the revolutionary circles. He said that you must terrify the public. The communists did the same thing. The communists would terrify the public, and any aid coming to the public like food or anything, for the poor, was to be cut off. They'd even killed the people delivering the stuff in the communist countries because they wanted a revolution, so you must get everybody as miserable as possible to take part in it. If they're getting fed, they're not so miserable, you see.

Folk never stopped to think of this kind of thing. They just see the initial results, which are the faces and the stories, that, oh, you're all going to die. Yeah. And they're going to, you know, take that little thing that they generally use for the male cattle, and you know, that's what you're going to get in Britain and elsewhere. Well, phew, the people were not too chuffed about that one. So yeah, they went to digging the trenches. They admitted in their own records, and Quigley said it too, he said this is all bogus to terrify the public to get them on board, in preparation, get them psychologically ready to obey. If you're running in fear and the whole bit, you'll run right into the military when you're told to, and that's really what happened. The same thing happened at 9/11 of course when you saw all these young guys volunteering, really believing that a few guys who couldn't read or write in caves in Afghanistan had done all this by themselves. It's astonishing.

Getting back again to Bill Clinton and the Oklahoma City bombing and the big changes that were happening then. He tried to get through this emergency terrorism act. They had a meeting in the Congress two days I think before the bombing or something, and it was turned down. The people didn't want it. It was against the Constitution and all the rest of it, the incredible powers that it would give people to look into everybody's lives. And the wars had not started yet, you see. Although Bill Clinton in his whole reign there had been setting off every day so many, maybe a dozen cruise missiles into parts of Iraq nonstop, all over the place and that became just another new normal too. So, they were trying to get it all going. They knew it was going to come because they kept goading and goading and trying to get it going.

So anyway, you had the Oklahoma City bombing, which was exactly what the FBI had been prattling on about. Because the FBI and a few other so-called watchdogs, private groups that are very, have incredible self-interests and are very powerful censor groups, were blaming militias at the time inside America and, oh, the big threat they could be, blah, blah, blah. Because there were so many attempts to start taking away rights in the Constitution, that's why a lot of the militias actually got reformed from the old Cold War groups. They got reformed again when they saw what was happening. For those outside the US, and even inside it now too, they don't realize that was the tradition inside the US, all through the Cold War, so much so that Hollywood used in put little episodes with the hicks, it's always the hicks and hillbillies, 'eh. They really hate people outside the cities, especially in the South, they really hate them. They put the comical scenarios of the country militias into their little supposed comedies that were generally pretty ridiculous. But that's what was done.

So Clinton, again as I say, tried to get that through. Well, about two days later, bingo, you had that bombing. Oklahoma City. Before the next couple of days was over, that same antiterrorism bill, that had been tossed out and voted down, was rammed right through. You see, if they don't get what they want, they just make it happen, make the scenario happen and that's it.

About the same time, a bit later, about 1998 was it, or I can't remember exactly, Alan Rock in Canada who was the Attorney General, another appointed person for the government, for the liberal government at the time I think it was. But anyway, Allan Rock, whatever party, they're all the same anyway, serving the same masters. Allan Rock put through pretty well single-handedly somehow this antiterrorism bill for Canada. It was called an Omnibus Crime bill. But when it was analyzed, it was a pure antiterrorism bill. So they knew what was going to come down the pike and they were giving themselves the powers and legalities to get it all working when it happened, you see.

Then Allan Rock went off to work at the United Nations in some capacity or another. It's amazing to watch these characters that get, you know, I don't even know if he was voted into anything, he was always appointed. Most appointees are technocrats, that's the names they're given, technocrats. The same ones that are trying to push Bill Gates as a technocrat, someone who should have the power, they claim, to get things done, with practicalities... Because he would disregard what the people want. That's a technocrat, you see, you use them in times of war, supposedly, and they're appointed.

So Oklahoma City came and went, they got what they wanted there with that part. Then in the Bill Clinton era too, they had the Waco incident, which was the government going after a small group, really, who had a house in an area where they met and some of them lived. They even had people who belong to this group, this religious group [Branch Davidians], which is quite lawful, even though it's hated today. All religions, all Christian religions are hated today because the people who have been brought up in the public schools, you know, the general schools, have been trained to hate it. So, they don't realize what they've lost because now they have to listen to scientists, you see. That's the new priesthood.

So anyway, I think it was David Koresh was the leader of the group, the FBI wanted him for some reason or another. They could have had him any other day because he used to walk into town himself, by himself. But no, they wanted a big show for the public. They had the cameras ready.

They even trained a group to SWAT him, a FEMA group I think it was in the FBI. They went in there all gung-ho and smiling at the cameras and the whole thing to see their pictures getting taken. They got to the door, outside the door there, and when they yelled at the door, it opened, and the FBI immediately opened fire on the people. So naturally you had a standoff as the folk started firing back.

It was really an amazing thing to watch. What a ridiculous catastrophe of cowboys who had been brought up with, in the era of force-is-good with all the stuff that was on TV, all the TV programming, force-is-good. And the black clad goons, you know. I went through, I gave talks on it, I said this is the, the black outfits that they know wear and call themselves police are the executioner's colors. That's what it always symbolized in law down through the ages. Ask anybody from Europe, the hangman would always wear black, you see. That's the sign it's not a pleasant thing. A policeman shouldn't be wearing black like that. It should be, he should have the blue shirt and the whole thing on and be approachable by the public that he's supposed to SERVE. You know, that's something that's been forgotten.

But anyway, around the same time they were bringing out the black clad policeman, that was in all the movies too, the fictional movies. You'd see them stalking through houses with the gun in from of them as though they were like walking mosquitoes with the proboscis sticking out. That's one after the other like machines rather than people. Getting the public use to what was to come. Britain went the same way too. So, you could tell this is organized. You see, the future is always planned by those who have the power. And it's the same group, that they continue, and their offspring take over too. That's why nothing really, really drastically different happens. They get their agendas through, planned agendas, for every generation, with the same folk in control.

So, I did the talks too about the Waco thing. Of course, they had a big massacre of the people. They brought tanks in as well and with flamethrowers and burned the place down too, with lots of people in it. And children. On the orders of Janet Reno at the time, the strange looking character, she was, like a kind of female version of Lerch in the Addams family. I'm not kidding you. I mean, this person really seemed to hate humanity, that the media tried to praise as a great thing. You saw as the fire was burning, and the tanks running around the tops in case there was anybody underneath it, are just flattening anybody that was maybe still alive. This is all on TV and filmed. You saw a big ring of these black clad agents around the fire, BOWING to it. Very, very symbolic of the occult of course naturally. Which most of the public are not quite aware of unfortunately. All on film though. So that was the planning.

At the same time too, they went after another couple too, some guy they claimed was in some kind of white religious group. I don't say supremacist because I don't really think they're supremacists at all. I think there are so many threats about people now from ethnicities that every ethnic group has got their spokespeople and I don't see why the white folk should be any different. Why should they be? Hm? And the white Christians too, it's up to them. And in the US, they are allowed their religion, supposedly. But again, that was a big move towards coming down against religious freedom for Christian sects. It doesn't matter how weird they might seem to you or different or whatever, the fact is, under the law they are allowed it. And if they go in to kill you, then something's happened to the law, obviously.

The message is loud and clear to people. And because of that, these events, the militias got their backs up saying there's something going on here. And all these black clad forces wearing combat gear going out against the public, very symbolic indeed, the very scary scenarios.

In Canada they tried to introduce it more, ah, easily in a sense. They had initially, initially they had cops dressed in military combat gear but wearing the green type of camo. They had little things, oh they were rushed out into Toronto and so on and you see these guys wearing P5's and so on, but the green gear on, and smiling for the cameras and posing and all that.... get us used to this, get used to this. Folk were saying, why, why, what's going on here? ...there's no terrorism here. But that's how they introduced it in Canada, with lots of publicity and apparently like they were responding to fake shootouts and stuff and they'd all be there and yada, yada, ya.

Then they put out teams of the same guys wearing black combat gear with their combat pants and everything. Exactly the same as the States, getting you used to it. They even had it in the newspapers, I dug it up and kept all the hard stuff, the actual paper, cut it all out at the time. I thought, this is going to be history, you see, down the road when folk don't know in 20 years' time they'll say, well where did all this come from? Well, here you go, this is how it all started. You mean, it wasn't always like that? No, it wasn't always like that.

So they had teams of generally four cops dressed in their smart new battle fatigues, and the combat boots, all dressed in black. All smiling, just like guys, maybe they even were, you know, got models, who knows. But they were in the papers, and they'd say, you might see them walking down your streets in little villages and towns because this is, they're just showing you the new smart outfits, etc. Black, folks, is ominous. It's meant to be ominous. And that's why it symbolizes death. You see? That's what is meant to do, getting the public ready to fear, to fear, to fear, authority. Very important, fear authority.

Anyway, that was all happening in the 90s and because of that these militia groups across the US sprung up. Some of them already were in existence apparently but again, you had different groups inside the States. Awfully interesting too, Carroll Quigley talked about his groups, with the groups that he worked with, again, the CFR as a historian. He took over from Alfred Zimmerman. Zimmerman was a communist who ran the Communist Party in Britain at one time and its only communist newspaper. But he was also put in charge by the Royal Institute of International Affairs for, to their own archives, again, their historical archives of events as they saw it since they were involved in making the history. It's really astonishing, hey? Quigley took over and he got access to that for a while. He also had access to the US branch, the Council on Foreign Relations. That was started up by Pratt, this wealthy family that were part of it. Of course, Rockefeller was a big part of it too, and I think chairman for a while too, then vice chairman. They also started up the Trilaterals eventually as well in the 1970s or so, the Trilateral Commission. I know they first got prominence with Carter. But I'm off the topic, I'm just prattling here.

You've got to understand that now they use the word proactive, you know, we're proactive, we're being proactive, blah, blah, blah. Meaning, they're planning for the future. That's what these big groups do, they make the future. They bring it to the desired outcome of any conflict, since they start the conflicts. And they guide the conflicts. The true Hegelian dialectic of thesis, antithesis, and synthesis, you see. You come out with the planned synthesis, you can't get it going unless you have two opposing sides to start with, then you argue to bring out your conclusion, which you wanted in the first place. That's how; it's very simple. But most folk don't know that's how the world is really run and it's still ongoing. Very intricately.

With the Internet today, that really gave it a massive boost in fact. Before, it was all teleconference they had, definitely had telephone conferences and stuff like that. And they had the Internet's too, and the Internet in the 90s was nothing like it is today. Except for the wealthy elite that did have their teleconferencing then too for the upper crust and so on. Including the bureaucracies, they could converse with bureaucrats in other countries and bypass the politicians, which was something HG Wells talked about back in 1917, 1918 and 1919 for the League of Nations.

Therefore, you're going through this planned agenda and most folk never know because you're too busy to know. You've been trained to be naïve and very ignorant. It's not your fault you're ignorant, my mom used to say that to me too. But, yeah, you're really brought up to be ignorant and believe what you're told. Why shouldn't you? Every child, every mammal looks to the adults and the adults show it what to be wary of, WHAT to be wary of and what other species to be wary of too. If you don't get it from your parents because they have been brainwashed and kept in naïveté too, then it doesn't get passed on to their children. Then schooling takes over, like Jacques Ellul talked about this too, the philosopher, he said the same thing. He says, it's very important for any state, any government, to ensure that the children are given their initial indoctrination in school, very early. If they don't get that very early in school, then if they get it later in life they've matured enough to see through the indoctrination, as to what it is. So that early indoctrination is awfully, awfully important.

When I went to school, the first day I walked out of the classroom. I was only in it for 15 minutes. The first thing I noticed, and the woman was awful nice, the teacher. But she says, now we’ll all clap hands. And I thought, why? Why? I don't want to clap hands. I had already played in the streets with my pals that were the same age, and we didn't sit clap hands or something like that, like, I don't know, it just seems silly. And they clap-clap hands and stuff, and they’d get faster and faster. And I said, what on earth, what is this? And to me, I honestly always have had it, I've looked at adults that pretended that they’re children for the children's sake as ridiculous. Because often the children left to their own devices won't do that kind of nonsense, you know. Really. So yeah, I walked out the first day and I went home. But when I walked, first about the country there, it was quite nice.

But that's what you find, uniformity is awfully important. You're trained to be uniform. As time went on of course back in the 90s again, that's when it first started coming out, suddenly these teachers’ unions, incredibly strong, working with the United Nations, and Department of Education, and UNICEF and so on and UNESCO. All these groups work with the teachers, all of them, to create a uniform, dumbed-down public for a global society. That's what it's about. Then they brought into schools in the 90s and 2000, this idea of groupthink, you see, for children. The idea was that, you see, at one time you thought, if you really were able to think and put out something interesting in school, you'd get a little gold star. But mind you, they gave gold stars too for just being a parrot. So again, you were being acclimatized to be... to conform, by being a little parrot.

Again in the 90s and then in 2000 onwards, it got worse and worse because they didn't want individualism in the school. They didn't want anybody to excel really. You had to be uniformly flat. A lot of it is social engineering about topics, and social engineering about different things that have nothing to do with your basic education, you see, with tuition today. They use groupthink for the children. I read the articles and the teachers tool kits as they call them, how to train children to give them standardized opinions, so the whole group eventually bonds together. Because they go along and they're goody-two-shoes, and they're given lots of little rewards. And children want to please adults, etc., especially if they're younger adults and especially if they're female. It's true. It's true. They know exactly how to pull it off that way. Because the children still see, have an affinity towards moms, mothers, and if they get a female teacher, as Bernays would say, it actually helps to indoctrinate them that way by the same teacher.

So the toolkit says to them, you know, how to get them in the group and how to put it across, how to literally nullify dissenters who don't put their hands up and go along with the topic, or the agreements that they come to, any conclusions on the topic. They even come down to shunning those individuals, and I stress individuals, who have a contrary outcome of the discussion and they don't go along with the group. They actually have techniques to shun them. This is what's been happening in the schools for years and years now. That's how you get a uniform opinion, groupthink as they call it, amongst the people who grow up to be adults. And they never really change out of that same groupthink, if the official version comes along, they'll go with it. That's how it works.

So, they changed it from basic education, then they went into social engineering, and how do we get on with each other, and what you think of... And then brought in the Marxist theories too across the entire Western world really. Where you have to, no matter what topic you're on, how would it be to a person living, of a different whatever it happened to be, in the year 1700 in this country, how would they see this happening? Well, I don't know. It's bad enough trying to figure out how the average person would see that from their point of view, except it's, it's not that hard really. If you're a peasant, you're a peasant, it doesn't matter what else is going on really. If you're a peasant you really don't give two hoots about some other, somebody with a different whatever it happens to be because you're too busy trying to survive. Hm. They didn't have the massive income taxes then to fund all these different things that you never thought about, and never would think about, you know, unless it was drummed into you. Anyway, that's what education is about.

Then you give, histories used to be nothing but dates, times and generals, and who won. They never went into who plundered the country's assets, which is really what it's all about, economic warfare, like Tony Blair. Tony Blair literally had the oil guys in divvying up in Iraq before they invaded it. He admitted that, it was in the papers and I've got all the articles here, still. That's what wars are really about. And who is going to dominate. And the wars for Britain, it wasn't Britain. What is this corporation called Britain? Because the people themselves, even the guys in the military who fought it and so on, the ordinary guys being soldiers, they got nothing out of it. But this massive clique inside London, phew, intergenerational 'eh, and the big merchant banks which they represented too, mostly, that's the merchant banks, you see, they were the same families who owned the banks, who appointed each other as governor generals over their colonies as they called it, to places like Canada. Canada was a dominion, still a colony, and Australia, New Zealand and even India at one point, a good chunk of it. And a few other places, which they haven't given up. But it was all for… really, it was a massive business enterprise for these families using the country as their own private army and all the rest of it.

So you have to stand back, you don't know when you're going through it even, you know, but a lot of the guys in the military did all the things for the right reasons, the right ideas they thought, that your country couldn't be wrong. It's all built on a faith thing; your country couldn't be wrong, because we're so nice and good, aren't we? Yeah. All countries think the same thing. Again, before that in the 1700s and the 1800s, it was mainly, up to there it's pretty well mercenaries that fought, and mercenaries were just killers. You had hired killers, that's what they were. So, you had to put on this new covering of the good, the good society, you see, and you had a regular army with the uniform and make them tidy and all that. And punish them if they cussed and swore too much in public, stuff like that. The old mercenaries didn't care, and they had their own gear and their own clothing and all the rest of it, the old mercenaries.

So you don't realize that we're living through, again, it's part of an ongoing program. Britain lost most of its colonies and everything else, and its wealth in fact, for the general public, because of the two world wars. The US was to take over from it, which it did quite happily. Because the same bankers that ran [Alan chuckles.] it, now ran the US. [Alan chuckles.] Aa lot of the families actually moved over to the US from the big group in Britain. Long stories, anyway.

What I'm trying to say here is that you're kept in a state of fear and panic your entire life. They give you financial collapses. It used to be, I used to say, they give you at least two massive bank crashes every century, at least two, sometimes more, with mini ones in between as they plunder you, you see. And they have resets on the cash value, because it's backed by nothing now. And it has been backed by nothing for an awful long time. So they have what they call resets, by the big World Bank, another private group created by the Royal Institute of International Affairs. And they created the IMF, the same group, and the Bank for International Settlements. All privately owned, but we pay for a lot of its upkeep by the way, public/private.

So, you're living through a system, you're living through a system. And by the way, modern China was set up by them as well. China didn't have the cash or the know-how to even set themselves up. The West brought in their students, often some of the countries paid for the students to be trained into engineering and design and all the rest of it in preparation for the coming industry, which eventually was all given to them under free trade agreements, by again, the RIIA/CFR, who set up the whole GATT system with the World Bank. Free trade, that's the con of it.

So, we're all living through their system and under their system. They prattled on an awful lot naturally about what would happen, what would happen if they ran out of wars? They even had that, how would they rule the world and keep people in peace and order? in a world full of fear and war. Massive meetings about it, international meetings by the same group. Of course, they created the sustainability groups. That's why they have people all working together, the big philanthropists. The Council on Foreign Relations came out with it quite a few years back when I was on the radio and I read the articles then. I says, you know, the CFR now have put big pieces out now that it's time for the philanthropists to come and take their proper part in governance and governing the world.

Well, didn't that kind of clash with, you know, the joke of democracy? Of course, it did, because it was time to try to bypass this idea of democracy. It served its purpose. They had achieved so much, these big powerful groups that own the world, by using wars, but now it was time to try, get the whole planet together by international laws and treaties, and then have a war on the general public of the planet, you know. So that's what's happening today. You see, make it all happen. Bring you altogether again after, again, war, fear of war, diseases and bank crashes and all the rest of it AND reset the economy. A new economy.

The Maurice Strong's of the world who worked for the Rockefeller Foundation group, and the globalists... They're all globalists remember. You're talking about the same one bunch of globalists who own the wealth of the world. They own the big tax-free foundations that are multitrillion dollar enterprises that fund all the NGOs out there, these myriads of armies of nongovernmental organizations, and give tremendous wages and salaries to the leaders of them across the planet, to shape society in the direction that the owners want it to go. And the general public, again, because we've been trained to be naïve and awfully simpleminded and pleasant, we're all pleasant people most of us. most of the time anyway, and agreeable, you know, and law-abiding, and yada, yada, ya.

Used to be, up to not very recently, you'd have work to go to. And when you had work to go to you had a purpose. It gave you purpose and routine. And it made you feel a bit independent. And maybe, yeah, you're watching a chunk of your wage getting taken off you go and pay for all these NGOs and things, and all the other parasites that live on you. But on the whole folk would, it gave them a sense of responsibility, or a feeling they were in charge of something, even their own routine, and income. And that's been taken away from you now.

Because you see, the articles I used to talk about years ago all pointed towards the Maurice Strong type articles and these Biodiversity Treaty and the Rio Summit for sustainability, and the future world where you'll be postindustrial, which happened when they gave it out to China and made you a service economy. Now you're, they call it, interdependent on other countries. No, you're completely dependent on every other country for everything you need, just for basic survival now. You've been completely… This is total war. Your ability too to feed yourself, even feed yourself, has been taken away. That used to be called being conquered, folks. Have you figured that out yet? Hm?

So here you go, Maurice Strong talked about it, a postindustrial, and then eventually a post consumerist society. They had big articles out by the same people who pushed all the global warming ideas, then they changed it to global cooling, then back to global warming again, then it's just climate change. The same groups exactly. Then we're supposed to go into a post consumerist society. You wouldn't be out shopping all the time in a post consumerist society. Well, guess what's happened, folks? Hm? Can you tie things together?

The same groups who are bringing you through the same agenda with, you're all going to die idea, who are fudging all the figures, shamelessly. Because you see, they must get this through... You're not supposed to ever go back to ANY kind of normality. Because you wouldn't listen to this sustainability thing, you see. You wouldn't just allow yourself to be ruled by local officers of the new type of KGB or Stasi and be guided by experts who would tell you how to eat and when to eat it and what to do and blah, blah, blah. Well, guess what you're doing now, folks?

You can't go and shop. You can't go in this... How long have you been out there? An hour and five minutes, here's a $2000 fine. Well, I'm a slow walker to this grocery store. That doesn't matter. And they go through your stuff... You bought something that was nonessential, you got yourself a chocolate snack. What a crime, 'eh? And you're treated like a little child by idiots! Idiots!! And what do you think, for instance, these guys who are dressed in black, who are treating you like a child, are not the same characters, that I used to talk about, would put you in trenches if they were given the orders, folks? Remember the Milgram experiments and things like that? Hm? Remember? Oh, they'll do it, if someone gets enough authority, if someone in authority tells them to do it, they will do it. That's been proven over and over with all kinds of testing. Don't think it's different today. Don't think that.

I, I... ha! You've got to look at some of the authority figures they've rammed out for us all to obey. They are all the same, by the way, the same agenda at the top. Meaning, they've all been handpicked and sworn into it like a little club or brotherhood or sisterhood, or just a hood, hm? Have you noticed they say exactly the same thing as each other? They say exactly the same thing as the World Health Organization, which is a part of the big communist control system on behalf of the rich of the world. Quigley said that. He said, people often accuse us of being communists at the Council on Foreign Relations and Royal Institute of International AFFAIRS. He says, because we have members who are communists, members who are fascists and dictators and so on, we don't mind he says, we bring anybody on. Because they're all on board with the same goal. And they all seem to benefit mightily from the same goal, mind you, no matter what they pretend to call each other. But that's what you do.

Now, here's something you've got to get through your heads. The techniques that are used, like 9/11, you know. They get together in their little quiet rooms, and they decide on what they're going to tell the public. It's all written out for them by teams of guys who work for marketing companies. So, they come out with, weapons of mass destruction. And one after another of these people in these meetings, the politicians and their little higher clique you see, they're interviewed by media as they're walking past will say, well we can’t speak about it except the enemy are using weapons of mass destruction, weapons of mass destruction. And you hear it over and over until you're sick of hearing it. Because they wouldn't tell you anything else. Because they've all sworn, and I mean SWORN, and you'd better understand that the high groups that are there, just like the high occultic groups, when they swear on something, it's no different than when the Masons swear on something, it's the same thing, you take that to the bank or the grave. They all swear together on it, you know, that this is what you'll tell the public. And without an exception they'll say exactly the same thing. So, you're not talking to an independent representative of government on your behalf. You're talking to a robot, folks, who's sworn to it.

Well, it's the same thing when you go into this thing right now, the communist guy at the head of the World Health Organization, and he is communist, and VERY well looked after by China by the way. And always has been. But he's a communist. And he's not a doctor either. And he's telling you how to behave, what to do and the whole bit. And they're talking with AUTHORITY, for obedience, just OBEY them, you see. Of course he knows all the other groups in the CDC and so on and the National Institutes of Health in different countries, and they all have the same parrot line.

The ones that come on TV and they are making stars, all say the exactly the same stuff. Just like weapons of mass destruction. They're built up into star status, when you go into their histories, all you see is PR pieces of how wonderful they are. They're names you've never heard before; they were made to be like star quality. It's kind of like Dr. Oz and DTV, same thing. A guy who himself by the way, it came out, had shares in vaccine companies, he's always pushing vaccines. But in an interview, I'll put the link up too for you to watch if you want to believe it and see it for yourself. But he said, he was asked that, if his own children get vaccinations. He says, oh no, I don't get them vaccinated.

Dr. Oz Admits HE WILL NEVER VACCINATE HIS OWN KIDS (2012) - youtube.com / 8 June 2012

It reminds me of the German one, of one of the flus back in 2009 or 10. They were trying to rush through a vaccine for all the people then too, and folk did get sick with what they came out with in the West, and the whole German government, representatives, refused to take it. They said it was dangerous. [Alan laughing.] Well but, they wanted YOU to take it. Well, I don't think so! I don't think so.

Articles I read last week, and I'll put them up again, from the Department of the Defence talking about the fact that some of the flu vaccines that were given to the troops was making them more susceptible to coronaviruses, other coronaviruses. Huh? N-n-n. And also give you false positives for other ones, you see.

Armed Forces Health Surveillance Branch study in the Journal Vaccine titled, Influenza vaccination and respiratory virus interference among Department of Defense personnel during the 2017–2018 influenza season - sciencedirect.com / 10 Jan 2020

But again, you're supposed to be very on board with it and let's do what you're told and be a child. And watch the WHOLE future, the whole future, where at least you had some rights left after 9/11 although you're spied on like crazy, if they go the whole way now, to even chip you and tattoo you before you can get out of your house. HUH?

Well, this is the time, you know, this is the time where they separate the sheep from the goats obviously. Because you're talking about the end of all free will and free thought. And the whole agenda for sustainability is getting rammed through at the same time. We're not going to allow any businesses to open up unless they are sustainable and green and yada, ya. You know. Really? We, they say we. Who are all these we's, people? Because they're the same groups that are all funded by the same philanthropic organizations that have decided to take over the world. Just like Adam Weishaupt said a long time ago by the way, through philanthropies, we shall end up ruling the world. Because it bypasses all other authorities. You can't complain about someone who's just doing good, can you? Until they end up on top of you telling you what to do and locking you up for eating a bit of, hhh, hhh, hamburger. M-hm.

But then again, you can always lie when they catch you eating that little bit of, in Canada it's tasteless anyway mind you, but you can pretend, you get a little imagination in Canada, we have better imagination than they have in the States because we have to imagine all the time, this is really good meat, you know. If you can get it. But you can't anymore. You can always say to your scientific Stasi, you see, because that's what it is, is a scientific Stasi now monitoring everything that you do, say, think or whatever, or you're going to think even. According to the predictions of Facebook and others, oh, we can pretty well tell what they're going to do, you know, or think, or say. And then they tell you, go and vote. Well, if they already know who you're going to vote for, I guess they can just do it automatically, 'eh? Which they probably do anyway. But yeah, lie to your scientific Stasi and say, well, you know, that wasn't natural meat, it was grown in a lab, one of these lab meats, you know, that they make in Holland there and they have big money for growing this, this, this synthetic stuff in a lab. You see? Lie, lie your teeth off, you see. And then again if they send it off for testing with the same test that they're using for testing for the Covid, they won't know if it's positive or negative, you know, if you're telling the truth or not. So, there you go.

Now before I get really rolling along, I should remind you that you can help me out too by donating if you go into my website @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Very important too you list all the official sites that I have listed on the cuttingthroughthematrix.com website. Because anything can happen.

We really are under a form of tyranny and the big boys themselves, and gals, they're definitely, their intentions are really all the way now. You're going to see wartime powers used on dissenters across the board. That's what they're going to do. They talked about that even in their practices at the Johns Hopkins pandemic study along with Bill and Melinda Gates when they had their big exercise last year [Event 201]. They talked about how they'd have to come after people who would put out conflicting information to the official authorized information that they're putting out themselves from the very top.

So, remember to list all the sites I have, all my official sites, in case anything happens to any of them you can hop onto the next one hopefully and still get my talks. To do so too, remember you can help me by donating to me @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. It tells you how to do it and the methods to help me tick along here. Because I've been putting out stuff for many, many years and I don't charge for the website. And of course, everybody uses it. You find too that a lot of the different hosts use it, and people investigating for articles, or even books in fact, use the information there. So, it's nice if you mention me once in a while, which few folk do. But you can help me, as I say, tick along by sending a buck or two my way whenever you can. It certainly helps me out.

We truly are living in a WAR. This is a war, folks, it really is, for everything, every part of the future. Worse than any other war we've ever had before. The scientific tyranny that Bertrand Russell said that he would endorse, and he hoped, out of all the tyrannies for the future, he was talking about like the basic fascist type, the basic communist type or whatever, he said, of all the tyrannies I would prefer it be a scientific one. Well, that's what you're under. Science is the cover for it all.

Here's something too, and I gave this talk years and years ago, back in the 90s. Don't knock, don't knock something that protected peasants for centuries, and I'll say it, it was your religions. Oh, we've seen the movies. I'm not talking about movies! I'm talking about real history, real things that happened, 'eh. The movies were poisoned to make sure that it was poisoned in your mind forever and ever. But religion was a big nuisance. And you read the tyrants that were promoting THIS system we're in now, like HG Wells and all his nonfiction books. He said it. He said we've got to destroy religion. The same as the communists. They've got a lot in common. You can see how it all ties together with the same group that Quigley was talking about, we have them all, tyrants and fascists and communists and blah, blah, blah, blah, blah, dictators and so on.

Because you see, the Council on Foreign Relations and the Royal Institute of International Affairs, it's all about rulership and keeping command over millions of people. And they financed, yeah, they financed, there's no doubt about it, they financed, helped to finance the communist revolution, or, the Bolshevik revolution. They studied it. Quigley said too, they were fascinated to see how it would work out, a big experiment. Hm. That was an experiment to them. And the same thing with Germany, Nazi Germany. They were all for it for years. They thought, this is terrific, you know, how everybody obeys them, and they're all happy looking. Because the group that runs us, want us all miserable and it's hard to look happy, isn't it, 'eh? So, we don't get such good propaganda that they had back then.

However, be it communist or fascist, and the present so-called, supposedly atheistic scientific socialism system we're in today, they all have to destroy the basic idea of Christianity, especially, for the West. Because that's what they had mainly was Christianity for an awful long time, many, many centuries. And however rulers wanted to rule, they always, it always got in the way of their rulership. Because you couldn't just go out there and slaughter people without some come back from the church, at least, you know. Yeah, you always had corruption of all sides, blah, blah, blah. Even in England it was pretty bad for it too because they did have the nobility, noble families who ran everything and some would go and become knights and go off to war for the king or whatever, and pillage and plunder and rape, all for the good of the king and the crown. But other members of the family would get sent into the priesthood. They lived awfully well, and they were anything but saints. But that's how they ruled for an awful long time.

However, this understanding of a God, you see, a God, believe it or not, but a God got in the way so many times, always, as to what the elite could do to the people. When it became really bad the church had to step up and interact and intercede on the people's behalf, many times, you see. They couldn't go the whole way of just mass slaughter at times against the public. So it was a double whammy at one... You know, they were run by the same people, generally. But they had a lot of ordinary priests come down from the lower ranks and they had some compassion for the people too. Obviously. And they didn't live any better than the people at that time, often worse in fact, some of them.

But it gave the people some, something to stand up for them. And once they understood that, especially when education came in, basic education came in, in the 19th century, once folk understood what it was about, they could use that like a law. You had a law of God. You see, the law of God is different from the laws that the scientific groups are pushing today. The law of a God gives you rights, that they can't just go in and change things, because you've got rights.

It's fascinating to me as I stand back, I can stand back from everything and just watch it and analyze it. They actually gave human life value, a real value. Awfully important that. It was the very thing that Julian Huxley talked about demolishing, this idea of humans on a pedestal feeling superior to other species on the planet. He says, we have to bring down their expectation of what life has to offer and what life is, for them, the human people. Because he was going to go into depopulate. That's what Julian Huxley was all about. He was a Bill Gates of his time. And Planned Parenthood and the whole thing, you know. And he was no lover of the ordinary people at all.

But God gets in the way, even then God got in the way at times. An awful nuisance. The communists talked about it, an awful nuisance. Because again, they wanted to rule by expert rule, scientific socialism, and the people, they had been steeped in the eastern Orthodox traditions, we're awful nuisance at times, and stubborn, you see. HG Wells said that, if we eliminate the family unit... all the communist ideas, strange how they all… It's all the one group with British lords and all the rest of it involved of it, like Russell, and communists. All, because it's one club, you see, with different branches and different names, all, like different kinds of specialized sheepdogs all bringing the world into the same big sheep pen, all the different factions and types of sheep all in the same pen. That's what they do.

So they all said the same thing, that they'd have to demolish religion. And Wells was very straight about it, he says, that way then we, scientific socialists, when we govern, with his pal of course, George Bernard Shaw, he said, then we can talk directly to each subject. You see, you wouldn't be a citizen you'd be subject then, just like the crown in Britain, you're a subject to the Queen. He said, then you’ll get instant obedience because they'll have no family to stand up for them, like a little tribe, and extended family. Because folk used to do that, they used to get together and say, hey that's enough of that and stop it. I can remember schools, when they tried to push the more advanced sex education stuff, which was really, and it's been admitted to now, was to get, to encourage the children into promiscuity so that they wouldn't bond as they grew up, to a particular person, have marriage and have children. That's all admitted to now of course as they boast about things which they denied forever.

I can remember groups of parents would... They'd... The guys at that time too knew they were men, mind you, they weren't cowed with a generation of how bad they were and how they've got the whole weight and guilt of the whole planet on them, psychological warfare. They actually stood up against tyrants. If any teacher, sometimes you'd get a teacher who was an absolute physical tyrant, male or female, it didn't matter, and they would take it out on some child, some of the teachers would just, just pick someone, they'd have some special person they hated and they would hammer them in the classrooms. You would see the parents FLY through those doors in a way, I won't go any further. But that's what it used to be. So even that had to be eliminated too.

Destroy the family unit. Most of the families today, they don't have the dads around now. And of course, most of the women just go along with every change that's pushed along in school. Well, you know, oh well, you know... And that's it. This is all planned that way. We're so well understood that we're predictable. They have techniques to make every group, and every gender too, go along with it. Hitler said it. He said, and he got it from the Communists, he says, we create a massive crisis, or exacerbate the existing crisis, hm. And with crisis you always get a food supply going low, women that were married used to, they'd nag their husbands, what are you going to do about it? He said, well I don't know, I can't start the economy. But it doesn't matter. Then of course the ones who are in power give you the strongman who talks over the heads of the husband, this is what Hitler said, go over the heads of the husband to the wife and offer her security and promise her security and then she's happy. Then she's all for the party, she'll do, go along with the party. He said, she'll come to the party, the child must follow the mother, and then must follow the man. That was the technique. And he got it all from watching and studying, because he worked with the socialists of communism in Russia before it all fell apart there. So really, it's all well understood, perfectly well understood.

So, you're seeing it now too with experts, in your face, for everything, you know. From how to wash your hands, experts who are awfully good at telling you not to touch your face. That's worth a few million a year, surely. And how to social distance... And all the psychological things. Oh, there are people going mad now, you know. And they've got all these… It's like a war effort, 'eh? That's what they do through a war, you churn out all the propaganda… and how fun it is to stay at home, and exercise at home, and they give you all these silly little things to do. That's not for humans, folks, especially ADULT humans.

It used to be when you became an adult you can decide things for yourself. So much so you could take the rap if you broke the rules. But at least you could make the decision. And you've got all these people clamping down, you're all going to die... The usual tried and trusted method. Right down to, they're not going to say that Hitler's going to sterilize you all, they're not using that propaganda. It wasn't true either, you know. They admitted that years later, that Hitler had no stockpiles of gas or anything, you know. But it didn't matter, lies are how you get the wars going. Simple straightforward lies, and targeting certain groups of people... And all the men in Scotland were going to get sterilized. That's how they did it.

It's interesting with the Covid, oh, if we don't fight this Covid and stop it all, you know, it's affecting the testes in men. Well, you've seen the report, it might be designed to do that, who knows? As I say, because there are similar types of tissue that will go for the heart, is one of them too, and the testes. But again, here we go. I mean... you know, think about it. Think about it. Is that meant so's that guys buckle under, oh I don't want to go out and catch that thing there, you know. N-n-n.

A lot of work goes into getting you to obey. But as I say, every member, every member of, that's affiliated with the CDC and the WHO and all the rest of it, they all know each other. They're all appointed to positions. They all go along with the exact same agenda. They'll get incredible financing for their own private businesses, the ones who've got their own private businesses in [the] vaccine industry or preventions of different things like that, and research. Hm? And they're all SWORN to the same companies that will be... that are... [Alan chuckles.] you'll soon be meeting personally if they get their way.

They're even using again the WAR talk. We're at WAR, we're at WAR with a virus. Really? Just like a war, 'eh, is that right? And then they get, again, the dancing nurses. This is the kind of stuff they would put out during a wartime scenario, and how fun it is, as I say, to eat less, you know, and to eat cricket burgers and things like that. Maybe make your own in fact, just cook up the ants, that's all out there too, how to cook up ants and eat them too, 'eh.

Do you want to be reduced to that by these control freaks? ...who planned this. This IS planned, folks. It didn't just happen suddenly. You had the exercise, again, all planned down, in the future scenarios with the Rockefeller Foundation in 2010. If you read through it, you will come across it all, for pandemics and how they were going to shut the people down and blah, blah, blah, blah blah. And then of course you had the one for Covid 2021 idea, for the Johns Hopkins ones with Bill Gates. [Event 201]

So, it took time to plan it. You're seeing them going through the standard scenario, that the figures are massively exaggerated, as we know, for the actual deaths, and what they're telling the public. They've got hospitals there that, they've been laying off staff since the start of this thing. Because the people who run the hospitals, all the other departments are getting laid off since nothing's happening, they can't, they're not bringing the patients in. The ones in New York and elsewhere have actually been bringing some of the ones in from the old folks’ homes. And these old folks’ homes are death traps, you know that. But they're also bringing a lot of them in, for the numbers, who end up dying in the hospitals, and they're really in hospices for, where you're there for about maybe a month at the most before you die. That's standard, that's what hospice is for. A hospice is palliative care, you know. But it pads all the figures.

NYC Adds Nearly 4,000 People Who Never Tested Positive To Coronavirus Death Tolls - dailycaller.com / 14 April 2020

Then you have Dr. Birx, who again has made her career as really a political appointee for different viruses, especially AIDS, across the world, and dishing out grants here and grants there and so on. Again, the same companies, [Alan laughing.] and made a career out of it too. So, I don't think she will block the flow and say anything of her own to the general public.

Dr. Birx: Unlike Some Countries, "If Someone Dies With COVID-19 We Are Counting That As A COVID-19 Death" - realclearpolitics.com / 8 April 2020

So as I say, they're on board with the same agenda, obviously. And it's bigger than just... Let's be honest here. How many folk are dying, we know this too, now, there's doctors coming out across the planet now saying there's folk dying here because they can't get treatment for other things anymore. They can't even get into hospitals to get treatment. There's folk who could survive, there are a lot of heart attacks that get no treatment at all. And they're dying, people that could probably just have a stent put in there and some treatment and they could live years later, for years, a good life, you know.

HIDDEN DEATHS UK coronavirus death toll may be 40% higher than reported as shock figures reveal fatalities outside hospitals - thesun.co.uk / 21 April 2020

But nope. Written off. Written off for this agenda. As they lay off staff all over the place. They're on furlough as they like to call it. It's just astonishing. Some of these old folks' homes too, have been ordered by the government in some places like New York City, some of them, I don't know which ones, that they have to take in patients that have symptoms, symptoms of Covid 19. Well, that's going to spread around to the ones that are uninfected, 'eh.

GP resigns from Medical Council over 'systemic failures' to protect nursing homes amid Covid-19 - irishexaminer.com / 20 April 2020

You've got to start thinking, when you see illogical things happening, there's some purpose behind it, that they have to have a reason, right. The old Sherlock Holmes stories, Sir Conan Doyle, he said when he was talking to Watson, he said my father, I think it was his father or something, used to say that… Or his mentor anyway says, he said, when you've looked at all, all the little clues and you can't find the cause of what's happened here, of all the possible things that could possibly happen, to make the thing happen, the main thing, the killing or whatever it was or robbery happen, if you've ruled out all the things and you can't find the common denominator to make it happen, he says, then you must accept that the other side, of that which is impossible, it must lay within the impossible and be true, when logic fails. You see? That's what you have with this thing. So much of it is so illogical, but it has to be a purpose behind it. And the purpose is definitely padding numbers like you've never seen before.

I'll put up another link to the YouTube of an appointed, again [Alan chuckles.] it's another smarmy character, Matthew Hancock, Member of Parliament in Britain. He starts off as an economist and jumps right into politics. He's got that con man, oh, just suave and, uh, you know, slimy. So, he was given a position as Minister for Health, you know, they appoint him over the big, the national health, so he is the Minister for Health. He was on, it must've been from TV that they took this. He says in it, and when they're talking about the Covid and all that and he says you must remember too that we lose about 10,000 per month of the elderly in these homes, and in their own homes too, in Britain, 10,000 a month, normally.

Did you hear that? - MP Hancock Minister of Health Let Slip, "even in normal times, about 10,000 people die every month in care-homes" - youtube.com / 16 April 2020

You see, most folk don't realize there are folk dying all the time. One day you'll go as well. And your whole world will go with you, and you say, it can't be me, it's not my time, it's impossible. We all go there eventually.

Coming into the world is very personal. You're born, this is YOUR birth, you know. They might have ten going on around you in the National Health Service in Britain. But the fact is, this is YOUR birth, you know. And you know you've come into a bad place. As soon as that fuzziness clears your eyes a bit, and all this noise is echoes in the room, and you see immediately the people in authority are all wearing masks, 'eh. Then one of them grabs you, turns you upside down and slaps you one on the behind, and then tosses you at your mum, after weighing you on a machine. Hm. You know you've arrived into quite a nasty system, 'eh. But yeah, that's really how it is in this world. That's how it is. That's your personal coming into the world.

And eventually it's your personal leaving the world. We don't want to think about it. Some folk are lucky enough, they don't have to think about it, they’re still going on and they just drop dead suddenly. I know a guy who did that in a field, it was a farmer, not here, it was in the UK. But he did die. He was fit up to the end as well, lean and fit and that wiry type that keeps going. Suddenly, you know, a sudden aneurysm I guess in his brain and boomf, just dropped. Without a, he wouldn't have time to even say what's happening. Just poof, yeah. Isn't that beautiful. That's a way to go. But we all get our turn. Once you get to a certain age in fact, in fact I think even after 40 folk occasionally, it starts to dawn on you [Alan chuckles.] step-by-step that one day it will be your turn as well.

But you don't think about it. If you did, you'd get depressed. So, we have a natural ability to kind of go into a kind of denial and ignore it and not dwell on it. Or, be morbid, you would collapse, you see, with morbidity of thought. Then they give you pills, that will make you really crazy. So anyway, yeah, that's your personal exit. It will happen to you. But again, it used to be up until the time of death you had decisions that you could, if you were compos mentis, you can decide for yourself what you wanted. If you had people who would take care of you at the last, you know, last little while or however it was and so on, rather than go into hospital you could, that was even better again.

Because now in the hospitals they'll, [Alan chuckles.] they've written you off before they even really diagnosed you [Alan chuckles.] in Canada, I think. That happened to me. They kicked me out before the week was up and took me off the medication that was going to save my life. I had to search for it outside the country. But now they've even said in Canada, as I've mentioned this a few times, I even put it out there a few years ago when Canada said that – in Ontario especially, they're all the same now though because we've got euthanasia here now, you see – that they will automatically try and get you to accept euthanasia. And they've got great persuaders. They should, it's like the old TV series called The Persuaders I think it was, and there was a group too call that too, Persuaders, I think. So, they fly in persuaders, professional persuaders that are trained. And they look like ordinary people, just an ordinary woman there, could be a mother, an ordinary guy who could be, and so on. They come in and they get to know the people, the relatives in the waiting room or outside the ward or whatever of the person. Especially if people have been hit by accidents and so on, in a coma. They try to persuade the relatives to give consent, you know, oh, it's really sad that, you know, to give the organs, before the person is dead. Because they want to keep the body alive until the last second or whenever they take it out, you see. So for permission. But they're awfully good persuaders. And they'll have tears in their eyes, they're awfully well trained to do it. Some of the doctors too approach you as you go in there and they get sent for as well to persuade you, if they're not sure if you're going to live or die and the try to persuade you to, you know, to do the right thing, you know, and save them cash.

So anyway, yeah, when you go into hospital now with scientific socialism running the score, and now that you have been dehumanized, and accepted that you're not on a pedestal now or as a superior being, then you'll give up more easily. Getting back to HG Wells, that's what I'm talking about too, you see, the government can then do what they want, there's nobody to stand up for you. There's no religion either that can say, you used to say, God gave me these rights and you're supposed to treat me like a human being, you know. Now they'll just laugh at you if you say that, you're not a human being, you're a piece of protoplasm and you're going to kaputsky and they'll have their… What are you going to argue back with?

Look at all these experts they're giving you. Bertrand Russell said, we're training a whole generation, and this is in the late 1940s. He says, we're training a whole generation now that they can't do a thing without the advice of an expert, until eventually the women will be unable to change, he called it, a nappy, which is a diaper, that a woman would be unable to even change them without having expert advice and showing them how to do it. At one time everybody just learned it within the families, you know. But expert advice... and that's what you've got now. It's all here, folks. You've been trained to obey experts.

And you can't even say, well I've got a religion, I've got rights and you can't treat me like this. You see, when it's taken away from you, what are you… are you going to argue what they give as facts? Oh, we're the professionals here, we've got all... Because they are the priesthoods, they can give you whole bunch of fancy terminology, hm, and rattle off the blood counts and so on. And you can stand there with your mouth open, oh well, oh well… You see? You see how easy it is when you listen to this stuff? As they become authorities, to rule your life forever. For every day and every week of your life, from now to the end of your life, that's how it's to be. And you obey, obey, obey? And you can't go here, and you can't go there, unless you have up-to-date vaccines and so on? And you're supposed to obey this?

I came down with massive rheumatoid arthritis after had a whole bunch of boosters back in the 90s, that's what happened to me. Whoooof! Helluva fevers, a whole lot. I had every finger in my hands just swelled right up, and joints everywhere, just massive. Vaccine, and if you were to ask them about it, oh, the companies will say tell them no, you know, when they have bad reactions to things. Oh, you've got the wrong kind of genes, you know. ...these pithy nonsensical answers. Your genes were fine before you got them, got these vaccinations. And you could've lived a long, long life quite healthfully if you hadn't got them. You see?

But again, this massive mandate, and you've got characters like Bill Gates, a EUGENICIST, whose all for Planned Parenthood and the whole thing and yada, yada, ya, and bringing down the amount of population. You're going to trust his character and the groups that he's involved with? Do you really, do they really think we're that stupid?! Honestly? Honestly, 'eh? And are they really, really going to try and ram this and make us all obey like little farm animals here? Because if that's the case, you'd better just toss any idea of rights or freedoms or democracy out the darn window forever. And welcome to scientific socialism, the biggest con game that's ever been invented for dictatorship and rulership of tyranny over the public. EVER. Because you don't have anything now to fight back with. You're not a member of their club. You can't argue back with this so-called science. The latest theory, yah? And a stack of latest theories, 'eh? [Alan laughing.] Most of which become obsolete in no time at all for a new theory. But that doesn't make any difference to the scientific priesthood… who ALL are on board because they get well rewarded by the Masters who run the world, the big foundations, etc. WELL rewarded. Like never before. And since they are atheistic, they have no problem with taking big, big sums of cash. Oh, sorry, donations into their private, you know, enterprises and so on. For the good of all, you understand.

So maybe you should start thinking about your rights and stop laughing or pooh-poohing this idea of some supreme being looking over everything. Because at least then, look at the groups who are following their own belief, hm. The authorities aren't going to be forcing them, they are not, they are not, they are not. And it's been made quite clear to them in places like Britain and elsewhere. So, you'd better perhaps start putting yourself down as a believer and start reading about your rights because they're contained in there, you know.

The misery that's being caused right now with mass unemployment, DESIGNED to go into complete bankruptcy, which is what they want for most people, and the NEW system comes in. And you have a new commissar, I did the talks on this years ago, appointed to every street, who will give you visits to make sure that you're doing all the right things and you're being a good citizen or comrade etc. etc., whatever term they want to use for it. They are already there. The government of Britain has employed thousands of these little snoops. I'm sure every other country has done the same. Never mind the massive armies they've got all over the Internet, which is nothing new, naturally.

I've mentioned before, folks who live in the communist countries, in Bulgaria and places like that, they were Christians, a lot of them. They knew, at least they knew who the local snoop was that belonged to the, got a paycheck from the Politburo's. They would have quiet secret meetings for their religious ceremonies in folks' houses and things. That's why they had to do in this atheistically run system of the old Soviet. Because it's true, you see, a regime where folk believe that there's a higher authority than petty man, who always becomes tyrannical given the full force of authority. Then you've got to fight it back with something.

And these folks literally, scientific tyranny again Bertrand Russell said that it would be horrific for the general public. But he was all for it. Because it will not, won't accept any dissent from you. You'd better comply or else it will be utterly ruthless. Utterly ruthless. You can't get out of your house and go and get food to EAT without having an up-to-date record? What?! Everybody better start making their choices and decisions right now because this is something they're not going to give up on easily. I really mean it.

They've pretty well failed with their nonsense with the climate change thing, how you have to give up all your rights and be ruled by experts for the survival of the earth. So, they've rammed this one through. It's the same agenda. Businesses can't open unless they're vetted first by, by, by the proper people for the environment to make sure it's green and environmentally friendly and sustainable, etc. etc. etc. All the websites are screaming this stuff out. This is their religion, you know, total tyranny. Yep. N-n-n.

I'll mention a few articles here just to give you something else to think about rather than just me talking here. This is from a Journal talking about science. It won't matter again even if you... Facts don't matter, you see, when you're dealing with the priesthoods. Because they can understand facts differently from you, you see, they've been trained to. This is from the Journal of Medical Microbiology. I mentioned this before. It's from 2012.

False-positive PCR results linked to administration of seasonal influenza vaccine

microbiologyresearch.org / 1 March 2012

(Alan: It's got a whole bunch of people who took part in it.)

False-positive PCR results usually occur as a consequence of specimen-to-specimen or amplicon-to-specimen contamination within the laboratory. Evidence of contamination at time of specimen collection linked to influenza vaccine administration in the same location as influenza sampling is described.

(A: It's awfully important what I've said here. Because…)

Evidence of contamination at time of specimen collection (A: Generally if you go into the hospital that's where you're going to get it, folks.) linked to influenza vaccine administration (A: Remember too, influenza is also a coronavirus, that category.) in the same location as influenza sampling is described. (A: So it gets contaminated right off the bat, right off the very beginning.)

Clinical, circumstantial and laboratory evidence was gathered for each of five cases of influenza-like illness (ILI) with unusual patterns of PCR reactivity for seasonal H1N1, H3N2, H1N1 (2009) and influenza B viruses.

(A: Again, they had the same thing in 2009/2010, the H1N1, oh, we're going to die. And bird flu, I stopped whistling right there.)

Two 2010 trivalent influenza vaccines and environmental swabs of a hospital influenza vaccination room were also tested for influenza RNA. Sequencing of influenza A matrix (A: And they go through the whole thing from the...) (M) gene amplicons …

(A: And it says here, this is what they found though, from the swabs of the AREA, where all the vaccinations took place, right. It says here that, and they had all kinds of vaccines too that they were using.)

…showed greatest homology with the M gene sequence of Influenza A/Puerto Rico (A: This is the type which they first found there...) /8/1934 H1N1 virus (used in generation of influenza vaccine strains). (A: Right. It says…) Environmental swabs had detectable influenza A and B RNA. RNA detection studies demonstrated vaccine RNA still detectable (A: This is in the rooms that they did it all. It happens, the same things in old folks' homes by the way when they give them all that. You find the same thing too in hospitals for when they're treating the coronaviruses now using the similar techniques with swabs and so on.)

Environmental swabs had detectable influenza A (A: ...you know, and also with the injections...) and B RNA. RNA detection studies demonstrated vaccine RNA still detectable … (A: This is on the surfaces and the walls and so on.) … still detectable for at least 66 days.   (A: Right.)

(A: This is astonishing really. This is environmental swabs, right.)

Environmental swabs had detectable influenza A and B RNA. RNA detection studies demonstrated vaccine RNA still detectable for at least 66 days.

Administration of influenza vaccines and clinical sampling in the same room resulted in the contamination with vaccine strains of surveillance swabs collected from patients with ILI. Vaccine contamination should therefore be considered, particularly where multiple influenza virus RNA PCR positive signals (e.g. H1N1, H3N2 and influenza B) are detected in the same specimen.

It's just astonishing, folks, that... Ha, when the big one was going on in 2009/2010, and another a couple of years later. But when it was going on and they wanted everybody to get vaccinated and so on, it was, I know some of the hospitals in New York, they were offering the influenza vaccine, and giving them the vaccine as they went into the cafeteria, eating their food, you know... I remember going into town when they had a, back then that had a mall that still had two or three stores left open in it, because they were all collapsing with the economy being going off to different countries and folk ordering online. But it still had two or three stores in it. I remember one of the empty stores, the reason to give people a vaccine, but it was a spray type, oral type. Well, this is in the wintertime, and you know, the central heating is getting blasted all over the place. And I could smell the stuff! [Alan laughing.] I could smell what they were doing, coming out of this open door to the actual main part of the mall. You know, so much for your permission, 'eh. I-yi-yi. I tell ya.

It's just astonishing to me what happens in real life. It really is. You don't have to go into fiction, you just look what we're living in, this is the biggest fiction of all. It's called democracy and they say yeah you have rights; you know, we’ll listen to you. That's the only right you have, they might listen to you. But they're getting even intolerant for listening to you now, aren't they? They don't want to waste their time there.

Also, I want to put a link up, it's quite a good article. It's a good documentary, it gives you an idea of many, there's many out there actually but this is one that's been underrated to an extent. It was during World War II and the Japanese had a big experimental thing for biowarfare there, it was called…

Kizu the Untold Story of Unit 731 - youtube.com / 28 Jan 2020

I've got stacks of one's for other countries too. You wouldn't believe the ones that are still going on in the US. In the US they were doing all the syphilis tests and so on and telling people they were giving them treatments to cure syphilis, but they actually gave them the syphilis and then studied them and things like that. They used radiation on the people they called mentally retarded at the time, that's what they called them, youngsters, young children and studied them too. This is the US one.

But back to Kizu, they have a good documentary on it, and they have the old guards and so on, doctors that were alive back in the 70s and 80s talking about it, what happened there. How they would literally inject plague into people and studied them. Well, that's the same thing. You see, the scientists that come out, you wouldn't believe what they're into. Their whole life is a horror show. To most people it's a horror show. I read the book years ago on the air too, good parts of it, it was a good book called Acres of Skin. It's a good book on how the prisoners in the US and different people were used for experiments. Well documented. Yeah, they even tried giving them cancers, in the prisons in the US, injecting them there, to see if certain things would take. I wonder why they'd want to find out if they could do certain things to give you cancers, 'eh?

But this is what goes on all the time... in our great free societies... where everything's open supposedly... except anything to do with the truth. That seems to be the exception, which is most things. So, it's just astonishing what goes on all the time and you have no idea.

So, the Kizu, the untold story of unit 731, is at least an admission by people who took part in it as to what they actually did and what they were looking to do and so on. But it didn't end there because if you really go dig into that, they had scientists, there were some scientists that got into Japan, who worked with the Japanese from Europe, and that too, they keep all that out of it too. But there were some people doing Mengele stuff there, and they weren't German.

Scientists like that, you'd be surprised how many people are quite open about what they do. As I say, the ones who work in the biowarfare industry, especially, are psychopathic tendencies, no doubt about it. They're well-paid so they'll please the Masters, and they're given license to do different things that you wouldn't normally do and get away with things too, even in their own lives. So, it suits them fine. And they're paid awfully well. They have a genuine curiosity of studying people or animals as they die. Oh, that's it, oh, now look at that, that's so interesting, do you see that there, hm. That's how they do it, you see.

That's the world we live in. And these folk have no belief in any supreme being that would grant rights to the peasants that they experiment on. They'd laugh at that. But it's up to them to get them to stop laughing perhaps. And you don't have to be a screaming loud Christian, for instance, in this strange American way of being, you can be a quiet one, but loud enough when it comes to your own rights, etc. That should be enough to shut up the scientific priests that want to take over and order your life, you see, in a very nasty fashion.

Scientific experimentation is horrible. It really is horrible. And we're being experimented on all the time, you know. Canada, ha, we were, we're eating all their genetically modified food, and with new pesticide and herbicide poisons on them, for years, for 10 years. They used Canada as the testing base without telling the public. It only broke out when Tony Blair was going to put the same thing into Britain and there were pressure groups there that had been following it and says, no way. It broke out then, well, Canada's doing it. Well, we didn't know that, you see. So suddenly Canada had to go into action immediately, oh well yeah, we, yeah... we'd made a SECRET deal, they said, with the companies like Monsanto, a secret deal. This is from, I think it was Chretien that was in at the time as Prime Minister. But they had made a secret deal. Isn't that wonderful? Don't tell, don't tell.

And they think they're democratic! …and that they've got rights! Here they are eating stuff that already had cause cancers in lab animals. Cancers in the stomach and the colon, let's feed it to Canadians. This happened, folks. I did the stories at the time. And then afterwards I came out too as more and more information came out. It's ast... I even did the story, I kept sticking to it, I said what on earth is this, the big fuss about a central computer going to get put in Ottawa for the government, you see, that would collect all the data on every Canadian. Well, at the time they didn't, we didn't know we were on this poison stuff and all that. And I thought, well it's going to be for connecting not just financial stuff and that, it's got to have your HEALTH in it and probably collecting some kind of data. And I was spot on! Before it broke out, we were getting it, we were the guinea pigs for it all. They would keep tabs through all the different national health service that they've got here, it's really one system under different corporations. There's one system and they would get all the data fed right into them in Ottawa, you see. That's what it was for. We were the lab rats all right. I noticed this; at the time I hadn't put it all together until we got the message. But I knew something stunk.

Because I said, suddenly all the… What happened with a lot of people, [Alan chuckles.] I won't go into all the different types of, certain kinds of chemical injuries people would get. They would develop allergies like never before, this is about the 60s especially onwards, it got worse and worse. The 50s had it too when kids would get asthma suddenly with certain eating, things like that. But I noticed they used to have, that's what hit you in Canada when you came over from Britain, you saw, my God, look at all these aisles in the pharmacies of antihistamines and so on. There's a reason for it naturally.

Then I noticed they started putting all the stuff for the stomach out. It used to be things which were proton pump inhibitors that used to be prescription only. Suddenly they were over the counter things, just on the shelves and everything. I thought, what's going on here? Because it's quite dangerous to use them for a long time. Just suddenly they're over the counter. I said, oh yeah – I was told it was quite normal for folk to take them – it was to do with the food! Obviously. Basic Sherlock Holmes, right. Basic. Let's see now, folk are starting to get upset stomachs and increased acidity. When you get increased acidity, and you didn't have it before, and it's not an ulcer, at least it's not starting off as an ulcer, then something's causing it to flush. And it flushes with acid, more acid than normal. Anything the body doesn't like it will flush. Something in your nose, it will flush, in your sinus it will flush, in your eyes it will flush. That's how it does it. The same with your intestines and your stomach. So, here you have this strange, you know, this strange little problem with your stomach. And oh, these pills help it. Because they stop the acid production, or really lower it massively. Which causes other problems naturally. But yeah, something you may be eating, 'eh. Could it be that I wonder, 'eh? Etc.

So yeah, the Canadian government went right into action. Oh well yeah it was, you know... And they had these stupid, same thing as you're seeing now with the dancing nurses. They brought out, oh here's the CBC and here's someone, people making a fuss about this new kind of food. It looks like the same kind of stuff. You see a woman standing at a little stall that they'd set up in the countryside somewhere, so she’s selling veggies to the passersby, you know, it was all rigged. And, do you notice anything different with them, with a name like Linda or something like that. Oh no, this carrot here looks the same as the other carrots to me and dut-dut-dut, and tastes much the same, you know, I think it's just fine, ha, ha, ha. And that was our whole thing that they gave us for it. That was it, it's fine, you know, yeah. N-n-n.

So yeah, you're living in a fool's paradise. Only it's not a paradise anymore, even for a fool. And we don't have enough imagination to keep the farce going. So, we're living through incredible changes, planned changes. And they've got a long ways to go. They can do it very quickly by the way, if they keep you in a panic and you're all obedient to them. And because obviously you're not meant to... It's a reset, total reset on the financial system. Out of this will come either a new currency, maybe even a global currency which they've wanted for years. They've floated the idea before in trial balloons to see how you react to it. And a digitalized currency too. Again, I've done the articles too for years from the World Bank, etc., try to get all the public, all these animals using it, using a digital system anyway, tracked, traced and the whole thing, and see what they're eating, blah, blah, blah, buying, yada, yada, ya. We are animals to them.

Do you understand WE are the source of ALL wealth for all those above you? That's one place Marx was right. All wealth comes from the people at the bottom, the masses of the people. You're a herd that the rest of them feed off. Ask any politician, they know. This is the truth. This is the reality of it. Wake up, folks! You know. Wake up. And look at the money they give themselves, as they represent us, politicians and civil servants and yada. Look at the money they get. Huh?! And their early retirement schemes and big, big pensions. And total health coverage forever, etc. etc. Just astonishing. SERVANTS? Servants, 'eh? There is Orwellian doublespeak, 'eh, oh we're here to serve the people.

But yeah, we really are a big herd that are being used by them. And right now, look at the people who've become multibillionaires in the last 10 to 20 years off of us in the IT industry, alone. Hm. And even the IT surveillance society, alone. All getting rich off of us. From us. And they use our money to fund their projects with public/private partnerships. Isn't that wonderful? You pay to set it up, you pay to maintain it, and they take the profits. And you think this is normal? Where did you get that from? Quite amazing isn't it, reality. N-n-n.

A long time ago I also did the talks on the reporters who went into Porton Down in England. Porton Down that they had the big biowarfare experimental labs there, but lots of other labs there too. In fact, Victor Rothschild used to work at it during World War II. According to The Fifth Man, the exposé on him, he sent the details from the different radar equipment and so on, portable stuff, over to the Soviets during World War II. Quite amazing it was. Good story. However, Porton Down isn't just biowarfare, it's all kinds of technologies and weaponry and so on.

But the scientists there allowed, at least one time, a reporter in who sat and had breakfast with them and followed them into the lesser labs, the less secretive labs he was allowed into. They talked about biowarfare and ethnic specific diseases they'd created, very proud of it, over breakfast, you know, and in between talking about doing their gardens, before they left their wives and children. Because they love their wives and children. They got a good life, and they get paid awfully well, you know, and they were looked after awfully well by the state, to find ways to kill folk, you know, en mass that is. They talked about it quite, yeah, they had viruses they could release that would target specific genes, for their genotypes, you see. Maybe that's what they meant when they said about certain vaccines not taking or having bad reactions, you had the wrong genes. Maybe that's all coming from the same labs. Who knows, 'eh?

But anyway, there's an old idea, the ethnic specific ones. Israel did it too. All the different countries. The US did it. I think it was Kelly that was killed in Britain, well, he was, supposedly he committed suicide before he went as a witness to the big trial. He worked for biowarfare testing for the British establishment. He also had been, had work in training ethnic specific viruses with another country, he was ordered to do it by the British government at the time. So, there's all kinds of folk involved in... killing us, you see. And getting paid awfully well to do it.

But going way back, and I did talks on this years ago on all the different testing they did on Britain especially with the Navy for instance releasing airborne gases and diseases across parts of Britain from ships and it would float across with the wind in the right direction, into parts of Norfolk for instance, as an example. But they also had an awfully good documentary put out by a, it was put out and fostered really, because an American airman over there in one of the bases had watched these experiments done on the British public by their own governments, and their own military. They used vans to go around the country, the villages and so on, giving this gas out at the top. It was just like radioactive gas. They put out these boxes in different places that would then record how much was contained and spread and in the different areas. This happened for years, and they had specially modified vans to do this.

…just in case of course the Russians ever... It's the same thing with gain of function in these bio labs, isn't it? The same excuse they give, well we have to sort of test it on the public in Britain just in case the Russians ever did it. Huh?! And then with the gain of function, well we set up these labs to get fairly harmless diseases, make them really volatile and nasty and lethal, in case it ever did it by itself in nature, somehow. It's the same thing. The same excuse. By psychopaths. Well-paid psychopaths, mind you.

Here's a little article here...

World War II Secret Mustard Gas Testing

Secret World War II Chemical Experiments Tested Troops By Race

npr.org / 22 June 2015

Secret World War II Chemical Experiments Tested Troops By Race

(A: The experiments tested troops by race, ethnic race or group.)

While the Pentagon acknowledged years ago that it used American servicemen in World War II mustard gas experiments, NPR found new details about tests that grouped subjects by the color of their skin.

(A: So yeah, they do all these ethnic studies, and it's all... to find the best ways to kill each group, 'eh. They did it in Canada too. I can remember, at least they had some documentaries, they always put out documentaries after most of them die or died off, in Canada. These guys worked in the military; they were servicemen. They were sprayed from above, and different methods of spraining them and giving poisons to them. They were told it was for the good of the country and they would be safe, nothing was going to harm them. They all came down with cancers. They talked to some of the last couple of survivors back in maybe the early 90s, the rest of them had all died off of course. This is how you're used by your own countries, hm? And you vote for these governments over and over and over. N-n-n. Repetition is the definition of insanity, when it's killing you. So anyway you have, it gives you…)

As a young U.S. Army soldier during World War II, Rollins Edwards knew better than to refuse an assignment.

When officers led him and a dozen others into a wooden gas chamber and locked the door, he didn't complain. None of them did. Then, a mixture of mustard gas and a similar agent called lewisite was piped inside.

(A: So, someone got a patent on it I guess.)

"It felt like you were on fire," recalls Edwards, now 93 years old. (A: Well, he lived okay.) "Guys started screaming and hollering and trying to break out. And then some of the guys fainted. And finally they opened the door and let us out, and the guys were just, they were in bad shape."

The second story in this report examines failures by the Department of Veterans Affairs to provide benefits to those injured by military mustard gas experiments.

(A: They’ve done all kinds of experiments on the military. And in every country, they do that.)

Edwards was one of 60,000 enlisted men enrolled in a once-secret government program — formally declassified in 1993 (A: You see, most of them would be dead by then.) — to test mustard gas and other chemical agents on American troops. But there was a specific reason he was chosen: Edwards is African-American.

(A: They did it with all ethnic groups though.)

It's just astonishing, you know. They do the same thing with these different, again, gain of functions as well. As I've said before, the Porton Down experiments that they did there, in the exposés done by journalists about visits there, it's the same kind of thing. The incredible testing on British servicemen and the British populations. Unknowingly by the populations. You're not asked to give any consent, you understand. So your authorities, your authorities, I'll say that again, your authorities look upon you as peasants, and animal peasants, no different than the experimental lab rats who don't know any better either, you know. They're not given any choice themselves, you see. Neither are you when they do it like that.

So yeah, I have no problem looking at what happens with Covid or anything else that comes along and the big agenda behind it. Because when it doesn't tally up to massive millions of folk dying, per week here, it doesn't tally to what the big fear they put out initially is. But they had a whole agenda regardless, it's still getting rammed along as though it had been millions and millions and millions, you see.

Getting back to Mr. Hancock, MP for Health for Britain. I'll put up what he said once again, I'll say it once again because folk really don't have very long memories today. He did say that, and I'll put it up for you in a YouTube. He says, you know, about 10,000 elderly die every month, here. He is talking about England really.

Did you hear that? - MP Hancock Minister of Health Let Slip, "even in normal times, about 10,000 people die every month in care-homes" - youtube.com / 16 April 2020

That's for that population size, you know. Every country gets huge deaths every year. But when you get a flu going through it too it really, really boosts it right up. That never closes the countries down either. When you see a unified agenda getting rammed through every country on the planet, and heads are all talking just like the same, from the same script, the EXACT same script, verbatim, then it's orchestrated, it's managed, and it's a must-be agenda, you see. Obviously.

And it's not to put down folk that are dying at all. But I've been looking at cases and cases, they had one the other day in a newspaper in the States, New York. It was a hospital where two, a man, I'm sorry, with a woman, and you see again all the staff applauding this woman because she was taken off the ventilator. She didn't know that her husband who was about 10 years older I think was in the same hospital on a ventilator and he eventually got off it too. But they both, she was about 55 maybe, he was 65 or a bit older, and they both had, were overweight, multiple problems, diabetics. But multiple problems she had, high blood pressure, I think both of them had high blood pressure. All this kind of stuff against them and yet they pulled through. I've got reports here, folk in their 90s pulling through from this thing. So, the death rate really is low as long as they get the treatments that are available, obviously. Some countries are just letting the elderly die.

I read the articles from Canada; they're only going to give any kind of treatment to the people that they deem are worthy of pulling through basically. So, more chance of doing it, they'll treat them. If it gets really bad, they said they'll treat them, but they have to let the rest of the folk die. That was Canada. That's Canada for you. But in New York at least there still giving treatments to people that are available at least, you know, maybe antivirals and different things as well. Of course, treatments for their blood pressure obviously and so on.

But yeah, even out of British Columbia there was a couple of women there, there's a lot of old age homes in British Columbia, retirees from different groups, and even Chinese groups there, you know. It was traced, a lot of them who came in, from the relatives, right from Wuhan to visit the homes some of them. I put the article up about two or three weeks ago there. You can really trace and see it when it was brought into the country. But they even were pulling people through there in their 90s. So it's not all gone, if they WANT to do their best to help you, you know.

But again, a lot of folk that are in hospices who are dying, who are dying, they're putting them down as Covid, if they think, even presume they have Covid on top of something, you see, they're putting down that as the cause of death. That's what Dr. Birx said, I'll put that one up to tonight for those who want to go through it.

Dr. Birx: Unlike Some Countries, "If Someone Dies With COVID-19 We Are Counting That As A COVID-19 Death" - realclearpolitics.com / 8 April 2020

So yeah, they're padding the figures as much as they can. Lots of folk have had this and got over it, and they're getting put down really, the folk who are dying with it, even though their main cause of death could be kidney failure by something else, they've got a pre-existing renal problem and high blood pressure, and they are terminally ill with cancers and so on... And again so many of them are so weakened with chemo, because it does that, it will kill off a lot of your white blood cells that attack all kinds of diseases, it kills a lot of them off so you're VERY vulnerable to just, you know, getting hit with this thing. You have no immune system left to fight it. All kinds of reasons why folk are dying.

But a lot of people are really dying in hospice, that's what they go into hospice for. It's a terrible place to get put into. They starve the people anyway too, I've done shows before years ago where they literally are told to withhold food and water, etc. to speed up their exits. This is what it's come down to, dollars and cents as we become less and less special as humans, you see, and we start to believe them. Well, I guess I'm just another animal, you know, I watch the nature programs, yeah, I'm just another animal, yeah, okay.

Once you do that you're done for, you have nothing to fight back with. You have no defenses. You can't say, you can't touch me, I am something special, I've got a conscious mind. Or as they said in the movie Network, I'm a human, God dammit, he says, I'm a human being, God dammit. He says, I'm getting really angry, open your window and all shout at the same time, and he says, I'm not going to take it anymore. And perhaps we shouldn't. Because that's so true.

I look at the faces of some of the supposed experts, they're frightening actually, the ones who are demanding. Some of them are like school mistresses that are in a bad mood, or something's happen at home they're not too happy about. They're the ones that would beat up some of the students. You look at them, utter intolerance if folk speak out that they're not wanting to go along with all that's being, not proposed but ordered here. That's the scary part of it. That's the scary part of it.

You're seeing authoritarianism like never before get pushed into Western countries, all the stuff that folk fought against, against the communism and the Sovietization of the nations is being rammed along here with intolerant people. With the same kind of nerve that they all, we are the authorities, do what you're told. And when that's the case and you don't have a choice in anything, then you'll be punished for it too. You won't get treatments for certain other things that you could do because they'll use this like a big, big stick, you see, you'd better take this if you want this, you know. And no, that's authoritarianism. That's not a free democratic... That's not how the West evolved. We fought for centuries to get away from being ruled over by our betters. You see. Like Bertrand Russell said, scientific socialism and scientific tyranny will be the worst kind of tyranny you've ever seen. He meant it.

I'll get into the articles now. An article here and it's called…

We All Live in Disneyland, Orlando

theirishsentinel.com / 19 April 2020 / Helena Handbasket

(A: I've mentioned Disneyland so many times before and how we're brought to be in Disneyland, a fake reality, you see. And don't be put off by the name posted by Helena Handbasket because it's a good article and I know who did it.)

On Friday 17th of April, my wife and I took a 90 minute drive to attend an Open Florida rally outside the mayor's office in Orlando. All in all the turnout was around 200 people and peaceful throughout with the police taking very much a back seat view of the whole thing, although there was a drone present for a while observing this peaceful assembly. In fairness to the police they had stated the previous day that they respected our right to assemble under the constitution.
(A: Which is unusual these days.)

There were many driving by honking their horns in support of the rally, but it would have been far more useful if they'd parked up and joined us. I would have expected a much larger turnout in a city such as Orlando where the main tourism industry of Disneyland etc. is located and is of course at a complete standstill with all workers 'furloughed', or temporarily unemployed.

(A: I can remember doing the article some years back when they were wanting to put tattoos on you if you came through the turnstiles to make sure that you had paid, you know. Little by little you get repetition, you get used to the idea.)

Disappointed as I was in the turnout, I was further disappointed to see many politicize the rally waving pro Trump flags. I didn't see a Democrat candidate flag being waved. It has nothing to do with politics and only gives ammunition to the mainstream to label everyone a right-wing extremist.

(A: And that's no joking, folks, that's the technique of psychological warfare, you see. And it's on the go all the time, psychological warfare. They set up fake enemies and the whole bit and they try to split people from, who could all be together protesting the same natural things to protests. So, they try to pretend that, oh it's only right-wingers that are protesting. Everybody else is left wing, we like being ordered about, we like being locked down, we like having professionals tell us what to do and went to shop and what to buy and what not to buy and go through our baskets and see if you've bought any nonessentials, etc., we like that. You see? This is how they try to portray it. Just split up and divide. Where you're all going to suffer, I don't care what pretended party you pretend to believe in. Because they're all bogus anyway. They really are.)

This is not a political problem; it is a global plan to take down the whole of society across the world in a full-blown attempt by powers we'll never see to control mankind. This is a business model that has been worked on for many years finally coming in to view.

(A: He goes on talking about all the stuff we've talked about before. He talks about the media of course, where he actually mentioned that he talked to one of the newspapers and asked them if it was going to mention if the newspapers, or the cameramen actually, if it was to do TV as well because they all do TV as well or little clips for their sites for newspapers.)

I also asked the cameraman to take a look at some numbers regarding comparisons of Covid-19 deaths and other causes of death between Jan. 1st and April 1st 2020 (A: …which is of course what they should all be doing if they were really doing their job and investigative reporting.) which, of course, he refused to do, to which I retorted…. COWARD!

(A: [Alan laughing.] So, he was told off.)

He goes on and on and on. But it's true, the mainstream media unfortunately is all part, just like it was to get World War II whipped up and prepared for the people, or prepare the people using the media before the war started to make sure that they were on board with it by terrifying them and having meetings with the media barons altogether, because they're all members of the same ruling club. Nothing is changed. But the ones on the left pretend that they're... Come on. Come on! N-n-n-n-n.

But this article is worthwhile reading, you should look into it. And one of many that I'll put up tonight. If you have the time. You've got plenty of time, you're all sitting at home now, you know. And believe it or not, I mean, I put up stuff you can read as well. I know it's out of fashion, reading, and they admit themselves, their quite happy with it, in all their studies, that most folk's attention spans have, if it's not something moving in front of their face, even a little puppet, you know, they don't want to even listen to something unfortunately. But if you listen to something you'll find your mind takes over, and your imagination takes over, and you'll feel and picture it, your memory will improve. If you just staring at a screen all the time, your hypnotized, you won't remember most of it. That's a fact.

Years ago I said I'm not coming out for everybody; I'm coming out for the ones that literally are desperate and they really want to know what's going on. But they have to have the abilities and be willing to sacrifice pleasure all the time, and then you start to enjoy just listening to the radio version. You will. Your mind definitely will improve, your memory will remember what you're hearing much much better. But most folk are trained from birth to, why do you think they stick children in front of the TV set, the babysitter, and watch all these little silly TV things, baby things, all programming them into the environment and sustainability, and little Naughty here, he might die if the grass dies, you know, and he's a bad man, the bad man caused this. I-yi-yi. So I'll put this article up.

Another one too, it's a good article. He goes into, what a lot of people are questioning is their, again their conditioning. Including their conditioning to even, you know, stand up for changes. Maybe even starting to catch on they've been used here occasionally doing different things. But I tell you, there's hope for people, everywhere, who actually start to see the bigger picture. It can take you years to see the bigger picture. And when it does hit you, you might crash. It's like a death, you know, when you realize that things are not, that something's gone, something's gone. What's gone is the fact that you're not so naïve anymore. And what's gone is the belief that you've always done the right thing. You've done maybe the right things for yourself, what you thought you were right, but you've maybe been used, you see? Lots of folks are having that. Lots of articles from people. This article here is basically about coming through a lot of this stuff too.

How Will America End? A Bang, A Whimper, Or Something Else

activistpost.com / 16 April 2020 / Brandon Turbeville

Hope is a wonderful thing. Even in the darkest of times, hope gives us the strength to keep working toward a goal in the face of impossibility or to keep fighting for life even though all evidence points to the contrary. Hope is what can lead to miracles, to beauty, and to revolutions.

But hope can be a treacherous thing as well. It can blind those standing on train tracks to believe that the train heading towards them will stop in time or to believe, despite hearing the whistle as clear as day, that the light at the end of the tunnel is not a train at all. It can fool people living in unbearable circumstances, who are listening to their own governments denounce them as criminals and parasites worthy of eradication to believe that things are going to get better. Things will get better, in their mind, because they have to.

(A: I should add to this too, that the authorities that I've mentioned just a little while ago there, that are getting nastier and nastier, for this scientific tyranny, who have already all colluded together and pledged in their honor in the gang that they are in, and I mean an oath, 'eh, like weapons of mass destruction, that they're all going to push it at the same time, and regardless of what you do, it's like having a war, they've got a war on you. It's a war on you. That's what it is. And you are an enemy if you say no to whatever, you know, and you won't just simply do what you're told and obey from these characters. Then they're using the same terminology, almost like the Holocaust denial. Oh, you're an anti-this or an anti-that, or you're denying that this will help you or whatever, whatever they're going to present to you from Bill Gates or the other vaccination companies that are all one big, really, cartel. If you've got any points of view about it, you're a DENIER, you see. They're using the same terminology to make you, to stigmatize you. This is an EVIL, EVIL technique that's used to stigmatize people. It was the same thing they used with, oh, you're a climate change denier, you know. Or a global warming denier. Immediately it's meant to shut you up! This is the techniques that the communists talked about years ago in the American books that they put out. Because most of them were based in New York actually. Most of the ones I have here, all their old manuals, were all printed in New York. [Alan laughing.] From the Communist Party, in the Soviet system too.)

(A: But yeah, it's quite amazing how they're using the same techniques to stigmatize people who have woken up and say, wait a minute here, you know, who gave you the right to dictate my life, 'eh? Or even whether you going to get treatment or not if you go against some other part of something, 'eh? This is tyranny, folks when that happens. We're supposed to have choices in this country, and these systems that are out there that we're all paying our money into, especially in Canada, it's taken off here, whatever you earn it's taken off you for healthcare and so on, it all comes out of your taxes, they are supposed to serve you, not DICTATE to you but SERVE you.)

(A: This change that we've been getting fed for a while now, that they are now in charge, you see, they are in charge of you, before this came along even, NO, that's not serving you. That's dictating to you. That's tyranny, folks. You don't dictate to folk in a free society. You're supposed to be a part of the service that the people, who you might not agree with, are paying for, they pay you to serve them, not dictate to them. Even if it goes against the particular religion of science that you're into... that keeps changing its theory after theory after theory and so on and so on, what's the theory of today.)

(A: I watched a little clip of a guy from Korea, and people were into it. Again, he's from the WHO. And it's not Korea… It might be… Yeah, it is Korea, I think it's South Korea. He led the team there. Again, works in collusion with the WHO, you know, Dr. WHO, and parroting the same stuff. But he was right on with what they are taught at that level, and he wouldn't deviate from any, there was no treatment except what they were going to give you eventually, you know, from the companies that were going to develop all the different stuff for you. There's no treatment he says, blah, blah, except THAT. So, he's on board with whole darn thing too and nothing else. But he did say one thing that's true. He said, we wouldn't know the facts about this thing at all, because now you've got an avalanche of thousands of people turning out, like basically their own version, their own thesis on this or that or the other to do with this disease. He says, most of the stuff will go down the tubes. Because most of them do, you know. Well, I did the articles on where they admitted themselves that all the stuff you read in the newspapers about all the latest study on this or whatever Minister has blah, blah, blah. Then they find out a month or two later, somebody else tries to it test it and it doesn't work, it doesn't pan out the same way under testing and duplication, etc. So most of them go out the window but they're all praised like crazy initially, it's just astonishing. So anyway, this article here's a good article. This author is hoping that his country...)

I have hope that my country will realize the error of its ways and attempt to return to some sense of sanity and normalcy. I hope that the American people realize that deliberately crashing our economy, shredding the Bill of Rights, (A: ...and he's right on.) and placing the majority of the population on house arrest was not only a bad idea but an act of treason on the part of government officials and a terrifying lesson in why government by emotion, outrage mob, and fear always leads to the same thing – the imposition of tyranny, the erosion and elimination of civil liberties, and the empowering of would-be tyrants to no longer “would-be” but “be.”

So they are become the open tyrants. He goes on and on and on, but I'll put that up tonight too. And this article from Zero Hedge...

Bullard Warns "Depression" Is Possible; Says Americans Should Wear A Badge With Covid Test Results

zerohedge.com / 16 April 2020

One month ago, St Louis President James Bullard drastically reduced his chances to be the next Fed chairman when he was the first to predict (correctly) that Q2 unemployment may soar to 30% with GDP plunging 50%, an economic collapse that would make the Great Depression seem like a walk in the park.

It's meant to, folks. You're not going to go back. And the same, all the same, this massive army of tyrants, and it isn't just medical tyrants and scientific tyrants, and you know, secretive lab tyrants and all the rest of it working in collusion with... Well, that's what fascism really is when they're all working, private corporations working with governments over the public. Regardless, they don't plan on going back to any kind of normality. This is a whole agenda now for sustainability. And it will bring a lot of deaths too. From other reasons. Folk can’t get into hospitals to get normal things done, or they're going to say they can't afford to get it done now, blah, blah, blah, blah, blah. And starvation will come along the pike. Absolutely. This is what you get.

When the Soviets took over, they starved the people to death. They killed off all the tiny little farmers all over the place in the breadbasket of the Ukraine. They killed over, what was it, 6 to 8 million of the peoples who lived, and the stacks of footage and the photographs of it. It's just horrible what happened. They always DO this. They did the same thing in communist China when they took over there too. Starved the people, killed the farmers, yada, yada, ya. N-n-n. That's what they do, folks, when they come in. And believe you me, hunger is a great, great persuader, to accept anything, including your little crust of bread. You'll be made to feel grateful for it.

It almost makes me think too of the other movie, awfully well done by the way, Land of the Blind it was called. Donald Sutherland was in it. It's about a younger guy who was initially working for the military who helps to overthrow the government, the tyrannical dictatorship, or king or monarchy or whatever it was, and install Donald Sutherland who had been in prison for years as a revolutionary. Then it turns out that once Sutherland is in, he becomes a tyrant himself with delusions of grandeur and wants instant obedience and so on. The guy who had helped him to get in, eventually turns out he speaks out against him and was put in terrible prison conditions and solitary confinement and all different kinds of punishments and torture. Part of the thing you're taught to say is when you're asked about what you like to eat, you're to repeat, what's better than a nice juicy steak? You say, is a nice moldy crust of bread. That's what you had to reply, or you were beaten almost senseless. And I keep thinking of that when I see these ridiculous things put out there by Bill Gates and others about eating different kinds of substitutes for meat and so on. It's just too close, so much of this is too close to what's happening today. I really see it happening, and how you're supposed to be content with it.

Like George Orwell said, his job during World War II was propaganda. He ran the foreign affairs department for India to broadcast to India that was fighting the Japanese on its borders and outside its borders. But he also did the cooking hour where he had to convince people, he said, that they had to eat stuff that was really indigestible and not fit for human consumption because of the war, he had to try to convince them that it was actually better for them and healthy. He put out these articles, oh the people have never been so healthy in their lives. It's just astonishing. It's astonishing, you know, how we're... nothing changes, the lies and deceit towards the general public for manipulation. It's disgusting, it really is. Anyway, I'll get on with this here. So, it's worthwhile seeing that movie actually, it was quite well done. Anyway…

Bullard Warns "Depression" Is Possible; Says Americans Should Wear A Badge With Covid Test Results

zerohedge.com / 16 April 2020

(A: American should wear a badge with Covid test results… They're all on board with the same agenda, as you know. This is again, the tyranny that you must do what you're told and obey and whatever they want to pump into you, whatever, yada, yada, ya, is the only way you're going to get out from and get any kind of freedom at all. And it won't be freedom really, it will be highly monitored, a highly monitored society. This article is quite good actually.)

One month ago, St Louis President James Bullard drastically reduced his chances to be the next Fed chairman when he was the first to predict (correctly) that Q2 unemployment may soar to 30% with GDP plunging 50%, an economic collapse that would make the Great Depression seem like a walk in the park.

(A: He's talking about how it's going to affect, create a depression as a possible outcome, financial.)

Well, fast forward to today when Bullard doubled down and in a virtual conversation with the US Chamber Of Commerce said that "you are taking a lot of downside risks with the U.S. economy, including depression as a possible outcome."

Echoing other economists-turned-epidemiologists at the Fed (A: And it's true, they all suddenly become specialists, on board with the same agenda as though they are specialists in epidemiology.), Bullard suggested that the Federal government could produce major incentives to create covid tests to produce enough tests for the entire nation so people would feel safe to restart their normal lives: (A: It won't be normal, nobody told you that. Your finance, your dollar, or the pound or whatever currency you're using, will be worth maybe 1/4 of what it was, the longer this goes on, in purchasing power.) "The idea would be to create a gold rush in production of tests."

(A: A gold rush, really? So again the same characters that you'll be pally with are all going to cash in, they're all cashing in and sponging off you, as they put you in prison, 'eh, build more shackles. We always pay for more shackles to imprison us with, 'eh.)

Putting the cost of testing in context, he said that "it is costing us $25 billion a day to have this shutdown policy" so tests would easily be affordable.

(A: What do you mean costing them? It's costing the PUBLIC $25 billion. You're paying for it all.)

Why the focus on testing? Because "we want to satiate the economy with this kind of tests." But why? Simple: as he explained previously, Americans would then be forced to display a badge on their clothing with the result of the test.

I've got to, I can't let this one just go like that. I really can't. Now, as I mentioned last week, doesn't that ring bells of familiarity here? Because if they get their way, you'll all have to apologize to Adolf Hitler, who said he had the people tattooed, that's the Nazi party supposedly did in the camps, in these massive camps he set up. I know they started initially with the Soviet prisoners that were used for lots of experiments. Then they branched off to other types of groups as well. The Jews and the Gypsies, and they had even religious people who wouldn't consents to the Nazi ideology put in there too. Even like Seventh-day Adventists went in there, and other types as well. But he would tattoo them. Does this ring alarm bells here?

When you see the same things getting pushed from the top under the guise of science, hm, and again, inside an atheistic society, where science would be pragmatic to do their, and very utilitarian just to give someone like a technocrat, put them in order, put them in charge to get the orderly things done, without any emotional qualms and so on, and bypass the silly thing of human ethics, for goodness sake, it's so annoying having to run around to the people because of their emotions and ethics, etc., just get it DONE, that's what it's about, you see, that's what technocrats are for.

That's what they had in the Soviet system, maybe a sham of it, or a disaster of it I should say. But they also did the same thing in Nazi Germany. And they did get the country on its feet awfully quickly by the way. [Alan chuckles.] They tore up the debt to start with. But they also gave the scientific sector a free hand to do a lot of the experiments and so on, on people, and prisoners. Tattooing was one thing too for identification.

I keep thinking about Mengele, and we were raised on this kind of thing, that they were the most horrific people who had ever lived. I didn't know at the time the Soviets had done it before World War II on a lot of prisoners they got. They even had a, it's horrible to contemplate, but I've got the old stuff here that I sought out and you see this long building, like barracks actually, and there's prisoners, and they're taking the skull tops off them. They were all lying in beds with their brains exposed!

It's the first thing you see the socialist systems do. Now, you’re another animal and now we can go to town and just do things without qualms and having silly nonsense like religious rights, and

God-given rights, that terrible thing, God-given rights, 'eh? If there are any rights at all they'll give it to you or take them away, you see, because they are the real gods, are the scientists in a socialistic system. On behalf of the riches people on the planet mind you. And there was an awful lot of multibillionaires left Russia when the walls came down.

But anyway, getting back to what I'm saying, doesn't that make the alarm bells go off? Here's Gates and MIT and the different groups working to give you a tattooed, oh, it's an advanced type of tattoo, mind you, it's like a circuit board really imprinted on your skin. It will have all your data. And we can always put a chip in you do with the vaccinations. It's for your own good, you see. Isn’t that what they always say, it's for your own good, 'eh? Then they can monitor everything you've ever done. They can use it for your financial system too, how convenient. It also means that your computer, if you become a bad person like Bertrand Russell says, the government, the state will just cut off your credits, the currency to your bank account, and that's you, instantly. Electronic, 'eh?

Isn't it rather odd that they all had it right years ago, that they knew exactly what they could do, where they were going to take it all? And here you're going through the same thing. That came out of the Nuremberg trials, bash, bash, bash, bash, bash, look at these terrible, look at what they DID. And it's getting presented to you AGAIN?! And again, by scientists again. We want to do the Mengele stuff and put even odd things into your body perhaps, that hasn't even been tested, and especially in long-term stages.

It just… I... Come on here, folks! Listen to what this guy also says, all in the same vein, mind you. And again, this is James Bullard, St. Louis president. It says here, [Alan chuckles.] he says…

Echoing other economists-turned-epidemiologists at the Fed, Bullard suggested that the Federal government could produce major incentives to create covid tests...

(A: But he also says…)

Why the focus on testing? Because "we want to satiate the economy with this kind of tests." But why? Simple: as he explained previously, Americans would then be forced to display a badge on their clothing with the result of the test.

Don't you see something like repetition here? of hell? Hm? Isn't that an awful, he's going to put it down to coincidence. Hm? Are you really? Are you really, hm? It's the same thing, folks, only under a different guise. But the same excuse, it's for your own good. [Alan laughing.] And the folk won’t get it, 'eh. And all these same types of characters dying to get into experiment on the humans, these silly animals called, you know, the human types. The scientists are all a step above it all. They're... What was it Julian Huxley said? And Aldous Huxley says? He says we come from all line, a lineage of the scientific elite who help the people on behalf of the dominant minority. So, the dominant minority at the top, then the scientific elite, and that includes, that's physical and psychological and so on, and of course psychiatry and all kinds of behaviorists, all managing populations, these vast HERDS of people, 'eh. N-n-n.

Repetition, repetition. The same thing. This is what this character's pushing, 'eh, you get a badge on your clothing with the result. There you go. The same...

Where are the outcries on this? Am I the only person that has connected this so far? Has anybody else jumped on it and taken it? [Alan chuckles.] I'm sure they must have, because folk generally do. They never mention me though. Quite amazing. I mentioned too, it was quite amazing because I've been pretty well shadow banned for years, nothing to do with the real numbers of who get in touch with me with what you will see. But some of the characters that you're used to following, really put cash up too, they can get to you, they can get you hidden amongst YouTube, and be hidden amongst BitChute, even put you in different places, like that. They actually do that and put themselves in the front pages and all that. It's quite amazing to see what goes on with the people you think that are speaking for you. Ah, dear, what a dirty, dirty, the dirty tricks of the people. And then they talk about the folk at the top doing the same kind of things. Aah, ha, ha. Quite amazing.

This article too is…

One trip per week. One person per household. That should be the law for grocery buying, union says

cbc.ca / 17 April 2020

(A: This is the grocery union, hm, one trip per week, one person. This is Canada. Now, Canada is, it's almost communist China without the prosperity, you see. We are so goody-goody-goody here, and we have been since Pierre Trudeau, the guy who changed it all here. [Alan chuckles.] And he, well, you know... Anyway, I could spend hours talking about him. But regardless, we are, and it's been this way, really a downhill run for a long, long, for years and years and years and years in Canada. We're so PC that we can't even save our butts if we had to. You know, because you have to be honest and blunt to solve a problem, you can't do that, you see. Any problem. So here, and the unions here, I've had stuff sent to me by different unions in Canada and it really is, it's beyond Marxist. It's BEYOND, it's left of Marxism. It's astonishing what they're all pushing. Nothing's ever happening. You see, it's... progressivism means destruction of all that was, ALL that was. Often to reversing everything into its complete opposite now. You see? Complete. I mean complete opposite. And it's never good enough so you have to go into the next step and the next step, until it's just utterly ridiculous. Anyway...)

One trip per week. One person per household. That should be the law for grocery buying, union says

Western Canada's largest private-sector union is proposing that people be limited to one trip to the grocery store each week to prevent the spread of COVID-19 among customers and workers.

(A: So there you go. That's... remember, democracy too, democracy really, they will often say it's mob rule. That's why the US technically was given a republic, although they were run by a high elite ever since, from the founding fathers onwards, you know. They did graft on other members that came into the country that were stinking rich as well, into their private club at the top. But it was meant, the Republic was meant to give a fixed set of rules so that the mob rule can’t take over. Plato went through the whole thing. He says, democracy always leads into corruption, meaning financial corruption too, until the folk are broke, then you end up with a form of communism, and then that collapses as well, and that's the route that it always goes.)

(A: But a republic at least has a set of rules where you can sort of head any big moves off at the pass before it happens, to try to keep on track, to keep things functioning to an extent. That was the idea behind it. Even though, I don't care what they call it now, human nature is so corrupt and devious, once they form their little clubs and little associations, they can take over quietly, etc. etc. Of course, the public are never really told what's really going on. But this is the union pushing this stuff, right. Then they've got the, and again, this is so much like the Soviet Union, 'eh...)

Shoppers wait in line at a Calgary Safeway, keeping at least two metres apart with the help of lines marked on the grocery store's floor.

(A: You used to see the big, long lines of the old Soviet system when they had shortages of things in some of the towns and the cities. Long long lines. And Britain had something similar during World War II with their incredible rationing. They still had to wait for hours and hours for 2 inches of butter and one ration of bacon, you know, and stuff like that, a slice. That's your week. So here they go again. The same characters that rule the world, as I say, if they took over the Sahara and they wanted to start and build anything, they would say there is a shortage of sand, and it was very expensive. This is what they always do. And food is one of the first things they go for too. Always. Always. Because that's... That's what keeps you... Food and water, folks, it's as old as the hills. The armies would put siege upon cities and blockade them, they couldn't get any food coming in. You would starve them into submission until they would beg, beg you to spare their lives, you know. And they'll do anything, yeah, that's it, always go for the food.)

(A: I remember it was the head of the United Nations Department of Agriculture, you know, for agriculture and she was talking about food, and she said that. She said that, I've got the article somewhere here, still. She said, that farming was too important to be left to farmers. So the idea was to eliminate the little private farms and put them into big corporate farming she says. But she says, we'll always, we don't just give food to other countries too. She says, food is a weapon, we can use food as a weapon.)

(A: I heard another guy saying the same thing the other day there, but he was reading it from my old archives. [Alan chuckles.]   He makes a living reading my stuff from old archives, even verbatim. Even Plato's cave, etc. It's quite fascinating to hear it repeated, and the way I used to give it. Including the stuff to do with the ancient priesthoods that first gained power by studying the stars. You see across India and different places these incredibly ancient astronomical sites where they studied them, they built these temples to study the stars. They knew when eclipses were going to happen, stuff like that.)

(A: They would eventually tell the public, who were ignoring them, you know, that the sun wouldn't, would get blotted out that day unless they, you know, and it would go out forever and only they could bring it back if they brought wealth to them and respect and got down on their knees and prayed to them. And sure enough, they knew exactly when it would happen, and the sun is blotted out. Then they throw all their jewelry at them and so on and say, save us, save us. He would say okay, and he would mumble some mumbo-jumbo, knowing that of course in the end, in a minute or so, the sun is back out again as the eclipse passes. And it was repeated the other day and I thought he's made a living off it. Still does. Quite amazing. But they never mention you. Never mention you at all. Anyway, I'll put up this article too with the union wanting...)

The union suggests loyalty programs and membership cards could be used to track visits and peace officers may be needed to enforce the regulations.

That's the mob for you, you see, that's where you get the mob that always decry... And anybody who's got any source of anything you need, becomes a tyrant, folks. That's it, that's what happens, you see. And...

Albertsons, UCFW team up to reclassify grocery store employees as first responders during coronavirus pandemic - foxnews.com / 8 April 2020

So, there you go. So, everybody is suddenly in the war, you see, they're all part of the, they are the front line of the war, because it's a war. And use war terminology. And just like war terminology, they go after folk who wouldn't go along with the war, you know. Oh, you're a Bolshi, or you're this or you're that, you know, or you're a conscious objector, like a scum, and dut-dut-dut. The same thing of course if you're not going to go along with what the big scientific socialist wants with all the stuff they're going to roll out shortly to pump into you. They're stigmatizing you already in the public's eyes, getting ready for stigmatizing, well, we all accept it, what's wrong with you! That's the mob rule. You use the mob against the people who see through things. They're all first responders suddenly, you see. Yeah. And going from boring jobs, and yeah, yep, yep, no respect, to first responders, 'eh! Yep.

Here's another one, this article here is to do with…

HIDDEN DEATHS UK coronavirus death toll may be 40% higher than reported (A: You see, now that they can’t get the numbers up, they're getting new ways, maybe they did that in China too, new ways of counting them now. New ways. It's amazing that, you know, I mean generally you'll have the same way of counting things your entire life, but they found new ways to do it.)

…40% higher than reported as shock figures reveal fatalities outside hospitals

thesun.co.uk / 21 April 2020

(A: It's probably folk who need things done inside the hospitals, because they can't get a bed now, 'eh.)

The new stats show there were 13,121 deaths in England and Wales up to April 10 - compared to the 9,288 announced at the time.

But again, getting back to what I'm talking about, right. That's all the way up, right, to April 10. That's like from January right through to April 10, right. With the new way of counting, 13,121 deaths in England and Wales, right, all the way up to April. But go right back, go right back to what I said earlier there where the Minister for Health, I'll put the YouTube up, remember, from Britain, Mr. Hancock saying, we've got to remember, you know, 10,000 elderly people die every month here, normally, every month. So, you keep all this in mind, what you're seeing, don't fall for the numbers thing, you know.

Baltimore PD Wants 24-Hour HD (A: High definition I guess.) Surveillance Drones To Enforce Social Distancing (A: Wow!)

zerohedge.com / 16 April 2020

The Baltimore Police Department and “Persistent Surveillance,” an Ohio-based company…

Persistent Surveillance, it's called. We'll probably all pay for that with our tax money. We buy our chains over and over, don't we. Balls and chains, 'eh, so's that folk can get awfully rich at being part of the new prison surveillance society. Disgusting! Another one…

Who controls the British Government response to Covid–19? (A: Awfully important too, 'eh.)

ukcolumn.org / 22 April 2020

"The welfare of humanity is always the alibi of tyrants" — Albert Camus

(A: That's right, they're always concerned about you.)

As Britain hurtles headlong towards neo-feudalist governance with heightened surveillance, micro-management of society and an uptick in fascistic policing of the draconian measures imposed to combat the "threat" of Covid–19, it is perhaps time to analyse the real forces behind this "new normal".

(A: And he goes on and on and on about it. They give you a graph...)

The following graph was produced by UK Column and demonstrates the lack of correlation between lockdown and "saving lives":

(A: Again, the numbers racket too is such a farce, honestly. N-n-n. The only numbers that are going up are the unemployed...)

Britain has now received an estimated 1.4 million new benefit claims for welfare payments…

That's just probably of the month. And starvation will come along the pike, 'eh, you know that too. This is the whole agenda, folks. This is it. They're counting on it. Because we ignored their, at the World Economic Forum last year they mentioned, they know the people aren't listening to us and they're just consuming, consuming, consuming, they're not letting up on it, and they're ignoring the whole climate stuff and yada, yada. So here you go. Yep. N-n-n.

I'll put up too again...

Dr Scott Jensen Reveals “Ridiculous” Covid19 Guidance

off-guardian.org / 10 April 2020

Minnesota State Senator says Department of Health guidelines instruct doctors to list Covid19 as cause of death, without being tested.

That's also, it's just amazing, the ones that even have it in them, most folk have it in them, you know. You'll find probably half the population would find either they've got the debris from it, the particles left, you know, in a test in their sinuses if they've had it and they didn't even know it. Most folk don't even know they've had it. But if you got tested and you're dying of some other thing, like cancer of the liver or something, they'll put you down as Covid. That's literally what, and I'll put the Birx one up too, where she mentions the same thing. She does it, she's all for it. Because she says, that's what we do, you know. No matter what really is killing them. I'll put that up again, the YouTubes.

Dr. Birx: Unlike Some Countries, "If Someone Dies With COVID-19 (A: …in them…) We Are Counting That As A COVID-19 Death"

realclearpolitics.com / 8 April 2020

DR. DEBORAH BIRX: So, I think in this country we've taken a very liberal approach to mortality.

(A: No kidding.)

And I think the reporting here has been pretty straightforward over the last five to six weeks. Prior to that when there wasn't testing in January and February that's a very different situation and unknown.

Well, why are they giving you figures of it when, like millions are going to, you know, die with it and so on, if they weren't testing then? You see what I'm saying? And now that they're getting some tests, and don't forget, so many of the tests are false positives and negatives. I've got so many articles from the different companies that are getting feedback from the public on it, and criticism too from the doctors that are using them and the labs that are using them in kits. It's just astonishing. That's part of the reason why they're saying, oh, you might get reinfected. Actually, we don't know. We're getting people who passed the swab tests, you know, and they came out negative, and then they developed it, even after they've had it before. No, no, they had false positives before. That's the real, you find so many of them are getting false positives. False, so they really are negative. Then they get it later on, so they test positive. Oh, they're getting it a second time. No, that wasn't, it's not that at all.

That's why Fauci is jumping on, he is hoping for that, you see, trying to play it. Because folk are saying, we want to get out and work if we've been tested. And he said, well there's no guarantee you won't catch it again, you see, we need a vaccination. Well, if the vaccination is going to increase antibodies, and you've already had it, and now you've got, now you're passed with negative now, that means you've gotten it and have your own antibodies. Isn't it? Hm. So he's telling you, your own body's antibodies are no use, so suddenly these synthetic ones will be? [Alan laughing.] I don't think so. It makes no sense. It's an agenda. It's an agenda, that's why you're hearing such nonsense. I'll put this article up too.

I'll also put another one up to another doctor who is in California in Bakersfield who's come out and talking about it too, openly, how a lot of folk are dying because they can’t get hospital treatment. And a lot of folk, a lot of the hospital staff in his area are just all laid off. Because they shut everything else down in waiting for this massive spike of virus cases to come in, and they haven't got it. That's happening in all different places too. So, the doctors now are speaking out about it. I'll put up his video as well. His name is Dr. Daniel Erickson.

Dr. Erickson COVID-19 FULL Briefing (Bakersfield doctors dispute need for stay at home order) - youtube.com

He goes through the same scenarios we're talking about here tonight and the damage that's being done to the people, y'know, as they're sacrificed, really, that's what they are getting, sacrifice. They can't get in the hospitals for other things, other treatments. And this is the start of it, folks, because these guys have no intention, at the top, of lessening up, until yeah, you take your mark and you wear your little star on your clothing and you get a tattoo on your arm and an injected chip, etc., so they are masters of the herd all identified and branded, really. That's what it's about.

That's what it IS, folks. It's repetition. It's been done before. It's more advanced now, because the science goes on and on, but it's the same stuff. And by the same characters of course. And there's no real… We are all going to get this now, all of us. This is what they are determined to do, to those that go along with it. And they will use the general populations to stigmatize, this is standard, standard tyranny, they stigmatize segments of the population who see through it and won't go along, and they use the rest of the public to attack them even. Well, we, we, we put up with that, and we're eating less, and we're starving, and we took the chip, and we took our tattoo and I got my stuff on my clothing, and we do what we're told and why can't YOU? Why can't YOU? What makes you so special? That's what they do, folks. It's been done, over and over, done down through history, that's what's done. N-n-n.

So, I'll put that one up there. And Deborah Birx admits that it doesn't matter what they're really dying of, if they've got that at the same time, even if they presume it now, mind you, they're... you know, because a lot of it is presumed, and a lot of the tests are fake, but they put them down as Covid 19 anyway. Another doctor who's also a senator, as I say, I'll put that up. Because he mentioned that, they were told, instructed that this little guidance thing by the AMA to put down pretty well all presumed, presumed people down as diagnosed, and diagnose them, with Covid 19 etc. etc. It's just such a farce that's going on. They can't get the numbers, you see.

Minnesota Senator Dr. Scott Jensen - Hospitals Get Paid More to List Patients as COVID-19 and Three Times as Much if the Patient Goes on Ventilator - thespectator.info / 9 April 2020

They are adding people again, who never tested positive for the coronavirus too, to the death toll. This article here I'll put up as well and that's from, it's a New York City article here. The New York Times actually. I'll put that up. It says…

NYC Adds Nearly 4,000 People Who Never Tested Positive To Coronavirus Death Tolls

dailycaller.com / 14 April 2020

The Times stated:

The coronavirus death toll soared as officials added more than 3,700 people who were never tested for the virus but were presumed to have died of it.

Because they're following the guidelines to pad their… Mind you, they get more money in the hospitals, as that senator who is also a doctor said, if they put down coronavirus, the hospital is getting an awful lot more money per patient. And it's about double, triple that again if they get them on a ventilator. It's just astonishing, you know, what really goes on, folks, behind all the dancing staff and stuff and all the PR, the war PR that you're seeing, 'eh, what really, really goes on. Money, money, money. It's always very simple, 'eh, it's always the same old things over and over.

They're trying everything they can, EVERY THING they can, isn't it, to get us to take all kinds of... Scientists, again, don't mention who they are, that scientists, it's like experts suggest...

JAB FOR THAT

Scientists suggest MMR (A: ...measles mumps rubella.) vaccine ‘could protect against coronavirus – after BCG trials start’

thesun.co.uk / 22 April 2020

(A: Oh, wow.)

Experts from the University of Cambridge (A: Wow, there you go. They must be real experts.) say the MMR jab, which is typically given to all infants from nine-months-old, could be the reason why children are not as severely affected by Covid-19.

No, it’s not. It’s because their immune system isn’t developed, and they don’t attack it with an overwhelming response of their body’s immune system. That’s why. And mind you too, they're also querying why the adult’s body is attacking so viciously this thing. And it's a response, it's a cytokine storm they call it. It kills you, engorges the lungs completely, infuses it with blood like you wouldn't believe until the oxygen can't pass through the alveolar tissue. The exchange of gases, it just can't do it. So it's because, [Alan chuckles.] personally I really think a lot of folks have got awfully, especially in this age of massive allergies and stuff, that parents and grandparents and great-grandparents never had, 'eh… what changed in the meantime that could affect your immune system? What's targeting your immune system stream? Odd that, isn't it, where we can't figure it out. It's just odd that. I don't know.

But this article, as I say, they're trying everything. And this will fall by the wayside again like most things do. That doctor from Korea said that you've got thousands of different ideas, theories, and thousands of students come out even of medical schools with their new thesis on what it might be, hoping to get little brownie points and gold stars, you see. And again, they've got their hands out too for, give us a few million, we'll do a test and see. [Alan chuckles.]   How long, how many staff do you have? We've got about 10 in this particular staff. But we probably need about 50 million, you know. Bucks. Yep. There you go. Yep. So anyway, that's the kind of stuff they're giving you.

UN climate change fund calls coronavirus an ‘opportunity’ to re-shape the world

wattsupwiththat.com / 20 April 2020

(A: Well, I am surprised. I had no idea they're all the same groups involved in it, with the same bankers, and the same United Nations agenda, all on board with the same things, that they've always all been on board with, 'eh. It's the same bunch.)

The UN-funded financial arm of the Paris Agreement has labelled the killer coronavirus an “opportunity” to raise funds for climate change action and “relaunch economies on low-emission, climate-resilient trajectories”.

(A: Meaning, you won’t have gasoline cars, folks. Because that was part of the agenda for the 21st century. The whole century, they had to phase in all these different things, and eventually no private vehicles. They’re already mentioning you’re all going to get the rental ones only, or just a sort of taxi type system. No ownership will be allowed of private vehicles. That’s in the other articles from Agenda 21. Well, it’s the same thing you’re reading all over again when you read this stuff, the Green Climate Fund, ‘eh, with this organization, this one organization that's got…)

…the Green Climate Fund – an international organisation with a $10.3 billion budget (US).

Well, so yeah, they’re going to go to town with it. I mentioned before, the Club of Rome, there you go, ‘eh. Isn’t that nice? I mentioned before the Club of Rome is all on board, the big one too, the Club of Rome.

The WHO is Funded by Big Pharma and the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation - globalresearch.ca / 21 April 2020 / Dr Joseph Mercola

That's Global Research, Canada and by Dr. Joseph Mercola. I'll put that one up as well. He does a good exposé on it. There's little video there as well. It says that… well he goes into the whole agenda here. And he knows his stuff, Mercola, he's been on the go for years and years and years. Another one too is, I mentioned it before…

Bill Gates and the Depopulation Agenda. Robert F. Kennedy Junior Calls for an Investigation - globalresearch.ca / 18 April 2020

That's also up on Global Research as well. There are other papers too.

Robert F. Kennedy Jr: Bill Gates Is Obsessed With Vaccines And ‘Seems Fueled By A Messianic Conviction’ That He Is Destined To ‘Save The World With Technology And A God-like Willingness To Experiment On The Lives Of Lesser Humans’ - cloverchronicle.com / 9 April 2020

And...

Canada cut number of stockpile storage locations for critical medical supplies by one third in past two years

theglobeandmail.com / 22 April 2020

(A: But that's just coincidence. We live in coincidence theories, you know, that's for the masses, coincidence theories. Ah well, coincidence, yep.)

The federal government cut the number of cities that store critical medical supplies to six from nine during the past two years, and over the past decade consistently underspent in the funding envelope that included stockpile management, documents show.

It’s unclear, though, how many warehouses there are in each of the cities and how that has changed over time.

(A: It’s all secret of course. In democracies we live in secrecy, you know, under secrecy.)

A 2011 report said the national emergency strategic stockpile or NESS was spread out across 11 warehouses in Canada.

(A: But it’s not so many now.)

The 2011 report also said the agency had 1,300 “prepositioned sites” or smaller depots containing medical equipment and supplies. At the House of Commons health committee Tuesday, Sally Thornton, the agency’s vice-president in charge of the stockpile, said there were about 1,000 of those smaller sites in 2012. The agency has not said how many prepositioned sites it still operates today.

Everything is so secret in Canada now. It really is like drawing teeth trying to get an answer. And this is quite interesting because Canada, of course, that really tries to appease every country, it will go onto its knees, because we don't like getting, the ones who run the country don't like getting any criticism, it makes them feel bad, brings tears to the eyes, you know. Hhh-hm. And Canada had a little dispute when they handed over the woman who was the representative for Huawei the big company, to the States, at the time the States wanted her for their spat. And China doesn't forgive you very easily, you know, it really doesn't. So, Canada sent off cargo jets for health supplies to China, right.

China disputes explanation for cargo jets returning empty to Canada

theglobeandmail.com / 22 April 2020

(A: Because Canada had said that they were just too busy at the airport in China and we couldn't hang around that long, so we had to come back empty-handed. Do you really believe that? This is the trash they tell the Canadians. You know the cost of flying these things out there? So it says…)

China's foreign ministry is disputing Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's contention that restrictions on how much time a cargo jet can spend on the ground in Shanghai played a part in why two aircraft returned to Canada without medical supplies.

Mr. Trudeau, asked to explain why two planes chartered by Canadian governments (A: Our tax money of course.) to procure medical gear from China instead came home empty, on Tuesday first cited limits on the amount of time a plane can spend on the ground. (A: …that's what he first said.)

"There are severe restrictions on the ground in China in terms of how long a plane can actually stay in their airports before having to leave – whether it's full or not," Mr. Trudeau said Tuesday.

It was not the only explanation he gave. Mr. Trudeau also noted that "supply lines and shipments to the airport are difficult and interrupted by checkpoints and quarantine measures."

In Beijing, however, a spokesman for China's Ministry of Foreign Affairs on Wednesday denied there are limits on ground time for cargo jets in Shanghai.

So there you go, something, somebody's been miffed as they say, and we're getting punished for it, we're nasty, nasty. The ones at the top in Canada will be crying about that because they like to be loved by everybody, and because we're so progressive, in every possible way here that you can't imagine. And they will, they won't get nasty in return in any possible way, like a tit-for-tat thing that everybody else does when, that's how governments all respond to each other is tit-for-tat. But there you go. Here's another article about Canada's relationship with China, which really upset the Canadians at the top. Because they really adore the communist system, I think it seems to be rather evident. But anyway…

Foreign Affairs Minister, Ambassador mum (A: He's mum, meaning silent.) on Fan Wei, Canadian sentenced to death in China

theglobeandmail.com / 22 April 2020

(A: I guess Canada spoke up because this one was actually grabbed in China, this Canadian. It says…)

Some of the most senior figures in Canada’s foreign affairs establishment have publicly distanced themselves from a Canadian man sentenced to death in China months after the arrest of a Huawei executive in Vancouver created new friction between the two countries.

In speeches and public testimony this year, Foreign Affairs Minister François-Philippe Champagne and Ambassador Dominic Barton have expressed concern for Canadians Michael Spavor and Michael Kovrig – who on Thursday will mark 500 days in Chinese custody – as well as Robert Schellenberg, who was sentenced to death last year on drug-related charges.

But neither the ambassador nor the minister have mentioned Fan Wei, who like Mr. Schellenberg was sentenced to death on drug charges last year at the height of Beijing’s rage over the arrest of Meng Wanzhou, Huawei’s chief financial officer.

So, if Canada complained, you see, China tends to react rather quickly. Because it doesn't have any guilt complexes about anything, they haven't trained their citizenry to fall back and jump into tears whenever they're criticized. So Canada just goes to pieces when, because they don't know how to put it across, you see. And they have no, really, chips to deal with anymore, to bargain with. Because Canada, and I used to read the articles on air at one time, where Canada praised China as the model state for the world to follow. Communist China. So when your hero does something like this, what do you do, you know, when you've already, you're already fawning over them? What on earth do you do? You have no chips to bargain with. You gave all your trade, or your business, all your manufacturing over to China. You can hardly feed yourselves back home here, what do you do? What do you bargain with? So, there you go. This is what happens, you see in the Department of Foreign Affairs, etc. But as I say, they'll distanced themselves from them and just go completely quiet on it and leave it all to China. So there you go.

But personally, if there are people involved in drugs and so on, selling drugs in the different countries, it's up to the country that catches them to deal with them anyway. I mean, that's just how it goes. We've seen the massive, look at the tent cities across the States and elsewhere, and syringes everywhere. All caused again by the same characters that run behind the scenes your deep state and your secret societies, like the CIA, etc.; they are secret societies. And all the... They're bringing in drugs and heroin for years, etc. Still doing it of course. Big, big, massive black budgets. They've even made movies about that, it's so common and laughable now that there's no secret at all involved. It hasn't stopped. Of course, many of their black budgets are, were financed by, directly from the drugs which they brought in and sold to Americans on the streets. That all came out years ago all. And it hasn't stopped today.

So yeah, everything you've been trained to believe in is not there for you. It really isn't there for you at all. It's a rather evil system altogether. And you're trained, again through fiction, that these are, like the FBI, is the G-men and they're just, just so darn nice and honest, etc., they could never tell a lie, like George Washington. And children grow up believing all this stuff. They don't realize what the institutions really, really are. Especially the CIA! It's not there to help you at all. The agenda is vastly, vastly different.

I can remember too reading books about, from people who had been in the CIA, and they always mention the Rockefellers, that old David used to come in. David used to come in, and often for certain budgets when they didn't have certain money to get going in a certain thing, he'd tide them over, directly out of his own pocket, just sign the checks over to them. Completely intertwined, folks. Completely intertwined. Total monopolization of all-natural resources, everything you need to survive. That's what it's about too, you see. It still is.

Now, interestingly enough, regardless of the years I've talked about the different foundations, and the Rockefeller Foundation who also, he was also the head of the CFR for a long time too, one of the Rockefellers. And the Trilaterals as well, all the biggies that run globalism on behalf of the elites. And all the things that they've done in the past of taking over… Don't forget, Rockefeller himself said, the old man, he said that competition was a sin. In reference to the fact that the antitrust laws were coming in to try to break up the complete monopoly that he had, had taken over the whole of the oil industry of the US pretty well, even had big ties with the railroad companies that would ban anybody else transporting oil on certain lines, etc. Incredible things were going on with Rockefellers. Because it's nothing what you...

You've got to understand, you're talking about the world's monopolists in banking, finance, natural resources, and even food supplies. It's the same group down through time here running the whole darn thing. They put out lots of money for the NGO armies that they use, NGOs, that influence public opinion. They put lots of money into education to help indoctrinate the children, and in the particular way that they want them to think and believe and so on. This is how things are really, really done. There's no conspiracy, you can check it out and find it's true. But there you are with their 2010 summary basically of the future emerging systems and so on, going through pandemics and what would happen, to use lockdowns, etc., etc., etc. And bingo! when it all happens, out from again…

ROADMAP TO Pandemic Resilience - PDF

ethics.harvard.edu / 20 April 2020

EDMOND J. SAFRA CENTER FOR ETHICS AT HARVARD UNIVERSITY

(A: You find the same kind of thing. They're supported by...)

With support from The Rockefeller Foundation

(A: That's at the top of the page under the Safra center. Out they come with… what I expect that technocracy, you see, who give this massive article to the, or basically [Alan chuckles.] an agenda, to the government to sign into law. That's what it's about. They want massive scale testing...)

Massive Scale Testing, Tracing, and Supported Isolation (TTSI) as the Path to Pandemic Resilience for a Free Society

(A: Do you see the doublethink? They're going to lock you all down and have you all spied on, for a free society. This is the same stuff you got in 2001, and of course the new freedom that Bush talked about, that really is about half the freedom as you used to have, and the rights too. So here you go, they've got the authors here who are all associated with the Edmond J Safra Center for ETHICS.)

(A: Remember, a few weeks back I gave you, I said, who's gonna run this whole system? It's going to be ethicists, you see, this new branch, ethicists. And they've got, you don't realize you don't have any ethics of your own, you're just too, you're too simple and common. So, they created this whole branch of bioethics, and then cultural ethics, etc., and political ethics. Everything's to do with their new... Now that they've put religion out, again, out the window... They used to have to, they had to obey it to an extent, and said, oh, the people will get upset. Get rid of it, and then they had to replace it all with ethicists, you see. And they roll them out on television and magazines and across the Internet as professional experts on ethics. You see, as I say, you have no ethics of your own, you just don't realize it yet, so you need these folk to tell you. So, you have…)

DANIELLE ALLEN

SHARON BLOCK

JOSHUA COHEN

PETER ECKERSLEY

MEREDITH ROSENTHAL

RAJIV SETHI

DIVYA SIDDARTH

Research Fellow, Microsoft Research India.

(A: All research fellows and so on. Microsoft too, he's with Microsoft Research for India. It's amazing, a small world when you see who ends up ruling it on behalf of the elite. As they're all recruited of course.)

M EIFLER

LAWRENCE GOSTIN

DARSHAN GOUX

ANNE-MARIE SLAUGHTER (A: I've heard her before, many times, down through the years.)

‘66 University Professor Emerita of Politics and International Affairs, Princeton University

(A: It goes on and on and on who all took part in this very impressive, you're supposed to be impressed by this. And the more you read the names of them and what they're involved in, they literally feel, well I'm really tiny, I really am unimportant, I have no ethics at all. And it goes on from there.)

ROADMAP TO Pandemic Response

(A: The guys that came out with what they should be doing and so on, using technology, back in 2010, and how they should lock us all down. Here it is, and here's the next stage of it out now of how they're going to manage you. Isn't that wonderful? And this is for the governments to follow it. Because that's what they are, they are think tank to the world. Like the Council on Foreign Relations, that all their members are, they're all members of all the same organizations, each other, you know, often they'll be members of about six organizations all under the umbrella of this particular group. So it says…)

Many of the undersigned do not typically take institutional positions. (A: You see, institutional.) Moreover, some may differ with aspects of the report, and have stressed other matters of primary focus. But all have signed on as an urgent call to respond to a national crisis and have done so with the greatest sense of vital unity.

(A: I'm sure they will be parroting all the same stuff. They go through…)

THE BREAKTHROUGH INSTITUTE

NATIONAL DOMESTIC WORKERS ALLIANCE

NEW AMERICA

NISKANEN CENTER

(A: ...all the ones we used to call communist by the way, that Quigley said, we're often mistaken for the communist because we have the same goals. Well, here you go, you see, for the CFR and the Rockefeller group.)

RADICALXCHANGE FOUNDATION

(A: They're radical change, you see. You see, this is all the same old groups with new names and so on.)

THE ROCKEFELLER FOUNDATION

SANTA FE INSTITUTE

THIRD WAY

(A: The Third Way, remember that one too? That was presented to every member of Congress, the book, The Third Way by Alvin Toffler. A big, big push for that one, The Third Way, you see. Where it truly is, it's just a combination of the old system that they had where they were working through the foundations years ago to bring in the third way of course without calling it that. They said they would blend the capitalist countries of the West with the Soviet system, including the educational system, gradually, gradually until they're both combined together. That came out at the Reese Commission and Norman Dodd of course. Norman Dodd talked about it in different programs, and it was in books, etc. Well, this is the third way. You're already there. You see, the big boys at top run all sides anyway, for centuries, they work in long-term agendas.)

ABOUT HARVARD’S EDMOND J. SAFRA CENTER FOR ETHICS

The Edmond J. Safra Center for Ethics seeks to strengthen teaching and research about pressing ethical issues; to foster sound norms (A: ...sound norms, 'eh...) of ethical reasoning and civic discussion; and to share the work of our community in the public interest.

(A: You see, it's all for your good, you understand. Of course they talk about crisis and the different crisis that take shape and all that...)

As the COVID-19 crisis took shape, we saw a need to connect public health expertise to economic expertise, legal expertise, political science, and philosophical/ethics expertise.

So, these characters are combined with laws and want laws on the books, and they want the right to write up the laws, you see, on crisis response and having the experts running everything. TECHNOCRACY is the other term for it all of course, where you don't have any rights, you do what you're told in the new society, the post-Democratic type societies. That goes for the States too because the US was the base of this group that ran it all for a long time and the public didn't know it. But it's becoming rather more evident, I think more all the time. I hope anyway. [Alan chuckles.] It can't be more evident.

So, roadmap to pandemic resilience, testing, tracing and supported isolation. It's quite amazing to watch this as they go through it all. Do you understand? You would never think of this because you're not trained in ethics, or law, you see. And you're not trained… You understand, none of this is going to the public for any kind of vote or basically debate. It's to go straight to government to get implemented. And government accept it quite happily. Because they were the ones that also helped finance this stuff, I am pretty sure of it.

You understand, there's no sides here that you can look to. Because the illusion, you've got the illusion of governments that work independently of foundations and think tanks. No, they all work, it's all one big group, folks. It has been your entire life. Yes. But it's got to have the impression and give the impression that this group is just another one giving advice to government, using all the top universities, as usual. Academia, and of course academia is a big part of technocracy because they train the next generation of dumbed-down people, that's what they do. And really, people who are selected for their own institutions and paid handsomely to be a traitor to their own people. That's how it works, folks. So, I'll put this article up, the Roadmap to Pandemic Resilience they call it. It's a PDF as well. And how they're really involved in it, mandatory this, mandatory that, etc., etc., etc. That's how it's done.

Isn't it, that's how it's done, advice. When everybody's panicking and out come all the sudden experts with the sudden new types of degrees. I can remember when they launched the ethicists on television years and years and years ago when I used to watch it. It was interesting how they did present it. They'll give topics the people get sucked right into, that would affect everybody, and you'd be interested. They'd start to, that's how they win you over, you see, in the Bernays fashion, using the Bernays techniques, then they start going on from there. Then you start to say, okay, I guess they're really more important than me, and they know more than I do, so I'll leave the decision-making to them. Then you're into technocracy, you see.

Again, even here too you've got the same thing, all the left-wing agenda. Which is really the right-wing agenda because they are all both the same. They are two arms, or two wings of the same bird. I've said it so many times before. That's the meaning of the bird there too, they generally, sometimes have a shield in front of the bird in different countries, meaning that they hide. What else is behind it? That they rule both sides, and they create peace, or they create war. Again, it's from the Bible, and the symbol of Manasseh, and Ephraim of course, with holding the arrows in one for war, and of course the olive branch for peace in the other. And if you don't accept their terms, which they pretend is peace, they go to war with you and take it.

However, this article is pretty good, and they go through all the recommendations to government, and the government will lap it up saying, well the experts have come forward. They never mention the general public, you see, you don't matter. But the government will put it across, that yeah, this is really important stuff, we'll follow this and put it into laws, the experts have done it. Well, rule by experts is not democracy, folks. It's agendas. When the so-called experts, they're just technocrats, they can bypass, like the Club of Rome said, we want to... democracy doesn't work for us, it'll have to be eliminated to get everything done properly and efficiently. And here you go. Interesting article and it's a PDF from themselves. The Rockefeller Foundation in partnership with them. And also, the Johns Hopkins Center for health security. The same ones of course that had the big exercise before in 2019. [Event 201.] And...

The work has been produced in partnership with The Rockefeller Foundation and builds on important work already released by Johns Hopkins Center for Health Security, the Duke Margolis Center for Public Health Policy, Center for American Progress, and the American Enterprise Institute. (A: All the same PNAC groups as well are in here too.)

This other article too...

Coronavirus stimulus cash: Which states have received the most payments?

foxbusiness.com / 24 April 2020

(A: GUESS who they are, 'eh?!)

IRS expects 150M economic impact payments will be issued

How to spend coronavirus stimulus check if you're struggling financially

(A: They even tell you, the experts, how to spend it, 'eh.)

Financial expert Chris Hogan says as Americans begin to receive their coronavirus relief checks, we should be in ‘conserve mode’ and avoid ‘any unnecessary spending.’

(A: Folk haven’t had any money for the last few months. And you’re not allowed to buy anything that's nonessential, well, if it's not food or medicine. We're not allowed that anymore, our daddies tell us, 'eh, our new daddies and mommies. So, millions of Americans got it, so they say here. I don't know if it's true or not, but it says millions got it.)

The IRS said Friday it had issued $158 billion worth of payments to 88.1 million individuals as of April 17 with more on the way.

(A: Who got the most?)

California - Number of payments: 9,127,137 (A: …so far, in the last dump of money. And…)

Total amount of payments: $15,894,426,934

Texas - Number of payments: 7,812,382 (A: That was second for the amount of pay outs.)

Total amount of payments: $14,398,065,881

(A: And then Florida was next. Are you surprised, anybody? Anybody surprised?)

Florida - Number of payments: 6,348,503

Total amount of payments: $11,067,476,416

New York - Number of payments: 5,481,796

Total amount of payments: $9,283,821,196

(A: And Pennsylvania is down there at the bottom, of this group anyway. It doesn’t tell you what the rest of them, what the rest of the states got, so I guess nobody else really counts. You’re not important enough to count, you see. [Alan chuckles.] So there you go, you get the crumbs maybe, ‘eh.)

Pennsylvania - Number of payments: 3,725,334

Total amount of payments: $6,628,241,748

This article too, talking about how this happened with the AIDS one, I remember it very well with the AIDS. Because AIDS too, they're all putting their hands out at the time too for billions of dollars, and everybody's panicking through the terrible crisis, and oh, we're all going to die. The United Nations and the WHO, oh we're all going to die, you know, in about 10 years’ time half the population will be dead, by another 20 years everybody will be dying of AIDS, they said. And the money was just getting tossed out all over the place, yada, yada, ya.

Because that's what these folk live on is massive grants, that's what they all live on, all these different labs and scientists. They're just churning these characters out of university like you wouldn't believe now. There's too many folk in university, that's my opinion, because we have no industries left as an alternative for life earning situation. Too many folk all getting churned out with their hands out for grants, from the rest of us. But at the same time, after a few years, well, it keeps mutating into so many strains that we can't really get a vaccine for it. That's what they eventually said. Which, that's what they always conclude eventually anyway for these kind of things. So, the coronavirus…

COVID-19 Has Mutated To At Least 30 Different Strains, Study Reveals

ibtimes.com / 21 April 2020

(A: I think it's 40 they said in Iceland in a study they did there, or was it 40% of the people had it and didn't even know they had it because it didn't even bother them. But anyway, this is the strains they're saying here in this article.)

The SARS-CoV-2 virus has mutated at least 30 times since it came out of China in December 2019

…could mean one single vaccine may not immunize people worldwide against this disease

So, there you go, you’ve got a lifetime of vaccines, I guess, all kinds of vaccines, just like the flus and stuff. They'll try to get the right kind of strains for that year's type probably as they go through, and it will be the wrong kinds and yada, yada, ya. Quite amazing. All predictable though. All predictable, so it is.

As I say, don't forget the YouTube's I'm going to put them up as well.

How Honest is the COVID Fatality Count? Dr. Scott Jensen is a Physician and Minnesota State Senator. - youtube.com / 9 April 2020

Montana physician Dr. Annie Bukacek discusses how COVID 19 death certificates are being manipulated - youtube.com / 6 April 2020

Coronavirus: German study shows COVID-19 might not be fatal as previously thought - youtube.com / 9 April 2020

The WHO is Funded by Big Pharma and the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation - bitchute.com / 14 April 2020

Ingraham: WHO chief's troubling past exposed - youtube.com / 21 April 2020

And Annie Bukacek as well, I'll put that one up, who goes into some of this kind of situation. And...

How early signs of the coronavirus were spotted, spread and throttled (A: information was throttled…) in China - straitstimes.com / 28 Feb 2020

Because they're admitting now it was out long before, even in January. That's how it's done, isn't it? Another article…

The Experts Have No Idea How Many COVID-19 Cases There Are (A: ...in reality, that is.)

ronpaulinstitute.org / 20 April 2020

(A: This is a good article from the Ron Paul Institute.)

In the early days of the COVID-19 panic—about three weeks ago—it was common to hear both of these phrases often repeated:

- "The fatality rate of this virus is very high!"

- "There are far more cases of this out there than we know about!"

The strategy of insisting that both these statements are true at the same time has been used by politicians to implement "lockdowns" that have forced business to close and millions to lose their jobs. For instance, on March 12, Ohio Department of Health director Amy Acton insisted that "over 100,000" people are "carrying this virus in Ohio today."

(A: They just... It's the same, I can remember when they just picked a big round number they said, 700 million at the time, or billion was it, when the bank crashes happen the last time and the Fed said, pick a number, well okay, we just picked this number, it sounded like a nice round number. They had no idea what they need. That's what they do, that's what folk all do, that's why they get promoted, because they're good con artists, you know, they don't blush. So anyway…)

…that "over 100,000" people are "carrying this virus in Ohio today." The state began to implement "stay-at-home" lockdown orders that day.

At the time, the World Health Organization (WHO), the media, and others were reporting that 2 to 4 percent of people with COVID-19 would die. (A: Hhhhh.) Taking the low-end 2 percent number, and allowing for an incubation period, this would mean that two weeks after Acton's announcement—assuming that the lockdown was 100 percent effective and not a single additional person caught the disease—two thousand Ohioans would likely be dead of COVID-19. But as of April 17, more than a month later, and after a month of the disease spreading through grocery stores and other "essential" areas of commerce, about 418 Ohioans have died of COVID-19.

Clearly, something doesn't add up.

(A: And I really mean it, these viruses sweep through these, incredible, these old folks' homes. It's a death sentence to me, it really is, cramming folk together like that. And they get visits from people from all over the planet, so if there's anything coming in or out, somebody's going to bring it in. Even with the flus, they're the first ones to get all their shots, you know that. The first ones to get all their shots, in these homes, and yet the flu sweeps through like you wouldn't believe, whether they had or not. I've watched this my whole life and have taken notes. I have stacks of records on all this kind of thing. Official records. So something doesn't smell right. But cramming folk together like that is just...)

(A: And then they've got the hospices getting put down too where folk are in there, they're dying, when you get put into one of these places you're, really it's estimated you might last a month at the max. In the hospices you're already terminally ill. And stacks of folk, as I say, who are cancer patients who have had all their chemotherapy recently and all that are, they're coming down with it too. Because anything will kill them then, you have no immune system, for a long time. So anyway, it says here…)

At the time, the World Health Organization (WHO), the media, and others were reporting that 2 to 4 percent of people with COVID-19 would die. Taking the low-end 2 percent number, and allowing for an incubation period, this would mean that two weeks after Acton's announcement—assuming that the lockdown was 100 percent effective and not a single additional person caught the disease—two thousand Ohioans would likely be dead of COVID-19. (A: But in reality…) …about 418 Ohioans have died of COVID-19.

(A: And they would be in these homes, and the terminal places too of hospices. 418 is…)

At the time, Acton was lampooned by some for presumably inflating the number of infections in the state. Indeed, the very next day she backpedaled, saying she was only guessing.

(A: [Alan laughing.] That’s when they’re caught out, oh I was just guessing. Yep, there you go. But before that it was 100,000 people are carrying it, today I’m just guessing, you know. This is supposed to be the official, these are the folk who are ruling your lives, folks. Hm. They have no problem lying, 'eh, do they. N-n.)

When people say "death rate" or "fatality rate" they generally mean "case fatality rate" (CFR). This is simply the number of people who die from a disease divided by the number of cases. If there are 10,000 cases and 100 people die from the disease, the CFR is 1 percent. (This is not to be confused with "mortality rate," which is the number of deaths divided by the entire population.) (A: You see.)

And on and on it goes as they play numbers. This is standard statistical finagling. This is what people did, there are professional people who work in statistics, you know, taking degrees in all this kind of finagling and fudging things. They get employed by big companies. They use stats ALL the time to try and convince the public of different things. It's so much conology, it's quite amazing. And it's very lucrative for them too. And...

Facebook is accused of 'colluding with state governments to quash free speech' - dailymail.co.uk / 20 April 2020

That’s true, it did come out. And this is I think from The Daily Mail. But it also came out too, who they employed as a sensor, who was another doctor who works in labs, and she actually worked in the Wuhan lab as well, that is true, that's in her own site, the page there where she admits that. But she is the one who is literally putting people down as fake news and having them shut down.

This is truly, you're really in, this is the Gestapo, folks. And in so many obvious ways, the real Gestapo, and folk don't recognize it. I wonder how many folk really recognize it? ...the censorship, with the same techniques? Just putting up someone who says I'm more important than you and I'm more qualified to say if this is true or false... and you're supposed to go along with it... who have actually shares in companies! In fact, the woman who is censoring us owns her company for testing kits, she'll be getting a lot put her way too, I'm sure.

NIH (A: National Institute of Health.), Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation Collaborate to Develop Gene-Based HIV Treatment

ajmc.com / 28 Oct 2019

(A: Folks don't realize that too. They're in cahoots with everybody out there, you know. It's a club, you understand, that you're getting shown. That was from 2019, October 28.)

The National Institutes of Health (NIH) has announced plans to invest at least $100 million over the next 4 years to develop gene-based therapies for 2 diseases: HIV and sickle cell disease. The Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation will also contribute $100 million to the goal of advancing these potential cures, with an aim toward providing affordable, globally available treatment that will be accessible to patients in low-resource settings.

The National Institutes of Health (NIH) has announced plans to invest at least $100 million over the next 4 years to develop gene-based therapies for 2 diseases: HIV and sickle cell disease (SCD). The Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation (Gates Foundation) will also contribute $100 million to the goal of advancing these potential cures, with an aim toward providing affordable, globally available treatment that will be accessible to patients in low-resource settings.

(A: They do a lot of testing in Africa too, and I think some of this thing is to do… And yeah, they're going to use it for Africa, they've been doing that before.)

Anyway, when you go into the NIH you get the same old names that crop up all the time, and it's a small, small world you'll find at the top. And I've mentioned before, Dr. Joseph Mercola, I'll put that up as well. He says…

Bill Gates — Most Dangerous Philanthropist in Modern History? - articles.mercola.com / 21 April 2020

It's a good article actually. He knows his stuff. In YouTube's as well. I'll put, it's good to take some YouTube's, because you need them sometimes, you know, just to give you a little bit of... Folk don't believe it, they'll only watch something with the movements on the screen somewhere, they're so brainwashed into it. We've been raised that way, just for that purpose, you see. It's like, oh, if it's on the news and on the TV it must be true. That's like Wag the Dog, right. M-hm-hm.

CBDC: The Overarching Goal Behind The Digitisation Of Money? - zerohedge.com / 23 April 2020

Another article, awfully good.

Has COVID-19 Testing Made the Problem Worse? Confusion Regarding "The True Health Impacts

globalresearch.ca / 20 April 2020

(A: Good article actually, well done. And again they have the different stats from Stanford and different study groups, etc. etc. going through the same kind of thing of this incredible way that they're trying to, using statistics to try to drive up numbers, etc. etc.)

…the Chinese Journal of Epidemiology on March 5th, 2020 (A: This particular one too that they did in China.). The data-driven conclusion of the study was that "nearly half or even more" of patients testing positive for SARS-COV-2 did not actually have the virus. In other words, half of the results were false positives.

It goes on and on. This is sooo common, now, folks, it's soo common. It's just astonishing. It's a good article though and I'll put that up. And...

ID2020 and partners launch program to provide digital ID with vaccines

biometricupdate.com / 20 Sept 2019

(A: Isn't that comforting, for the big, big masses of people? You'll get your little tattoo and your little chip in that, and you'll be all SAFE then and you can go enjoy the big, big, the big herd, you see, that bow down to the God of science, you know. Yep. It's just astonishing.)

The ID2020 Alliance has launched a new digital identity program at its annual summit in New York, in collaboration with the Government of Bangladesh, vaccine alliance Gavi (A: ...the big one that Gates and the rest of them are involved in.), and new partners in government, academia, and humanitarian relief.

(A: All the NGO and humanitarian relief groups, government and academia who are all on board with it too because they get big paychecks and grants as well, you know that. Small world, 'eh, small clique, really.)

The program to leverage immunization as an opportunity to establish digital identity was unveiled by ID2020 in partnership with the Bangladesh Government’s Access to Information (a2i) Program, the Directorate General of Health Services, and Gavi, according to the announcement. (A: I-yi-yi.)

So, they're pushing it, and they want it for the whole world. You'll all get your turn at it. And your little thing for your clothing too, to mark you, so that they can tell you're a good branded little cow or bull. You won't be a bull anymore, [Alan chuckles.] you'll be going sterile I guess in the West. But you'll be branded, that's what you do, you brand them. And you can chip them as well, it's got all the data in the chip and you're going to get one as well in a little tattoo. Isn't that wonderful? All reminiscent of something that happened before in the 1940s, but folk are just so… But this is for our own good, it's to keep us safe, you know. Yeah. And...

GP resigns from Medical Council over 'systemic failures' to protect nursing homes amid Covid-19 - irishexaminer.com / 20 April 2020

As I said too, they're actually demanding that some of these nursing homes, the old age homes I should say, that's really what they are, they're demanding in New York that they're taken, Covid positive or symptomatic people, TO the group that isn't symptomatic. Well, you see, if you want to spread it, you're going to do it, sure you are. When it doesn't make sense, then it's meant to happen, obviously. They're not that dumb.

Again, because as I've said before, with all these false positives and negatives, because folks say, well we've probably got natural immunity now that we've had it, a lot of folks say they've had it and been tested, they've got the antibodies for it. So immediately, you know, Fauci and the rest of them come out with, who've all got, who are really in the vaccine industries, folks, come on, come on, come on, and they said…

You may catch coronavirus more than once: WHO

straitstimes.com / 25 April 2020

(A: ...says the World Health Organization. Doctor WHO again, 'eh. So it says…)

GENEVA (AFP) - The World Health Organisation warned on Saturday (April 25) that recovering from coronavirus may not protect people from reinfection, as the death toll from the pandemic approaches 200,000 around the globe.

(A: Mind you, a lot of them are presumed positive and just getting stuck in with it with regardless to pad the figures. It's supposed to be like maybe hundreds of millions of folk, even in their own countries, at the start of it, right. This is global.)

Governments across the world are struggling to limit the economic devastation unleashed...

Well, what we're trying to limit is the devastation, because we're all ordered NOT to work. Total shutdown leads to poverty, and also even less food, and then no food from farming, and then starvation. Isn't that amazing, 'eh? That old Bertrand Russell said, you know, when he was talking, we really need something like the bubonic plague to sweep through the population of every generation or two, he says. He also meant with starvation, all the old techniques. And...

Retirement funds for federal, military retirees may soon be investing in China defense firms - lauraingraham.com / 22 April 2020

No kidding, 'eh. That's the US ones. There you are, your enemies hey, they're going to hold all your pensions and stuff. Wow. Quite something. It really is. It really is. And as I say, I'll put Dr Birx up, as I've mentioned before. If someone dies with the Covid in them or testing, like the swabs and stuff, they're counting that as a Covid 19 death. No matter if they are terminally ill, cancer is killing them or whatever. There ya go.

Dr. Birx: Unlike Some Countries, "If Someone Dies With COVID-19 We Are Counting That As A COVID-19 Death" - realclearpolitics.com / 8 April 2020

Again, the PR pieces they give the star quality as they try to promote people in countries with these doctors they put up there, especially the women ones. The one in Canada...

The Canadian Leading The Fight Against Vaccine Skeptics - web.archive.org / 23 Aug 2019

She's helping to stigmatize the people who have their own opinions. And they're entitled to have their own opinions. That's what being an adult is, you can come to your own conclusions, and you can't be forced to go along with someone else's conclusions. That's what being an adult is, it's a freedom of thought. And some people at the top have to get reminded that we are not in a communist country here, well at least not officially, you know. Or Nazi, or whatever else they want to call it, tyrannical or you name it, dictatorial. Regardless, but the fact is, no you don't, you don't, you don't stigmatize people here that have a different point of view, for many good reasons. That's why the West got on so well for such a long time before it was taken down deliberately.

John Whitehead's Commentary

Suspending the Constitution: Police State Uses Crises to Expand Its Lockdown Powers - rutherford.org / 24 March 2020

I'll put that up too. It's from the Rutherford Institute I think it is. But anyway, it's good articles he's put out once in a while too. Then again, we've got… so many articles, I can’t go through them all, naturally.

Armed Forces Health Surveillance Branch study in the Journal Vaccine titled, Influenza vaccination and respiratory virus interference among Department of Defense personnel during the 2017–2018 influenza season - sciencedirect.com / 10 Jan 2020

New York refused to send nursing home’s COVID-19 patients to nearly empty USNS Comfort - nypost.com / 24 April 2020

Coronavirus outbreak: Sinai cuts, furloughs workers as COVID-19 challenges finances Cuts Covid Death Numbers - modernhealthcare.com / 16 March 2020

Weimar America, Here We Come! Virus Hysteria Adds $10 Trillion to the National Debt - unz.com / 11 April 2020

What If the Lockdown Was All A Big Mistake? - ronpaulinstitute.org / 20 April 2020

Global COVID-19 Lockdown - What You're Not Being Told, Part 2 - zerohedge.com / 23 April 2020

COVID19: “Millions of cases, small amount of death” Dr Erickson, California. - thewallwillfall.org / April 2020

That will do for tonight I suppose because, what time is it anyway? Oh, I’m well over... What I'll do tonight though is just mention, the last one I'll put up is George Carlin, the comedian, the late comedian, on germs and viruses that he gave quite a few years ago. I'll put a link up to his little take on it.

George Carlin - Germs and Immune System - youtube.com / 16 March 2020

You need a bit of humor through all this craziness too. Because that's the biggest thing you have now, is threats really, because you're living in an abnormal existence now under mandatory lockdown, by your betters, the new scientific overlords, you see. Which is technocracy really, and into a whole new way of living. Or existing, I won't call it living. What they plan is a form of existence.

You're not human anymore, you're an animal. And you've been trained to believe that through all your programs you've watched. Just like Mr. Attenborough has said some amazing things about culling off the big population out there to save the animals and the earth. He knows better, because he is a guardian of it, you see. He doesn't believe in a God I guess, but I guess an animal must've appointed him as the Guardian. It's just astonishing the arrogance of them, isn't it, when they talk about everybody else.

Of course, Prince Philip said the same things too. Well, he says, you know, we know, we royalty know, we have these big grounds, and we have people - you know, the little people that manage it all for them, and they manage the herds of deer - and he says, sometimes you get some animal that's becoming profuse and you've got to have a culling, he says. Prince Philip, he mentioned that in one of his talks, I don't remember if it was in Switzerland, I think it was, years ago. Quite open about it to his own peer group. He loved the furry animals, that was the excuse he gave too for the world wildlife fund and the different groups that he belonged to. He belonged to them all actually. They have the best farmland across Africa, and they wouldn't let anybody, they took it all for reservations and conservations, reservation for animals and conservation, and they wouldn't let people on it. It's amazing what goes on if you just stop and look at it all and do a wee bit of investigation. It doesn't take too much.

Anyway, I'm sorry to go on for so long here. Maybe I should really rein myself in a little bit. But again, these are trying times, aren't they? And people really, really need to know that hell doesn't last forever unless you let it. And it really is up to the people out there, you have to start saying, start speaking up for yourself. And don't allow bullies to shove you and shout at you in lines and things like that. This is not a prison camp, this prison they've created for the whole planet here. It's not a prison camp. No way. And you're not a prisoner.

No one can appoint another little character, that sits on the toilet the same way you do and does the same things that you do and flushes it and the whole thing, and given a little cap or whatever it happens that they're given, or even a white coat, is going to start screaming at you like you're some kind of peasant, you know. No, no, no. No, don't start going, just don't… most folk back off, you know, they're afraid of conflict... what they showed you in Fight Club, as they tried to get folk to fight back.

You've got to start standing up for yourselves, and you get a voice, and you say, hey, hey, get off my back, you. And you call them, you start using the names that they'd call you for other things, you know. You've got to start doing it, put them in their place. Because once this starts...

You know, in totalitarian systems, that comes right to the bottom, anybody with a little, including the folk at the grocery stores, suddenly they're IMPORTANT and you're nothing, and they scream at you as though you are a real peasant. Well, stop caving into it and stand up for yourself. You've got God-given rights. And you've got to start reminding everybody of that, including all the different scientists that are using their positions to get a social agenda through. A big big agendas through, completely outside of the excuse they're giving.

And your hearts definitely go out for the folks that have suffered in these different old-age homes that it spreads through like wildfire. And the folk to who are dying who can't get in the hospitals for treatments that could save them, for other things, that are all banned from getting in. And other folks too, dying quietly at home with heart attacks and other kinds of problems. Everything is done by phone, 'eh? Oh, how bad is the pain in your chest? Well, you know. Well maybe it's just heartburn, you know. Yep. That's what it's come down to. …As a lot of these hospitals are sitting pretty well empty. The staff are bored stiff. As I say, that other doctor from California in Bakersfield, listen to him talking, he does a good long talk on it.

Remember folks, you can always donate to me @cuttingthroughthematrix.com and check in to see what I have there, the discs and so on that I have for sale. But straight donations too are awfully helpful. Because I really, I don't sell anything else to you. I don't sell you anything to make you live forever. And I don't give you any conflicting information, as far as I know, about what's really happening. I just give you the facts as we know them. And even then, you have to check and check and delve into it to make sure they are completely true and not put out by intelligence agencies. A lot of stuff is, of course. Because you’re living in an amazing world of intelligence and counterintelligence, and no way under the sun are they going to let out, let the public just go all the way and have any kind of truth to themselves.

So yeah, you can put out donations to me, send them to me @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. As I say, it's listed out how to do it and you can send it by check or whatever, PayPal, whatever method you want. Hopefully I can keep on going for a bit longer. Because things are really tightening up. This is the last big push now to get a good part of the agenda through. Awfully important to them. They won't back down. Their uniform, it's like weapons of mass destruction, it doesn't matter what talking head that's presented to you from the authorities, they're all saying exactly the same lines from the same script obviously.

Thank you. Anyway, look after yourselves and I hope you're all standing up for each other as well during these times. You've got to start helping each other out. You've GOT to. Because if you don't, what happens when it's your turn, you've got nothing whatever, someone has to help you out too. And that's how we get through these nasty evil times.

As I've said before, not a generation that I know of has ever had peace either, from war from these characters, these tyrants, or by financial collapses, all that kind of stuff. It's the same stuff, same people, doing the same techniques again. And you have to, that's how folk get through this, with each other, the ordinary folk. The ultrarich are all working from home. Or, the middle classes, upper middle classes. The real rich have flooded out of the countries and they're off to private islands and so on, lots of articles about them, with their own private medics and doctors. Yep. There ya go.

Anyway, take care of yourselves.

For myself Alan Watt, from Ontario, Canada, it's good night and may your God or gods go with you.

Topics of show covered in following links:

We All Live in Disneyland, Orlando

How Will America End? A Bang, A Whimper, Or Something Else

Covid Test Results

One trip per week. One person per household. That should be the law for grocery buying, union says

Albertsons, UCFW team up to reclassify grocery store employees as first responders during coronavirus pandemic

HIDDEN DEATHS UK coronavirus death toll may be 40% higher than reported as shock figures reveal fatalities outside hospitals

Enforce Social Distancing

Who controls the British Government response to Covid–19?

Minnesota Senator Dr. Scott Jensen - Hospitals Get Paid More to List Patients as COVID-19 and Three Times as Much if the Patient Goes on Ventilator

Dr Scott Jensen Reveals “Ridiculous” Covid19 Guidance

A COVID-19 Death&quot;

Coronavirus Death Tolls

JAB FOR THAT Scientists suggest MMR vaccine ‘could protect against coronavirus – after BCG trials start’

UN climate change fund calls coronavirus an ‘opportunity’ to re-shape the world

The WHO is Funded by Big Pharma and the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation

Vaccines And ‘Seems Fueled By A Messianic Conviction’ That He Is Destined To ‘Save The World With Technology And A God-like Willingness To Experiment On The Lives Of Lesser Humans’

Bill Gates and the Depopulation Agenda. Robert F. Kennedy Junior Calls for an Investigation

Canada cut number of stockpile storage locations for critical medical supplies by one third in past two years

China disputes explanation for cargo jets returning empty to Canada

Coronavirus stimulus cash: Which states have received the most payments?

COVID-19 Has Mutated To At Least 30 Different Strains, Study Reveals

How early signs of the coronavirus were spotted, spread and throttled in China

The Experts Have No Idea How Many COVID-19 Cases There Are

Facebook is accused of 'colluding with state governments to quash free speech'

NIH, Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation Collaborate to Develop Gene-Based HIV Treatment

Bill Gates — Most Dangerous Philanthropist in Modern History?

Of Money?

Has COVID-19 Testing Made the Problem Worse? Confusion Regarding “The True Health Impacts

Armed Forces Health Surveillance Branch study in the Journal Vaccine titled, Influenza vaccination and respiratory virus interference among Department of Defense personnel during the 2017–2018 influenza season

ID2020 and partners launch program to provide digital ID with vaccines

GP resigns from Medical Council over 'systemic failures' to protect nursing homes amid Covid-19

You may catch coronavirus more than once: WHO

Retirement funds for federal, military retirees may soon be investing in China defense firms

New York refused to send nursing home’s COVID-19 patients to nearly empty USNS Comfort

Coronavirus outbreak: Sinai cuts, furloughs workers as COVID-19 challenges finances Cuts Covid Death Numbers

Fight Against Vaccine Skeptics

Suspending the Constitution: Police State Uses Crises to Expand Its Lockdown Powers

Weimar America, Here We Come! Virus Hysteria Adds $10 Trillion to the National Debt

Foreign Affairs Minister, Ambassador mum on Fan Wei, Canadian sentenced to death in China

What If the Lockdown Was All A Big Mistake?

Global COVID-19 Lockdown - What You're Not Being Told, Part 2

Race

False-positive PCR results linked to administration of seasonal influenza vaccine

Did you hear that? - MP Hancock Minister of Health Let Slip, &quot;even in normal times, about 10,000 people die every month in care-homes&quot; (link broken)

COVID19: “Millions of cases, small amount of death” Dr Erickson, California.

Dr. Erickson COVID-19 FULL Briefing (Bakersfield doctors dispute need for stay at home order)

Dr. Scott Jensen is a Physician and Minnesota State Senator.

discusses how COVID 19 death certificates are being manipulated

Coronavirus: German study shows COVID-19 might not be fatal as previously thought

The WHO is Funded by Big Pharma and the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation

Ingraham: WHO chief's troubling past exposed

Dr. Oz Admits HE WILL NEVER VACCINATE HIS OWN KIDS (2012)

ROADMAP TO Pandemic Resilience

May 3, 2020 "Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt (Blurb, i.e. Educational Talk): " We're the Fodder for Latest New World Order

Hi folks, I’m Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through the Matrix on May 3, 2020. I hope you’re all hanging in there, not hanging yourselves at this stage of the game as you’re all cooped up in your homes, by order of our new fuhrers of course, the cabal who runs the planet.

Because it’s astonishing when you go into the basics of, the very basic stuff of course which I’ve done for years and years and years which leads you to the advanced stuff. Because it’s just a hub, this system is basically a hub in the middle. You find the big organizations, the same groups, the Royal Institute of International Affairs, Council on Foreign Relations groups, across the whole planet. Then they have the circles within circles that Quigley talked about too and the co-mingling circles of specialized departments, like the Club of Rome and the World Economic Forum, another group that set itself up under public/private partnerships they call themselves.

Really interesting to go into. I’ve done talks on them over the years actually, I’d do the occasional talks on the WEF. They have their meetings every year until you get used to hearing it, if you listen to news at all, and they say, oh, that’s just them doing their thing. They seem normal because they exist there, and you’ve heard them so often. But don’t forget that none of these groups that we’re talking about, do you realize, were elected by any of us. From the United Nations, which was also set up by the Royal Institute of International Affairs because they set up the precursor, the League of Nations. And they set up the World Bank, the Bank for International Settlements. All private institutions. Which we also pay into and support. And the IMF. All the same, all run by the same private group at the top. Their idea was to bring in a planned society. It’s been honest to me to even talk about it because I've done so many talks over many years on these things and given the histories of them too and the characters involved at the top.

But now, you're seeing them all come out in a unified thrust. It's like a front, they call it a front in the military, and you put on a unified front to your enemies. The enemies being the people of the planet. Because you now are under total attack, and you are being ordered to submit to them completely. That's what it's really about. Under the guise of saving you. Even from yourselves. Because you're consumers, you see, there's too many of you consuming the produce of their planet, you know, the ones who decided that they own it, the better genetic types. It goes way, way back, the whole idea. And it's been honest to me to even talk about it, as I say.

But even before Charles Darwin, and we had Malthus as well of course, Thomas Malthus. He was one of the first ones. He was an economists originally for England for, really, the Bank of England that ran, really ran the whole of Britain and the Empire in fact for a long time. It was set up to do that by people who came in as merchant bankers, then Britain used to still have merchant banks. I think Barclays is still called a merchant bank. The City of London was the big territory for the four main banks to set up alongside their version of Cleopatra's needle. They always do that. And they have sovereignty. It's true, they have sovereignty just like Rome itself has sovereignty. Rome also has another one [obelisk, Cleopatra’s needle] they brought from Egypt as well in St.

Peter's Square. But you also have one too in Paris. And there's other ones across the world folk don't know about.

You're living through a very old agenda. Thomas Malthus of course also saw himself as the budding scientist. Since the Enlightenment of course that was the idea, that science would gradually take over, and logic and rationality would take over. Eventually they formed different sciences, or, they like to call them sciences, or doctrines actually initially, were doctrines and then sciences, to really rule the world.

They had so many problems ruling the world before. Because under democracy it took a lot of people to really fight and demand democracy in fact. People don't realize that most folk in World War I, you always hear about the suffragettes, before it even started, demanding the right to vote. Well, these were well off middle-class women. Many of them by the way were very rich, the suffragette ones that you know about. They also were members of the Communist Party. They or their families were into the banking industries, most of them. Some of them even went over and lived in Russia after they blew off a few bombs in Britain. And they did build bombs.

At that time too, they always went, you know, males have all the rights, etc. No, males did NOT. In fact in 1917 there was another push before the war finished as they tried to get more and more, what was left of the undamaged males in Britain to join up. They promise them then to give them more, more of them the right to vote. Before that you couldn't vote unless you owned property, and a certain amount of property at that too. So no, most of the public had less rights than the suffragettes ended up getting in fact. That's how history is muddied. It's always muddied by special interest groups of course.

But people fought to get rights, and democratic rights, and not to be a peon or a villain, as they were often called in the Middle Ages. Eventually they softened it to just peasants, and then just to rural folk, and then just to farming people. The most important folk on the land are the ones that feed you. If you don't understand that you’re rather silly. Because it's vital to have food, as you're noticing now, I'm sure, as you line up in your Sovietized type systems for food. That's what you used to see in Britain when they telegraphed stuff from the Soviet Union during shortages, etc. You'd see folk lining up, for hours, just like they did in Britain during World War II, but they were doing it afterwards in the 60s and 70s occasionally in different parts of the Soviet Union. And now we’re doing it again of course.

Because the same characters who gave you the experiments for Germany... It's well documented by the historians for the CFR that they studied Germany intensely. Because Germany was an experiment in social engineering and managing the public for obedience and having them cooperates in a kind of collectivist fashion. Very important if you want to rule the world. They had already studied, according to Carroll Quigley, they had already studied, and he was all for this by the way, they studied the Soviet system from the beginnings. And they helped fund them too naturally. They really studied that one because once again, it was a big experiment in conformity and trying to get the people to be all on board with it. And then massive, intense indoctrination for the schoolchildren. It really worked so, so well. For a certain amount of time at least.

So anyway, what you're living through is a repetition of the different parts, things that they learned, those who rule the world. And there are rulers of this world. They boast about it today, that they own this, and they own that and they own your food supplies. I used to give talks years ago in the 90s and the early 2000's about this too. You had about five food corporations, cartels that run the world. I went into their histories and what they were up to and so on, and how they combined together for the NAFTA agreements for Latin America. They wanted eventually to produce really ALL the food for the Americas, and other countries too, and export using the GMO, genetically modified organism type grain, etc. and export it to the world. Then they tied in their chemical industry with them to produce the pesticides and herbicides. Then they put in the killer genes of course and you know all the groups about that and who did all that, etc. It's old hat to some of us anyway. It's all been done pretty well.

But we're going around in circles and circles and circles, as they implement all the things that worked before. Getting back to Plato. Plato said that if you know the formula that made people adapt into a system, any type of system of conformity, even to their own deprivation, and rationing might be as an example, but he said that you must know the sequence of how it was instituted in the first place, step one, two, three, four etc., and if you can understand that formulae, it doesn't matter what age or era you live in, you can implement it again and the people will respond accordingly.

So here we go again. You always have fear and terror of course, that's so primal, to get that across. I listened to a little old, an old disc actually by Bill Cooper, an old talk he gave in the 90s. He of course was killed, assassinated, halved in two by machine gun bullets trying to get into his own home. Because he was running away with one leg of course, he had one leg, the other one was artificial. That was the excuse they gave; they sent an assassination squad up to kill him and they did it. They halved him in two pretty well with machine gun bullets. But this guy went through the formula, how they would take over, any totalitarian organization, how they would take over the country, and the world.

He said, the first thing is you create a terrible, terrible fear of immediate annihilation. That's the first step, then you take it from there, step one, two, three, four, obey, obey, conform, conform. You have your snitch programs, because it was all tested out in the Soviet Union. Every street had snitches, paid to snitch and inform on everybody on the street. Every place of work had someone paid to snitch on people. It was everywhere. And the Stasis of course were even more excellent at that job in East Germany than apparently the Soviet system. But we're seeing it all played out exactly the same way.

You know the formulas, Plato said, introduce it and it's all been set to go.

What got me with this one was the amazing work that had gone into preparing us for this present pandemic, as they call it. I can remember doing the talks years ago, years ago when the previous ones came out, the previous pandemics, as they call it, came out. The SARS one came out in 2003. Then we had other ones too in 2009/2010. Each time it came out, they immediately went into the same organizations, the CDC, and the WHO and so on, for what to do. And once again, they throw millions and billions to all these different big Pharma companies and vaccine companies to try and get vaccines for everything, every time they try to do it.

But there's so much data, so much data on the incredible consequences of these vaccines that they came out with at the time that they had to just flop them, literally, ditch them. Millions of dollars worth of the vaccines were ditched because they were so unpredictable on the effects that they had with people, and children dying, and adults dying at times too. Lots of people, even with the swine flu one initially.

And the old swine flu one too from the 1970s, a complete fake pandemic. One guy got sick in the military, and after getting jabs, and he got sick and he collapsed. What they didn't tell you at the time was that they had a march, he had gone about 48 hours without sleep, they had him running in a hot, hot day, then he collapsed. They put it down to swine flu. Complete fake. And out of that was the first big kind of almost, almost a lock down as they went into hysteria mode of how they'd have to vaccinate the entire population. Complete phony thing altogether. It's just astonishing.

But they have never given up by it. Because you understand, you are in an age of what they call technocratic rule. Technocrats and experts and those in academia are supposed to rule us and take over from the old versions that used to really organize our lives, like religion and family units and things like that. Now you have the new ones coming over, on behalf of the Masters of the top. This is not made up by me, people like Julian Huxley explained it. He was one of them. He was a member too, founding member of Planned Parenthood with Margaret Sanger to depopulate the unfit and unhealthy, etc.

The same thing that Hitler was accused of doing. And he himself said the same thing, that he got all the ideas from watching Britain and the eugenics movement in Britain that all came out from Darwinism. Also he got it from the US, the Rockefeller Foundation in Cold Spring Harbor laboratory. Massive thing to do with trying to create superior humans, etc. They even brought in the American Cattle Ranchers Association because they were experts in breeding cattle. They brought them on board to see if they could find ways of breeding better people. The big feat of course was, too much of the unfit were breeding and they would eventually take down the superior class. That's never changed, for those who haven't quite figured it out yet.

So if you don't belong to the superior class, you should be really, really worried right now. You really should be. I really mean that. Because the whole idea of that happening never went away, it's probably hotter now than ever before. Because the Club of Rome, that was their big mandate too, they simply took up Thomas Malthus, his ideas, and grabbed his old, old graphs, that you would out breed yourselves according to the food supply and all the rest of it, and put it on steroids with better graphs. You know, you're all going to die, look at this, look at these spikes in these graphs, oh you're going to, look at these, my God, you'll all be, by the year 2000 you'll all be standing on each other's heads, you know, that was their idea.

Terror, terror, fear, fear, fear.

But the Club of Rome is just one special operating branch of the WEF and the big group above it in fact that runs the whole show. The WEF, again, getting back to them, is the World Economic Forum. They don't just meet every year like they announce on television. They have a massive, massive think tank, workshops. They're really a supranational governmental authority in every respect with thousands and thousands and thousands of employees and specialists all working to manage their world. They even bring in people, your own politicians at times, through again, extra governmental agencies that they create out of thin air, without your approval, and then they just, the government's end up rubberstamping all these different demands put out there to be put into law over us by these big foundations and organizations.

We used to call it, and this is the difference, children today have no idea what communism is. They think it's a good idea. Because they've been brainwashed in school by the Communists, the communist academics who are awfully well-paid to do so. And each thing I'm mentioning so casually is a whole, a whole history by itself, even that little bit I just said there, how those people in academia get there in the first place and who put them there and, you know, what kind of salaries they got, and the annual meetings, they had to make sure that they were indoctrinating the children properly, and social engineering. So that what you have 20 years later is the infighting between different groups, that were created inside the universities, that those people grow up and have children of their own. Then you see the chaos being formed out in front of you as the parents think it's their own ideas that they're putting across and bringing into being. But they've all been indoctrinated into them. They have no idea. It really works awfully well.

The beauty of brainwashing, real true brainwashing is that those who are brainwashed don't know it. That's really successful brainwashing. That came out even with FDR's wife, who went over to see the Russians, you know, at the end of World War II, just before it ended actually and then afterwards. She wrote about it, that she eventually got to meet her hero Pavlov. You know, the great Pavlov who came out with conditioned responses and so on in animals and tortured all kinds of animals. But he also used it on humans, for those who don't know that. It wasn't just animals he was playing with, they had lots of humans to practice on because they were counterrevolutionaries.

They'd just go around, if you had any idea, any exclamation out of your mouth at all that you didn't like the right system, then they grabbed you as a criminal and a counterrevolutionary. You had no rights then, you see. A normal prisoner, a thief would have some rights. You wouldn't have any rights under a kind of war measures act and so on. And obviously you were mentally ill too because if you complained about the Soviet Union, this utopia, you obviously were mentally ill, it was the best system in the world. That literally was an illness. So this has all been done before.

But Pavlov, literally, all his techniques were put into teaching the children in school, that they're now using in the West today. That involved the type of group teaching, groupthink, where they all sit in a group and the teacher has her toolkit and she knows how to put across any topic and subject, and then get their opinions on it and have them all voting collectively together in unison. Anyone who doesn't is really shunned. Well, there's something wrong with you, why don't you want to be part of the group that, don't you think it's proper, this decision we've made on whatever... Whatever social aspect that they've been brainwashed into. That all came from the early days with Pavlov as an example and it's used here now. Conformity, you see, conformity.

Eleanor Roosevelt was just over the moon with this guy and the work that he had done. He is the same guy, as I say, he would have dogs literally breaking up, cracking up with neurosis, living in utter terror, totally destroyed the psyches in the animals. And they didn't end there. They went even further, I wouldn't even… I still have the documentaries that were put out for the West to see how wonderful the Soviet Union was in about the late 1920s. They showed you dogs' heads that had been cut off, literally, and they had literally put in artificial hearts to pump blood through the arteries and bring them back through the veins and so on. And yeah, wasn't it wonderful, here's this dog's eyes opening again, and it's been stimulated or given little shocks and all the rest of it.

This is where science goes, you understand, when you break ANY taboo of human... humans... Like Julian Huxley said, humans standing on the pedestal thinking they're so superior above everything. We have to knock them off that pedestal, he says. Well, you destroy the family unit, you destroy religion and there's nothing left but cold hard science. And science is completely politicized in all ages, you can't have it any other way. It's corrupt and politicized, and you end up with horror. Because then there's no real... Well, there's no firewalls at all, is there, to stop you coming through and just killing who they want to kill or destroy or aborting, even killing after birth, etc.

It's all out in the open today. And it never stops there. Whatever is pushed... Oh, let's just start with early abortions basically. Then you push it and push it, then you go on. Oh, you know the elderly are taking up space here. And you've paid all this money into insurance all their lives, why let them collect it? Why not just kill them off, persuade them to die, and take this injection, or this pill or whatever is the cheapest, for them, and you can keep that money and use it on other projects, you see.

Because everyone alive underneath, you know, the all-seeing eye at the very top there in that little capstone that's floating above all of you, it's not quite attached to you, it's always floating above you. That's the idea of it, you see, it's superior, it's not human, it's not base like you are. The bottom part is called the base for a reason, you see, that's what you are. It floats above you and you have to have a useful function to them, you see, utilitarian, and if you don't have that then you're just a burden to them. Even if you're not really burden in such a sense, you're still consuming the world's goods and the world's produce and food and so on. And even the space that you take up, you see, they feel disgusted that you for even using that space. It's theirs, you understand.

They have this vision at the top, all the biggies that they've brought out. They’re all front people, mind you, but there's people even above THEM that you’ll never even hear of that are even far, far richer. But you know the ones I'm talking about, they're all made into kind of superstars with repetitive exposés of how brainy they are and how clever they are and all that rubbish, you see. They’re front people, folks. Because the whole thing is to really manage systems under a singular type of control, a small type of control. Systems is what it is, you see. So they give you one just for the Internet. And one for Facebook. And one for this and one for that, you see.

It's much easier if they say, well, it's mine, it's my business, I'll do what I want with it. Whereas if it's really, which they are, public/private corporations, because they take so much money from the public, even their startup money, then they'd have to have public input into it. So you must disguise it as just being owned by a singular person, and it's theirs, it's their business and yada, yada, ya. The CIA created most of these big organizations, for those who don't know it. The CIA is not what you think it is either. It never was. It was never intended to be what you thought it was.

Every country that's used, going way back even into the British Empire, was run by a clique of people, who can move, they could move around the world and take their wealth with them. That's what happened in the Middle Ages and before that even in ancient Rome. They can move out with the cash and everything else, and their systems of controlling it all. Once they've gone, it collapses behind them, you see. And bingo, there's never really a, they say nature abhors, in power, abhors a vacuum. And sure enough, as soon as someone moves, you're going to see some other group just starting up somewhere else, just spontaneously with the same system and the same money, and the same techniques and ruling and getting folk into organized regular armies, then using it for conquest. The same thing over and over again. It didn't happen by itself. It doesn't happen by itself. Not at all. And here you are today with the same thing.

So, you had the CIA and MI6 and so on, and MI6 really was the technique of destabilizing countries the same way, in order for the banking elite in Britain, the fraternity, to rule the world. The same merchant banking fraternities. It hasn't changed today. It's still the same. A bunch of them to also came to American did the same thing there. It's not miraculous. It's not really hidden anymore. And it's definitely traceable, you know.

But they don't see you. As I say, even the CIA, I mean forget all the propaganda movies you see. The CIA wasn't started up to defend America. It was there to defend and really destroy the enemies of their system, the ones who ruled America, the money group, and to take over parts of the world. And even bring in a world type system. Once they did that, they'd shed the US, as they had shed countries before them. That's what they've been doing ever since. That's...

Why do you think... Why do you think [Alan chuckles.] this big, again, let's call it this big all-seeing eye that floats above the light, you know, in between you, the base, you are the base, and themselves? And it's a blinding light, so you're not supposed to see who's there, you see, that's the idea behind it. It's all symbology. You don't realize that you are trained down below in the base only to see your side of the... If you're on one side of it, it's four squares, right, except for the bottom is really five. And if the cap is gone, it's actually six. But regardless, regardless of what side or part you're in, you only see your part of it. And that's what you're supposed to see. That's your degreed type system, for those who don't know.

On the dollar bill of course you see all this wasteland down below, like sparse grass growing up. Again, that's the real stragglers down below, that they don't even get a function inside the base. They are the kind of the fallout you might say that you'd see in the Brave New World, the ones who are like the savages, you see, the weeds, the ones that are just useless. That's the general population, that's what they claim it is. Anyway, the ones in the base are all there for a function, to keep the system going. But we're living in it.

Look at the ones at the top, how they all work together in unison. You go into the World Economic Forum and EVERY organization you know is part of it. Every one. You know, the World Bank is there of course and the IMF, the Bank for International Settlements that decides the value of on any particular day of the currency of any particular country. And privately owned again. All by accident… A small club that owns all the banks of the world, and they are privately owned. Going way back into Lord Alfred Milner's day that they set up the beginnings of that system based on the British Empire system of the Bank of England, along with the private banks that they had then too.

So as I say, they use your country for its tax base, for the taxes that can pay for their wars, that can pay for the equipment and pay to get an army together. You pay for everything yourself. You fight their battles for them, and you do their conquests for them. And they take over the resources for themselves.

I'll give you an example of what happened even in the last bank crash, if I remember, a whole bunch of the car companies were bailed out. I think it was Ford, or was it Ford, or, it was one of them, a big one, that was given a big bailout, then immediately closed down and went off to start building up another company in Russia at the time. There was a stink that broke out about it, and I think they pulled a bit of it back. But this is the kind of thing. You understand, it's the same with the group that rule the world. They use countries, and they'll, once you're dried out and they've sucked you dry, they'll just ditch you. They already set up their other big banking institution in the Far East quite a few years back with the massive towers and everything. So it's an ongoing process.

It's only when you are born and raised in a particular area that you feel you belong to something. Very important thing. You take this is a natural thing to feel you belong. And if you've, the older the country, and the older your ancestry, the more you'll feel it. I think it's partly a genetic thing too. Carl Jung used to talk about it, kind of genetic type memory. But if you look at Scotland or Ireland, I mean, if they sing a song about leaving the country, they're already crying before they've even taken a step onto a plane or anything. It's that intense with them. And they feel it, it's a strange connection there with the hills and everything else. It's just… Even if you knew none of your histories, you'd still feel it, it's very real.

That's why folk in countries across the world want to hang onto their country, even the lowliest of the people there, any country, and they fight to defend it. Of course, if you fight and defend your country, you're generally defeated by a superior, a financially superior country, and a better equipped military than if you don't have one of your own you're done for. Because the greed factor never changes. It's covered and smoothed over with all these, the pretenses of charitable organizations, and governments throwing aid out. Which isn’t aid at all, it's pure blackmail, you do this or else, or you don't get fed, you know. That's how things really work in our system.

We've never lived in such an age of deception as we do today. We're trained into deception. I used to give talks about what the military is. The military are guys, in a peacetime Army, if you're not called up, you see, and your country isn't under attack, you're basically a mercenary. You see. And yeah, there are special active groups that are sent abroad to do certain things too. At one time during the Cold War it seemed more okay to do so, such things. Because the countries involved, it was only two sides at that time. We didn't get the whole picture at all, naturally, of what was behind it. We didn't even know that, at the very top, the same group that ruled our own countries was, obviously helped create and finance the Soviet Union from its birth, and right through until the end in fact we fed them. But at the time, people didn't know that and so they were sent off to do certain missions and so on.

But most folk as I say, in a standing army, are superfluous unless you use them because it costs money to keep them equipped and prepared in readiness. So the temptation is always there for the elite of the country to end up using them for their own escapades, to take resources across the world. That's exactly what's been happening for... Since World War II especially with the US. Britain was too broke to do it. They had already spent about two centuries building up an empire on behalf of a small elite and of course the public were left devastated. The country’s never really, really…

I used to wonder, do you realize how far advanced we'd be if you had a real system in a real world, how far you'd be financially, health wise, all the other realities to help improve your lot, you know, in food and all the rest of it and health, a healthier way of living, do you realize how far we could be? But we're kept back with the massive debts from world wars, as an example. Massive. You never, you can't really pay them off. It might take 100, 150 years for each one. Because it's compound interest. But the companies and the corporations that profit, they pay nothing at all generally, they don't even pay taxes. Their excuse is always, well if you come after us for taxes, we'll just lay off people and have no work for them. And supposedly that's good enough for government. But you know they're all in it together.

So we're living in a system today of postindustrial, post-consumerism almost as they've said themselves. The Club of Rome wants to take you backwards, along with all the other... You see, all the other organizations, when you read their manifestoes, when they have actual manifestoes, just like communist manifestoes, they call them that, and you see what their agendas and manifestoes are, and they are ALL pretty well identical. Oh, global warming is going to kill us.

Only it's dropped and it’s climate change now. Before that it was going to be freezing, the world is going to freeze into a big ice ball. Again, because of mankind. Then it was mankind is the problem. So, you gotta get global warming, and once again, you're the problem. You can't win, you understand. They want depopulation. Too many of you. Eugenics program. Now they must convince you to accept it.

Getting back to what I said about religion before in previous talks. Religion was one of the big firewalls, it stopped them coming through and just grabbing you and kill you, you know. Because you had rights that they couldn't intrude upon. You could fight them back. If they use their own terminology of science, well, what good are you anyway, you know. You could say well, God thinks I'm important and special, etc. and life is sacred, yada, yada. You had something to argue back with. And collectively, there was more of you that could actually stand up together and use that. When you have ditched that by the wayside, what are you going to use?

Are you going to start fighting them back with logic? It's going to be their sciences, with their terminology. Whoever creates the terminology creates the direction the dialogue is going to take, and the speech is going to take, and the conversation is going to take, or the argument is going to take.

You see what I'm saying? You've got understand what's going on here. This has been well prepared, and it's no, it's no coincidence it's taken them over 100 years really, since they really started this step of the phase to implement the totalitarian style of it. George Bernard Shaw talked about this in the early 20th century, what I'm talking about now. Rule by experts and scientists would be the way to go. That's what they wanted then. Man and Superman. If you couldn't fix a car, if you couldn't understand the coming mechanization of society, then you're useless, you see. And it took them 100 years, just over 100 years to get to this stage where they've pretty well eradicated religion.

Almost eradicated altogether, especially for the native populations. That's interesting too. I'm talking about Europe, y'know. Because they are the main targets for this. However, the mass migration that's been taking place across Europe, and then sped up because of all the wars, which they knew it would happen, the blowback and the mass migration, and they encouraged the mass migration into Europe too, as you well know. It's no secret. There's even organizations out there boasting about it, how they help to do it, working together.

But the thing is, the people in those, in the Muslim communities for instance, might well be safer from all this than the rest of the atheistic populations. Because they'll still band together when it comes to saying NO. Do you realize that's going to happen? It's quite fascinating to watch it all. And those people who can band together collectively like that and say no to authoritarian tyranny will survive in the long run much better. They'll fare much better than those who are going to do what they're told and become a pincushion for science.

...and for agendas which you best at times not even look into because so much has been spoken about and written about it by those involved over the years. The 20th century, Bertrand Russell was quite open about it. He said, we need a kind of bubonic plague or a black death every generation or two, to help wipe out surplus. Meaning, the useless eaters as he and others called it too. He also said by means of diet, you know, they would alter the diet for the people. Because diet has been used by the British Empire. At one time they knew how much protein to feed plantations. As a science, again. It took them a long time, and a lot of deaths to find out how much you could just give people at an almost starvation diet. But keep the moving and working and lifting, so they weren't too weak to do so. But weak enough that they couldn't think clearly or straight. That was a perfect science. I actually gave talks on that a long, long time ago from history. They can bring it back again the same way.

He also said, by means of diet, he's talking about a modern population, injection, meaning vaccines and so on, and injunction, you see, by laws and rules and regulations, he said, they could achieve their goals by managing and dominating all the lower classes, all the general population actually. So it's... It never went away. You've got to understand, the war never stops. It never stops.

One thing about the US Constitution and so on, and the founders, and there's a lot of questions about many of them too of course, you know. But don't forget that they did say that eternal vigilance, ETERNAL vigilance was necessary for you to keep your freedom. ETERNAL. And it's true, I think somebody else said that the groups of the people who are evil, and who plan and scheme in combinations, meaning groups and cartels and organizations, they never sleep, with their plans, they don't stop, they're always on the go. And planning. And expanding. And creating more groups. And combining themselves with each other.

Until the average person, if they look around them and their world, they'll say, my God, there's thousands of these organizations out there. And you think they're all independent. They're not independent at all. This is literally, as I say, it's a spider’s web with nodes on it basically, they’re all connected. And many of them are, one foundation can create another 500 think tanks quite easily, and a thousand nongovernmental organizations and fund lots more themselves. But the average person, oh, this is the Institute for so on so, or the National Institute for so-and-so, or the national whatever and you think, that's, well that sounds very official. These are private organizations that rule your lives.

Really, since about the 1970s and 1980s when they really got going with the Club of Rome and the World Economic Forum, they all kind of popped out around the same time. That was no coincidence either, in the 1970s, that you've really seen the big changes in the world and the growing demands that agencies, supranational agencies work with government. Well, you had no say in that happening. You understand, this is what, you're now in a completely new, under a new system of goverNANCE. And most of it is unelected. And most of it is private.

We used to call public-private partnerships, as King Prince Charles came out with it, he was one of the fronts to help promote it in a speech years ago, we used to call it fascism... where big corporations and governments work together against the general public, for their own particular good against the public. That's what fascism was supposed to be, that was the earliest and more staid definition of it. And the public couldn't interfere with the big, big businesses and so on. And government would make sure that happened that way. But now we give it a different name and folk can't connect it. Oh, it's a public-private partnership. No, it's fascism, folks. That's what public-private, that's what fascism is.

So the WEF and all these groups, you see, are fascists. Getting back to Professor Carroll Quigley who was quite open about it, being the historian, as well as the tutor, etc. who trained countless bureaucrats to go across the planet on behalf of the US diplomatic corps, etc. and the State Department. He was an elitist, and he made no qualms about it. He also, like the Club of Rome, like all of them, thought democracy was a joke and useless and it just gets in the way of things if folk have rights. You can't get things done. Because folk complain and object and then you might get stalled and put off or even canceled. But if you do it, if you get a real technocratic society, the experts to just get on with it and make the folk accept it, by force if necessary, you see, that's what technocracy really is. Along with putting you all down to energy units, as consumers, and you give up other energies, carbon dioxide, and you've got to pay for it, that's all technocracy. But the technocrats as I say, are the actual supposed experts that get sent in to just make things work without having to answer to the public. Again, it works awfully well with fascism. It is part of fascism.

All governments during wartime are fascistic, as they call it. Because they appoint, go into your histories, Britain appointed a minister who literally, a big businessman who's in charge of all economics really for industry. Canada did the same thing. That's how they do it, like a majordomo, it's just appointed. What he demands he gets very quickly. And nothing stands in the way, no regulations, rules or constitutions or anything else. That's how it's done. That's why they declared this pandemic a war, or a war against the VIRUS, you see. They use that terminology. And, front-line workers, you see, like the troops at the front in the trenches, you see. The only difference is, they didn't dance around in the trenches… unless it was bullets chasing their feet.

So we're living through amazing times with the same organization, way ahead than it's ever been before. Because in the previous pandemics when they went into the same kind of scenarios, oh, you're all going to die, it's going to kill millions, yada, yada, ya. They had all these approved, through their communist type totalitarian... And they work very well together, remember, the Communists, with fascism. Because they believe in the same agenda, really. That's what Quigley said himself. He says, we're often mistaken for communists because we have the same agenda. That's what he said in his own book. So, they can get things really done fast and quick, and terrify you.

They own all the media, the cartels or the fascists. The same media as I've said before, it was totally ignored for years. It got so bad that the regulator ones that used to have some news in it and so on, and it's true, it declined since electronic journalism came in and nobody went to actually visit and get stories anymore, then you end up with electronic journalism and it got worse and worse until we got entertainment as news day in and day out. That's supposedly news. And this phenomenon of stardom where people who used to be looked down upon as rather unworthy, who worked in show business, [Alan chuckles.] suddenly became stars. You make them into stars. You know, what's so-and-so feeling today, and y'know, yada, yada, ya. So that became a substitute for news. What other news they put in their newspapers are literally handouts from organizations and big corporations and so on.

Getting back to the corporations and the World Economic Forum, I've given stacks of talks on that too over many years. Because Quigley himself, Professor Carroll Quigley, who was... And I say it's so, when you say things rather easily people miss it. They've been brought up, you see, again you don't realize you've been brainwashed with TV and drama and movies, and there should be music going boom-boom, boom-boom, boom-boom, boom-boom, boom-boom, boom-boom, and all that kind of thing to make it really horrific and get your blood going and your blood pressure up and your heart beating and pounding. You've been trained that way; I'm not kidding you. So you can hear the most horrible things said today without the music and without flashing lights or menacing figures, and you won't comprehend what, you just dismiss what's being said.

But Carroll Quigley went through it all, the whole agenda of where they want to take the world. As I say, he said he agreed with it. And he said, the world is being set up, this is Tragedy and Hope, his book, he says, to be a new feudal system. I gave the talks on this years ago over and over. A new feudal system, he said. And like the Middle Ages, you see. And it was not Democratic. And he said that the new feudal overlords will be the CEOs of international corporations, big corporations. And that's what you've got.

Now, he didn't make it up. He worked for the biggest group behind all of this. They were called The Establishment at the time. But they're not really. They’re the elite rulers but they rule on behalf of the rulers, put it that way. That's the Council on Foreign Relations, and it's another specialized branch that comes out of them is the Trilateral group, the Trilateral Commission they call themselves, who get into get the job done when democracy stands in the way.

So yeah, he said it, that that's going to be the new feudal system. Well, you're IN it. You're actually IN it, folks. It's going to the next step now of making you simply comply. The last few pandemics fell flat on their face, they got exposed. Even the regular media had to admit it eventually, they had to try and save some credibility and they joined in on the act of pointing out the facts that had been, that always come from the conspiracy theorists first because they're the only guys who are giving any truth. The same thing happened this time too of course with the people saying what was going to happen. Eventually when the media, like a button was pressed, some big top conference and the barons told their staff, get on board, get going with this thing, terrify the public. And they terrified them. Better than any conspiracy theorist could have ever done.

Because the first thing you must do is terrify the people into total panic mode, like Bill Cooper said. That's the first thing. Then start immediately, come out, like 9/11, same thing, the man in the street and the woman in the street is asked when, in every country, the selected ones naturally, probably all planted there for television, would you give up your freedom for security? They had polls on it. It was so monotonous, you heard it everywhere, every radio, every TV station at the time, yada, yada, ya, and newspaper, would you give up your freedoms for security? And the same thing happens again. It's always the same thing.

And you must acquiesce to it, you see. And that's really… SILENCE is giving permission, you're acquiescing, you see, your silence alone, or just your compliance, that's it. That's a legal thing, you see.

And it won't stop. It never stops. So for the first time in history they managed, they MANAGED to terrify them so well. This time they gave a 10-year gap from the last one. I wondered about that too. I've said it before, like last week too I think I mentioned World War I to World War II, they gave about a 20-year gap, just to raise another crop of people, another naïve bunch of guys, you know, to go off for World War II. About a 20-year gap... with fresh, they didn't know the history of the first one and away they went again. That's what they do.

Well, we had the pandemic, the fake pandemic of 2009/10. So they give you really a 10-year gap. Because it fell so BADLY on its face, and did a lot of damage, that you give a 10-year period, put out stacks of movies about Covid, or whatever, and show them these, oh, these outside inflatable tents and so on and people in hazmat suits. And make it entertaining, but terrify them in the movies, stacks of them in a 10-year period. Then you come out supposedly with the real thing.

This time they went right on board with it. It didn't matter what newspaper you look at or new site you looked at, they're all the same. Now, in a truly free society, you would have a few, and if they're all independent news sites, newspapers, I'm talking about the so-called established ones, the ones owned by the big media barons, you know, the official media barons and conglomerates, you would have had a lot of difference in stories and opinions and views on it. Obviously. It didn't happen. They were all the same. Identical. It's gone that way to the present.

Then they come in with the war propaganda, front-line troops. Then you see choreographed nurses, if they even, I don't know if they were nurses or if they brought them in, doing these managed dances, etc. They didn't look terribly overworked to me, or lethargic. And believe you me, if you're in a situation of mass deaths, you would NOT be in the mood for dancing. Really. Because you're going to be affected more than most folk, especially the young people who are working in it, you're NOT going to go out there and start dancing and kicking up your heels and it's all fun. Especially when you're worked off your feet supposedly.

But really, people like me are so used to seeing deception being used in the big, big media. I can remember 9/11, when they showed you the protests supposedly in Iraq and different countries, against America, you see, as they were trying to get up the angst against Iraq, that had nothing to do with 9/11. They've used the same kind of caption, and photographs, against Syria recently. But they used these big meetings, you saw these people just shaking their fists. It was from India and Pakistan they used; you can see the flags in the background. You see, truth doesn't matter to those at the top. They just want to get the impression across on behalf of their masters to get an opinion so that you'll be against whoever's protesting your country. And they used the same thing using a ward in Italy that was really under pandemic and they use the same photograph for the one in New York. That was disgusting! You can’t get any lower than that.

So before this hour’s up, this first hour, I'll just remind you that as I've said before, you'll be lucky to fight back using their battlefield of terminology, and sciences, however pretentious a lot of it actually seems to be at times, according to previous pandemics and the aftermaths of them. The same formula, only this time they've given 10 years, as I say, and massive unified sworn oaths to be on board together. And I mean they've sworn oaths on this, as you do in a war against the people. Just like weapons of mass destruction. I can remember too during Bush Junior's term where he said, if the public ever found out what we'd done, they'll chase us down the street with ropes in their hands.

That's how it's done, they swear. Because otherwise, y'know, you swear together to stand by… the true fasci. That's what you see on either side of the congressional hall in the US is the fasci on either side, a bundle of sticks with an ax in the middle. You all stick together. The people think that it's really, WE are all sticking together. No, it's THEM, it's those who also belong to another society that run your governments, going way back from its foundation. And yeah, that's what you do. You're stronger together. You're bound together. But you're sworn together under oath, that's how they do it. Weapons of mass destruction, weapons of mass destruction, no matter who they ask for interviews, they always parroted the same slogans. Like parrots. And that's good enough supposedly for the public.

The same thing this time too. You're all going to die. You're all going to die. You're all going to die unless, unless, unless. The same kind of thing, give up all your rights and freedoms and do what you're told and obey. To keep safe. And we might have to use force on you to keep you safe. There you go.

They've locked up everybody, for the first time in history, I've said it before, an entire populations across the world, of healthy people, for the first time in history. Some of the top doctors and virologists today and in the past said the worst thing you could do is to lock up the people into their homes because you have to get herd immunity, which is the only way that's EVER worked in the past. Not by vaccination. Even by guys who invented the vaccines, by the way, in the past came out and talked about this. They said herd immunity would come through just exposure to the general public and they're not going to get it all if they're locked up in their homes, you see. It's going against all previous advice and training and teachings from virology of the past. It's a complete reversal of that of course.

It's also a big psychological operation. I've lost, I've got stacks of information on the behavioral teams that are all working with governments across the world. And they're working with each other across the world. There are thousands of them by the way, the actual behaviorists. They in turn oversee, like the 77th Brigade in Britain which is, and I mentioned that a month or two months ago, even last year too and the years before that, where they set up a big unit in Britain of cyber warfare to go after people and to destroy their websites, destroy their talks, destroy everything they put out there. Even put up attacks against them in all kind of like, the old stuff, libel people and so on to get them off and give them a hard time, turn different groups against each other, etc. etc.

This is cyber warfare, a literal... They call it the 77th Brigade in Britain. Well, they're at it again. They oversee a lot of the, they have the behavioral insights teams working with them. They instruct all their attack warriors. And they have thousands. And they've called up thousands in reserve across the world to go after anybody not parroting the authorized version of all of this. Again, it's the first time against the Internet completely, you know, it's unified warfare against all those in the Internet who won't go along with this. It's the first time they've managed it so completely. And your tax money is paying for your own destruction. Isn't that wonderful? As we buy our chains over and over, 'eh. Quite something.

But the public don't know, most of them. You have to forget that too, forget them to an extent because it's not the general public you're going after. Most of the public just sit and watch TV every day, were gone before all this started. They'll always take, I gave talks on this from studies from the big boys themselves, they're always studying us. They admitted years ago that they had no problem with the general population. And the percentage is down pretty accurately who would obey if anything happened and so on. And how to even get the public that were dithering on the edges of something to just tip over onto the side that they wanted you to go to, and how to do it according to the profiles that you have and all the rest of it and how to feed stuff to you that you think was coming from real people, etc., like independent people. This is total warfare.

This is the stuff that Snowden talked about, and before him you had Assange, who's still locked up. Because there's no way, no way they're going to allow, they ever wanted the Internet to have, give freedoms to the public. Do you know how hard it would be for them and their technocratic dreams just to order folk around when folk really believed they had freedom of speech? It wouldn't be too easy. So you must unify opinion. You make it all standardized opinions, you see, and you create consent to be ruled. I went through the talks years ago on the creation of consent. How Bernays came out with it too, and then the Frankfurt school and different groups came out with it and how... And it's all used today in the higher echelons of governance as they call it and it's taught in university, how you manufacture consent.

You're all going to die; you're all going to die! They aim it at different genders too. They have other ones aimed at children, so that even the children would nag their parents into complying and going along with things. Or even turning, become snitches against their parents just like the communists did with the Young Communist League. The Hitler youth too used them. That always happens when you're training a new generation to grow up to be ULTRA, ULTRA fascist, or fascistic as they call it. You must always get the children on your side and make them...

Look at the Antifa movement. During all this too, do you think, how come they are all on board with bringing all the same agendas in for sustainability, no meat-eating, reduced diet, etc., yada, yada, and destruction of any kind of industry, dut-dut-dut-dut? The same things as the WEF have been promoting too. And why would the WEF, the World Economic Forum, with all the big, big businesses, and I gave talks 20 years ago on that because they were the ones then promoting sustainability. Not the ones at the bottom, grassroots. Why would the biggest oil companies be promoting this too, etc.? 'Eh? You gotta start putting things together. And of course all the big Microsoft and IBM and all the rest of them are on board with it too.

A strange thing, that, you just, as I say, it's just like when you become a multibillionaire, you just suddenly become a philanthropist. You just wake up one morning and you see everything exactly the same way as Bill Gates and all the other ones, the big philanthropists, and old Rockefeller used to have. It just hits you and you're on board with the exact same agenda. Depopulation. Abortion across the planet. Sterilization, etc. through foodstuffs and all that. It's just of one of these, it's just a consequence of evolution they'll say, for economic evolution, they're just, it just hits you and you want to, under helping people you really want, as I say, to lower the population and have them obey you and yada, yada, and not breed at all, you see. One of these strange things, that, isn't it, y'know.

Maybe that's when they're creeping up from the base model, the base of the pyramid you say, all the way up. They are all the workers in different levels, that's what the degrees are, each level of bricks. Then the light there and they're looking up and they see the light, and ah, I have seen the light, 'eh. You just say, I'm a philanthropist now and I want to depopulate the world, to help the people and for the world’s sake, you see. Yeah. Yeah, that's what it is really.

Then you have this problem with, you get obsessive-compulsive disorder I think too with it. Because you look at it all and you say, look at the world, it's just so untidy. So untidy. And we could tidy it up, we can get all these people living, scattered out in the countries, throw them inside the city and we'll call it the agenda for the 21st century. Then we'll have segments every 15 years, 2015, 2030, to see how well we're doing with the business plan, you see. Because this is just so untidy. And those folk who live out there, they need vehicles too, and they're driving these ATVs and so on, and they're driving back and forth in these trucks and all that, you see. It's such an awful nuisance. So untidy, isn't it, 'eh? Let's get them off the land and put them in there, put them into the city. Then when a pandemic breaks out, just like say New York City for instance, it will be, they'll be so crammed together it'll all spread like wildfire so fast. I gave talks on this 20 years ago, in the cities, what would come, including the pandemics.

What's their answer to this today? Well, we're going to just skip all the rural areas and not help them at all, 'eh. But they'll give them financing and help them if they're in the cities. So, to encourage them all to get in the cities, where they're definitely going to be more exposed as you crowd more and more and more folk into them, yeah... This is not stupidity folks. It's an agenda. The agenda for the 21st century is for the whole century. All the parts in between, the 2015, 2030, and so on are different segments that they must complete by that time period. So then there will be 2045, etc. and yada, yada, ya.

That's how they work it out, in 20-years plans, 30-year plans, the communist way. And the Communists got it from the League of Nations of course, with their 20-year plans. Of course the United Nations has 20, 40, 50, 100-year plans too. And big businesses do the same thing. Because we are silly little people, you see, we just think very short-term because we don't live that long. We don't have foundations to carry on an agenda we might dream up, that could go on for many generations. Then you could definitely accomplish your ideas, couldn't you? So there we are with it.

Now, I'm going to read a few articles here, just to show you it has happened before. I'll preface it too by saying that anybody who goes against the stream, as you know, is in real time getting pulled off the net, and off YouTube and everything else. Because you're not authorized to say anything at all. ANYTHING at all. You could repeat all the stuff that they're putting out for you to do, keep lockdown, keep safe, keep blah, blah, blah. That's fine. But if you say anything different, any opinion, you'll get pulled. This is complete tyranny. This is real authoritarian tyranny, folks. And it won't go away. If you allow something like this to happen, it will never ever go away.

Now, during their pandemic exercise, the tabletop exercise as they like to call it, and not just the Rockefeller one in 2010, but also the one exercise at Johns Hopkins University. They had the same bunch in from the Rockefellers there too by the way, I do believe. They also had the Bill and Melinda Gates foundation members there as well. And the CDC people that participated too, top virologists, all the ones that eventually came out, all took part in these exercises, of what would happen. They went through it and I'll put the links up to their site and you can download their talks and so on, as they went through that exercise. Right down to steps they would take to curtail any opposing opinions. They have different phases and stages of it too right down to, again, stopping any financing to anybody, make it impossible to live. Then charging them with disinformation. And imprisoning people too. This was all done in the exercise, folks. There's nothing democratic about it.

You see, where's the laws being written down here? What's been shown to the public before it gets through for bills and so on? Because anything that's put even in the so-called pretense democratic nations, you're supposed to see the bills and have your input and complaints to any politician, supposedly, before it proceeds to the next level. Well, they haven't done any of this with any of this stuff at all. This is total tyranny. They're using a pretense of like a wartime measure. Well, no one has invaded us or attacked us. War is for WAR, you know. A pandemic and dealing with pandemics is a different kettle of fish altogether.

What they're bringing in is a whole new way of life. They actually say that, some of the characters at the WEF, they say that, a new way of living, it's on their website. And in all the different green organizations that are funded by the big foundations, that also run the WEF have, are saying the same thing, a new way of life, a new way of living is to come out of this. They're talking about an entirely new way. They're talking about, no, it's not democratic anymore, you'll do what… This is technocracy, you'll do what you're told by experts, you'll obey them, or whatever they tell you to do. And there will be different divisions, healthcare is one of them. You must obey, obey, obey. Or else.

This is complete tyranny. It's the tyranny that Bertrand Russell dreamed of having because he wanted this and he said if there's going to be a tyranny I would much prefer to be and I hope it to be a scientific tyranny, he said. And he said, it will be one of the worst tyrannies that ever existed if it's scientific. And here you are. They're just getting warmed up right now.

They were prepared for all this long before for folk protesting. I really mean this, I've watched them collapse with about three pandemics in the past, and really, you know, have to hide in their holes for a little while. But this one here, this is, they are at war with the world. All these different authoritarian agencies that you don't vote for that are all appointed, many of them are privately owned by the way. I've always been against government farming out any of its responsibilities to private companies. Then you train the children, well these are bona fide agencies, you know. No, they're not. They're not government agencies, they're private agencies. Private.

It's quite something. But here we're going through it all and I wanted to touch on a few things here. Generally I race through a lot of material, and remember I put... I've got to remember, remind you all too that you should as always, and if you haven't done it so far, do it because they’re pulling people off fast now. It's total war against the public. And by the fascistic over rulers, who are overlords who are in control, and they mean business.

So remember to list all the official sites I have @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Look up the sites I have, there's a bunch of them listed on that site and make note of them. If you never hear from me again, hopefully I'll be on one of the other ones, and the alternate sites as well, you already know where to find them and so on. Because they really mean business. The next step of course will be more vicious. Because they really mean business. They are at war. They are at war. They are at war with the general population, that still thinks that they have rights and that they've got democracy. Total war on behalf of their masters above them that literally own the planet as far as they are concerned. That's what it is too.

Now, I'll touch on a few things here. But before I touch on them too, I should really remind myself as well, remember you can send a few bucks my way, hopefully, and keep me ticking over. Because as I say, my websites are used massively, you wouldn't believe it. Don't believe what you read, or you see. I've been shadow banned for years, and they've fudged the figures massively too for years and years and years. Don't believe that. Because the biggest ones of all out there use the sites all the time that I've got for the information that's on them. It's a trove of information down there, believe you me. So you can send a few bucks my way. You can see how to do it @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. You can help me tick along here, hopefully.

Because we're all suffering. We're all suffering as we go through this nonsense of the complete destruction of the economy, which is intended to bring in the new system, right. A new way of living. And austerity. I gave the talks on austerity quite a few years back, I think I was the only person doing them, from the United Nations and all the other organizations affiliated with them, as they would bring in austerity to the people. The only problem they had is HOW to make it happen, how they could bring it in. Well, bingo, here you go. This was one of them and they chose that one, it was the easiest way to do it.

This I've mentioned before, is an article, the start of an article put up by John Pilger. Now, John Pilger has been a lefty, far left I suppose. A real journalist though, for years and years, his whole life. And traveled the world, that went to the hotspots where wars were and risked his life along the way too. So he had guts, you know. But he always goes to the far, far side of everything so a lot of people can't really listen to much of him. But regardless, he documents the big businesses, the big business that uses the third world for their incredible profits using cheap, cheap, cheap labor and resources, etc. Nothing has really changed, except they made China the big majordomo, deliberately. We set China up. It did not set itself up, folks. He mentions a lot of good stuff too. This is one thing that always stuck with me. He says...

The new propaganda is liberal. The new slavery is digital.

johnpilger.com / 14 March 2013

What is modern propaganda? For many, it is the lies of a totalitarian state. In the 1970s, I met Leni Riefenstahl (Alan: I mentioned this before, very impressive, and her life story is pretty impressive too.) and asked her about her epic films that glorified the Nazis. (A: She was hired to do propaganda, really. Very unique, and ahead of its time, filming propaganda, using all the techniques that were available to her at that time in the 1930s. It was revolutionary in a sense the way it was done. It says that here too…) Using revolutionary camera and lighting techniques, she produced a documentary form that mesmerized Germans; her 'Triumph of the Will' cast Hitler's spell. (A: …over the people basically.)

(A: But he met Leni Riefenstahl and asked about that. You shouldn't just judge people without asking, to try to find out what was going on in their heads and in their lives, and everybody's lives around them. That's how you learn. If you've already got a brick wall against them, you'll never learn anything at all, and you're biased already. And I guess she was pretty typical of many people. Of any country by the way. This is the lesson that I'm trying to get across here.)

She told me that the "messages" of her films were dependent not on "orders from above," but on the "submissive void" of the German public. (A: Meaning at that time. The submissive void.) Did that include the liberal, educated bourgeoisie? "Everyone," she said.

(A: So, a submissive void, you see. No one was speaking out or fighting back about anything. Well, what are you seeing today, folks? If you do speak out, mind you, you get hammered. But during the time of Germany, at the time, Germany had been hammered since World War I. Hammered and hammered and hammered and hammered. It was supposed to be paying reparations for the cost of the ENTIRE World War I to every country that participated pretty well. And they had the Great Depression, and they had complete hyperinflation. Horror show. At the same time you had the communists that had already got to Russia, massively infiltrated and organized. That was the first thing you hear with communism was organize, organize, organize. They had organized, tremendously, and they tried to have takeovers and revolutions within Germany. And they had been. The Nazi party would never have arisen if it wasn't for the reparations and starvation level that was for most of the Germans, and the fact that the Communists were making the situation worse. The communist believe they make things worse and worse until people have a revolution, they're ready for it, and then you lead them and then YOU get what you want by using them. The Nazis were having pitched battles in the streets with them. Otherwise there would have been no Hitler at all. There would be no need for someone to start, to come on and be the strongman, the leader, the Fuhrer is called the leader. There would be no need for him, and no one would've followed someone under any other circumstances like that. But there again, so they are beaten down, right, and even the middle classes and the well-educated classes, the professional classes, right, you see, that's what this is. It wasn't from orders, they weren't dependent on orders from above telling them what to do, but on the submissive void of the German public.)

She told me that the "messages" of her films were dependent not on "orders from above," but on the "submissive void" of the German public. Did that include the liberal, educated bourgeoisie? "Everyone," she said.

Today, we prefer to believe that there is no submissive void. "Choice" is ubiquitous. Phones are "platforms" that launch every half-thought. There is Google from outer space if you need it. Caressed like rosary beads, the precious devices are borne heads-down, relentlessly monitored and prioritised. Their dominant theme is the self. Me. My needs. Riefenstahl's submissive void is today's digital slavery.

(A: Well put together that little bit there.)

(A: Then he goes into the new idea of how you can go into it all. The ultimate means of social control is you're wired into everything, and through the airwaves, because it's voluntary. You’re not being forced to use this stuff. But it's addictive. It's meant to be addictive.)

It is the ultimate means of social control because it is voluntary, addictive and shrouded in illusions of personal freedom.

Now it's going to monitor you all of course. It is already monitoring you. And it's not freedom at all. It's a horror show coming along. And folk capitulating just like you wouldn't believe. Because most folk again go through life, even before the digital era, in a trancelike state at times, almost a daydream, so much of their thought is a daydream. In children especially, you can see it in children if they're staring at the TV or something and the mouth is open, and they've got this blank stare on them. Because it's a semi-hypnotic stare you're looking at, that they're under a spell. It's a form of relaxation for the child, if you remember being a child and how you could do that yourself and you realize, where have I been there for the last few minutes, it was kind of nice. That's what it is.

But you go into this stage today, or this state today and you can be put into it quite easily. Most will go through their lives living in fiction, which is soaked up like never before, there's so much of it, in entertainment. And bits and bytes, they got bits and bytes of information that don't really tell you in-depth any particular subject, or anything that's really happening. But you're given what you think is a taste, a whiff of what it's supposed to be about through the headlines, and that's what most folk read, you know.

Why do you think you have pictures of people with the headline? I mean, it's like Justin Trudeau in Canada, why do you need his face next to every topic about what the government is doing? You see, you don't need his face. It's big brother you're seeing, that's the only reason it's there, you know what he looks like already. It's from stock photographs, they could use the same one or one from a group of sittings as they call it, for 100 or 200 stories on whatever Canada is doing or whatever. It's big brother. That's what George Orwell was getting at too. It wasn't just you seeing it plastered all over the streets and so on of big brother and where you lived. You're seeing big brother in your homes all the time when you look at these articles. There's their faces staring at you, you know. You don't need these faces. You really don't.

There's so much of the media you really are unaware of, why it's doing what it's doing. Including, why do you think when they give something about some teenagers are being abused, do you really need a semi-naked girl, it's obviously a model or something, a stock photo of a girl curled up on the floor somewhere and almost naked, to go along with the story? D'you really need that? Of course you don't. It's much more, there's more going on to do with the story than you realize, it isn’t the story. Everything is meant to get a reaction from you, often a different reaction from what you think it's intended to do. Yeah.

But anyway, this is all, I think I'm getting sidelined again. So this is what he's talking about here, the digital slavery that we're in today. And more so than you think.

When you see Canada with Theresa Tam, who by the way is one of the nine heads I think of the board of the WHO, which is a communist organization, it always was. And Mr. Tedros of courses, is known for his part in it too. I knew someone who was the head of that WHO for a little while as well, briefly, personally, who filled me in years ago on part of the agenda. I wasn't quite understanding at the time what it was all about, but I learned, that this person is appointed, appoints themselves to different major boards across the world. That's how the world is run, by these active, you know, technocrats that are changing the world. It's an agenda that you wouldn't like at all. You wouldn't like it whatsoever. Especially if you're a nation, you simply won't like it. It's quite something when you see it happening and you find out who the different people are, different players in it.

It was interesting too that Tam was in a documentary that the CBC talked about years ago, back in about 2010 it was I think, in Outbreak. I'll put the link up if it's still out there yet. You might have to buy the thing.

Outbreak: Anatomy of a Plague (2010) - retn.org/show/outbreak-anatomy-plague / 2010

It was about, it was from a book initially I think and then they did a documentary on it. Tam was asked about how they would track people in an outbreak. She said, well we could use bracelets on them, you know. Well, I'm sorry Ms. Tam, you see, the bracelet is a manacle. You see, that's the symbology of them. I don't care if there's no chain it, it's still an electronic chain. It's a manacle and you put them on slaves, you know. And you don't do that in a democratic society.

This is the same person, Tam, who parroted the same nonsense that came out from the president of China when the West says we've got a slow down the mass migration out of China during this pandemic. And Xi Jinping said it's racist not to allow them in. It had nothing to do with racism, it's pandemic response, this is what you're supposed to do, it doesn't matter who they are. And she parroted him. Why would she parrot him? When she's in Canada?

The people have to start asking, who's serving who? You know. It certainly doesn't seem to be the general public safety that's getting served anywhere. Really. But no, putting electronic manacles on people, no, you don't do that. No. No, no, no, no, no, no. No. And you don't lock up the healthy either. If you're not doing the same thing for other diseases that are deadly, which they're certainly not doing, because they're politicized and the people who are politicizing them have rights, maybe exceptional rights in fact, and you can start grabbing folk because they won't go and get tested or whatever, especially when the testing is so bogus with the results, and I'll touch on them tonight. What I'm saying is all official, and admitted too that this testing, a lot of this stuff is no use at all, these tests kits, giving false positives, false negatives, and some of them were even supposedly contaminated that were brought over from China. This is all stuff that's come out from the authorized media. I'll touch on that tonight.

Here's another one here. Again by John Pilger. Just a touch here. But he did mention the death of Robert Parry.

HOLD THE FRONT PAGE. THE REPORTERS ARE MISSING.

johnpilger.com / 20 Sept 2018

The death of Robert Parry earlier this year felt like a farewell to the age of the reporter.

(A: You've got to remember; we don't get reporters anymore. We get handouts dished out to the big newsagents, or, we still call them agents in news, not newspapers but big sites and companies. They just get handouts, they put them straight in their papers. It's written by experts, as they say, and propaganda they call them as well. I mean, I think it was Bernays changed it eventually, he called them propagandists, and that's what you do. You're spin doctors and you spin information, you see. Now we have, every company today has spokespeople who come out and they're trained in the art of propaganda and putting things across to the general public by spinning it and hiding stuff the public wouldn't like in the spin, or deflecting questions altogether.)

(A: Like politicians are trained to actually, when they get a question that's directed, a direct question to answer, they don't answer the question. You'll notice that all the time. They answer, and you kind of get stunned and say, maybe he didn't hear it right, because the answer he gives back is the one he wished he would have heard. That's what they're trained to do, you wish, I wish they had said this, and they answer it as though they had. And it throws the listener off… but I thought they asked them, you know… You hear that all the time. It's just amazing, how can people, 'eh, really believe that they’re free... especially in the joke of democracy. Come one. COME ON. So yeah, so Robert Parry as I say, was a trailblazer...)

Parry was "a trailblazer for independent journalism", wrote Seymour Hersh, with whom he shared much in common.

Hersh revealed the My Lai massacre in Vietnam and the secret bombing of Cambodia, Parry exposed Iran-Contra, a drugs and gun-running conspiracy that led to the White House.

(A: And it was the CIA that run it. Big. I mean, the CIA run drugs. They always have. They even have movies about it and how much fun it was, you know. But it didn’t stop. No, these things don’t stop. The first rule or law that Mr. Bush demanded they pass over Afghanistan when they invaded Afghanistan, and the troops then now defend them and literally police and patrol and keep safe the poppy fields. He said that they should start to grow the poppy again, start exporting the goods of it. Because the Taliban had stopped it, they forbid it. So you want to liberate them so you can get the poppy fields? And out of that gets, you manage to get heroin. And then flood America with it. And elsewhere. That's the real world. And this is not conspiracy stuff. This is admitted to eventually. We don't even, most folk don't even really care today that it's still happening. They just say, oh well, isn't that normal, you know.)

In 2016, they separately produced compelling evidence that the Assad government in Syria had not used chemical weapons. They were not forgiven.

Driven from the "mainstream", Hersh must publish his work outside the United States. Parry set up his own independent news website Consortium News… (A: …and that’s still going today. There a few well-known people involved in that one today.)

Like it or not it’s up to you but the fact is, you have to go into all sides of everything, and you have real reporters here and there. Don’t dismiss things because of the leanings that they have on any particular thing. You learn bits and pieces from everybody. That’s how… knowledge is scattered, I’ve said it so many times, it’s deliberately scattered.

Now here's an article here, and I mentioned before about Bristol where people had gone into them and there's nobody in Bristol. [Alan chuckles.] It's just the staff walking about, just sitting and staring off into space, nothing much happening.

Bristol's Nightingale Hospital (A: This is a new one.) remains empty a week after opening bristolpost.co.uk / 1 May 2020

(A: They had opened a new one up, but they haven't used it.)

Patient beds at Bristol's Nightingale Hospital are still empty.

The official opening ceremony at the NHS (A: National Health Service.) facility took place on Monday, but it was ready for use last Saturday. (A: …but still nobody’s there.)

No patients have been admitted to any of the 300 beds yet, and health bosses are hoping it will never need to be used at all.

The specialist coronavirus unit will only be used if other South West hospitals run out of capacity and need extra space to cope.

Staff who have been seconded to work there have received training and are ready to treat patients but will only be called in when their services are required.

(A: But it goes into the people who are training them. A lot of them are laid off actually, the staff in the main hospital. LOTS of them are laid off. But yeah, so this is the one that’s specially open and the whole thing for it and nothing, it’s just empty, ‘eh, they don’t need it. And the main hospitals that have been examined before too don't seem overrun either, there's just nothing happening there.)

I saw an interesting article by, it was in the Daily Mail maybe. But it was a woman, a nurse who is training some of the staff I think for this Nightingale Hospital, and they gave of her a photograph where she's much younger with her father. She's now in her mid-30s I think which she's training the staff. But he, here's the tragedy of National Health Services, and Britain has got a terrible reputation for screw ups in the last 20, 30 years maybe, getting worse and worse all the time, as they cut back too mind you, and many other reasons that I won't even go into. But there's a picture with her and her dad, and he died, he just died. Here she is training folk to go into this newer hospital.

But here's the story if you keep digging. You see, you've got to, you say, my God that's terrible, there's the poor nurse and here's her father died and yada, yada. But here's what happened. You keep reading on and it isn't until later on you get a little nugget. Often, they won't even give you the little nuggets of truth or extra, if they want to spin it and just put it right down to Covid. The guy, this guy, the father, who was in his early 70s I think, had developed a high fever. So most folk will cut off there, oh, he got Covid and the whole thing. Keep reading because it tells you that they brought him in and they put him in a Covid ward, you see, where they're treating maybe the few Covid ones that they have. But they put him in the Covid alongside other patients. Then they found out he was negative for it. And that his fever was in response to treatment he had just been given for skin cancer. Okay? So he didn't have the illness. They took him out of there and sent him to another ward, and then after a few days he developed the Covid, because they put him in the ward beforehand that had the Covid patients.

Now, if he was given the anticancer treatments, they lower your immune system. You understand what's happening here with all the things that are going on here? There's so many folk dying they can't even get into hospitals. And then folk who are healthy getting put in the wrong wards and everything. You talk about screw ups. That should never have, that should never ever have happened. And any quack worth his salt should have been on the ball right off the bat and says, any recent treatment, where's his health record and, oh, he's had so-and-so, and clued in right away and not put him into a contaminated ward. That's the sort of thing… Anyway, that's just another tragedy there, a terrible tragedy. And needless, absolutely needless. And he may have had other problems too, probably did. But the thing is, yeah, I mean, if you had cancer treatment and you've already got a fever because of the treatment, um, I'm pretty sure you were wide open, your immune system has been hammered with the treatment and you're wide open for things, you know.

Now you've got this one too…

The CDC is going door to door in metro Atlanta to test residents for antibodies

democraticunderground.net / 29 April 2020

(A: Remember it’s not the Center for Disease elimination, it's for Controlling disease, 'eh. [Alan chuckles.] They control disease. So anyway it says…)

Starting today, health experts visited randomly selected homes in Fulton and DeKalb counties to conduct antibody surveys.

It’s a partnership between the county health boards, Georgia Department of Public Health and Atlanta-based Center for Disease Control and Prevention.

The agencies will have teams visit randomly selected homes through May 4. People will be asked to answer questions and provide a blood sample for antibody tests.

(A: Well, I'd tell them where to go with it. And here's another thing, you should start thinking, people. If you read the other articles, they want to lock down anybody who's testing negative. Huh?! Have you figured that one out yet? ...and keep you in your homes. For your own safety. So, if they're testing for their antibodies, and they're going to find out that you have no antibodies to it, you're definitely going to get brought in by any means possible and used as a pincushion. And maybe then, if you ever develop antibodies, that they'll let you out. This is… You understand where they're going with it all? Can you believe they’re going around door-to-door asking for your blood here? Really. Come ON here! Come on! Ugh. So...)

“We encourage everyone who is visited by the teams to participate in this very important survey that can help public health…

Hm. I wouldn’t go and, if anybody’s going door-to-door with needles, folks, and they had one person in a street, and there's the slightest contamination, on their outer garments or anywhere, blah blah blah, y'know, and now they're going to take a syringe and put it into you, if they picked up anything along the way there then they're putting it into you. For goodness sake! How come they can come up and take blood off you, without the social distancing as they call it, they can do that... Like, it's just a priesthood, they're holy, you see, they're authorized to be holy, and I guess that just dispels the virus in their vicinity… like a force shield around them or something, 'eh.

I saw the same thing when you saw them sticking their arms through windows with their protective gear on, 'eh. [Alan chuckles.] But that protective gear isn't getting changed with every car that drives through. Maybe the gloves will. But it's a long sleeves and everything else. This stuff isn't just stuck unto clothing, 'eh! It wafts off too with any little breath or wind or whatever [Alan chuckles.] and onto whatever else is next to it. This is incredible what we're witnessing here. It's really something. Yep.

Getting back to Ms. Tam with her bracelets and stuff for tracking and all the rest of it. Electronic bracelets, 'eh. Nevermind all the other apps they want you to take too to monitor you, yada, yada. But it's the same thing there with the bracelets. I mean, why not just give you a bell around your neck like leprosy, like they used to do in the Middle Ages. This is the same stigmatizing of segments of society. This is what this IS, folks.

The behaviorists teams are working hard to stigmatize certain... Oh, my God, you know. It's almost like you're an anti-Semite or a Holocaust denier, or anti-Vaxxer, yada. All these anti-, anti- things they come out with. That they've already trained the public to recoil when they hear the words. And they keep adapting them and adopting them into new terms as they stigmatize segments of society here. That's what it is. That's what Fascism always does, you stigmatize different segments of society that won't comply or give in to you. Standard stuff. But yeah, just put a bell around their necks you know, and they can go BEWARE... BEWARE... Clang-clang. BEWARE... Y'know? Yep. There ya go. Bracelets, 'eh? Manacles. N-n-n. And you haven't committed any crime, 'eh. And yet they'll say you have committed a crime because you broke quarantine. Well, where is the law? Where was the debate? Where was the public input for the bill to get passed and the whole thing? You're accepting these news rules as laws. And you'll never get rid of them.

Chicago launches new Covid app that could help with vaccine rollout

bizjournals.com / 28 April 2020

(A: Oh, it could help. You see, it's not a manacle, and it's not something that's going to track and trace you, you see, just for that reason. It's going to HELP you. Help you. Getting back to soldiers. It's like soldiers that I mentioned earlier, they call them peacekeepers. Orwellian, you see. What do you mean peacekeepers? They're warriors. If they've got guns and they've got ammunition and they've got grenades, and knives and so on and bayonets, they're soldiers that are meant to be used against people in war. They don't go around handing out bread. You see? So you call them peacekeepers to muddy the reality. Oh, they're there just to keep the peace, they're not invading countries, no, they're here to keep the peace. Same thing. If it walks like a duck, quacks like a duck and goes bang like a duck, it's definitely a military duck! So here's the app, as I say.)

A new app launched by the City of Chicago looks to better communicate with residents suffering with Covid-19 symptoms, (A: Most folk don’t suffer at all from it.) and it could help Chicagoans access a vaccine once it becomes available.

(A: So if you get the app, you see, your name is first down, you're going to be one of the first ones to get a new vaccine, as a trial, you're a guinea pig, you see.)

Mayor Lori Lightfoot, (A: This is quite… [Alan chuckles.] because they've had al little bits up on the news about it, Mayor Lori Lightfoot…) along with Allison Arwady, the commissioner of the Chicago Department of Public Health (CDPH),

(A: Arwady is quite amazing, she goes on and she waves her hands a lot like Bill Gates. I guess they all go to the same structures and communications experts to wave their hands a lot and look excited and happy, like it's wonderful, as she'll rush you into just accepting a vaccine, you see. Because she's got millions of syringes ready, for everybody, you see, without, and absolutely no touch, there's no touching at all on any possibility of anyone refusing it, you see. This doesn't look too good, does it, in a free society?)

(A: So there you go; it will help you be on the list when one becomes available. I guess it will go off, and if you don't go and get your shot, you see it's the same as China, you'll eventually have to show that in the stores, that App will be blue and green or whatever it is, or red. If it goes red and you haven't got your shot, then you'll be refused access to the stores and it will automatically phone the police to pick you up and drag you off. It's the same apps as they're using in China, folks, with different names of them. [Alan chuckles.])

(A: Can't buy or sell, 'eh?)

(A: Anyway here's the, and this is what it's called, the Chi, I don't know if it's for Chinese or whatever it is...)

The Chi Covid Coach app allows residents to get text messages that are tailored to their symptoms, (A: …tailored to your symptoms…) along with information on when and where to seek medical care. (A: My, you couldn't find that out for yourself, thank goodness that app's going to tell you.) Users can also receive alerts on locations and times (A: …and here’s the thing, folks, again here’s the bell for the lepers around the neck, you see…) when Covid-19 testing is available, and it provides daily check-ins to monitor the well-being of residents who’ve tested positive for the coronavirus.

(A: But it also, what it also does is to alert the user if you've been in the vicinity of folk who have been, who they know are carriers. STIGMA. Stigmatization. Stigma. Stigma. Stigma. You see, there you go. The trick of the elect, electric, 'eh. Couldn't do without it, could you? Hm. So there you go. And of course Google has got a big hand in it and another company too. Big Google, the big Alphabet agency grouping that's totally CIA, MI6 from the beginning. And they do own huge corporations, real corporations. They all do, the military-industrial complex. There ya go. And by God it says…)

The city says registration is free (A: Oh well, then, ‘eh.) and is “protected and only used by CDPH for public health purposes related to Covid-19.”

(A: You can believe them, ‘eh. [Alan laughing.] So anyway…)

The app, which was built in partnership with Google (Nasdaq: GOOG) and IT company MTX, will be used to collect data about the virus’ spread and those that are seeking care (A: …blah, blah, blah, blah, blah. Yeah, it's all to do with help, help, help, you see that word everywhere, helping, helping. Yeah.)

The 77th Brigade again, I told you, the one, the big, big cyber units they've got for hammering anybody for warfare, and it's all you folks if you think for yourselves and if you DARE speak, you know, for yourself. 77th Brigade, that's what they call it…

77 Brigade: Is British Military Waging an Information War on Its Own Population?

(A: No, they’d never do that. Not Britain. No, land of the free and all that, and liberty. And Britain will never ever, you know, let there be slaves and stuff like that. Yep, it’s all in the songs, ‘eh.)

21stcenturywire.com / 29 April 2020

Last Wednesday, during the daily UK Government Coronavirus livestream, (A: …right, and it’s got the link to it.) the head of the British Army, General Sir Nick Carter, bragged:

(A: This is what he said, right, on the daily TV show I guess it was…)

We’ve been involved with the Cabinet Office Rapid Response Unit, with our 77th Brigade helping to quash rumours from misinformation, but also to counter disinformation. Between three and four thousand of our people have been involved, with around twenty thousand available the whole time at high readiness.

(A: So they’ve got 24,000 altogether really on the go. If you wonder, with all these fake things that you’re going to get hammered with, the stories with nasty things, it’s all from these different little… I wouldn’t even, I don’t want to say the word on it. [Alan chuckles.] But you know what they are. They get paid to hammer their fellow people. Unfortunately, in totalitarian societies they do pay these characters well. That’s what Stalin said, the same thing. He said, we always pay our teachers, our police and our military very well. Very important.)

To understand the implications of this statement, we have to go back to 2018, when Carter gave a speech to the Royal United Services Institute.

“In our 77th Brigade,” he said, “… we have got some remarkable talent when it comes to social media, production design, and indeed Arabic poetry. Those sorts of skills we can’t afford to retain in the Regular component but they are the means of us delivering capability in a much more imaginative way than we might have been able to do in the past.”

77th Brigade

Previously known as the ‘Security Assistance Group’, 77th Brigade was stood up in 2015 as part of ‘Army 2020’. The Security Assistance Group had been established following the amalgamation of the Media Operations Group, (A: You see? Ha, ha!) 15 Psychological Operations Group, (A: Are you hearing me here? This is official, right. What I’m reading here is official from their own stuff. I’ll say it again for the hard of thinking. It says…)

The Security Assistance Group had been established following the amalgamation of the Media Operations Group, 15 Psychological Operations Group, Security Capacity Building Team, and the Military Stabilisation and Support Group.

77th Brigade is described on their website (A: They’ve got the link there for that too.) as being about ‘information and outreach’. But what does that mean? General Carter again:

We also, though, need to continue to improve our ability to fight on this new battlefield, and I think it’s important that we build on the excellent foundation we’ve created for Information Warfare through our 77th Brigade, which is now giving us the capability to compete in the war of narratives at the tactical level. [Emphasis mine]

(A: There ya go. Yep.)

It is in this context, then, that Carter’s words from last week’s livestream should be viewed. Carter has acknowledged that the British military is waging war on a section of its own population.

(A: And also outside, including Canada and Australia by the way.)

‘Rapid Response Unit’

Carter mentioned working with the Cabinet Office’s ‘Rapid Response Unit’. (A: The link is here too.) Established in April 2018 and also known as the ‘fake news unit’, the Rapid Response Unit was given an initial six months’ funding. It brought together a “team of analysts, data scientists and media and digital experts,” armed with cutting-edge software, to “work round the clock to monitor online breaking news stories and social media discussion.”

(A: That’s all the chitchat about you lot. And they can intercede and hit you with sock puppets and crash you if they want to. Or shame you... You’ll think, oh, the folk hate me, my God, yada, yada, ya. This is your free society, ‘eh.)

According to the RRU’s head, Alex Aiken:

The unit’s round the clock monitoring service has identified several stories of concern during the pilot, ranging from the chemical weapons attack in Syria to domestic stories relating to the NHS and crime.

For example, following the Syria airstrikes, the unit identified that a number of false narratives from alternative news sources were gaining traction online. These “alt-news” sources are biased and rely on sensationalism rather than facts to pique readers’ interest.

(A: In other words, when you realize that your countries are setting up, or keep hammering Syria, and with fake stories in order to bomb them, they go after you. As in total warfare.)

Due to the way that search engine algorithms work, when people searched for information on the strikes, these unreliable sources were appearing above official UK government information. (A: That’s because [Alan chuckles.] no one believes you, the government information.) In fact, no government information was appearing on the first 15 pages of Google results. We know that search is an excellent indicator of intention. It can reflect bias in information received from elsewhere.

(A: Yeah, it’s astonishing how the public want to know the truth, ‘eh, rather than just get their biased information from the military, that obviously is always into information warfare and propaganda, and demonizing an enemy or potential enemy. They don’t want anybody asking people questions, like, why are we doing this?)

The unit therefore ensured those using search terms that indicated bias – such as ‘false flag’ (A: …right. The term, this is all terminology and so on.) – were presented with factual information on the UK’s response. The RRU improved the ranking from below 200 to number 1 within a matter of hours.

(A: So, there you go, they can do it to anything on the Internet.)

The Rapid Response Unit was given permanent funding in February 2019.

Three months following the establishment of the Rapid Response Unit, Theresa May attended the G7 summit in Quebec, Canada.

There she announced the establishment of “a new Rapid Response Mechanism“, following Britain’s proposal for “a new, more formalised approach to tackling foreign interference across the G7” at the G7 Foreign Minister’s meeting the previous month.

(A: It’s never ending, ‘eh? Never ending.)

I can remember the war, before it started, for the Internet a long time ago. And I wasn’t on it, you know. I knew it was for, it was going to collect all your data and it was for profiling you and keeping, like daily accurate information on all of you and updating it. And you'd help it update by putting all the information out there yourself, and you add it to the virtual you. I did the stories too where the Pentagon was admitting to using wargames on you, virtual you's. By collecting all the data on you they'd have you in a war situation, or social situation with conflicts in the social settings. It was all done virtually to see how you would respond. They said it was pretty accurate. They believe that's how you would respond if these things happened in real life. That's your free society for you. You buy your chains and you buy, you gladly go on the web, 'eh. You know? It's quite amazing. The web, 'eh. You get stuck on the web. And along comes a big spider and gobbles you up. Quite something. The black widow.

I remember doing the talks a long time ago on the black widow spiders. Massive sculptures they put up at the Hague, you know, the World Court they call it, the Hague for the United Nations. It's this massive thing, and underneath it that it's got what's supposed to be the female black widow spider ready to lay eggs. This is the kind of monstrosities they put up at their world agencies there. Very occultic, and it's meant for their own groupings to understand, etc. N-n-n.

The folk have no idea what they're living in it all. They really, really don't. We live in the artificial realities as far as our conditioning goes. And its daily conditioning. I went through predictive programming where we're literally prepared for everything they've planned for us. We get used to the idea through fiction, then it comes into reality, and we just adapt quite easily into it thinking it's inevitable and natural.

So that's the article here. This goes on too, it's quite a long article here. And how this rapid response unit works with the Cabinet Office, and they go after all, what they… any unauthorized news that's against their world agenda, they'll hammer you and call you fake obviously, and so on. Now they're using it for the Corona thing big time. And of course with the established Google, and with Facebook and all the rest of them, all the big ones, at the test that they did, remember, admitted that for the Covid coming along, if it ever did, and here it is. They'll admit it that they've got all the big social media giants on board with them, already, before it happened, right. Almost as though they were expecting it. Just a coincidence of course.

Then you've got…

Apple And Google Are Releasing The Early Versions Of Their Joint Contact Tracing Tool To Developers.

techtelegraph.co.uk / 29 April 2020

(A: And we're all throwing… Again, it's all our money, our tax money that's getting thrown at these corporations, 'eh. Public-private fascism. So…)

(Reuters) – Apple Inc and Alphabet Inc's Google would release two early versions this week of their proposed technology to slow coronavirus spread to select developers for testing purposes, the companies said on Wednesday.

(A: It's going to slow the virus, hm? M-hm. How they worship things they make with their own hands, 'eh.)

The two Silicon Valley companies, whose operating systems power 99% of the world's smartphones, had said earlier this month that they would work together to create contact tracing technology to slow the virus spread by allowing users to opt into logging other phones they have been near.

(A: You see, there again they're using your own phones, that you pay for and everything else, to snoop on other people. And then too, maybe even snoop on you, you see, which they're already doing anyway.)

The rare collaboration is expected to accelerate usage of apps that aim to get potentially infected individuals into testing or quarantine more quickly and reliably than existing systems in much of the world.

You know what it reminds me of? It reminds me of The Body Snatchers. The one that Donald Sutherland was in. Halfway through he teams up with the woman and they managed to avoid these creatures that look like people, but they're actually kind of, they've been, they're fake people, they're aliens born from pods. They escape and escape, and they get separated at one point. The whole point is never to look startled or stunned, and when you're walking in the streets look like you're one of them and just have this bland blank expression, your bland expression on your face. The woman sees Donald Sutherland across the street, and he sees her, and she starts walking towards him and puts a smile on her face. He immediately, like all the other ones when you've been taken over with the fake one, you see, they point at you and give out the shrieking sound out of your mouth, a big loud expression… aaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaachhhh. And that's what happened. Well, that's what they're using your phones for, you know, so you can all point at people, ooooooooooooooh, look, look! Stigmatize. Stigmatize. Stigmatize. That's what you do. Until you are all, ALL going to conform. That's what it's about. This is not… This is not freedom. This is not freedom at all. And it's not even science by the way.

Video: US Coronavirus 'Bailout' Scam Is $6 Trillion Giveaway to Wall St – Economist Michael Hudson Explains

globalresearch.ca / 30 April 2020

(A: It's in different parts, this talk here, about the global economy and so on. It says…)

Facing the Covid-19 pandemic, the US Congress rammed through the CARES Act — which economist Michael Hudson explains is not a "bailout" (A: …as they call it.) but a massive, $6 trillion giveaway to Wall Street, banks, large corporations, and stockholders.

The same big corporations by the way, that are part of the World Economic Forum that are sworn to change society. It's all preplanned, they're all on board with the same agenda, it doesn't matter what their name is, including the Club of Rome and the World Bank and all the rest of them. So this is for those who want to get into the money system. The money's always been a racket, but it just gets worse and worse as they pull this… the big… few... very little to the public of course, to go along with. It's meant that way. But the money is totally unaccountable, to the ones that are giving it. They just, you know, there's nothing asked for the big corporations. We've seen this before. We've seen it all before.

Then you go into the meatless society. I've given so many talks about this, and about the people who have been promoted, the vegan society. On behalf of, it's the same group by the way, and the same groups that are demanding you accept the climate change agenda, and you go into carbon taxes, and depopulation, and complete austerity, and postindustrial societies. These are all authorized big foundations, or foundations that fund all the NGOs, nongovernmental organizations. And you become vegan. I've done it all before, so again it's like boring to me as I watch them push it along. Going back even to January...

Beyond Meat and McDonald’s expand Canadian plant-based burger test

thestar.com / 8 Jan 2020

(A: Just coincidence of course they did all that, at the beginning. It says…),

Fifty-two restaurants in southwestern Ontario will now serve the “P.L.T.” sandwiches — plant, lettuce and tomato that feature Beyond Meat’s pea-based patties — for 12 weeks starting Jan. 14.

(A: I don't know if you've looked at the [Alan chuckles.] list of chemicals they add to make it taste like meat. [Alan chuckles.] It's just horrific. I wouldn't eat it. It says…)

The test will include 27 new locations, while three restaurants in Sarnia in the original trial will be removing the P.L.T. from their menus, McDonald’s told Bloomberg in an email

It goes on and on and on. And Bill Gates by the way has a patent on one of the burgers. I mentioned that last week, I put the link up too. Remember on my own site you'll find the links of the topics I put out. So I'm not making this stuff up, it's from authorized sources so they can't say I'm a conspiracy theorist. Here's another one…

Cargill meat packing plant closure: COVID-19 outbreak among foreign workers tops 500 cases

rebelnews.com / 23 April 2020

(A: Quite something, 'eh. Even that one’s interesting, you know. They're all pretty interesting when you go into it.)

Alberta's Chief Medical Officer Dr. Deena Hinshaw has spoken about the company's employees repeatedly at her press briefings. The top doctor has identified poor living standards and carpooling as leading causes of viral spread. The staff working at Cargill are largely Temporary Foreign Workers.

(A: Justin Trudeau passed, I don't know, a resolution, I don't know if it was a law... They don't need laws anymore, you just state what you... You just dictate I guess and that's it. But amongst all the stopping, supposedly stopping, which is a joke too, of planes coming in and out, they're still coming in and out from all these different countries at the main airports. However, they can still bring in the temporary foreign workers, and it says essential, these are essential occupations. So that's who staffs mainly these meatpacking plants, with temporary foreign workers, from Mexico. It says…)

It is not as if the TFWs are being paid a slave wage; Cargill pays its staff competitively. The issue is how the TFWs (A: …temporary foreign workers.) live while they're in Canada. Even after officials demanded social distancing, workers would still come to work in cramped cars, carpooling from the south end of Calgary. Their living conditions are also close quarters.

Temporary Foreign Workers sending money back home

(A: So, there you go. Yeah, so Trudeau says…)

Justin Trudeau has set up a special program for Temporary Foreign Workers, (A: The link is here too.) letting them come to Canada even after the borders were recently closed.

They’re essential workers, ‘eh. There ya go. They get paid good money, and they could, yeah, Canadians would get it if they would advertise them, you know. Yeah, there's a lot going on that folk just never figure out. It's just something else.

This article here too is this next one, is from the Washington Times and it says here…

Coronavirus hype is the biggest political hoax in history

WashingtonTimes.com / 28 April 2020

The response to the coronavirus is hyped. And in time, this hype will be revealed as politically hoaxed.

In fact, COVID-19 will go down as one of the political world’s biggest, most shamefully overblown, overhyped, overly and irrationally inflated and outright deceptively flawed responses to a health matter in American history, one that was carried largely on the lips of medical professionals who have no business running a national economy or government.

(A: And that’s true, that part is true, ‘eh. What’s changed, ‘eh?)

In the words of Dan Erickson and Artin Massih, doctors and co-owners of Accelerated Urgent Care in Bakersfield, California: Let’s get the country reopened — and now.

(A: These are the guys that were hauled off YouTube. Lots of other folk too are getting hauled off now as we speak, by our, by the different military organizations and all the little sellout pieces of you know what, that are destroying the Internet. Under the guise of keeping us safe, again.)

The data to keep America closed and Americans closed in simply doesn’t exist.

If truth be told, it’s questionable it ever did.

The scientists leading the coronavirus shutdown charge predicted in March that in America, between 100,000 and 250,000 would die. They based those estimates on computer modeling.

(A: …not on reality. Just like the climate modeling, same thing. And so far, it’s about 60,000 I think had died in the US. Which is actually lower, because there’s an organization, an official organization that takes the annual deaths of different countries and we’re actually lower than we were about a year or two years ago where we lost about 85,000 to a flu.)

But facts don’t matter when there’s a huge agenda at work. I hope you understand that. And these folk at the top are ruthless. Completely on board with this. They're enjoying this power. They're getting incredible money for enjoying their power. They're not going to give this up easily at all. Not at all. N-n-n. And to change the whole world, since the climate scam just didn't pan out and folk weren’t listening to them, at the WEF they said that, we need something else to happen. Well, bingo, the same WEF has got a whole new way of living, and all the big corporations are on board with it, and all these institutions, these private organizations that are grafted onto governments are all on board with it too.

This article here too is…

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES Office of the Secretary Vax Damage Immunity

phe.gov

SUMMARY: The Secretary is issuing this Declaration pursuant to section 319F-3 of the Public Health Service Act (A: …yada, ya, the US…) (42 U.S.C. 247d-6d) to provide liability immunity for activities related to medical countermeasures against COVID-19.

(A: Again, I think that went back to Ronald Reagan when they first gave vaccine companies immunity against killing the folk with their vaccines or maiming them. Because of the incredible thing that happened in the 70s when they came out with the fake swine flu and started inoculating and vaccinating people. It was, oh, thousands got paralysis of different kinds from it too. They never recovered. And the Guillain Barre syndrome came out too, with deep pains in the muscles attached to the skeletal tissue and so on and tendons. For life, you know. So, they passed a law, they got the government to, because they're fascists you see, your government is fascist, and they do what they're told. And they are selected to be fascists. You don't really vote them. You're given A, B, C, D, E fascist to vote for. I don't care what party they pretend to belong to; they all serve the same masters. It's all evident for goodness sake. And then when you get poisoned with the vaccines, or you die with it, then they're immune to it, you can't sue them, you see. No one else has this kind of power, you see. But yeah, so much for the public, we the people. [Alan chuckles.] WE the people. [Alan chuckles.] So there you go...)

The Declaration is effective as of February 4, 2020.

(A: That's what of course they said they were going to throw all the money at, and they did it, all the vaccine companies, just get something out there and…)

(A: Something that folk have forgotten, and I listen to and I go through all the boring stuff with a fine-tooth comb that most folk don't go through. And I don't believe in the politics, they're all fronts, I don't care who they are. They might get little leeway one way or another on certain areas, but they must obey their master at the top. You saw people, oh, Trump, Trump, Trump, because he said a few things that folk... Because folk were so ticked off with the previous parties, it was so corrupt and obviously corrupt, and the same wars went on and on and on and on. That's what Jefferson said, know your under tyranny when you see the same agendas continue when the parties change in the house. That's been going on for your whole life long. The same wars, continuations.)

(A: I remember when Obama took over from the Bushes, and then Donald Rumsfeld, the PNAC member too along with Cheney and all the rest of them, congratulated Obama for continuing, and expanding, the same wars. Then he continues again, they tried to get it going really under Trump and Trump just got out there… They're trying to save a bit of face because they probably were pretty well woken to what was going on with the real intention of these wars. It wasn't just to grab oil, and it wasn't just you… There was another thing, which we daren't speak about. But the fact is, folk were getting ticked off with it, when you're GDP, a lot of it was going towards this continuing war in the Middle East, and across Afghanistan in different places. And as you go down the tubes financially at home. I mean, it was stagnant.)

(A: And in a service economy, now that they've given all the trade to China and all the business, all the manufacturing to China. They knew you would get to this stagnant stage when they first came up with the GATT treaty for China and signed them on. We gave them, we paid for factories to get moved TO China and set up. We pay to import the stuff from China, because do you really think that little thing you just ordered from China, literally, that was a 25 cents postage all the way to you? No. YOU pay it by your taxes in America. The same in Canada. That's part of the free-trade deal, for emerging countries they call it. The same in India now.)

(A: But yeah, I read this stuff. I remember Donald Trump and I says yeah, he'll get in because obviously the folk are so fed up, not that you'd believe he'd ever do any of it but fed up with the ongoing wars and so on. I listened to his speeches. And his speeches are all much the same of who he favors and who he doesn't favor. But at the very first one, when he was running, before he got in, he said, I'll put forward bills, so that the pharmacological companies and vaccine companies, he said, can rush ahead and bypass many of the testing procedures to get medicines quicker to the public to help the public. Well, it's almost… Do you really… No, he didn't write this stuff himself. They don't write their own scripts, folks. But we know who his script writer is, who is well-informed indeed. I'm sure they always knew where they were going to go with all this stuff. Hm? And they can just bypass the human testing and, you know, yada, yada, ya. It's just... I don't believe in coincidences. Especially when you keep tripping over them every step you take. You have to start asking questions then, don't you? So here you go with the act as I say.)

(Public Readiness and Emergency Preparedness Act - phe.gov)

The Public Readiness and Emergency Preparedness Act (PREP Act) authorizes the Secretary of Health and Human Services (the Secretary) to issue a Declaration to provide liability immunity to certain individuals and entities (Covered Persons) (A: ...very important, covered persons. Because you really are nobody, unless you're a person, you see.) against any claim of loss caused by, arising out of, relating to, or resulting from the manufacture, distribution, administration, or use of medical countermeasures (Covered Countermeasures), except for claims involving “willful misconduct” as defined in the PREP Act. This Declaration is subject to amendment as circumstances warrant.

The PREP Act was enacted on December 30, 2005, (A: That far back.) as Public Law 109-148, Division C, Section 2. It amended the Public Health Service (PHS) Act…

...which went back way before that. So they keep amending it to give themselves more immunity from any... Because the government that... the US government had to dish out millions and millions after paralyzing so many folk after the first swine flu one in the 1970s. Terrible.

Delaying herd immunity is costing lives

spiked-online.com / 29 April 2020

(A: This is from the Spiked website. Which is an authorized website.)

Climate scientists are frustrated by people who do not believe in climate change. In epidemiology, our frustration is with anti-vaxxers. Most anti-vaxxers (A: Again, that a stigmatization.) are highly educated but still argue against vaccination.

I'll continue with Spiked magazine here, this local magazine, I don't know if they call it that or not. But it's a news site basically, under science, etc. But they say here, here's where they go with it. They're fed up with people who are not getting herd immunity, you see. So maybe they should let the younger folk out to get to acquire it. Hm. But this is what they're all saying at the top now, since older folk have a harder time with this if they catch it, it says, maybe they should keep the older folk from the 50 years old inside, keep them locked down. Really? You know, even the terms, locked down, that's what used in prisons, 'eh. Do you understand this?

Do you understand this, when even the statistics from the, again, the professionals, their own one's that they're trying to fudge here and there and all the rest of it and pad with every kind of illness there is, or symptom there is, which again is not a conspiracy theory, it's been found that they're doing it. They admit it. Even Dr. Birx admitted that. So they're padding it all and now they want to start locking, going for the older folk, you know. The stigmatized group is the older folk, you see. Oh my God, he's an old person there with a bell around their neck, and a bracelet on their arms, oh my God, you know. Get away, beware, beware, make way, make room, ooooo, ooooo. There ya go, by your new masters who have NO, no, no concept at all of this term called democracy and freedom. Yeah, they want to lock down the older folk longer.

Another one too…

Dr. Fauci Backed Controversial Wuhan Lab With Millions Of U.S. Dollars For Risky Coronavirus

Research

newsweek.com / 28 April 2020

(A: That's Newsweek. Which still isn't a conspiracy site, I don't think, so I'm allowed to say this.)

Anthony Fauci is an adviser to President Donald Trump and something of an American folk hero (A: I don’t, I wouldn’t say that. I know way more about him.) for his steady, calm leadership during the pandemic crisis. At least one poll shows that Americans trust Fauci (A: They don’t know him. Do you know him? Of course, you don’t know him. How can you trust the man?)

(A: And by the way, do you know he also merged his NIAID, National Institute for Allergy and Infectious Diseases, they are in bed with one of the bioweapons labs, Fort Dietrich. I've got the article here. It went back years. I was just reading through, as I do, all this trivia and boring stuff. There's an article from the Fort Dietrich area and they're mentioning that they had a ceremony there because they were merging the two things together to an extent to work on certain projects. Quite an interesting little tidbit. But I'm not surprised at all.)

(Dr. Fauci pointed out that NIAID plans to partner with USAMRIID in bioterrorism research. p3 - ncifrederick.cancer.gov / Nov 2003)

(A: Personally, this is my opinion, right, this is my opinion. You understand, when you're dealing with... When you're dealing... Biowarfare is an old, old concept, an old institution of military going back to even Roman times, when they used to put dead bodies over the walls by using the big catapults. It progressed from there. With the scientific age as they call it, they got better at it, then they decided, the more they learn, then they can make better things to kill folk. And that's what it is.)

(A: Then they had the bioweapons treaty, yeah, it's biowarfare weapons treaty, and you know that Mr. Boyle was involved in drafting that up to try to stop them or restrict them from going ahead with it. They'll signed onto it, but they continued anyway. By this time, we're not making the diseases, we're actually making diseases in case they develop by themselves so we're ready for them. So, through their gain of function, it's the same thing, it's exactly the same thing, these bio labs. [Alan chuckles.] They're bio health labs, right. They take things that are fairly harmless and then, well, one day this could just, just evolve by itself and then jump to humans, so we'll make it happen in the laboratory and that way we'll understand it better when it does the jump.)

(A: Well, it probably would never do the jump, you see. And for years and years we've had things jumping, and they tell us it just happened by itself. It doesn't happen just like that by itself. Not, we've had so many in the last, oh, 20 years especially, maybe 30 years. And we know that they've been heavily involved with the gain of function that are produced by laboratories, just in case, you see, we're ahead of the game and we're ready to work with it and they'll understand it. Well how come they don't have the cures for it? Well, they do. Because in biowarfare, and it's the same thing with gain of function, they're supposed to have antidotes to every step of change. Anything that they change, for every step they must have something to counter it, folks. I just thought I'd mention that, you know. So anyway...)

But just last year, the National Institute for Allergy and Infectious Diseases, the organization led by Dr. Fauci, funded scientists at the Wuhan Institute of Virology and other institutions for work on gain-of-function research on bat coronaviruses.

(A: I put up the articles last week too and the week before and the week before, about that. I put the links up remember @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. A lot of their sites don't even have the room to put up the stuff I'm putting up, that use my stuff, you know. That's okay. But if you want to have the actual links you should go into my talks because they're all listed there with all the links on it that can verify what I'm saying. I don't make this stuff up. I don't guess at things either. You don't really have to guess that things anymore, it's really in-your-face. It's rather overwhelming. It's self-evident and admitted to. But it's all for your own good. So, it says here…)

In 2019, with the backing of NIAID, the National Institutes of Health committed $3.7 million… bringing the total to $7.4 million.

That's the total too they gave to that. And their own scientists go back and forth as well by the way. It's a merry-go-round with the workers that are affiliated with the WHO. They're awfully good at making things that are terribly disease causing, you know, like... I mentioned that one too, I did the talk by Dr. Lipsitch, a Harvard specialist in that area, who gives instructions and he trains students in the area of biochemistry, etc. In one of the talks I put out, the link to YouTube. I don't know if it's been pulled yet or not. He's instructing students in the class and the title was something like, should we be making potentially deadly pandemic causing diseases in the lab? That was the title of it.

Marc Lipsitch--Should we be making potential pandemic pathogens in the lab? - youtube.com / 24 Feb 2016

This is what they do, folks. They're not finding them in nature, you see. For whatever they find in nature, they intensify it. And then they give each other rewards. Look what I did, I made this jump from this to this and this, and now it can jump to humans. If it ever did, my God, at least we're ready for it now. Yeesh. And they pretend... Come on, this is biowarfare, that's the only reason it has. And that Boyle was quite right about that. That's the only reason they have.

Absolutely.

Here we are here now, another one…

Fort Detrick lab shut down after failed safety inspection; all research halted indefinitely

fredericknewspost.com / 2 Aug 2019

All research at a Fort Detrick laboratory that handles high-level disease-causing material, such as Ebola, is on hold indefinitely after the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention found the organization failed to meet biosafety standards.

No infectious pathogens, or disease-causing material, have been found outside authorized areas (A: Well, that's what they're saying, that's what they tell the public anyway.) at the U.S. Army Medical Research Institute of Infectious Diseases.

The CDC inspected the military research institute in June (A: … of last year.) and inspectors found several areas of concern in standard operating procedures, which are in place to protect workers in biosafety level 3 and 4 laboratories, spokeswoman Caree Vander Linden confirmed.

(A: She's specially trained to be a spokesperson. Because that's what they are, they don't give you propaganda, they give you, spokespeople, they're trained to put it across better, you know, what to say what not to say.)

The CDC sent a cease and desist order in July.

After USAMRIID received the order from the CDC, its registration with the Federal Select Agent Program, which oversees disease-causing material use and possession, was suspended. That suspension effectively halted all biological select agents and toxin research at USAMRIID, Vander Linden said in her email.

By the way, they've also got all this the stuff in Fort Dietrich, I've got the old articles from years ago, where when they found and got and resuscitated you might say, revived viruses from the 1918 flu pandemic, by finding it in lung tissue of frozen corpses in the frozen permafrost up in the north in Alaska and Canada too I think too, in the Inuit area, I did the articles on that years ago. I said, what is this guy digging them up for? They took parts of them to Fort

Dietrich and other places too. They managed to revive these things to make them... So here you have the killer disease they revived. And then a few years later I read an article on the air, on the radio at the time, and they had managed to make it even more virulent and deadly than the previous one. If it ever [Alan chuckles.] in case it never came back by itself and did the jump, you see. It's the same rubbish, 'eh. And they tell, here they are worried about the people speaking. Dear, dear, dear, dear. We're all terrified of what they're up too.

Here's an article too...

Old 60 Minutes Exposé On 1976 Swine Flu Propaganda, Debilitating Vaccines

informationliberation.com / 1 Aug 2009

CBS " 60 MINUTES" documentary on the swine flu epidemics of 1976 in the U.S. It went on air only once and was never shown again. (A: That’s true.)

CBS '60 Minutes' Transcript (A: It’s here.)

Below is the full transcript of the 1979 broadcast from the CBS investigative news program 60 Minutes on government propaganda around the 1976 swine flu scare. The program was aired on Sunday, November 4, 1979.

Only one person was killed by the actual flu, (A: That’s the soldier that dropped when he was getting marched into the ground and jogged into the ground, and when he had already had two days without sleep and so on, he was sick. That’s what killed him really.) while hundreds filed claims of death of their loved ones from the massive vaccine campaign which was mounted.

The Swine Flu Epidemic of 1976 inspired the vaccination of 40 Million people a little-known fact was that those vaccinations caused devastating side effects to over 4000 victims. The frightening revelations about this event are the similarities with today.

MIKE WALLACE: The flu season is upon us. Which type will we worry about this year, and what kind of shots will we be told to take? Remember the swine flu scare of 1976? That was the year the U.S. government told us all that swine flu could turn out to be a killer that could spread across the nation, and Washington decided that every man, woman and child in the nation should get a shot to prevent a nation-wide outbreak, a pandemic.

Well 46 million of us obediently took the shot, and now 4,000 Americans are claiming damages from Uncle Sam amounting to three and a half billion dollars because of what happened when they took that shot. By far the greatest number of the claims - two thirds of them are for neurological damage, or even death, allegedly triggered by the flu shot.

(A: But there was a lot more than 4000 by the way. That's what the government would accept. But you probably had probably close to about a million folk with all kinds of odd side affects that would come out later in life and so on.)

We pick up the story back in 1976, when the threat posed by the swine flu virus seemed very real indeed.

PRESIDENT GERALD FORD: This virus was the cause of a pandemic in 1918 and 1919 that resulted in over half a million deaths in the United States, as well as 20 million deaths around the world.

WALLACE: Thus the U.S. government's publicity machine was cranked into action to urge all America to protect itself against the swine flu menace. (A: Does that sound familiar, hm?) (Excerpt from TV commercial urging everyone to get a swine flu shot.) One of those who did roll up her sleeve was Judy Roberts. She was perfectly healthy, an active woman, when, in November of 1976, she took her shot. Two weeks later, she says, she began to feel a numbness starting up her legs.

JUDY ROBERTS: And I joked about it at that time. I said I'll be numb to the knees by Friday if this keeps up. By the following week, I was totally paralyzed.

(A: I've actually seen that, the actual… I think I might even have access to it.)

WALLACE: So completely paralyzed, in fact, that they had to operate on her to enable her to breathe. And for six months, Judy Roberts was a quadriplegic. The diagnosis: A neurological disorder called "Guillain-Barre Syndrome" - GBS for short. These neurological diseases are little understood. They affect people in different ways.

As you can see in these home movies taken by a friend, Judy Roberts' paralysis confined her mostly to a wheelchair for over a year. But this disease can even kill. Indeed, there are 300 claims now pending from the families of GBS victims who died, allegedly as a result of the swine flu shot. In other GBS victims, the crippling effects diminish and all but disappear. But for Judy Roberts, progress back to good health has been painful and partial.

(A: And it goes on and on and on. Then Roberts talks again, and she talks about what happened to her, her symptoms and all the rest of it.)

ROBERTS: Very different, I have a – a greatly decreased mobility in my lips. And I can't drink through a straw on the right-band side. I can't blow out birthday candles. I don't whistle any more, for which my husband is grateful.

ROBERTS: The weakness in my hands will stay and the leg braces will stay.

(A: Weakness of the hands is pretty common actually when you get that, and the numbness. I remember Dr. Stanley Monteith had a part of that too from a shot that he was given, and his arm was, until he died part of his arms was totally numb. That's fairly common as well. And Wallace continues…)

WALLACE: Where did this so called "deadly variety of flu", where did it first hit back in 1976? It began right here at Fort Dix in New Jersey in January of that year, when a number of recruits began to complain of respiratory ailments, something like the common cold. An Army doctor here sent samples of their throat cultures to the New Jersey Public Health Lab to find our just what kind of bug was going around here. One of those samples was from a Private David Lewis, who had left his sick bed to go on a forced march. (A: That’s who it was, he was already sick, and they made him get up and march and jog.) Private Lewis had collapsed on that march, and his sergeant had revived him by mouth-to-mouth resuscitation. But the sergeant showed no signs of illness. A few days later, Private Lewis died.

(A: It's interesting too, it was in the US military camp that the first 1918 flu broke out as well, or 1917 flu I think it was really, it broke out then too there supposedly. Anyway, this one in particular in Fort Dix in New Jersey…)

ROBERTS: If this disease is so potentially fatal that it's going to kill a young, healthy man, a middle-aged schoolteacher doesn't have a prayer.

WALLACE: The New Jersey lab identified most of those solders' throat cultures as the normal kind of flu virus going around that year, but they could not make out what kind of virus was in the culture from the dead soldier, and from four others who were sick. So they sent those cultures to the Federal Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, Georgia, for further study. A few days later they got the verdict: swine flu. But that much-publicized outbreak of swine flu at Fort Dix involved only Private Lewis, who died, and those four other soldiers, who recovered completely without the swine flu shot.

So, there you go. This has all been done before. But this is a big agenda and facts don't matter, you know. Because as I say, they've sworn to ram this through. Because they couldn't get us all to go into austerity, total austerity with the climate thing and, oh, you're all going to fry to death, after before, we were all going to freeze to death on icebergs. So, this is the way to bring the whole agenda through right now. Another article too is called…

The swine flu fiasco

cbc.ca/archives / 21 Feb 1983

(A: This one is from the CBC, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in Canada. That's a government station, right. The swine flu fiasco, they say that, so if I get banned, remember, it's the CBC government company because they said it first, so ban them too.)

In February 1976, (A: They got through the same thing.) a 19-year-old soldier died at Fort Dix, N.J., after coming down with a severe case of influenza… (A: Yada, yada, ya.)

This CBC Television clip looks at the ill-fated initiative, which was blamed for casting suspicion on vaccination efforts for an entire generation. (A: And that’s true. They go through it again; it was signed into law by…) U.S. President Gerald Ford's National Influenza Immunization Program began in Oct. 1 1976.

The first universal vaccination program in American history.

(A: That you had to take.)

He said, the multimillion-dollar cost was needed to avoid a return of the virus which he claimed had caused the 1918 pandemic.

(A: A different one altogether. Facts don't matter even then, you see, when it comes to terrifying the public. So, this is pretty well a similar rundown of what I just read before from the transcript. The same thing that you're getting today.)

That story, along with many others at the time, reported as many as 500 cases of swine flu at Fort Dix and warned of a second more deadly wave in the fall.

(A: Most of them just had the flu really.)

Canada unveiled its universal vaccinations in late October, (A: ...of that year.) with the goal of vaccinating nine million Canadians. In total, 50 million people received flu shots across North America.

In December investigators with the US Centers for Disease Control confirmed that a higher than average number of vaccinated people had developed a rare form of paralysis called Guillain Barr syndrome.

(A: But for years they kept telling them, oh that's all in your head, that, take these tranquilizers, you're probably neurotic, you know. Yada, yada, ya. But with this syndrome, as far as I see, it can be passed on to offspring. That's what I found out too with other people, other studies. So yeah...)

The rapid onset is often weakness, the paralysis of legs, arms and breathing, muscles and face. GPS is not to affect one or two people in 100,000.

(A: It's a lot more than that actually. Because a lot of it doesn't show until later. Other folks can get over an initial attack, but as they get older symptoms can recur and get worse.)

Thus combined with a lack of an outbreak of the swine flu, it sparked widespread criticism.

(A: Because the flu wasn't there.)

To learn more about the public reaction go to our additional clip called gambling with the public's health in the wake...

(A: Well, they're all for us gambling now I suppose 'eh.)

In the wake of the scan of the director of the CDC in Atlanta, assistant secretary of the US Department of health were fired.

(A: Oh, big deal.)

Those who came down with Julian Barr syndrome as a result of the shots fired a record $3.5 billion US class-action suit against the US government in 1978.

I tell ya, you have to be awfully... You should really think for yourself. It's up to yourselves what you're going to do. But no, I've had bad reactions myself from things years ago, and I never recovered.

Swine flu? A panic stoked in order to posture and spend

(A: This was the last big push they tried again in 2009. It didn't work for them, right. This article here is from the Guardian. Again, an official. So, don't claim about me saying something.)

Swine flu? A panic stoked in order to posture and spend theguardian.com / 28 April 2009

We have gone demented. Two Britons are or were (not very) ill from flu. "This could really explode," intones a reporter for BBC News. "London warned: it's here," cries the Evening Standard. Fear is said to be spreading "like a Mexican wave". It "could affect" three-quarters of a million Britons. It "could cost" three trillion dollars. The "danger", according to the radio, is that workers who are not ill will be "worried" (perhaps by the reporter) and fail to turn up at power stations and hospitals.

(A: This is 2009, hm, the Guardian.)

Appropriately panicked, on Monday ministers (A: This is politicians.) plunged into their Cobra bunker beneath Whitehall to prepare for the worst. Had Tony Blair been about they would have worn germ warfare suits. British government is barking mad.

What is swine flu? It is flu, a mutation of the H1N1 virus of the sort that often occurs. It is not a pandemic, despite the media prefix, not yet. The BBC calls it a "potentially terrible virus", but any viral infection is potentially terrible. Flu makes you feel ill. You should take medicine and rest. You will then get well again, unless you are very unlucky or have some complicating condition. (A: It’s the same thing with the normal flu, if you’ve already got conditions that are going to make it worse.) It is best to avoid close contact with other people, as applies to a common cold.

In Mexico, 2,000 people have been diagnosed as suffering swine flu. Some 150 of them have died, (A: That was another big fiasco too, you see. When they really got down to it very few had died of the actual thing.) though there is said to be no pathological indication of all these deaths being linked to the new flu strain. (A: But initially said they said that they were, you see.) People die all the time after catching flu, especially if not medicated.

Nobody anywhere else in the world has died from this infection and only a handful have the new strain confirmed, most in America and almost all after returning from Mexico. A couple from Airdrie who caught the flu on holiday in Cancun are getting better. That tends to happen to people who get flu, however much it may disappoint editors.

(A: They go on and on about it, how the WHO jumped on board...)

The World Health Organisation, always eager to push itself into the spotlight, loves to talk of the world being "ready" for a flu pandemic, apparently on the grounds that none has occurred for some time. There is no obvious justification for this scaremongering. I suppose the world is "ready" for another atomic explosion or another 9/11.

So, this goes through the earlier article there, from the 2009 one, right, the flu. Then you've got this one, and that was about the same time too I think this one came from. Yeah, 2009. This again is from Windsor Star, Windsor, Ontario, the official newspaper there, you see. Not a conspiracy paper at all.

Vaccinate Canadians under 40 and natives first: experts

Windsor Star.com / June 21, 2009

(A: This is from what we just read there about the nonexistent pandemic of 2009. That was hyped up too, it was all in their heads, you know, and their papers did their bit for it.)

Vaccinate Canadians under 40 and natives first: experts

A nurse injects an experimental flu vaccine into the arm of a volunteer during a clinical trial, a warning to pharmaceutical companies is being drafted to ensure that quality has been taken in clinical trials in lower income countries.

Five-to-40-year-olds and Canada's aboriginal communities should be the first to get vaccinated against human swine flu, experts say as Canadian officials decide who gets priority for the flu shots.

But the vaccine will become available in batches, meaning the entire population can't be vaccinated at once.

(A: It's amazing how they all get the same handouts from the same source, and they just put them in the papers, 'eh. It says here…)

Unlike normal seasonal flu, the H1N1 virus appears to be disproportionately infecting older children and young adults. So far, the largest number of confirmed cases have occurred in people between the ages of five and 24.

"It doesn't mean they're all getting sick and need to be hospitalized, but they're getting significant illness," said Dr. Noni MacDonald, a leader in pediatric infectious diseases and a professor of pediatrics at Dalhousie University in Halifax.

But adults older than 64 don't appear to be at increased risk of H1N1…

It's quite amazing how this was a dud too, you know, they called it a complete hoax after all this incredible spending and so on, yada, yada, ya. It really is quite something.

Here's another article here too. This is January 14, 2004. It's official. It's from CIDRAP, you know, that's the big organization that deals with vaccinations, the official one.

CDC to mix avian, human flu viruses in pandemic study (A: ...it says.)

CIDRAP.umn.edu him/ Jan 14, 2004

Jan 14, 2004 (CIDRAP News) – One of the worst fears of infectious disease experts is that the H5N1 avian influenza virus now circulating in parts of Asia will combine with a human-adapted flu virus to create a deadly new flu virus that could spread around the world.

(A: Well, keep doing gain of function, I’m sure it will.)

That could happen, scientists predict, if someone who is already infected with an ordinary flu virus contracts the avian virus at the same time. The avian virus has already caused at least 48 confirmed human illness cases in Asia, of which 35 have been fatal. The virus has shown little ability to spread from person to person, but the fear is that a hybrid could combine the killing power of the avian virus with the transmissibility of human flu viruses.

Now, rather than waiting to see if nature spawns such a hybrid, US scientists are planning to try to breed one themselves—in the name of preparedness.

(A: In the name of preparedness, you understand, you see. So there you go, let’s make it a killer disease, ‘eh?)

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) will soon launch experiments designed to combine the H5N1 virus and human flu viruses and then see how the resulting hybrids affect animals. The goal is to assess the chances that such a "reassortant" virus will emerge and how dangerous it might be.

So, they make it go into animals, that it wasn't in before, you see, and then they'll try to see if it will jump from the animal into humans. They'll actually make it happen. Some of the scientist before have got credits in their own scientific halls of fame for making one of them jump into ferrets, wild ferrets, when it would not have done it in nature, and into humans, you see. You can't believe it. This is what's on our…

When you're all watching your TV and your happy family stuff and your soaps and your 50 shades of whippings and bondage, this is stuff that's going on all around you with these organizations, planning a new future, new society, a new way of living, yada, ya. Depopulation meetings happening about 10 times a year by big organizations. And austerity programs to make you eat less. And stuff that, how can we sterilize the public even more without them knowing, and in a humane way, you understand, like HG Wells said himself in A Modern Utopia. But you know, here you go. It's all here. Let's MAKE it happen.

Then, a lot of these animals in China, it broke out before, I've got the old articles, some of the tested animals were getting sold as meat quietly by some unscrupulous people. That's happened before too, folks. They also make different vaccines in the eggs, 'eh. Hm. You know that too, don't you?

And they could, what's the price of a dozen eggs in some places, 'eh? Even today you can hardly get a hold of anything. Because of our masters bringing total austerity down. And in one fell swoop, isn't it? Like Carroll Quigley said, you can get more done in five years of war, in social planning and agendas, then you can in 50 years of propaganda and indoctrination, when the folk are terrified. There you go. Here we are. CDC to mix avian, human flu viruses in pandemic study. There you go. Isn't that wonderful? Aren’t they clever? And they all get little awards for that, look how clever this person was, y'know.

Homeless people die after bird flu vaccine trial in Poland telegraph.co.uk / 2 July 2008

(A: That's what they used in Poland back in 2008.)

Three Polish doctors and six nurses are facing criminal prosecution after a number of homeless people died following medical trials for a vaccine to the H5N1 bird-flu virus.

The medical staff, from the northern town of (A: I’m murdering [the pronunciation of] this one.) Grudziadz, are being investigated over medical trials on as many as 350 homeless and poor people last year, which prosecutors say involved an untried vaccine to the highly-contagious virus.

Authorities claim that the alleged victims received £1-2 (A: That's what, like two, three bucks?) to be tested with what they thought was a conventional flu vaccine but, according to investigators, was actually an antibird-flu drug.

The director of a Grudziadz homeless centre, Mieczyslaw Waclawski, told a Polish newspaper that last year, 21 people from his centre died, a figure well above the average of about eight.

Although authorities have yet to prove a direct link between the deaths…

(A: [Alan chuckles.] What could it have been? Well, you know… N-n-n.)

“It is in the interests of all doctors that those who are responsible for this are punished,” the minister added.

(A: Of course, I'm sure they didn't do it. They always let them off with it, 'eh. I tell ya. But that's what they do with these things. I remember too doing the article, it was hard for folk to believe, you know. At the time I was on the air too, on the radio, before I was edged off because there was complaints by higher authorities.)

And, the company that released contaminated flu virus material from a plant in Austria, right. This is from Baxter laboratories that do a lot of these vaccines. This is from Canada. This is the Canadian Free Press, hm, February 2009.

Baxter: Product contained live bird flu virus

canadafreepress.com / 27 Feb 2009

The company that released contaminated flu virus material from a plant in Austria confirmed Friday that the experimental product contained live H5N1 avian flu viruses.

(A: This is what they had to stick into you, it's the LIVE virus, by mistake, right. You don't make mistakes like this, folks. These are like failsafe mechanisms you go through step by step by step. This is intentional. You can't, you can’t keep screwing up like that. No, no. Not about five different failsafe’s, you know. It says…)

And an official of the World Health Organization’s European operation said the body is closely monitoring the investigation into the events that took place at Baxter International’s research facility in Orth-Donau, Austria.

“At this juncture we are confident in saying that public health and occupational risk is minimal at present,” (A: Well, what do you expect them to say, ‘eh?) medical officer Roberta Andraghetti said from Copenhagen, Denmark.

“But what remains unanswered are the circumstances surrounding the incident in the Baxter facility in Orth-Donau.”

The contaminated product, a mix of H3N2 seasonal flu viruses and unlabelled H5N1 viruses, (A: …right…) was supplied to an Austrian research company. The Austrian firm, Avir Green Hills Biotechnology, then sent portions of it to sub-contractors in the Czech Republic, Slovenia and Germany.

The contamination incident, which is being investigated by the four European countries, came to light when the subcontractor in the Czech Republic inoculated ferrets with the product and they died. Ferrets shouldn’t die from exposure to human H3N2 flu viruses.

(A: Luckily somebody did the right test here, ‘eh, didn’t just go along with it… well, it’s all been passed by safety inspectors and…)

Public health authorities concerned about what has been described as a “serious error” (A: No kidding.) on Baxter’s part have assumed the death of the ferrets meant the H5N1 virus in the product was live. But the company, Baxter International Inc., has been parsimonious about the amount of information (A: It was dead mum about it in fact.) it has released about the event.

“It was live,” Christopher Bona said in an email. (A: That’s the director of global bioscience communications. So there ya go. Here’s what it says here, it’s an interesting article.)

While H5N1 doesn’t easily infect people, H3N2 viruses do. If someone exposed to a mixture of the two had been simultaneously infected with both strains, he or she could have served as an incubator for a hybrid virus able to transmit easily to and among people.

Well, that's what I was said, 'eh. The previous articles were talking about, well we're afraid of folk catching two different things at the same time. Well, here they inject it into you, and you become a breeder. Hm? You're like a fast breeder, a reactor. And you shed the viruses. Isn't that amazing? Because it's all, it's just accidents, you see, 'eh. All these failsafe’s, it's just strange how it happened like that, you know. M-hm. But if they inject it into people that would have happened. That would have happened. M-hm. There ya go. It's never been answered, that.

Illinois-based Baxter is working on a swine flu vaccine.

legitgov.org / 26 April 2009

(A: This is after it. This is 2009 again.)

Specialty drug maker Baxter International Inc. will work with the World Health Organization to develop a vaccine that could stem an outbreak of a deadly swine flu strain in Mexico.

That turned out to be bogus too. They ended up dumping all the vaccines they made, I think mostly. That's another one as well. It's on and on and on, you understand, this is repetitive. But this one now is the BIG one. They worked for 10 years to build up to this. And they're all on board, everybody's on board with it. They had all the media on board before it happened, they said that even in their test that they did that they ran the fake test that they did. It's just never ending. Then again...

Swine flu: Baxter seeks swine flu sample to begin work on vaccine

2009

With world health officials worried about global outbreak (A: blah, blah, blah...) the Deerfield based Baxter International got itself involved in the action.

(A: No wonder, it's so lucrative, isn't it?)

Confirmed over the weekend it was working with the World Health Organization a potential vaccine to curb the deadly swine flu. But it's a new type they're trying to speed to the testing of it.

(A: Then again, they even give you the shares of theirs, Baxter went up 2.4%. It went up from $1.16 to $49.22 a share trading Monday. It's very lucrative, diseases in itself, very lucrative. And you get a big one when it comes to throwing billions out there. Then, oh, it's really lucrative, 'eh.

They're trying a new type of technology that allows the company to produce vaccines more rapidly. (A: etc. etc.)

Then you have another one here.

Germans Unhappy with Alternative Swine Flu Vaccine for Politicians

spiegel.de / 19 Oct 2009

(A: This is again, 2009, when they were having this big thing, ooooh, ooooh, my goodness, get vaccinated for goodness sake.)

Damage control is the name of the game in Berlin on Monday as politicians rush to deny that they are receiving a better, safer swine flu vaccine than ordinary Germans. The first of 50 million doses arrived in Germany on Monday.

(A: So, they mandated, the politicians mandated the Germans all take the regular stuff that was getting put out for the thing, the nonevent flu at the time really. Because folk were coming down with terrible reactions to it. The politicians literally refused it for themselves, although they may everybody else take it. They would get a better safer swine flu vaccine for themselves.)

One might think that the arrival in Germany of the first of 50 million doses of swine flu vaccine on Monday might be cause for celebration. But with news breaking over the weekend that top government officials in Berlin will be injected with an alternative vaccine -- one widely seen as safer -- a debate about an alleged two-class medical system has erupted.

(A: Well, that never changes. It's the same in every country, folks. Every country. That's from der Spiegel.)

Over the weekend reported that Chancellor Angela Merkel, a number of her ministers and other government officials would receive a vaccine manufactured by the pharmaceutical company Baxter -- the same vaccine that the German military opted for, as was reported last week.

(A: but of course, they wouldn't, because they were getting the other stuff too. That was a big stink at the time, I remember when it was happening. But every country does the same thing.)

Another article here too, 2009. Because it's important. 2009 was the last big push they had, and again, the 10 years in the making to get to the next step, 10, 12 years. They worked on you hard, hard, getting you ready for, to accept it this time, you see. This says…

Children who had the flu jab are three times more likely to need hospital care.

wddty.com / 2009

(A: That was then. And this is vaccine viral interference, they often say, which the virologists themselves talk about. They can actually make you more prone to ending up with the disease, or a massive reaction to it if you get the vaccine and you actually get the real thing afterwards hitting you.)

Children who get the flu jab are three times more likely to end up in hospital. The vaccine is also useless at preventing the disease, new research has discovered.

(A: This article here is from, it's called wddty.com, testimonials. But this article is also official. It's got lots of the top studies and links to it. It says…)

Children with asthma are especially vulnerable after being given the annual flu vaccine, the TIV, trivalent inactivated flu vaccine. Children aged from six months to 18 years are recommended to have the vaccine each year.

Research from the Mayo Clinic (A: That's where it came from.) in Rochester made the discovery after studying 263 children who had flu (A: Who HAD the flu, right.) and whether or not they had been vaccinated.

They discovered that children who had been vaccinated were three times more likely to need hospital care than those not vaccinated. And the risk is even higher in children who had asthma.

It's also clear that the vaccine had not protected the children against the flu, researchers told a conference this week.

What it does, it sets them up for the cytokine storm, where your immune system just goes woooooff, it throws everything at your lungs really, until your lungs get so congested it can't do the transfer of gases and you'll suffocate really. That's what happens with the cytokine storms, it's massive.

I read the one too from the Department of Defense of the US military about two weeks ago. I put the links up there too. Their own in-house health department for the US military had warned about a year ago something similar, and not to take the vaccine because it was causing the same problems. Viral interference from other viruses could reactivate it and cause a cytokine storm against the folk who had had the vaccination if they came along, with the real thing and actually hit the natural stuff. That's how it works really.

This is from official sites. This is not conspiracy stuff, this is from the supposed experts who are telling you to take all of this stuff, again. I've got a stack of sources here and studies done on it too, by as I say, the sites themselves that are the organizations that… including the Mayo Clinic in Rochester. 2009. Children who have the flu jab are three times more likely to need hospital care. There you go.

Another article here too is, let's see, what one is this from? It's the Canadian Press.

New Canadian research backs suggestions that only people given a flu shot for the 2009 season seem to more likely to get infected.

Canadian press / 2012

(A: This is now the people, not just the children, 'eh. And that was 2012 this is published, this article here.)

The people given the flu shot for the 2008 two 2009 season seem more likely to get infected with the pandemic virus.

(A: I can remember that came out, and they went into panic mode in Canada with the Canadian authorities that tell you normally take them, and you're bad and naughty and really awful if you don't. And they came out panic stricken because the folk who had got the shots were getting it. Again, they were getting that [cytokine] storm and that's not good at all. So...)

New Canadian research backs suggestions that only people given the flu shot seem to be more likely to get infected with the pandemic virus.

(A: N-n-n. Other folk who had not the shot didn't get it. [Alan chuckles.]   So…)

New Canadian research backs suggestions that only people given the flu shot seem to be more likely to get infected with the pandemic virus.

Strange vaccine related phenomenon spotted at the start of the 2009 flu pandemic may well have been real, new study suggests.

A Canadian researcher noticed in the early weeks of the pandemic that people who had got a flu shot for 2008/9 winter seems more likely to get the infected with the pandemic virus than people who had not received it.

Five studies done in several provinces show the same puzzling and unsettling results. But initially researchers say Canada did not and the effect was dismissed as "the Canadian problem".

(A: [Alan laughing.]   There ya go. The other countries would just ignore it, you know, and continue. I'd take that shot, you know, it's just...)

News of the unexpected findings broke out at a time when countries in North America and parts of Europe are getting ready to start vaccinating their populations against the pandemic virus.

(A: They didn't lock anybody down, remember, in all of this stuff. But it was the same hype, hype, hype.)

Some jurisdictions were also trying to figure out whether to offer this seasonal flu vaccine they had purchased, similar to the 2008/2009 shot, along with the pandemic vaccine.

(A: Remember what I just read a few articles ago. That's what they're trying in the lab. Their worry was that someone would get something and then get something else along with it and become a breeder as they crossed. Well, here they are talking about giving you the darn thing, two of them, two different kinds, eh? What's wrong with them? With wrong with these people's logic here? I'll say that again because this time I'm hard of thinking. It says...)

Similar to the 2008/2009 shot, along with the pandemic vaccine, in case the seasonal flu viruses continue to circulate.

(A: So they want to give you both types, the 2008/2009 shots, right, n-n-n, along with the pandemic vaccine. Ooooooo, wow- wee.)

Many people in the flu research and public health communities found the whole event unhelpful and many rejected the findings. Some suggested if there was a problem it might have been with the flu vaccines used in Canada because the problem wasn't seen elsewhere.

Elsewhere would be more authoritative, or more authoritarian and they can shut it down quickly any... They're completely intolerant you understand, and it's getting worse all the time, the intolerance. It's rather evident.

Flu shot linked to higher instance of flu in pandemic.

Here's another article on the same thing, about it too. Canada once again. Also…

Medical doctor retracts H1N1 vaccine advice after reading the inserts.

(A: This is back when they were pushing the last pandemic that really wasn't a pandemic. It says…)

Doctor retracts H1N1 vaccine advice and stopped (A: …basically...) injecting the folk that take it.

Ah, ha, ah. Because yeah, they're all, the doctors are afraid of getting sued, remember. Even though the manufacturers have got immunity, the doctors are possibly still afraid of getting sued, 'eh, for causing problems. What's it supposed to be with the oath? ...do no harm.

I'll put up one about Margaret Chan who was also a World Economic Forum, she was a member of that of course naturally. But she was also the Director of Health for Hong Kong. She is herself down as Chinese and Canadian. She was the head of, I think for Canada, the health vaccination thing for Canada for a while.

Margaret Chan

en.wikipedia.org

Margaret Chan Fung Fu-chun, is a Chinese Canadian physician, who served as the Director-General of the World Health Organization …

(A: …as well. You know that left-wing organization.   I'm being kind when I say left-wing. The whole UN is like that, mind you. It is. But it suits the Masters of the world, the ones who really own the world financially. It suits them. They'll use all types of systems for certain periods of time, including the left and the right. Quigley said the same thing, we have all kinds, communists, fascists, dictators he says, capitalist, communist, we don't mind, he said. So...)

(WHO) delegating the People's Republic of China for 2006–2017.

(A: She was elected by the executive board of WHO on 8 November 2006, endorsed in a special meeting of the world health assembly the following day. She was previously the Director of Health in the Hong Kong government.)

I tell ya. But yep.

McDonald's Canada to start using imported beef amid Canadian supply concerns

thestar.com / 28 April 2020

(A: They're killing all the beef off, as you know, and they're slaughtering the things and just burning them I think.)

McDonald's Canada to start using imported beef amid Canadian supply concerns

Cargill (A: That's one of the big ones.) has shuttered operations temporarily after a worker died (A: …A worker died...) from the COVID-19 coronavirus and hundreds of other employees tested positive.

Mind you, in some countries about half the people are testing positive as having had it, you see, and no symptoms. Meaning that they've got immunity afterwards, you see. We know now that this thing was out there already before November, last November, and believe you me, from the areas it was spreading and the massive movement of students and so on all over to the universities, a lot of people must have already had it, you know, and didn't know it. And other folk have such mild symptoms they wouldn't have even stopped to worry about it.

But this is awful when you see what's happening. And as I say, McDonald's is starting to use the imported beef amid Canadian supply concerns. I guess folk must want real meat still, even though they're pushing their chemical burgers for vegan burgers.

Let's see what else we've got here. Interesting article…

Immunization with SARS coronavirus vaccines...

This again is, you see, they're not, they're hitting anybody who doesn't come from an authorized source, you see. Meaning, the ones that they want you to believe in. Any other opinion, it doesn't matter how true it might be, is just not allowed when you've got a big agenda on the go. That's what warfare is about, right. And propaganda is about that.

Immunization with SARS coronavirus vaccines leads to pulmonary immunopathology on challenge with the SARS virus

pubmed.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov

(A: It's interesting. It says…)

Abstract

Background: Severe acute respiratory syndrome (SARS) emerged in China in 2002 and spread to other countries before brought under control. Because of a concern for reemergence or a deliberate release of the SARS coronavirus, vaccine development was initiated. Evaluations of an inactivated whole virus vaccine in ferrets and nonhuman primates and a virus-like-particle vaccine in mice induced protection against infection but challenged animals exhibited an immunopathologic-type lung disease.

(A: They're really using mushed brains of mice for making this vaccine. Very scientific. This is what happened to the people I guess too because I know another test they tried it on some people. I read articles recently too, this SARS 2 Covid 19, right, and China have released something similar about the effects of some of the drugs they used, antiviral drugs and some of the other things that they used on the patient's there causing pulmonary problems. Including lining of the heart in fact, you know. So it's interesting that certain things, the meds that they can give you, might, might have the same affect as the actual disease itself in some parts of the linings of, because we know the coronavirus itself supposedly, we are told, this Covid 19, will also affect, can also affect the heart in a lot of people.)

(A: Again, everything is up in the air and we won't know anything for truth for about five or 10 years down the road. When things settle out, that's when they start to put out some truth. Once… Because everything at the moment is to cover their behinds, after causing such incredible chaos and terror and fear, and to push the vaccine agenda, etc. And locking up, I mean, destroying the whole economies of Nations. You're not going to come out of this and go back to any kind of… Even Fauci said the same thing, it's not intended to go back to normal. That's why they caused all of this for. They have never locked down the nations before, the healthy people. Never ever.)

(A: This was, this is the whole agenda that they couldn't get rammed down through austerity measures that the United Nations prattle on about for years. Of course, the big foundations prattle on about it. They're on board with the same agenda. That's what I'm saying, it's all one group, you see, including the WEF. Then again, all the groups that they have for austerity and greening and sustainability are on board with it. And how all they are even going to, they think it's wonderful that that you're going to go on rationing and so on, yada, yada, ya.)

(A: So anyway this article here's says…)

Results: All vaccines induced serum neutralizing antibody with increasing dosages and/or alum significantly increasing responses. Significant reductions of SARS-CoV two days after challenge was seen for all vaccines and prior live SARS-CoV. All mice exhibited histopathologic changes in lungs two days after challenge including all animals vaccinated… Th2-type immunopathology with prominent eosinophil infiltration, (A: That's what you get with the lungs too, you'll see the eosinophils rising big time.) confirmed with special eosinophil stains. The pathologic changes seen in all control groups lacked the eosinophil prominence.

(A: So eosinophils you'll find are often after different damages that happened to the lungs, eosinophils will be prominent, and heavy allergies too will come. But also in certain vaccine related problems you'll get that happening as well. So it's indicators of different things that happen when you do all these different studies.)

Interesting too, you'll see all the articles talk about a SARS like, SARS like, or similarities, but it's not exactly the same. It's altered, it doesn't have the same total sequences too of the genomes in it too and the pairs and all the rest of it. SARS has a few, a couple of hundred less I think, as far as I heard, or read somewhere. So, it's been altered, naturally. But probably the SARS is used as a base, as they do the gain of function of course and add things to it.

And…

'So much for us being NHS heroes': Southmead Hospital workers in zero-hour contract 'nightmare'

bristolpost.co.uk / 28 April 2020

A whistleblower at Southmead Hospital claims hundreds of its zero-hour contract staff are struggling to get any work.

(A: This is from the Bristol post newspaper, Bristol England.)

The A&E (A: …admissions and emergency.) healthcare assistant says the hospital has cancelled the vast majority of shifts for staff in her role and many nurses, after scheduled surgeries were suspended and some wards closed due to coronavirus.

(A: So, the wards are closed due to the viruses, but there are certainly patients.)

She told Bristol Live she normally works full-time but is now struggling to get one shift a week – and has been told she is not eligible for furlough because of her zero-hour contract, though the Government's website says any contract is eligible.

The worker said: “When I rang the staff bank office to ask how we’re meant to support ourselves, they told me we could apply for Universal Credit.

(A: Which is what they’re using everywhere else, you know.)

“So much for us being NHS heroes. The people clapping us across the country don’t know what is happening.

“We feel so unsupported by the hospital. I am constantly worried about how I am going to get work. It's a nightmare.”

They're laying off folk all over the place because nothing is happening in the hospitals. And Teresa Tam too, you could track people by putting bracelets on their arms during the epidemics and so on. 2010 National Film Board documentary. But as I say, we're not, in a democracy you don't put manacles on people. And they'd better come out openly and say you're not in a democracy anymore. Maybe it's time they did that, you know. I'm quite serious about that. You know. Because this is what you're seeing.

This is authoritarian technocratic society, that they want, to be more efficient. And you can't have democracy getting in the way. The Club of Rome said that in their own book years ago on it, that democracy was an outmoded thing, it just gets in the way, it's cumbersome, you can't get things done... Because of public opinion and public input, people might object and stop big projects from getting done. Just untidy. All these darn public nuisance, you know, and there's too many of them now as well. You see?

They show you all the graphs at the Club of Rome, and they use all the Malthusian techniques to convince you that each person is born, you know, consumes X amount of blah, blah, blah, and then they might breed with someone and they need X amount as well. And you can't please them obviously because since the domestic populations of, say, Europe were falling low, down to almost beyond replacement levels, well, we've got to bring in masses of migrants from everywhere because there's not enough of you anymore, you see. You see, you can't please them, you can do all the right things. You understand, when logic fails, you're in something else, some other agenda is on the go, folks. I hope you understand that.

The articles too that have come out about China and so on, but this one is from California political review, or calpolitialreview.

CCP-Linked Firm Targets U.S. Schoolkids With Chinese 'Morality and Values', Shows CCP Military Parades in Schools (A: This is in America.)

capoliticalreview.com / 28 April 2020

The Chinese Communist Party does not allow a crisis to go to waste—even those they started. Hard to believe but literally the Communist Party of China is in our classrooms—and school boards are allowing it.

"A broader Chinese language initiative in Utah has led to Chinese Communist Party (CCP) military parades being shown to children in public schools, with teacher Zheng Yamin declaring: "Behind the language is the culture. When we learn Chinese, we are also learning Chinese culture, Chinese morality and values…

Then they had little things from when they questioned the children afterwards, who just likes the Chinese leaders. They thought they were very pleasant and nice people and so on, yada, yada, ya. But it's not just... They're teaching at different places including I think in Utah as well. And it's Chinese based companies that are pushing these things to be taught in schools in America. I don't think people in America would complain. I mean, look at what else they've been taught for an awful long time. [Alan laughing.] It's just astonishing what's getting taught to the children these days. And...

The Massive Inflatable Crisis That is COVID-19

21stcenturywire.com / 29 April 2020

By all accounts and from the very beginning it was clear to some that Coronavirus Disease 2019 (Covid-19) was at the very most a little more dangerous than the seasonal flu – but was being deliberately hyped to stampede the public into an increasingly tangled web of bad policies.

As early as last month, cooler-headed experts had warned that hyped death rates spread by politicians, the Western corporate media, other various panic-mongers, and even World Health Organization (WHO) officials (A: What do you mean EVEN? They were the first ones.) would give way to much, much lower death rates as more people were tested and were found to have had the virus, most of whom showed little to no symptoms.

The numbers of infections versus deaths in Iceland (where no 'lockdown' took place) where testing has been the most widespread shows a death rate of about 0.5%, though only 5% of the population has been tested. Roughly 50% of those tested showed no symptoms at all – meaning that many, many more Icelanders likely had the virus, overcame it with ease without ever visiting a doctor or hospital to avail themselves for testing or to make into national Covid-19 statistics.

(A: And don't forget that the articles from last week too, from official sites, in admissions and even from Birx herself, that they are padding all the statistics. Anyone with any kind of Covid anything has been put down, and even presumed, has been lumped in eventually with confirmed to try to pad the figures. And even then they are so low.)

(A: That doesn't detract from the fact that folk have died, older folk have died, mainly older folk. Personally I think it's pretty well disgusting the way they are crammed into these homes in the first place, old folks' homes. It happens every year. They're really crammed in there. But yeah, a lot of the deaths came from folk with comorbidities, as they call it, high blood pressure, many, many other problems, heart problems and so on, who have had strokes before. Many had cancers as well by the way. And lots of them as well were really in these hospices which are horrible places in America, and elsewhere too they're much the same. Pretty horrible places. They are dying when they go in anyway, you see, at the hospices. That's what the hospices are for. It's really palliative care until they die. They're lumping them in with it too.)

(A: We've already had the articles by the senator that's also a doctor in the US who showed you [Alan chuckles.] what he was sent by the CDC and so on and telling them to put the different patients down as Covid even if they don't really have, if that's not what killed them.)

(YouTube yanks doctors' warning of constitutional crisis of COVID-19 - washingtontimes.com / 30 April 2020)

(A: That's standard. This has happened before with the previous pandemics that I've been talking about for the last little while here from previous years. So, this article goes on here, massive inflatable crisis.)

Another study conducted in the United States by Stanford University found that the infection rate was likely 50 to 85 times higher than reported – meaning the death rate was astronomically lower …

You see, before they were only taking folk who they'd tested who came in really ill, then giving you a higher statistic, you see, of the ones who died amongst them, so it's horrible. But we forget that most of the folk never come to the hospital and don't even know they've had the symptoms until they are tested. And the more they find out of who have had it, you see, without symptoms, then the ones who die gets lower and lower and lower statistically speaking. That's how it works, you see. So, it's quite something.

And the hospital should be, I said before, the hospitals are meant for the weak and infirmed to keep them... They should be getting in for treatment for all kinds of things, and they CAN'T. How many folk are dying because of that? It's absolutely disgusting what's going on! Absolutely horrifically disgusting! And folk can’t get surgeries. And they can’t get treatments. Lifesaving things. And folk with heart attacks being told to stay at home?! and just lay down, flatten your back and try to stay there and let it pass. Let it pass?!? 'eh.?

I mean, do you realize in this big agenda, the authorities can't back off now. They planned; this was planned. The response was planned. Like a brotherhood taking an oath to the death to be completely on board. To stop the economy. They wrecked it like never before. All the things that they couldn't ram through with sustainability or any other program, that they've managed to do here with one fell swoop. And they can't back off now. And when they get to that stage, they're very dangerous to society. They are intolerant, and like authoritarian regimes everywhere, they end up being really, really rather… very dangerous, put it that way. Because they can't back off now and say they were wrong. Not after going, and not after wrecking the economy.

Do you realize if they get anything started again, which they don't want to get... Don't forget, they don't want you to get started again with your economy. Oh, maybe a bit at a time, maybe a little bit here, a little bit there. This is planned to take down everything. It's a different system that's to emerge from this. THAT'S what they planned. You can find it all out at the World Economic Forum by the way where every big corporation in the planet is a member of it. All on board with it, with total sustainability. Oh, they can't back off now though after going this far with it.

It was bad enough from previous times when they did dump millions and millions of doses of vaccine that folk didn't want because of what it was doing. The last one, I can remember the nurses not taking it either. Then when they got demanded, in the New York ones where they demanded they get the vaccines, the nurses just signed each other on, and the doctors did the same thing. I gave doctor so-and-so the shot and blah, blah, blah. Just put it in writing and... But they didn't take it. It was hurting people. It was dangerous to people. And they saw the results of it. I-yi.

So, this article is pretty good here on 21stcentury wire. It says…

In other words: in terms of fatalities rates, Covid-19 is no more dangerous or deadly than the annual flu. But it has been hyped as such by Western politicians, the Western corporate media, and even international institutions like WHO – a deliberate deception accompanied by coordinated theater including government briefings with reporters comically spaced out in “fear” of contracting Covid-19.

(A: It’s all drama, and all their fake graphs and stuff.)

The same goes for total deaths. Should the media present Covid-19 deaths in the context of and in comparison to annual deaths from the flu, Americans – for example – would see that versus the 2019 flu season, Covid-19 is actually 30,000-40,000 deaths short of just matching the common flu – saying nothing of living up to the hype and hysteria that the government and media have deliberately created around Covid-19 to justify its ‘lockdown’ policies.

(A: And that’s true, these are the real statistics coming out of who has died. It’s way down. And don’t forget, they’ve been lumping the flu in with it too. Which they did in 2019 as well, just put them all down as this particular flu. I’ve got the articles here that were printed at the time.)

So why have governments around the globe crippled their economies, put millions out of work, and placed draconian measures in place to, in essence, imprison their populations at home?

Those with power and money seek to keep what they have and to take what little is left in the hands of others. During the manufactured “War on Terror,” similar hysteria was deliberately spread across society to justify draconian police powers at home and endless wars abroad – pouring ultimately trillions into the accounts of defense contractors and the financial institutions invested in them.

During a manufactured health crisis like the 2009 H1N1 “Swine Flu” outbreak, the unfounded fear of an uncontrollable pathogen ravaging the population helped justify the centralizing of control over people’s health and lifestyle while pumping billions in pubic funding into the coffers of Big Pharma.

(A: Yep. So that’s that one too.)

As I say, by the way, they've got all these kinds of algorithms that take you off in real time if certain words are mentioned and terms are used. Part of your defense contractors using the cyber warriors, thousands of them, and taxpayer-funded, to make sure that the big boys at the top and the big corporations that have got billions just dished out in gift money, your gift money, you pay for it all, so they can spy on you and really sabotage your free speech, and your opinions, which you are certainly entitled to. It doesn't matter who agrees or disagrees with them.

When you don't have the ability to have all kinds of free opinions and different opinions, you're under totalitarianism. Does that ring a bell? Isn't that kind of where we're going? and we are maybe here now?

And you're going to go and vote again for this nonsense? N-n-n.

Another article too about…

New paper outlines ways to boost manufacturing and supply systems resilience - weforum.org / 1 May 2020

Look at all the money that even the apps that are going to monitor you, and you're paying for it, you're paying for the phone, you're paying to use the phone, you're paying for everything. Then they're just hopping on top. And they even get it from, oh it's free, you can get this free app, you know, that monitors you. Until eventually it's reporting you, you may be infected, you may be infected, turn yourself into a police station, the police are on their way. That's what happens in China, it calls the police. [Alan chuckles.] I tell ya.

Another article too I mentioned earlier about the documentary...

Outbreak: Anatomy of a Plague (2010)

retn.org/show/outbreak-anatomy-plague / 2010

This feature-length documentary, based on Michael Bliss's 1991 book Plague: A Story of Smallpox in Montreal, juxtaposes a hypothetical 21st century pandemic with the 1885 smallpox epidemic that claimed over 2,500 lives in Montreal.

1885. Then they go on from there, you see, and that's how they go into, to do with bracelets, etc. M-hm. Our manacles, eh. Manacles. Put the bell around your neck. Plague. Plague. Oh, keep away, leper, leper.

Another article here is…

The Seven-Step Path from Pandemic to Totalitarianism - globalresearch.ca / 23 April 2020

He goes through the different steps it takes to make it all happen and how it's laid out basically as a practical military type operation obviously, step-by-step to make it all happen.

Then you have this one here…

Over-50s should be kept in coronavirus lockdown for longer and FINED if they cannot prove their age when out and about in public, study suggests

dailymail.co.uk / 30 April 2020

(A: ...study suggests. I love how they try to keep things anonymous, 'eh. That's from the Daily Mail Online. So all those cyber warfare guys maybe should think before they try to yank folk off that are reading it.)

Keeping the over-50s in isolation longer and requiring people to prove their age when out and about is 'the safest way out of lockdown', researchers claim.

A Warwick University study (A: No surprise with Warwick University.) found that a 'rolling age-release strategy' was the best option to end the lockdown.

The strategy proposed by researchers is based on the fact that death rates from COVID-19 among 50-year-olds are 20 times higher than deaths among 20-year-olds.

Study authors wrote that that police officers would have to be given the power to fine those caught breaking the age rule to ensure it was followed.

(A: I guess they'd have to lock up all the 50-year-old cops as well. And all the generals that are in the military for God sake. You can't have them walking about coughing on all the troops.)

In an extreme example - set out by the study authors, based on Chinese data - they say releasing over-50s early without a vaccine could see 40,000 extra people die.

And if they carry it on by the way, with basically gain of function in these labs, with pigs, pigs might fly. I'll just add that on. I love how they come out with this utter rubbish statistics. It's just… [Alan laughing.] try to convince you just to become a slave, 'eh, because you won't go along with some ridiculous strategy.

When you see folks going through, like out in British Columbia, there were some Chinese women living in old-age homes there and one of them was in her 90s. She had it and they pulled her through. But if you listen to the media, you'd think everybody just gets that over 50 kicks the bucket. It's not happening like that. It's not. And you really got to work out these percentages, how they work their percentages until it says my God, you know it sounds like, oh, so many, x, thousands of these are going to... No. No, no, no. Nope.

In Australia you've got them even more authoritarian. It's interesting that Canada, the old colonies, you see, the dominions of London I call it, are more authoritarian than maybe even in Britain themselves. I'm not quite sure of that, I'm not quite certain. But they definitely are authoritarian.

'Anti-vaxxers stay home':

(A: Anti-vaxxers. So now, again, it's labels, like anti-Semitic, you're an anti-vaxxer, you see. If you perhaps don't want A particular shot. It doesn't mean you're against them all or anything like that. Just anti-vaxxers. Is stigmatizing and targeting a population. This is what they do. So...)

'Anti-vaxxers stay home':   Health Minister (A: In Australia.) issues warning, announces new flu vaccine program for all primary school children

amp.watoday.com.au / 27 April 2020

(A: So, there you got a new flu vaccine. But anti-vaxxers stay home.)

Western Australia's Health Minister has warned anti-vaxxers to "stay home" as the state government expands its influenza vaccination program to include all primary school-aged children ahead of term 2 commencement from Wednesday.

(A: This is just FLU! Remember I mentioned before, about certain ones you give in advance, if you get this other one, this Covid thing comes along, you might have a cytokine storm. That's what the other experts are saying. Hm. That's what the Department of Defense in the US military has warned about. Hm? To their own troops! But let's give it to, let's give it to the children.)

The state government on Monday announced a national first with an investment of an additional $400,000 set aside to offer free (A: It's not free when it's taxpayers money! Flu jabs. I love the tricks they try to play on, like you're really stupid.) flu jabs to all primary school-aged children.

Mr Cook said the state also had an Australian first with a drive-through influenza clinic being established for some at-risk community members, which will be established in the Perth metropolitan area from late May.

(A: So now they're attacking the children. So, it's very important to vaccinate them to protect older folk, older people they come in contact with. So now this is the idea that young folk can get it and spread it. This is... You see, they'll just flip back from one extreme to the other extreme, back-and-forth, back-and-forth, back-and-forth, back-and-forth. And cause a lot of damage on the way.)

“Obviously this year more than any other year we need people to make sure that they get their flu jabs to ensure that we don't have the double whammy of COVID-19 and a bad flu season.”

What have these articles said they're worried about, having two different kinds at the same time, in the one person, and literally they merge together into a brand-new type of disease. And you’re supposed to listen to experts? Who's kidding who! N-n-n. That's your big authority speaking, folks, you know. Yep. And here you go…

A Green Reboot After the Pandemic

clubofrome.org / 24 March 2020

In addition to threatening millions of lives and the global economy, the COVID-19 pandemic has demonstrated that human societies are capable of transforming themselves more or less overnight. In fact, there’s no better time than now to usher in systemic economic change.

(A: This is the greenies and everything and the Club of Rome. So a new society coming in, it's an opportunity, and sustainability. They could literally and through the dishing out of money, you see, the corporations, they can mandate they cut back on certain things, and put all the sustainable projects in with their products and selling their products and everything else, 'eh. Yep. Limits to Growth, remember Limits to Growth? That's what they came out with in the 1970s, the Club of Rome one. And again, they came out with Beyond the Limits in 1992.)

The Club of Rome issued a similar warning in its famous 1972 report, The Limits to Growth, and again in Beyond the Limits, a 1992 book by the lead author of that earlier report, Donella Meadows.

(A: I wonder if the Meadows was green grass or whatever? Or was it kind of bare, decrepit looking? Anyway, it says…)

By using the Earth’s resources faster than they can be restored, and by releasing wastes and pollutants faster than they can be absorbed, we have long been setting ourselves up for disaster.

So they are your big, big ones. They were given the agenda, really, how to get the agenda through. Well, we'll blame humans for causing the death to the planet. That's what they came up with, humans are the problem. YOU humans, not them, but YOU humans. And they are all on board with the World Economic Forum and all the rest of them. They are all on board with the same agenda. The EU

Green Deal is part of their projects as well…

Finance Watch and The Club of Rome Conference

clubofrome.org / 11 March 2020

The real prize of the EU Green Deal

Embedding environmental goals at the heart of economic and financial decision-making 2020 is set to be a “super year” for nature and the planet. The EU will this month release its Biodiversity 2030 strategy and China will host the COP15 on Biodiversity in October. The UK will host the climate COP26 in September and the EU is rolling out its Green Deal and Green Deal Investment Plan.

So, there you go, with their green banks and stuff. There ya go. And…

Call To Action To G20 Leaders: Emerging From The Emergency With People, Planet, Prosperity (A: PPP…) At The Heart Of The Covid-19 Recovery

clubofrome.org / 9 April 2020

(A: Isn't that wonderful, 'eh? We've got an…)

…interconnected global challenge...

(A: Wow. Oh, wow-wee.)

…to build a new global economy that ensures an equitable, inclusive and sustainable future for all.

(A: Yada, yada, yada, yada, yada, ya!)

N-n-n. They're all on board with it, 'eh.

Emerging New Civilizations Initiative

clubofrome.org

(A: Isn't that nice, 'eh, for an emerging new civilization!)

A new paradigm is essential to clarify our role as a species within the greater Earth Community. Conversations are needed to agree on core values that promote human dignity, respect for nature and protection of the commons beyond current generations.

(A: Hm. Sounds wonderful. Utopia really.)

We are living beings who are inherently relational. Wisdom of ancients tells us that “the I Am because you Are”,

(A: That's different from the Bible, 'eh, when God says I AM. So here they have the "I am because you are"…) the African Ubuntu philosophy, (A: …you know, they write stacks of, you know, philosophy.)

or there is “no Me without We.”   (A: WOW! I wonder how many millions they paid for that little one hey.)

Buddhists and other indigenous knowledge systems also have similar orientations.

(A: …is that a little pun there.)

This wisdom enabled humanity to evolve into the intelligent species it is today, and we would be remiss not to tap into it.

The emergence of the need for a New Civilization is a manifestation of a rising consciousness of who we are as humans, and what values would best shape our relationships to one another and to nature.

(A: I'm sure they're about to tell us what they are. You know, for what WE are. We're all in it together, 'eh. [Alan laughing.] I tell ya.)

You know, again, as I say, they never give up. Because they're paid full time to go on, these big think tanks and so on, 'eh. That's from the Club of Rome. Wow! Profound that is. 'eh? The "I am because you are", 'eh? Hm. Oh, I have to ponder that for all of... 10 seconds maybe. That's the rubbish they come out with there, you know, where they've made it quite plain, they just hate people. Especially those useless eaters, you know, the ones who have no real functions anymore and you just consume, you know, parts of their planet for goodness sake. Yep.

The Limits to Growth you can look up yourself too on Wikipedia and other places.

The Limits to Growth

en.wikipedia.org

The Limits to Growth (LTG) is a 1972 report on the exponential economic and population growth (A: Again, computer models, 'eh.) with a finite supply of resources, studied by computer simulation.

It's interesting, the WEF and the Limits to Growth for the Club of Rome came out about 1972, the early 70s, all at the same time, you see. All in preparation for with happening NOW. Hm. They go on about their graphs and wonderful stuff, and there's too many people. And, if two of you have two children, it's not bad, you know, but if the two of you have three children, that could be a problem and, you know, you, you... Meanwhile, you look at how many children, it's like Margaret Sanger, she had five of her own and she's wanting everybody else to abort theirs. It's always the same stuff you come across, isn't it?

Then you find…

CDC's failed coronavirus tests were tainted with coronavirus, feds confirm arstechnica.com / 20 April 2020

A federal investigation found CDC researchers not following protocol.

Getty | Bloomberg

I'll put this one up too. It's Bloomberg I think, or Getty / Bloomberg, this article here. So, you know, as I say, and it's all, it's all out there, all this kind of information for those that want to read it. Then you have South Africa…

'The need is massive,' say donors as 3km Centurion food queue shocks SA timeslive.co.za / 30 April 2020

Residents of Mooiplaas and Spruit informal settlements in Centurion, north of Johannesburg, came out in numbers to collect food hampers on Wednesday, forming a queue 3km long.

While 8,000 food hampers were handed out, this is just a drop in the ocean, said social activist Yusuf Abramjee.

“The need for food is massive. More than 80% of this community are foreigners and they have not received any help from government. We are happy we made a small difference,” he said.

It's happening in different countries too. Of course, they had the big locust thing going across parts of Africa too eating up crops. Then they get other problems with the usual West... well... I hate to use the West, it's not really them. [Alan chuckles.] It's these characters within your countries that keep fomenting the wars and disrupt nations and keep them from ever getting to any kind of form of stabilization. When they get stable, you see, they might start demanding money for the people, for the big corporations that come in to take the resources. So, you keep them all disrupted, and you come in to help them. Meaning, you supply mercenaries to keep everything tame, then you can keep the looting going on.

Nothing's ever really straightforward, I tell ya. There's always money behind things and who wants what, you know. Always. I don't care what side, left, right, or whatever, I think they all work for the same bosses. The two wings, left-wing and right-wing are all attached to the same body. I said that back in the 90s, and I haven't changed my mind there. And...

Farmers Are Starting to Destroy Their Pigs After Factories Close - bloomberg.com / 23 April 2020

Another article here. That's in Canada, euthanizing hogs and stuff. And then another article…

Hog-Culling Next As Meatpacking Plants Shutter Operations Stoking Food Shortage Fears In Weeks - zerohedge.com / 25 April 2020

It was all intended to happen, because you just don't close down societies. Especially the healthy population. Unless you WANT this to happen. Which is the inevitable conclusion I have to come to. They've got their austerity programs worked out here. And then…

Kroger Begins Limiting Purchases On Ground Beef And Pork In Some Stores - zerohedge.com / 1 May 2020

And…

U.S. facing Great Depression-era unemployment rate, W.H. economic adviser says - washingtontimes.com / 26 April 2020

That's the White House economic advisor, I guess. It goes on and on and on. They're getting what they want. They couldn't get it before because you wouldn't just give up eating and, you know, buying things and all that stuff. One article has got little bits of temporary up, temporary high...

Millions Of Now-Unemployed Americans Are Making More Money Than They Did When Working - zerohedge.com / 25 April 2020

That will be temporary, folks. Eventually it will come down to bank cutbacks and cutbacks until you're on a fraction of that, as you go into total austerity. Also this article here is from the Irish news here, the Irish Sentinel. It’s again from Helena Handbasket, which is a genuine reporter actually but with a different name.   It’s on geopolitics and so on.

Useful Idiot ‘New Normals’ v Anti-Tyranny ‘Terrorists’ theirishsentinel.com / 30 April 2020 / Helena Handbasket

If there's one thing certain to emerge in the wake of the phased opening of economies throughout the US, it's that the minority who can think for themselves will become the new ignorant disease spreaders, (A: [Alan chuckles.] That's true enough, 'eh. [Alan chuckles.] If you think for yourself.) according to those who have decided that they love their servitude to their Big Brother masters.

They've received their 'free' money stimulus bribe to help them play, their bread and circuses allocation, from their benevolent dictators and have the latest gadgets and toys to entertain them in their self-imposed confinement. I say self-imposed because nobody really forced them to inter themselves in their homes. All they had to do, en masse, was to simply refuse house arrest. Businesses simply had to ignore governor's diktats and remain open to maintain the economy and livelihoods of their employees.

Unfortunately, society complied and simply rolled over and obeyed orders to stay home, stay safe and stay scared of something they had no knowledge of and no interest in finding out about.

(A: I'd add to that too, that they had no real data to go with it because it was all scare tactics of course, graphs and horror stories and percentages, etc., etc.)

The truly sad part, and which has been typical of human nature throughout history, is that these ignorant masses, the snitch corp, will be the very people who drag us all down with them into this coming hell on Earth, if we let them, which they cannot fathom and refuse to see on the horizon even as it rolls over the horizon straight at them.

They wave their flags and chant, "USA! USA!" and enthusiastically clap health workers and call them 'heroes' as they perform dance routines on YouTube. The irony is that many health workers have been 'furloughed' or laid off permanently with any of them who dare to speak out about the farce of Covid-19 being silenced through censorship of social media etc. to ensure the ignorant masses remain ignorant in the alcohol and drug fuelled soma state spending cash as if there's an unlimited supply from their benevolent President. They truly have been trumped and yet still sound the trumpets for more of the same stripping of their rights to 'keep them safe'.

And it doesn't matter which party would be in. As I say, Obama was applauded by Rumsfeld and the rest of them, the neocons, when he took over for carrying on the same wars and even expanding them.

That's all the time I really have for tonight. Remember folks too, go into cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Hopefully you can send a few bucks my way. You'll see how to do it there. PayPal and other methods too. Even cash can get sent, that's fine. You'll find out where to send it to @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. The links are there to my talks. Remember, my talks too, short or long you can download them first and then play them. It's often better that way. As I say, just send a few bucks my way. And hopefully, hopefully, if they get back printing again, I'll be able to get some books done up very quickly and then out to the people. The post office is still kind of semi-going. I understand things are getting stuck in the States in some places, sometimes for a month or more because of this chaos that's going on here.

So I hope you'll, as I say, go into my website @cuttingthroughthematrix.com and make sure that you take a list of my sites so you can always get me, whether I'm pulled off other sites or not you can always get me on my own sites. You can keep in touch with me too because I like to hear from people and how things are perceived through their own eyes and what they are noticing and understanding.

For myself Alan Watt from Ontario Canada, it's good night and may your God or gods go with you.

Topics of show covered in following links:

The new propaganda is liberal. The new slavery is digital.

HOLD THE FRONT PAGE. THE REPORTERS ARE MISSING.

Bristol's Nightingale Hospital remains empty a week after opening

The CDC is going door to door in metro Atlanta to test residents for antibodies

Chicago launches new Covid app that could help with vaccine rollout

77 Brigade: Is British Military Waging an Information War on Its Own Population?

Apple And Google Are Releasing The Early Versions Of Their Joint Contact Tracing Tool To Developers.

Video: US Coronavirus ‘Bailout’ Scam Is $6 Trillion Giveaway to Wall St – Economist Michael Hudson Explains

Beyond Meat and McDonald’s expand Canadian plant-based burger test

Cargill meat packing plant closure: COVID-19 outbreak among foreign workers tops 500 cases

McDonald’s Canada to start using imported beef amid Canadian supply concerns

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES Office of the Secretary Vax Damage Immunity

Public Readiness and Emergency Preparedness Act

Delaying herd immunity is costing lives

Dr. Fauci Backed Controversial Wuhan Lab With Millions Of U.S. Dollars For Risky Coronavirus Research

Fort Detrick lab shut down after failed safety inspection; all research halted indefinitely

Dr. Fauci pointed out that NIAID plans to partner with USAMRIID in bioterrorism research. p3

Margaret Chan

'So much for us being NHS heroes': Southmead Hospital workers in zero hour contract 'nightmare'

CCP-Linked Firm Targets U.S. Schoolkids With Chinese ‘Morality and Values’, Shows CCP Military Parades in Schools

The Massive Inflatable Crisis That is COVID-19

YouTube yanks doctors' warning of constitutional crisis of COVID-19

New paper outlines ways to boost manufacturing and supply systems resilience

The Seven-Step Path from Pandemic to Totalitarianism

Over-50s should be kept in coronavirus lockdown for longer and FINED if they cannot prove their age when out and about in public, study suggests

'Anti-vaxxers stay home': Health Minister issues warning, announces new flu vaccine program for all primary school children

A Green Reboot After the Pandemic

Finance Watch and The Club of Rome Conference

Call To Action To G20 Leaders: Emerging From The Emergency With People, Planet, Prosperity At The Heart Of The Covid-19 Recovery

Emerging New Civilizations Initiative

The Limits to Growth

CDC’s failed coronavirus tests were tainted with coronavirus, feds confirm

'The need is massive,' say donors as 3km Centurion food queue shocks SA

Farmers Are Starting to Destroy Their Pigs After Factories Close

Hog-Culling Next As Meatpacking Plants Shutter Operations Stoking Food Shortage Fears In Weeks

Kroger Begins Limiting Purchases On Ground Beef And Pork In Some Stores

U.S. facing Great Depression-era unemployment rate, W.H. economic adviser says

Millions Of Now-Unemployed Americans Are Making More Money Than They Did When Working

’ v Anti-Tyranny ‘Terrorists’

O

May 10, 2020 "Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt (Blurb, i.e. Educational Talk): " The Dark Dominion Disdains Your Opinion

Hi folks I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through the Matrix on May 10, 2020. As always, I hope you're hhhch, pulling through all this craziness we're going through at the moment as the big agenda rolls forward, in a desperate act really. Not the last of the list, they've got a whole list of A, B, C, D, E's to fall back on because people haven't really fallen for the whole climate idea, and they're not cutting back on their consumption of things and so on and going vegan. And they're still having children, some of them, believe it or not, in this day and age, people are still having children. I mean, live births, that is, you know, and then taking care of them.

Then they had to go to the next step obviously, because the exact same agenda is being rammed through by the WEF, the World Economic Forum. The Forum of course, you find the same big corporations that backed all the sustainability and the greening of society and the post-consumerism. You'd think it's crazy when big corporations want you to stop consuming so much. Well, they still want you to consume what they own or rule and run, especially the energy sector as well because they benefit from it. Because what they lose through any decision by government, that government pays them the difference, so they don't lose at all.

That's how things really work in this modern society. It's been like that for quite a long time, ever since it was first announced, the public-private partnership deals that Prince Charles was sent out to proclaim to the general population of the planet. It was on the go even before that had happened of course because they've used this in times of wars in fact. World War I and II where the government basically puts majordomo's in charge of sectors of industry and they have dictatorial powers, to get done whatever they want to get done, regardless of the laws. And they do it that way. Well, it's the same thing happening right now.

So, the WEF of course last year talked about the sustainability programs and how we just weren't listening well enough. And all the terror and fear of us frying to death with the global warming wasn't really working so they would go the next step. And here you are. The same characters, all the same characters are involved with the Club of Rome, the usual circle of friends that they have, including the ones who are in charge of the supposed health of different countries too, that are all on board with the same thing. The same people. Many of them are actually openly talking about it, they'll have a green world when they come out of this, and no business will be allowed to start up if it's got any adverse effect on the planet or the climate… Or anything at all that's against… if it's just profit, it's taboo, it's got to be a green profit, you see. So, they're going to accomplish a whole bunch of agendas here are all at once.

And the public are so mind bombed, I'm sure, with incredible overload of propaganda. That's what most information is, it's not really truth it's just propaganda. Including the ones that are the anti-... going to come out supposedly to expose the disinformation sites etc., they're just, they're probably, some of them are the biggest propagandists out there. Propaganda rules the world. It always has ruled the world. The whole history of Edward Bernays and the books he churned out and many after of course really just verified what he said. They understood human nature very well, before they had all the extra so-called social sciences tacked on to it.

Nothing, there's really nothing new under the sun as they say. And what works, even thousands of years ago can work again today if you know the formulas to introduce it. The best one as I've said before is fear and terror. Oh my God, this enemy over there is going to come in their chariots and going to kill you, unless you listen to us and do what we say, and pay us for it, and there's going to be a price, mind you, etc. etc. And we all have to go along with it through fear and terror. It really works awfully well.

We know from this Covid one that it's beyond, it's beyond, what can you call it, it's criminal what's happened. It's criminal what's happened with a consortium of the same people, the exact same people who belong to all the climate agenda groups and the World Economic Forum and the Club of Rome, the exact same groups all dictating to us along with the so-called health experts on how... And the health experts are also part of the WEF and the COR and so on. You couldn't make this up if you wanted to, it's a big cabal.

It's big when you look at all the organizations that are ruled. But when you see the ones, the players who are members of all of them, it's a small cadre really. They have their faces plastered all over televisions across the planet right now with their official prewritten scripts to spiel out to us every day. It's quite fascinating to watch it all. But I don't really watch TV. I don't watch it at all actually, but I get what I do from the Internet. That's bad enough. So, I can imagine that the people who have got their TVs turned on all day long, they must be living in absolute freaking land, you know, they're freaked out. And they can't get their thoughts together. And they're locked down. They can't get to work. They're all dependent on some kind of income from government handouts. And they’re given no promise for a future.

It's not intended, they've made it quite plain, you're not going to go back to any kind of normalicy. The ones who are to take over the new normalicy as they call it, I did shows years ago on new normals and everybody has copied the idea of it. [Alan chuckles.] But the thing is, they give you new normals. They’re quite open about what they're going to bring in right now in fact, very shortly, and at least how it's going to affect you.

What I've noticed is that these new normals are really the old new normals that were put on the shelves for many years when they couldn't ram them through. They, of course, are those who rule the world, the big organizations that literally created bridges over governments. Not just between governments but over them and around them and around the laws too of your nations. The very thing that a member of the CFR mentioned that they would do in the States, years and years ago. That rather than hit the Constitution head-on, as it had always done and getting rebuffed, they would simply go around it and ignore it and over it. That's what they've done with the whole planet actually.

It's the same agenda. Very old agenda. But yeah, this whole set of new normals that are going to come in, such as children learning from home basically through computers and so on as opposed to going to classrooms, are really old wish lists that they've had for years and years sitting on, you know, in the high, high shelves. Now they just brush off the dust and bring out all their wish lists that they've shelved as well, the same companies, same organizations, same NGOs, same big foundations and away we go of course. And they have the right fear to do it, the real technique of fear episode to do it. And the folk will comply, because they're given no option basically at the moment.

So, that's how we're really run and ruled. It's quite fascinating to actually live through it and watch it happening. Where we watch the incredible Malthusian type graphs that... He was one of the first ones to put graphs out. He was an economist really for the big banks in London at the time and the government of Britain. And of course, we are human capital, we've always been human capital. We create everything. Marx said the same thing too, everything comes from labor basically. So, you're human capital for those that own the capital. You buy everything that they make sure that you need, in whatever is the latest modern society you live in. You have to buy new things and new... Of course, we've gone from cars and TV sets to computers and cell phones and everything else to do with it. So, they always make sure they're in charge of all the items you'll need.

Including of course the agribusinesses now. They used to have farms. We don't have so many farms now. They've been put under for many, many years, since about the 40s or 50s really, from the 50s onwards, to make sure that the big Agri farm businesses own everything. They of course, as we all know, old stories, but they all collude of course. They are in bed with the chemical industry that makes the fertilizer and the herbicides and the pesticides. So, it's all, it all goes together, you see, works together. And the small farms have been getting put under for a long, long, long time.

Beautiful, really, because if you want survivability, you want lots of small farms. And if you're looking from the other side of the fence, those who want to control everything, and they need a crisis or a wartime scenario, it's a perfect, perfect way to do it is to eliminate ways that people can feed themselves. If you can feed yourself, you've got less worries obviously. If you can't feed yourself, you're dependent on incredible modernistic Soviet type bread lines, when you're lined up outside, and even have as I say, modernized, now it's all tickertape and marked out floors and so on that you're supposed to follow. As though it's going to make any difference at all.

You see, what you've been living through for a long time is something, I've touched on it so many times that folk probably get bored with it. I get bored mentioning it. But the techniques that we're going through today were designed in the 1920s and 30s and 40s by often the same people that gave us a good part of the culture you're now presently in, they designed the culture and the changes. They designed even dances to make people... copy foreign systems, put it that way, and sexualize everything to a high degree. The same people over and over and over. And the same organizations that they actually were funded by, and who, that they worked with.

Bertrand Russell is a classic example because he loved to boast about it in his own books. Many other ones are involved too and they had books written for them, which is never stops until the present day. Most books you see out there are written for them, and you might be surprised at some of the ones who are even leading the alternative media. [Alan chuckles.] It's the same agenda there too, other people write the books for them. And make them stars. For those who don't know that.

Bertrand Russell talked about how you could train people, even, especially with children, if you give them new normal values, new normals, you see, make that normal, whatever the new one is. Bertrand Russell said, you can give them new values, the new values would be set by society and be unquestioned eventually. But the first thing to do was to break tradition of what words actually meant when you start. He said, it will be possible eventually, if you had a bunch of children, separated from the rest of the children in the world, in their own schools, you could train them from birth and tell them that that snow is black snow. It's naturally black. They would see the same snow, but they would call it black from then on. So that when they mixed with other people outside their little world, their enclosed little world, they'd have battles over the meanings of things. But to the children brought up to say, yeah that snow, what they see there, which is white to everybody else, is black, and the other people were wrong, you see. You've already started them on the way to changing the meaning of words and what those words eventually mean obviously.

That's what we're living through now too. So, if you can say, well, that's not a tree there and give it a different name altogether, naturally you'll come into conflict. Right? Now, it's even better if you wanted to do cognitive dissonance as they call it where you shock people by scaring them about/with their own sanity by saying, by changing things halfway through normalcy, or your lifespan, put it that way, and suddenly you're to call it something else, which is obviously, which it is not. Once you start that, and everybody is scratching their heads wondering why it was forced down their throats, a lot of this kind of stuff, it's because you're now in the next step of it, you see… having to walk along colored lines and x’s on the floor and things like that. Absolute nonsense.

Do you really think that a virus, that you breathe out, with every breath you exhale, and believe it or not, I mean the whole idea of masks as well, especially the surgical masks, is a joke! Because you can see the old documentaries from the 70s and 80s where you see surgeons with high special lenses and so on, and you see the stuff getting shot through. You get a higher velocity from the person behind the mask and going outwards, because now it's compressed and it's forced through, a higher pressure through the mask, [Alan chuckles.] and it shoots out and goes further than if you didn't have a mask on at all!

So, it's, what I'm getting at is I'm not saying don't wear a mask. What I'm saying is, you're being taught the Russell form of insanity. And you’re taught that this insanity is now normal. Like, your lines and cues and 6 feet apart. Do you really think a virus is from Star Trek or something? Is that what you think? I mean, stop yourselves, even if you're angry at what I'm saying, and what is he talking about here? Do you really think a virus is so programmed intelligently, right, that it says, oh I've gone 6 feet from this person I'd better stop right here? Do you really believe that? Do you believe that?

If you have the slightest breeze behind you, the slightest, you won't even feel it, it's going to go 100 yards, maybe more. And especially since it doesn't die off quickly. What on earth has this 6 feet apart thing got to do with anything, in reality? It's an idea. It's an idea, that's what it is, 'eh? But it's training you into a form, a form of absurdity. You have all these professionals coming out trying to tell you that this is quite normal scientifically and they explain it to you, etc. But it's based on ideas, as opposed to reality or factual checking, and counterchecking, etc., etc., etc.

This is the Russell technique basically you're living through. And from now on, I gave you this talk years ago, something similar. I said, once you accept the new normals like this, years ago, before even the last outbreak in 2009, and long before that too. I said, if you accept them, you have to go through a whole agenda now of everything being made new, every new normal. You see?

Now, psychology and behaviorism and the neurosciences are all combined and have been for a long, long time studying humans. We are the main sources of study, humans of course and our behavior and our natural responses to things too. There's nothing that really is not known about how we'll react. They also have the percentages down pretty accurately of the majority of the public, they knew it back in the days of Aldous Huxley, who talked about most people being really hypnotizable or suggestible, extra suggestible. And because they're prone to suggestibility, he said about 60% of the public fall under the spell of a well laid out spiel of propaganda that wants to make them do something or buy something or behave in a different fashion or believe something. So, 60%, if it's said by professionals, will grab it immediately and just parrot it, you see. Very similar to what Brzezinski said many, many years later in his own books.

But Aldous Huxley said, and he gave the talk at Berkeley which you can still get, if it's still up on YouTube or somewhere. He said that another 10%, about another 10%, you see, or even 20% could be done with more, a little bit more pressure and time and patience applied by the person who wants you to do what they want you to do. He says, you could gradually bring them over. Oh it didn't work, yeah, try a little bit more of this or a little bit more of that, and give it a bit of time, it will work on that, and sure enough, you can bring them into the belief of it too, whatever it is, with a bit more time. And he says, then you're left with maybe 10% or 15%, and he said, they are harder, these are the hardest ones to bring under. Some can't be brought under at all.

They are, today that's more of a rarity. Most folk go under the spell of the professional indoctrination that we get fed all the time. Persuading people is a science, I hope you understand that. It's not just someone yapping. It's a science. They're taught to do it. The teachers are given tool kits to brainwash the children to make sure the children will be true believers it whatever's being taught and come out with it too. It works awfully well.

They know how to as well, just like the person trying to make you believe something you're not supposed to according to Huxley, that perhaps you even shouldn't for your own benefit he said. He said that with more persuasion a lot more will come under. But the last grouping won't, it won't happen to them. Maybe 93% can go under eventually with a lot more pressure and persuasion. Or even bribery in fact, ah try that, we'll even pay you to try that and blah blah blah and away they go. But maybe 7% or so or even less, or can't be brought under, they're not hypnotizable. That's always been a problem for those who rule. Especially in this day and age when they use sciences very, very efficiently to bring people under the spell of whatever they're trying to push or get them to behave a certain way or do whatever they want them to do.

What I'm saying isn't that far-fetched. I mean, the talks I've given, for instance, over many, many years get condensed, by some people you know awfully well actually, and then they're promoted by higher authorities to push the same stuff. But I've been giving these talks for years and years and years and I'm not charging for it either so you can go into cuttingthroughthematrix.com remember, my own website. Everybody else does that you hear out there. You can find articles and so on and listen to my talks. Because I go through the art of persuasion in great detail and how it really works.

Now, remember, the art of persuasion does also take into it crisis. If you can't what you want the public to do, then create a crisis, terrify them, and watch them go to it. They've done it before with previous, I'd hardly call them pandemics, but severe flu seasons for instance or novel flus too. It's always going to be a terror and a horror story, etc. I gave the talks last week where I pointed out from the, again, the main sources themselves, sometimes the vaccinations they put out had disastrous consequences on youngsters and adults too, with Guillain Barre syndrome and different kinds of paralysis coming out and neurological problems too. It's just astonishing what's been done and yet the same groups are out there hyping it again for the next round. It's just amazing.

The same techniques tend to work. They know exactly how many women as opposed to men will be for government and authority. Women somehow, and again Hitler said the same thing, it's authority that says come here, come to us and do what we say, we are strong, we're here to help you. They give you faith and confidence, and that's what they use to aim at. Hitler said, the women come to us during times of crisis for food and everything else, and they bypass their husbands. So, the state becomes the new husband, you see, and the woman goes to the state. So, they get real adherence to the State, a lot of them. And the children, he says, the children must follow the mother, and then must follow the man... or, therefore must follow the man. So, he's got no choice at the end. That technique works all the time over and over and over again. It's just astonishing to watch it getting played out once more. They know how many men will go for it too, what economic brackets they come from and social systems and so on, socioeconomic brackets they fall into, they had the percentages down pretty well.

But they also know that lots and lots of people in the medical profession, who get, you see, they DO see the results of vaccinations, and they're terrified always to lose their jobs by saying anything. Other ones are, don't really care as long as they don't take it themselves. But over the last 2009/10 season when they tried vaccinations and so on, lots of staff medical staff as I mentioned before, covered for each other by falsifying, that's how scared they are of what they see, they falsified that each other, they were giving each other the shots, you see, so that they were covered because they knew a lot of this stuff gives you terrible consequences. As I say, the German parliament refused to take the stuff which they had mandated for the general population in Germany in 2009/10. So, you're living through incredible pressures through fear and terror to comply.

Now, the big boys themselves, and gals, because we have equal opportunity tyrants in this day and age. They're all for rolling out the whole agenda, and lifelong vaccinations. I've got articles from the League of Nations when they set that up in about 1919 or so and they had a department for health in it too. They came out then with their wish list of how they could vaccinate the whole planet for everything under the sun. Most of which you had never heard of then at the time, and you haven't heard of since. It really doesn't matter. But they had all these plans that they would just raise you in a socialistic society of obedience and they could get their wicked way with you.

Of course, naturally the private corporations that make profits off this were all behind it and helping to [Alan chuckles.] put out the amazing wonderful Utopian propaganda. But that vision has never gone away. When it morphed into the United Nations it was still there, the same panels and all that, right down to the present time. You have the same characters behind it.

We've got to get out of this “utopia”. We've got to get out of it, that we're living in a very real system with caring peoples and institutions, and everything is very Disneyesque, you know, where the people are really nice, and the corporations are nice and their CEOs are nice people. Everybody's just nice-nice, you see. We've got to go away from that, or we're done for, you understand, you're really done for.

I used to give talks about suspending your disbelief. You know? That's what we're in today. Because you've got to, you've got to say wait a minute here, there really are evil people in this world. EVIL is the word to use, folks. That's the words to use, is EVIL and DISHONEST and CONNIVING, and COLLUDING with other EVIL people. And it's not new.

It's like the ancient times you had it even in religions, the Old Testament had the evil men of the world, the RICH MEN of the world, the leaders, conspiring with each other against their own peoples. Well, that's happened before. Because those at the top, they do really see themselves as a separate group or race from anyone else. They see themselves as a super intellectual gifted elite. I mean gifted by the fact that they accumulate incredible wealth and can manipulate armies and nations and all the rest of it. So naturally they used to breed in ancient times with each other quite happily.

But evil is evil, nonetheless. So much of what's been done in secret is out in the open today. The Internet is an awful problem. Years ago, before I even had an Internet I was on shows, because I didn't want anything to do with computers. Initially I thought, you know, they couldn't bring this into being without a computer managing a whole planet and spying on everybody and gathering everybody's data and so on. They couldn't bring it to pass without a computer. Years later in fact I heard a preacher in the States who was a character too himself. He used to come out with a cigar on his stage and he said the same thing. He said that Satan could never pull off anything for a world type system without the use of computerization. And it's so obvious, isn't it?

Whether you want to believe in religion or not, it's up to you. But the fact is, it always points that things have been done before and before and before going back into the dawn of man no doubt. I'm sure a few cavemen at one time formed a committee to try to take over the caves of everybody on the hillside. That's what happens with human nature.

The base man, in psychopathy for instance, the base man, the base psychopath is the one whose an habitual criminal who ends up seeing something in a window, I want it now, and he smashes the window, grabs it and ends up gets caught, he's in a prison and so on. But the real intelligent psychopath is up, he gravitates up towards the top on leadership positions where the power is where he can really fill his pockets much better, and get away with it, as opposed to getting caught by police outside a jewelry store. These psychopaths are the ones who go into business, and really fly up through and become CEOs because they're ruthless. They're very pleasantly ruthless, that's the charm that the psychopath can have. They're like an alien creature to look at them really and how they operate. They've always been a puzzlement to psychiatry. Mind you a lot of things are puzzlement to psychiatry in this day and age because they changed their laws and everything some years ago for political reasons.

So, you end up with the type of psychopath that can be sometimes creative, most of them are not creative. The creative ones go off into tangents and they're kind of unique in a certain way. But they've got, and often they're driven towards high art or something, but at least they create something and hopefully they're not living off government grants as they are today in most countries in the West anyway. But the creative ones can often support themselves, but their erratic behavior still is repetitive.

Psychopaths at the lower levels don't learn by mistakes. They'll do the same things over and over again. The higher psychopaths learn to an extent what to avoid. They might want to still do the same things, but they'll try and avoid them if possible, or find ways to get around them and still get what they want. But they have a great ability for manipulation of other people. They get other people to do all their work for them for instance. And they'll do it gladly, the people around psychopaths often worship them. It's just astonishing. They praise them like a God in fact, they're like gurus. But they're highly dangerous too. If you listen to a psychopath in a higher position of the CEO of some big corporation, when he's not at work for instance, or she, you can get some women too that are just as psychopathic. But they can come out with amazing statements of honesty from their point of view, because they have no reason to hide it at that particular moment. And they often love to boast about things too, is another trait that they have.

They can be very blunt about things. Such as, oh yeah, there's just too many people, you know, they're quite open about it, and they should just be eliminated and yada, yada, ya. Well, the same people, remember, are the people who gravitate up to the World Economic Forum. They have their special clubs there. I've mentioned before the Lucky Gene Club that some of the well-known people belonged to. It's got other names too naturally. I'll touch on that tonight. But that's where they all meet, and then the Club of Rome. Then they can get, persuade governments, they can persuade governments… I think we're so corrupt they probably bribed governments actually, to basically do their bidding at times and get statues and laws passed to do with the agendas that they want to carry through.

The greatest danger in this day and age is the fact that they're really, for a long time they've built these bridges over us and around us and bypassed the laws by creating these supra-national entities that we don't vote for. And because they've been around for maybe 40 years some of them you think they're normal. No, they're not normal. They were created, they're artificial entities created to rule us and to get away from this idea of you electing governments who are responsible to you. Very dangerous indeed. Because you're now under a system which you can't control. You can't vote people out of office because they won't, they've got nothing to do with it. It's this agency that's grafted itself on as an auxiliary to government in a sense, you see. That's where we are today with all of this.

What we're living through today as I've said before, is just the same agenda that's been hammering away for many, many years, from the days of, oh, Thomas Malthus. And Malthus, every first-year social sciences student gets taught about Malthus. Not to denigrate him but to actually applaud him and oh, he's a great man. Malthus as I say was just, he just hated the people, the ordinary folk. To him and his economists you either had a function that suited them, or you were superfluous and you were just, you should be eliminated basically. That was Malthus's idea.

He came out with these charts and graphs they're still using today. It's very impressive, it shocks people, you know. It works awfully well. And since most folk never understand them, especially when you present them with about 10 in a half-hour setting, maybe a 15-minute setting, you've totally confused them. But they'll go along with what you say because they don't understand it. You gaslight them in a sense. They sit back and the brain shuts down and they're just ears listening. You must know what you're talking about, I don't understand you, you're a professional, I'm not, so I'll take your opinion and that's good enough for me. That's how things work. It's very simple.

It's the same technique that preachers used, in America especially because they talk so fast. It's the first thing that hits people when they come over, when you listen to some of the TV evangelists, especially that are like superstar Hollywood types. They use the same lighting scenarios as Hollywood. They have massive staffs doing lighting and sound. It's like a big production, a big, like a rock band would use. Sometimes more equipment than a rock band would use for the big, big presentations. But they talk so fast and have all the... Jimmy Swaggart was awfully good with the poses he would do. He would pose like Elvis Presley with his legs, the leg split apart, you know, and the microphone stuck outside in that gesture, etc. Everything but the cape of Elvis.

It was very effective for the people who followed. You talk at a rapid, rapid pace, very rapid. So fast, this is the trick to it too, a lot of them, that you can't keep up with it. Your mind doesn't have time to analyze what's being said and so eventually you shut down your critical thinking part that information's going through, it shuts down. Then you sit back, and you're downloaded by the stuff that's being downloaded because you can't keep up with it and as I say, basically use your censor part to analyze the data as its coming into you. It works very well. It's kind of a browbeating technique, you see. Certain ads use the same sort of stuff.

The other way to do it is again by quieter techniques and using more science and the sciences that are persuasion and getting you to come to the proper conclusions about things, the desired conclusions. And you still never understand it, but you have this big impression in your head of these massive graphs, oh, look at that graph and that spike here and blah, blah, blah. Eventually you just listen to what they say, and oh, that's just fantastic, if I invest in this company, I'm going to go up in a spike by the end of about eight months and yada, ya. Or alternately, we’re all going to die if we don't do this in eight months. That's how presentations are worked out for the public.

There are sciences, there's whole, I mean if you go into the marketing corporations, this stuff is taught to them, how to do this and how to make people, how to persuade people to do what you want them to do or buy what you want them to buy. Bernays went through it all too. So again, old sciences and perfected by more studies upon human nature. And techniques of communication where it's all electronic today in fact, it's incredible. Where else can you get the whole world getting the same propaganda from the same sources during a crisis like this is today? It's just astonishing, 'eh, about the Covid.

You'll find that Fauci and the rest of them and Bill Gates aren't just getting hit in America and the West. All over the world the same people are getting it translated to them. That's immense power, isn't it? Of course, the danger is always, once again, I don't care who is presenting what and how real something may be or may not be. The danger with, when it's unification of propaganda, then there's no counter to it, there's no other point of view. That's incredibly dangerous. The whole idea of democracy is supposedly based on opposing opinions and debate. We don't have that now because you're in a post-democratic system.

The system that's unrolled is your scientific socialism, your scientific elite running the show. Your technocracy. Old idea, very old. That's what's been unrolled basically. Even with the League of Nations that was really put out on behalf of the same organizations that ruled the old world and the British Empire at that time, the richest people in London went back to the League of Nations and helped finance it and create it. The Royal Institute of International Affairs set it up and drafted up everything. The Lord Alfred Milner group actually were behind it at that time, then it blossomed into the Royal Institute of International Affairs, and they have their branches across the whole planet now. The whole European Parliament are members of it, for the European Parliament group. The Asian-Pacific group too but based in Japan is still on the go and running Australia and China and other places. It's incredibly powerful. They've kept it very low-key. But everybody who's anybody in government across these nations are all part of the same organization. And the US is the Council on Foreign Relations.

So, they set up the whole system. They set up the banking system, the League of Nations that blossomed into the United Nations. They set up the Bank for International Settlements, awfully important, which is coming into its own right now more so than ever before because they are the ones who decide on currencies and the value of every nation's currency according to debts, etc. Remember, it's privately owned, although we fund it at the same time. Beautiful, you got your public/private. They own it, we just fund it and pay for its costs. You also have the IMF, International Monetary Fund, same group that created that too. They come in as the heavy guys when you can't pay back the loans, and they bring you down to utter austerity to try to pay back the loans by cutting your healthcare and everything else that they can cut back on. Folk don't even know when Maggie Thatcher was in the IMF came in for a good part of that reign and ran the policies of Britain behind the scenes. Cut back everything.

These are the same situations all run by a private company, and separate, a private company, who also brought you the European Union. They drafted up the whole idea for the European Union and helped implement it, appointed the people to be leaders. They drafted up the NAFTA agreement, the North American Free Trade Agreement, that's now morphed into the same deal too. Everybody was talking about NAFTA; it became so common folk knew what it meant so they change the name to the USMCA I think it is called. But it's the same organization running the show. And of course, the Pacific rim group too, was the next step too after China.

So, we're well on the way to this integrated world run by the same group. Anybody who's anybody has to belong to these groups. Of course, they always pretend that when they go into become prime minister or president that, well, temporarily, it's just, I don't belong to them, temporarily. Who's kidding who?! What, did they take their, is it taking off your Boy Scout socks or something? It makes you...? Come on! Of course, they're still members of it.

Carroll Quigley talked about that, he was so proud of it, the fact that pretty well every country was run by them, and every member of Parliament at the top are all members of it in the old British Commonwealth countries. And in India. These are the ones who are brought to power by the same financial people. If they've got money, you can bring anybody to power, you can put any dummy you want in the front. Quite easy to do.

And they really don't like, they really don't like this idea of democracy. The Club of Rome, I've gone through it ad nauseum, the Club of Rome from their own writings, and Limits to Growth and all the other books they've put out since then. They go on about this failure of democracy, that they can't get the big agendas through because of folk arguing, they don't want it and they decide no. You see, they don't believe you have the right to say no to anything that they want. [Alan chuckles.] It's always been a nuisance to tyrants and nobility. But now it's this big, big group at the top. It hasn't changed. Once again, they’re out, right now with, oh, this democracy idea is just in the way, we've got to bypass it with a crisis and overrule it with the crisis etc. etc. For the new system. They want it permanent of course.

There's nothing new in this. Democracy was a joke. I read some books put out by acquaintances of Winston Churchill. They all belong to the same private clubs in London, contemporaries and peers of Churchill. They used to meet even during World War I and discuss, and over their brandies and cigars and so on, but they would discuss, even when they were getting bombed by the zeppelins from World War I they could hear the explosions in the distance. But they were chatting away about the future and all that. They were talking about this joke, this joke, that they didn't even treat seriously, of democracy. Churchill made quite a few statements about democracy and those behind it and yada, yada, ya. They would use it, but they knew it was a joke. Especially in Britain, where the crown, everything was owned by the Crown. The police were owned by the Crown. The Army and Air Force and the Navy is owned by the Crown. Their post office is owned by the Crown. You know, everything is the Crown. The Commonwealth countries are the same. Still are by the way. That's where they swear allegiance to. There's never a mention of serving the people, you know, anywhere, it's always to the Crown. Which is, it makes a whole farce of democracy exactly that, it's a farce.

You find once in a while, you'll see even in recent years, the list of people, even from the Labour Party, it doesn't matter what party they belong to because the whole of politics is a big party from the beginning to end, on our tab. But even in the Labour Party they all want to get Knighted. Britain has had top Marxists knighted by the crown. Why do you think the crown would knight Marxists and revolutionaries, that supposedly would be there to tear them down and abolish the crown? I'll leave you with these little puzzles, 'eh. [Alan chuckles.]

That's the reality of what we're living through, is a system, it's the same characters run, have run us for 100 odd years. They were running the world, the Western world, and Europe openly, from about the 1880s right up to... As I say, Carroll Quigley mentioned it in his book in the 1960s. He mentioned that for about the last 80 years every president and prime minister belongs to this organization, in the last 60 years or so, or 80 years. Well, he's going back into the 1880s.

Then they actually give talks and say that people should be, if you wanted real politics, even though you'd always have to watch everybody like, with incredible... You'd have to have parties in the civilian populations just to monitor and watch them and rotate them every few weeks before they got bribed and paid off and brought over. That's what you have to really do. But anyone running for politics should put their cards on the table what they belong to, and what organizations they are members of, and who they've sworn allegiance to in the past before you even consider them eligible for politics. That will never happen either but that's what you'd have to, literally have to do.

Because the people are never served, as you know. At the other side of it too, the same group that gave you this form of democracy today, right, the same people who laugh at it, give you the ones who cause dissensions so the people can never unify against anything. They give you all the different race baiting groups and leaders for all these things too. That's all intentional. It's deliberate. It makes it nonfunctional. Eventually it will collapse as it's meant to do. Until folk will be quite glad to have it taken over by some technocratic system, oh, just take us over and run us properly, we're so sick of this. It's all deliberate, folks. It doesn't happen by itself.

Now I'll start off with an article from someone that I know who is using a pseudonym, talking about…

Words and Slogans as a Weapon of Mass Servitude

theirishsentinel.com / 4 May 2020 / Posted by Helena Handbasket

We've all heard of so-called 'spin doctors' in the political world and other 'public relations' organisations, polling companies and any other entity who works on your psyche to make you to believe in a defined way, for them, in the context that they wish you to accept what they say. Most people don't know and won't accept that this is called propaganda.

(Alan: And it's true, they don't. I'll add to that too, like the previous thing I talked about too with the fast-talking preachers that overload you with their machine gun type rapid-fire speech. But it's also used by those that run up and down the stage waving their hands a lot, motivational experts, etc. It's the same techniques that are used on you, to overcome your sensibilities, that's how it really is. So, this article here talks about it, it says…)

Most people don't know and won't accept that this is called propaganda. (A: Even though they are getting it and they'll prattle it and they'll repeat it.) They will blindly accept what they're told as fact by people who they know to be corrupt liars; primarily in today's era, politicians.

(A: And it's so true, isn't it? It's so sad that folk have fallen right back into parroting politicians. And it's because the ones who parrot it, who are really pushing it, are all paid by forces behind the scenes. When you hear the people pushing the same, especially in the US, the US literally was, had reached a period before Trump came along in fact, where so many of the people realized that this isn't working right. I mean, Obama had taken the cudgel, you know, not the baton but the cudgel from the previous parties, the Bush era, and had increased the wars again across the Middle East and the world. So much so that Donald Rumsfeld congratulated him for continuing them, and continuing his, what they called his, or their, policies.)

(A: So, there was nobody to vote for. There really wasn't. The people were so… knew it was all corrupt. Then the con came along again that someone else was going to change it make it better. You know, kiss your skinned knee and make it all nice and happy again. When you see people pushing that stuff, you'd better believe, folks, they're on the payroll, hm? But really, the Americans had nobody to vote for. They still don't. Neither did Britain really. It was a joke in Britain. The British folks are used to the shoe-ins as they call it, you can pretty well tell what the Masters want. And what the Masters want, the Masters get. The last one of course was Teresa May. She was so in bed with the City of London, the city itself, and so is Boris Johnson, Mayor of the city and so on, that they represent the City of London. That's what they are there for, you know. So, this article goes on and it says that…)

They will blindly accept what they're told as fact by people who they know to be corrupt liars; primarily in today's era, politicians. But more so than ever now we see pseudo-scientists, Anthony Fauci, (Dr. Fakey) and 'philanthropists', such as Billy the Kid Killer, Gates, spouting drivel as science and theft as charity and a deep concern for humanity.

To listen to Fauci and Gates expressing their 'expertise' to a global audience you are supposed to believe that their opinion is the only opinion that matters in a world where mainstream media is utilised to completely control the minds of the vast majority of the public through TV primarily, but also through print and online media, as long as that media is 'authorised'. (A: And it's so true, isn't it?) If any media is unauthorised, then by default it is defined as 'fake news', because if you don't agree with a tiny gang of talking heads who are on every TV channel in the world, every single day, simultaneously throwing out the same sound bites, you can't possibly know better than those 'experts', regardless of the fact that the facts negate absolutely everything they say. It does not matter if you use official sources of information or even their own words to counter the propaganda they promote; you cannot possibly be right and will be ridiculed and denigrated to the world as a conspiracy theorist.

Then he goes into conspiracy theory. Of course, that came out after the Kennedy assassination. The CIA came out with the phrase actually of conspiracy theorists. So, if it's not authorized it's got to be conspiracy theory. It can't be an alternate opinion about something, that's conspiracy theory. That is meant to ridicule anybody that's not authorized to say anything. This is tyranny, folks. Again, back to democracy, you're supposed to have opposing viewpoints by various segments of society. Including, which really means the public, right? [Alan chuckles.] You're not getting any of that at all. You're either on board with it or you're a conspiracy theorist.

When you look at Fauci, and Bill Gates, and the whole bunch, they're all, it's one clique, you know, who are in charge of the health systems across America, and a good part of the world now through the WHO and so on. They're in charge of that and they're in charge as well of the Fort Dietrich place as well. Fauci's articles with the Cancer Institute where he joined basically with Fort Dietrich eight years ago, so he's overseeing all these institutions that are bioweapons labs and so on. You just can't get away from the association with vaccine companies and big Pharma. It's impossible to get away from them because so many of the people involved have incredible shares, or they own some of the companies. This is true fascism, folks. It really is, you know. They can't even go and try and even pretend that they're independent thinkers and scientists. It's a joke. Because they are certainly not! Far from it.

But yeah, they use these words and slogans that are repeated and repeated as though it's all the truth. Until it becomes the truth because of repetition. It's rather sad what's happening. This article is worth reading. I'll put it up anyway.

Remember, I put all these articles up @cuttingthroughthematrix.com website. Some people who put up my talks later don't have room for some of the links I put up. So, remember you can always go into cuttingthroughthematrix.com and get the links there. I do the work for a lot of different people that eventually use it and never mentioned me. [Alan chuckles.] I do all the work, they have nothing else to do, just go for the links basically. So, I'll put it up and read it for yourself.

Also, this article here…

Nevada nurse who came to NYC to work on the coronavirus frontlines claims minority patients are being murdered (A: I think that's the one I've seen too.) by negligent doctors misplacing ventilator tubes and giving unnecessary defibrillation, but 'nobody cares' - dailymail.co.uk / 5 May 2020

I'm sure it's the same one probably. But this isn't the first one to talk about what's happened in New York. They're so freaked out in the hospitals. They're pretty well putting the ones who come in straight on the ventilators. Which, you got more risk with ventilators than you could ever imagine. Again, there's many people in the medical profession who will say this, it's killing them. It kills a lot of them. Even to use them properly, if you have the proper ones to use in the first place, and it's necessary, you have to know folk who could actually use them properly.

They're very sensitive. Your lung tissue is the most sensitive tissue. They're so thin, the little sacks of alveolar tissue are so thin, it doesn't, especially when it's inflamed, 'eh, it doesn't take much pressure to bust them. Hemorrhaging occurs and then you get clots and all the rest of it. That's all happening. But the staff themselves aren't going in as often as they should to see each patient. They're isolated basically. And really, they're neglected until a lot of them are dying. That's the claims that are being made and coming out in New York City. Absolute panic by the staff themselves. M-hm.

And the thing is too, there's no doubt about it, there's a lot of different groups that are overweight. They have lots of other health problems. Diabetics, you know, very overweight and diabetics, and they also have high blood pressure, and they have a whole bunch of problems. So, they're high, high risk indeed when they get this thing, on top of it all.

Then you really have to have folk that know what they're doing. You might think that folk who are the staff, it doesn't matter if they're doctors or nurses, are all capable of managing this. But they're not. I think some of the staff, or the ones on YouTube actually mentioned that there are good ones and bad ones. And there are ones who, it's not their own fault, they haven't really had that kind of training, even in their training courses and in their practical courses either. Some nurses go straight into certain areas, and they've never done this kind of stuff before, you know. Then they're plunged into dealing with intubation and all kinds of things and they don't know how to do it. And a lot of even the medical, male and female doctors are in the same position, you know.

Anyway, disaster happens. But apart of this terrible chaos that's coming out of New York City at the hospitals there, judging from folk who've come out openly and talk about it, who are involved in it, you know. So yeah, the one I think with the defibrillation, there's probably other ones getting the same problem. Because heart block happens and really when you get a problem with the heart, you know, it could be a little infarction or whatever, but when it happens your heart automatically, just like an automaton, goes into beating at 40 beats per minute to keep you going. It's like a safety thing, a safety program you might say kicks in. What you don't do then is defibrillated at that particular time, you know. There's other ways to get them back up again through medications and stuff, but defibrillation can just stop it altogether.

But yeah, I know what she's saying here, it would be heartbreaking to watch somebody do this. And there ya go. So there you go.

Nevada nurse who came to NYC to work on the coronavirus frontlines claims minority patients are being murdered by negligent doctors misplacing ventilator tubes and giving unnecessary defibrillation, but 'nobody cares'

dailymail.co.uk / 5 May 2020

Speaking out in despair 37-year-old Nicole Sirotek described work at the frontline as like 'going into the fing twilight zone,' and told of hospital units in such disarray that she was once assigned to care for a patient already in a body bag.

(A: Completely chaotic.)

She said, 'They're not dying of COVID. Yes people are going to die of COVID, I know this, I'm not like a new grad student. I am literally saying they're murdering these people.

'And nobody cares because they're all minorities and we're in the fing hood and that's not okay.'

(A: …neighborhood, I guess.)

Remember, you’ve got a lot of folk too, as I say, with massive medical problems. You've also got people whose immune systems are shot for other reasons, you know. Lots of problems all involved, and this thing is just hitting them fast. But it's also the treatment or the lack of treatment, or the wrong treatment that can help finish it off all the quicker I think actually. Yeah, I think this one or another one said that they're basically ventilating everybody that comes in, and that's the wrong thing to do of course.

Now this other article here, I'm going to go way back to the beginning here, I've got a whole bunch of stuff. This article is called…

COVID–19: The Big Pharma players behind UK Government lockdown

ukcolumn.org / 6 May 2020

"To achieve world government, it is necessary to remove from the minds of men their individualism, loyalty to family tradition, national patriotism, and religious dogmas."

— Dr George Brock Chisholm, who served as the first Director-General of the World Health Organisation (WHO) from 1948 to 1953

(A: Awfully important because they haven't changed. I've got quotes actually, the exact same quotes of the ones who are there today saying the exact same things, same quote actually. Because remember the WHO is part of the United Nations idea set up by the private organization that ran the British Empire at the time. It hasn't changed. They wanted world government. But again, a managed and expertly run government, and population. As opposed to democracy. So, I'll say it again...)

"To achieve world government, it is necessary to remove from the minds of men their individualism, loyalty to family tradition, national patriotism, and religious dogmas."

— Dr George Brock Chisholm, who served as the first Director-General of the World Health Organisation (WHO) from 1948 to 1953

In Part One of Who controls the British Government response to Covid–19? I began an investigation into the individuals and entities that are, effectively, driving the UK Government response to Covid–19. In Part Two, I will expand upon the Big Pharma and Artificial Intelligence (AI) links already identified and will introduce new connections that appear to have considerable bearing upon the UK Government's Covid–19 strategy. I will expand upon the Bill Gates connections to the various organisations that are advocating global immunisation.

(A: If my voice goes out once in a while it’s because it’s so dry. I’ve got the heating on actually and I’ve been having snow for the last, well since Thursday, last Thursday, Friday, I got a foot of snow. It still on the ground yet up where I am. This is May we’re in now. And they’re still prattling on about global warming believe it or not, ‘eh. So, my voice will go out and in once in a while because the air is just so darn dry. That’s what happens in cold climates.

During global warming. [Alan laughing.])

The UK Government chief medical adviser and Chief Medical Officer for England, Chris Whitty, is saying that a return to "normal" in the short-term is "wholly unrealistic".

(A: That by the way, they're all on board with the same phrases across the world. And from the people in the same positions in the States and Canada and everywhere else, you're hearing the same phrases. It's like weapons of mass destruction. Because they're all sworn to repeat the same stuff from the WHO, right, and the World Economic Forum.)

Whitty is telling us that the "highly disruptive" social distancing policy will be in place "for really quite a long period of time". "Highly disruptive" is a euphemism for the devastation of the world economy and the horrifying knock-on effect — an estimated 50% of the world workforce are at risk of losing their livelihood.

(A: More than that. Once you can't get food, it's going to be an awful lot worse, folks. That's what they want. I'm not kidding you.)

The UK Government has been promoting the concept of "immunity passports" as a means of loosening the draconian lockdown measures. It is very possible that facial recognition technology may dictate who can exit lockdown and return to work.

(A: That's what they want. This is, they have the same system set up in China, we're copying the exact same system here.)

To get a passport, individuals must upload an image of their face to the app along with their ID (passport or driving licence). They are then tested to ascertain if they have had the virus and developed immunity. The app will then generate a QR code, which the employer will use to verify ID and immunity before allowing the employee back to work.

(A: You're going to get the same thing going into stores. I mentioned this in 1998, alarms will go off if you weren't up to date with all your vaccinations and so on. I did. It's still up there.)

The UK health service's innovation agency NHSx has called for businesses and technology experts to submit their ideas for providing immunity passports. Companies currently making proposals to the UK Government include Onfido (A: I guess it's quite good. Just like dogs, you're the dog and they whistle for you. On Fido.), Yoti, IDnow, OCL, and iDenfy.

These UK Government "track and trace" plans still face various obstacles — including the questionable accuracy of some of the antibody tests (A: It doesn't matter about facts, you see, when there's an agenda at work.) — but the spectre of increased surveillance and government control over the workforce, and many other aspects of civil liberty, looms undeniably on the horizon.

(A: Well, they've had these plans set to go, they just needed the right crisis to put them into action, you see.)

As I pointed out in Part One, it is no coincidence that the Oxford University start-up, Microsoft-funded facial recognition firm Onfido (A: Again, [Alan chuckles.] that's the, you know, usual.) "has recently raised $100 million (now $200m) to boost its ID technology" to enable the creation of immunity passports. According to an interview with Onfido's CEO, Husayn Kassai, the firm had previously offered a service that "automates background checks on prospective employees before they are accepted for work" …

(A: Well, they can keep it for themselves because I'm damned if I'd ever use anything like that. I guarantee you. I will not obviously be a slave to their electronic prison. That's what it is. It's got nothing to do with what they're talking about here. They had this all ready to go regardless of what happens, had it set to go years ago, how to get everybody tracked and traced and going for... They needed a good crisis. Well, here it is. Yep.)

A more recent article proclaims: "Onfido in talks with government about systems to help Britons return to work". (A: Yada, yada, ya.)

The team behind the UK Government Covid–19 response

My focus in Part One was largely on the role of Imperial College and Professor Neil Ferguson

(A: This guy is... [Alan laughing.] I remember when he first got put in there as an advisor to Johnson. Everybody was shocked because the guy has got an awful record to start with. Far left, like total, well, he's a technocrat. And technocrats believe in efficiency, and this darn democracy should get thrown out the window. So, a good crisis, he's a crisis man. He really, he should get awards, Malthusian awards for creating the best graphs ever as pure fiction. It takes amazing imagination to create these kind of graphs that he is so used to doing.)

(A: He's been wrong about so many things in the past, you know, with previous flus in Britain. He was responsible for pretty well the whole animal meat industry of Britain getting slaughtered years ago, really, with the mad cow scare. I did the talks at the time about it, and it was horrific. They had pyramids of cattle and pigs and all that, pyramids on fire. That's what they did with them, pyramids of these animals. Millions of them were slaughtered like that. They just burned them. Because maybe one or two folk in Britain, maybe, maybe had this disease from meat. The same kind of thing, you know.)

(A: Don't forget, they've always been, under sustainability, the elimination of animal husbandry, you know. Oh, it will destroy the planet. Any excuse will do to get … You can't reduce the population if you're eating well and you're healthy, folks. You've got to bring in austerity, down to the brink of literally rationing. Then you watch folk start to die off of diseases you haven't heard of from for an awful long time. So even when he's wrong this... And he isn't kicked out. He should be kicked out. This is the guy who broke the rules on distancing laws by going to see his mistress, you know, he was married and all that. He wanted a bit of cohabitation instead of Covid, 'eh, I suppose. But Neil Ferguson…)

Neil Ferguson defends lockdown policy while conveniently forgetting the failure record of his “model”.

(A: I mean, what an ego. You know, wouldn't you be hiding your head in shame... if it was all real? He knows what he's doing is a joke. But that's what his job is, is to help get this agenda going. Otherwise you would, you'd hang your head, you wouldn't want to get seen in public again because of the disgrace you would bring, you know. Nope.)

In a recent interview, Neil Ferguson defended his Covid–19 predictions, which now appear to have been greatly exaggerated.

Ferguson reinforced the message that Britons “cannot go completely back to normal, until we have a vaccine…”

(A: They all say that, they're all on board with the same parroting phrases, the vaccine. The one from Korea was the same thing, he went through the disease pretty well actually, he was a doctor. But he's in charge of their response team in Korea for the WHO. He’s saying the same. Oh, it will never be over until we have a vaccine for it.)

(A: Well, none of the vaccines in the past have ever worked, folks. Hm? So why do they want to pump something into you? And even though it's spiking and it's starting to disappear, there's some amazing theories about it coming out now. But it's true, it is just suddenly, we had the same kind of spike like they had in China and different places and suddenly it, ffffoom, just going way, way, way down there. Even the countries that didn't have the lockdowns. Rather interesting, 'eh?)

(A: But it doesn't stop guys like Ferguson. Because that's why he's there, folks. He's just for sustainability, population reduction, all the usual stuff. Why would you trust this guy? Who every time he's been pulled out of the bag, he's just, you know, been completely wrong on everything. Hm? Then you have this other guy...)

Ferguson H1N1 case study — Patrick Vallance — GlaxoSmithKline (A: The big pharma company.)

At this point, I would like to go back in time to 2009 and Ferguson/Imperial College's analysis of swine flu, (A: …back then, right…) H1N1: they claimed this virus would take the lives of 65,000 people in the UK. In the end, 457 people died from the virus.

(A: This is Ferguson along with Patrick Vallance of the company. There's a bit of a difference here. This isn't like, oops, you know I ordered two dozen eggs, and I only got 23. 65,000 versus 457!)

In response to the threat of swine flu, Big Pharma giant GlaxoSmithKline (GSK) developed the Pandemrix vaccine, with disastrous consequences. (A: There's a link for it too, what happened. This is official; this isn't made up theory.) An alleged sixty patients who suffered brain damage as a result of the vaccine were allocated £60 million (A: The links are all here, folks.) in compensation by the UK Government. Most of the victims were children. As one report has it: "It was subsequently revealed that the vaccine, Pandemrix, can cause narcolepsy… (A: That's true. It happened in Australia and different countries, New Zealand and parts of Europe.) …narcolepsy and cataplexy in about one in 16,000 people, and many more are expected to come forward with the symptoms."

(A: A lot of them actually would just start feeling tired, for the rest of their lives, never figure out why. It doesn't stop Ferguson though, 'eh. Wouldn't you hide your head in shame, unless you're a real tyrant, 'eh?)

A later British Medical Journal (BMJ) report deemed that GSK and health authorities had failed to warn the public of the vaccine's alarming "safety signal".

The vaccine was developed by GSK and patented in September 2006. Pandemrix contained a flu strain recommended by the WHO. After reports of brain damage began to emerge, the WHO revised their advice to urge “restricted use” for people under the age of 20. Pandemrix is no longer licensed for use, but at the time, the Gordon Brown-led Labour government had granted GSK indemnity.

(A: That's so you couldn't sue them. I'll tell you, anybody who's advocating mandatory vaccinations, folks, you must get it in writing from your prime ministers and presidents, and stamped by their governments, that they'll take responsibility for causing the damage to you or your children, and pay massive sums, because they mandated that you take this stuff, so you have the right to sue them and they will agree to it, right. And the same with the company, you sue the companies as well that made the stuff. Hm? If you want to go along with it. Let's see what happens then with their mandatory, 'eh.)

(A: Do you understand, it's not meant, what they're doing is nothing to do with this particular illness that's out right now. They want you to get annual shots and boosters for every disease under the sun. That's in their agreements at the WHO. And their wish lists. Once you get this immunity passport, they'll go all the way with it. I gave this talk, as I said, back in the late 90s when they were trying to push the same thing with those particular flus then, and then into the 2009 one again, I gave the same talks. Because I've read all their articles. I've got stacks of data from them. That are not conspiracy theories sites, it's their own sites at the WHO and all the organizations associated with them.)

(A: And here you go with it, folks. You're now going to be the property, like a farm animal, of your betters. The technocrats you have decided that they own you, you understand? And they'll punish you if you don't go along with it all, hm. It goes on to talk about other companies and so on.)

While Vallance and the UK Government are favouring AstraZeneca — in partnership with Oxford University — to fast-track vaccine development, GSK is also in the race.

GSK is working in collaboration with the Coalition for Epidemic Preparedness Innovations (CEPI), (A: Very important that CEPI, you can look it up yourself. All these organizations are very official. But remember, they're all run by these private corporations and associated groups with them.) “aimed at helping the global effort to develop a vaccine” for Covid–19. The UK Government has invested £50 million (A: They've thrown 50 million pounds…) in CEPI to support the rapid vaccine and immunoprophylactic development against “unknown pathogens” (also referred to as Disease X). Bill Gates was one of the original and most influential sponsors of CEPI; more details later in this article.

So, the UK Government appears to favour AstraZeneca...

(A: It's so in-depth, you understand, that this is not conspiracy stuff. Everything is checkable, you can check it all. It's factual. It's not from little strange sites or whatever. It just sticks to the basic facts.)

(A: I mentioned before, don't get, don't go off on another tangent here, of other things that could contribute it, they're into the 5G and everything else. Everything has got its own area. When you're threatened with a completely new way of living because of what really hasn't been anything near what they claimed it was going to be, then the big agenda is at work. You have to all come together and work on that one part of the agenda, one thing at a time, 'eh, that's what you do. If you don't, there's counterintelligence involved that's getting you off the topic. And once you're divided, there's no unification and voicing of your protest, to anything. And that's it.)

(A: This article is pretty good, it's in-depth and it's by someone who does the work, it really goes into it properly with the facts.)

Even Dr Anthony Fauci, Ferguson’s counterpart in the US, has also cast doubt on the efficacy of these models to determine government response to any given virus:

I’ve never seen a model of the diseases I’ve dealt with where the worst case actually came out […] they always overshoot. (A: ...you know, when they're doing these models and so on.)

The fact that Ferguson ploughs on regardless — and without any reference to his appalling record and disastrous consequences for the British public — suggests that he functions largely as an outreach agent for actors with vested interests who are exploiting him (A: They’re not exploiting him, he knows what he’s doing.) to keep the Government on track with their own profit-driven Covid–19 campaigns.

And it's not just profit. It's for a whole new way of living and being managed by experts for the rest of your lives, from birth to death. That's what it is. Don't forget that you are also the product for their products for big Pharma, hm, that's how they see you.

Now an article too...

'This is the virus I fear the most': British scientist leading coronavirus fight says (A: Again, this is getting back to Neil Ferguson. This is what he said initially...) it's 'not absurd' to forecast 400,000 UK fatalities as world-wide death toll surges past 1,500 - dailymail.co.uk / 14 Feb 2020

Now we know that even the death toll is often from any other diseases and they're lumping all kinds of things in with it too, without testing. That's factual, that's not conspiracy. But this is how he went, you know. The Daily Mail Online. How he gave out his terrifying vision. He's good at terrifying visions.

He actually, I think he really is a secret Nostradamus supporter, where he... he must see something at night, on his way to see his mistress, maybe in the dark, maybe that's when it comes upon him, and he has his ecstatic visions of incredible, incredible emotional turmoil of heaven falling and things like that, 'eh, and folk just dying all over the place. And getting paid to do it. I mean, that's not bad, 'eh? Over and over even when you're always wrong. It's quite something.

You mustn't forget too though that he also is involved in a company to do with it. It isn't just stats, just that. I think they also worked as well with the groups at East Anglia for their computer models to make sure that they have incredibly exaggerated terrible scenarios for the climate if we don't stop breeding and things. The same groups. The same groups over and over and over, folks. Quite amazing. It really is amazing, isn't it, what we're living through here? Quite amazing.

Yeah, you've got here…

Ferguson heads the Vaccine Impact Modelling Consortium at Imperial College

There ya go. M-hm-hm. Yep. I'll put these articles up remember @cuttingthroughthematrix.com Don't forget too folks you can also order discs and so on @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Hopefully I'll shortly get the books printed up, if we're allowed out of our cages here. If they allow us out in fact. You can donate to me as well @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. List the official sites that I have listed there in case anything gets pulled. You can also see how to donate to me and how to do it using PayPal or cash or whatever. Even personal checks, I think they're still okay, as long as you can stand outside banks now in long lines, outside the banks [Alan laughing.] where the one teller is stationed outside the banks in Sudbury apparently, I haven't been yet.

I stress over and over, make sure that you take a list of the list on the .com site of all my other websites. Because the big boys are at war, as you well know, and they'll get their way one way or another. They're getting more and more ruthless all the time. They came out with this during the planning of this whole episode with their test down at Johns Hopkins University. They came out even then with the step-by-step-by-step-by-step how they'd manage people who would dissent from it. How they'd initially just blacklist them and get them off social media. Then they would go to fine them. Then they'll go and imprison them. That's where it's going. They are determined to make...

This is their big, big push now. They can't go back to try to persuade you to stop eating and stop buying things and stop, even once in a while the ones who want children, the few that want children, actually having children. They're not going to allow you to have that anymore, you see.

They've been at… You understand, this is a religion. It's beyond religion. It's a fanatical religion for these families that are intergenerational, have been pushing this for, oh, since the days of Thomas Malthus. When Charles Darwin came along, that was their champion. Because they were trying to, again, put science into why they should start culling off the useless eaters in the population, you see. Darwin with his theories, etc., for the betterment of the race and his theories about what would happen with the wrong types of people coming into the race, he gave them the ammunition, you see, that's why he was their champion. Even though most of the stuff, as you probably know, was taken from Wallace who was the real guy behind it, and Darwin stole it all. [Alan chuckles.] But the Royal Society was quite happy with that. Big story there too. But yeah, it's amazing how it goes down through the ages, the same techniques used and employed by the same people, and the descendants of the same people. That's still have the eugenics society on the go, they've changed the name a few times. One of the top people at it of course was Julian Huxley who helped found Planned Parenthood and UNESCO.

Anyway, back to what we're talking about here. Now here it shows you too, this is a big agenda. Again, big agenda, must-be agenda, right. Because they really mean business now as they go forward and unroll each part of the same agenda that they discussed at the meetings, and the practices that they had for coming pandemics. Until eventually they lock people up for saying something which is unauthorized.

Because we don't live in democracy. You're not allowed your own opinion today. The last thing they want are for people to listen to all sides of everything and taking all that they hear and can analyze and check out for themselves, they can also use their own abilities of discernment to come to their own conclusion. That's the last thing that those that want to rule you want, literally, like robots, they want you to be robots from birth to death, and you can't have your own opinion on anything. It's just unauthorized and not allowed.

This is big brother on steroids really. Really, again, under a scientific guise, it's so beautiful, I've said it before, and I mean beautiful in a very evil sort of way, it's sardonic and you've got to appreciate the cunningness of what you're up against here. Because when, with that quote I mentioned earlier where they must get rid of religion, from the WHO, right, it's in the way, hm, it's in the way, you see, and against what? Well, one thing was vaccinations. My body is not yours to do what you want with. Obviously.

You see, if you use logic and common sense and even say well, you know if a woman has a right to her own body and she can do with it what she wants, you know, and you can't make her do what you want, or TO do if you're some sort of, you know, control freak, then it should be the same for vaccinations or anything else for that matter. You know, if it's good for one thing, it's good for something else. And for people who want to inoculate untried and unproven stuff into your system, ah, and make you, and give immunity to governments and manufacturers for any fallout and disease and ill health or death.... Come on here! Hm. Come on.

Once it starts it won't finish. It's going to cause mayhem and disaster for people. I've no doubt at all about that. So, you've got to think for yourself and don't fall into the traps that they've got you in. They've got you; you see. Again, getting back to one of the first articles I read tonight to do with language and words. They've got you using their own vocabulary. Once they've taken religion from you, you don't have a God-given right for anything, they laugh at you. So, you're left with what? Trying to debate facts. Well, it doesn't matter what you debate with the facts, facts don't matter when there is an agenda at play. You're left using their terminology. And guess what? They'll say, well, there's a professor, who are you? Hm? You see, you've already put yourself into an inferior position and they'll simply rule over you in the courts and say, well that's that then. You know nothing about it, the professionals do.

You can't argue you using their terminology, obviously. You've got to use your own terminology or God-given terminology, which is NO. [Alan chuckles.] NO. You know, you’re a unique being, a creation in this world and it's not their right to do with you as they wish. For any presumed real or fake reason, you know. So anyway, that's really what it's about at the moment.

And yes, isn't it astonishing how they can keep on hammering folk, calling them anti-vaxxers, when these folk have been damaged before from vaccinations. And it's admitted to in official documents! It's not hidden, you can dig it up quite fast and easily and from the authorities themselves. And yet here they go again, the same kind of thing, 'eh? There ya go.

So anyway, that was that article as I say with Mr. Ferguson and his amazing predictions. You know, the guy is an optimist, he believes in big numbers. Both he and Bill Gates have the same thing. Bill Gates is better at it. People have taken all the different lectures and training and the techniques of almost psychodrama, you see, it blends in with different techniques in linguistics, psycholinguistics. They use their arms and wave all over, exaggerated gestures to emphasize every word to make it seem that this person is speaking to you is very important with the big gestures. Everything he says is bigger than real life, you see. And you get sick of looking at this technique really. I do. It doesn't impress me at all.

It's kind of like the rap artists. I mean, he's missed his cue, he should've been a rapper, Bill Gates. Because the rappers used to fling their arms out in front. You've probably seen them. They’re filling them out in front there. People would jump back as they're trying to speak. He's doing the same thing, you know. We've moved on from rap, folks, and Bill Gates should learn that too. Because we're not impressed. Not impressed. At all really.

Then you go on to this one here and it's...

Before lockdown, (A: Again, this is not a conspiracy site here, right.)

Britain quietly downgraded status of virus threat (A: Well, they didn’t tell the public, ‘eh, at the time.)

washingtontimes.com / 26 March 2020

(A: This happened, again, it DID get downgraded. This is the Washington Times.)

Just days before U.K. Prime Minister Boris Johnson announced a nationwide lockdown to contain the coronavirus epidemic, health officials in Britain quietly lowered the official threat level for the pandemic, saying the COVID-19 virus did not meet the criteria to qualify as a “high consequence infectious disease” (HCID).

U.K. health officials had tentatively identified COVID-19 as an HCID in late January,

(A: ...in late JANUARY they knew this, but they locked down the country ever since. And the rest of the world has followed suit, right. Because what Britain knew every other country new too, especially the US and Canada. So, they knew this in January, late January.)

but said in a March 19 statement it was rescinding its interim decision.

(A: So, they waited all that time. Because they wanted a total lockdown, they wanted the pandemic, they wanted to shut down the economy and they wanted a whole new way of … a whole new world order coming out of this. You understand? That’s the reason for it, folks. Since they knew it and they reclassified it in January. Huh! Are you starting to get the picture here? This is not conspiracy. This is stuff that’s been admitted to and the documentation is here.)

U.K. health officials had tentatively identified COVID-19 as an HCID in late January

“This was based on consideration of the U.K. HCID criteria about the virus and the disease with information available during the early stages of the outbreak,” the statement said.

(A: I love how they just give you ‘statements’. And no one is going to put their name on the statement [Alan chuckles.] because they’ll… Well, they don’t fire politicians, or bureaucrats, you know that bureaucrats are lifelong, like the Yes Minister series.)

“Now that more is known about COVID-19, the public health bodies in the UK have … determined that several features have now changed; in particular, more information is available about mortality rates (low overall), and there is now greater clinical awareness and a specific and sensitive laboratory test, the availability of which continues to increase.”

The statement said a government body that deals with pathogens agreed the virus did not merit the HCID designation, but also added that the risk to the U.K from the outbreak “has been raised to high.”

Five days later, Mr. Johnson — who critics say was slow to respond the global pandemic — said in a national address that Britons faced “a moment of national emergency” and ordered U.K. residents to stay in their homes and limited public activities and nonessential businesses for the next three weeks at least.

(A: Well, what’s happened since then?)

Through Wednesday morning, according to government figures, Britain reported 9,529 positive cases of coronavirus out of just over 97,000 people tested and 463 virus-related deaths.

(A: And again, the SUSPECTED virus deaths and not confirmed, along with confirmed, or blah, blah, blah. It's just a joke. I mean, even the flu ones are getting mixed in with them now too, as you know, as they go into this panic mode and try to jack the figures up.)

Skeptics of the severity of the virus have promoted the March 19 move on Twitter as proof that doomsday scenarios and severe economic measures being implemented worldwide are an overreaction.

(A: No, it was planned that way, hm. They knew it in January, huh, and then they lockdown after that, they locked them down to get the economy on its knees, and bail out all the big corporations that are part of the WEF, the World Economic Forum that’s all for this new system they’re bringing in. Don’t you start to get it? And sustainability and austerity and all the… They even say that at the World Economic Forum, we’ll achieve all our goals that were put down under sustainability through this and so has the Club of Rome.)

“You’d have thought [the change] would be reported!” one British poster tweeted. “I wonder if they’ve agreed not to so that people still take it seriously and comply with lockdown.”

So, it goes on and on and on as I say. But that's, there you go, they knew in January it was way over exaggerated, and still, they locked everybody down afterwards. So, there you go. N-n-n.

This article is pretty decent actually, this one here. It's...

Is Imperial College Still Open for Business?

unz.com / 4 May 2020

Back in the 1960s, the British academic establishment was rather excited about the work of Karl Popper, the philosopher who developed the concept of empirical falsification. Popper was keen to define the demarcation between the scientific and that which only mimics empiricism and scientism. A theory, according to Popper, can be considered scientific if, and only if, it is potentially falsifiable by experiments or its predictions. Popper attempted to create criteria that would deny psychoanalysis, Marxism and astrology any scientific status based on the fact that these theories are not falsifiable.

One may wonder what Popper would have to say about the ‘science’ of Neil Ferguson, the man who predicted up to 550.000 Coronavirus dead in the UK and 2.2 million dead in the USA.

On 29 April, Off-Guardian published what I believe to be the most insightful (A: …and the link is here by the way.) criticism of the lockdown policy so far. In the article Iain Davis digs into the work or shall we say, blunders, he attributes to Ferguson. Davis writes, “both Public Health England (PHE) and the Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens (ACDP) were satisfied that COVID-19 (C19) presented a ‘low risk’ of mortality and downgraded it from the status of a High Consequence Infectious Disease (HCID) on March 19th. The ACDP board members include Professor Neil Ferguson from Imperial College. Presumably Prof. Ferguson was among the dissenting voices on the ACDP board as he completely ignored the majority opinion of his scientific colleagues.”

(A: Because it’s an agenda, that’s why, he’s paid to do this stuff. He’s a crisis and a chaos creator, so’s it brings in a different system, ’eh.)

There is nothing wrong in holding a dissenting scientific view, however, this specific ‘dissenting view' and the way it was implemented by the UK and the USA governments appears to have led America, Britain and the rest of the world to respond in a way that created a catastrophe of a previously unknown scale.

"In an interview on 13th February, widely reported by the mainstream media (A: …and it gives you the links to it too, and I think the actual mainstream media one is the Daily Mail again.)," Davis writes, "he (Ferguson) stated his predictive models were 'not absurd.' He said that infection rates of 60% of the population with a 1% mortality rate were possible. Standing by his prediction of 400,000 C19 deaths in the UK. The Imperial College computer model report was released to the public on 16th March, predicting huge numbers of deaths from C19. By the 19th March Prof. Ferguson must have known a majority of his peers disagreed with him."

(A: Of course he did! He's done all this before with other scenarios.)

Davis points out that Ferguson failed to implement the most basic of scientific procedures, namely allowing a peer review of his 'predictions,' (A: Well, how come all the other big organizations jumped on his predictions, 'eh, and backed him to the hilt without this peer-reviewed system. You see, this is an agenda.) making sure that one or more people with similar competence in epidemiology evaluate what we now know to have been the grossly exaggerated Imperial College models and predictions.

Davis reveals that "when it comes to wildly inaccurate predictions Prof. Ferguson's work at Imperial College has a long and distinguished history. In 2002, he said that (up to) 50,000 people in the UK would die from 'mad cow disease' (A: Mm, hey, mad cow disease.), to date less than 200 have passed away (A: And by the way, it's the same thing too with the mad cow disease, even that's very iffy if it was even that much.); he predicted 200 million global deaths from the H5N1 bird flu. (A: …when that came along, BY GOD, 200 million global.) Currently it is a suspected (A: …suspected, it's not even proven of what really happens with the H5N1 bird flu, that he said 200 million would die.) factor in the deaths of 455 people world wide (A: 455 people worldwide, died, suspected of it, maybe, you know, not proven. But 455 people. It's a wee bit of a difference between 200 million, 'eh, to 455 people.); in 2009 he told the UK Government that 65,000 could die from swine flu in the UK and worked with the World Health Organisation to predict millions of deaths from the H1N1 global flu pandemic*."

You may ask what kind of scientists are mistaken in their predictions by factors of 200 or more? What kind of an academic institution would provide such a scientist with a platform, let alone having him lead a department? And the questions go far deeper. Davis writes, "while Prof. Ferguson and his Imperial College colleagues have been consistently wrong (A: Another link to this by the way, [Alan chuckles.] all the different predictions that have been wrong.) they have also been unquestioningly believed by governments and intergovernmental bodies on every occasion.

(A: What does that tell you again, folks, 'eh? A big agenda. Sustainability, yada, yada, ya, you know, a new way of living. Everything's being brought in with this one. It's what they're boasting, this is accomplishing everything they couldn't get accomplished before with sustainability and climate change.)

Seemingly without reservation. Despite the clear evidence to the contrary, policy makers from all political parties have shown tremendous loyalty to Imperial College's silly data models. In doing so, they have not only ignored the researchers' woeful history of failed predictions but have also denied the scientific evidence which usually contradicts them."

Davis is not alone. On April 28th F. William Engdahl expressed very similar concerns re Neil Ferguson, his reputation and his past 'models.' "In 2005," Engdahl writes, "Ferguson claimed that up to 200 million (!) people worldwide would be killed by bird-flu or H5N1. By early 2006, the WHO had only linked 78 deaths to the virus."

(A: Again, 200 million versus 78 deaths. Are you starting to understand here there's a bigger agenda here, and they keep using the same character? It's the same as the global warming thing, and that failed. And the climate change group, and they said EVERYBODY'S on board with the International Panel on Climate Change. But no, they're NOT. Most are not. Most are not on board with them at all.)

I am not in any position to assess the true danger to us of C19 or our response to it. But simple common sense tells us that the only reliable scientific fact about our British leading epidemiologist team is the uncomfortable fact that it has often been wrong and by a huge margin.

(A: [Alan laughing.] I'd say huge! It's so incredible really, 'eh. And it goes on and on. It's quite a good article here. And he asks the questions, why is it that Britain and academia, why have they lost sight of facts basically.)

One wonders what is it that has led Britain and its academia to lose touch with the core scientific ethos?

As upsetting as it may be for some progressives, even Donald Trump/White House's Corona model is more reliable and scientific than the numerical exercise produced by Britain's most prestigious academic institute.

(A: Yep. Well, there ya go. It's astonishing. But he's totally backed by the WHO, World Health Organization, who received billions, or millions it says. So, Ferguson, right, this is from Engdahl here...)

Engdahl reports that “Neil Ferguson and his modelling group at Imperial College, in addition to being backed by WHO (A: …right…), receive millions from the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation.

(A: Everywhere you look there’s Bill Gates, he’s everywhere, folks. He’s a real Spider-Man, he’s in the middle of the spiderweb, and it seems that they go everywhere, into every facet of society. Hm.)

Ferguson heads the Vaccine Impact Modelling Consortium at Imperial College which lists as its funders the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation (A: …oh, well, it’s just coincidence.) and the Gates-backed GAVI-the vaccine alliance. (A: …right, to vaccinate the planet, right, GAVI.)

From 2006 through 2018 the Gates Foundation has invested an impressive $184,872,226.99 into Ferguson’s Imperial College modelling operations.”

(A: Well, is that maybe a conflict there? Are you starting to see that everybody who’s anybody giving us the advice for this big, big societal change agenda for the planet are connected like a little clique to each other here? Hm?)

In 2002, Arnold S. Relman, then a professor of medicine at Harvard University suggested that ‘’the medical profession is being bought by the pharmaceutical industry, not only in terms of the practice of medicine, but also in terms of teaching and research. (A: …and the link is here too.) The academic institutions of this country [USA] are allowing themselves to be the paid agents of the pharmaceutical industry. I think it’s disgraceful.’’

Quite amazing really, ‘eh. It really is something else what we're living through right now. It’s just astonishing. And it's in-your-face and open, 'eh. Another article I want to put up too is the Billionaire Club, that’s what they call themselves. They also called themselves at the time, the Lucky Gene Club. Their genes were lucky, made them billionaires, you know, and they all met in bid to curb overpopulation. That was in the Sunday Times from Britain quite a few years back. But it’s interesting, you’ve got to bring this stuff into it. Because they talked about, the biggest problem in the world was there’s too many people, of the wrong kind, you know. So, I’ll put it up there to from the times and also a link to Global Research if you can’t get the Times article up you can read it here.

Billionaire club in bid to curb overpopulation – thetimes.co.uk / May 24, 2009

Billionaire club in bid to curb overpopulation

globalresearch.ca / 25 May 2009 / John Harlow, Los Angeles

SOME of America's leading billionaires have met secretly (A: And this was 2009 when they brought out the big scary one with the flu then, you know.) to consider how their wealth could be used to slow the growth of the world's population and speed up improvements in health and education.

(A: Remember too what Bill Gates said and that's up there on YouTube and elsewhere, when he gives the talk, where he talks about vaccinating everybody to improve their health and lower the population. You know, [Alan chuckles.] what part of that don't you understand from this eugenicist?)

The philanthropists who attended a summit convened on the initiative of Bill Gates (A: Well, that's just a coincidence again.), the Microsoft co-founder, discussed joining forces to overcome political and religious obstacles to change.

(A: Again, political and religious obstacles to change, with vaccinations. Don't ever throw your religion out the window, folks, because you got nothing left to stand on. You can't argue with their terminology back to them. They'll say, well we're the experts, and the judges will tell you that. You see.)

Described as the Good Club (A: …the Good Club, and it's the Lucky Gene Club too…) by one insider it included David Rockefeller Jr (A: He was there, Jr, right.), the patriarch of America's wealthiest dynasty, Warren Buffett (A: Naturally.) and George Soros (A: …who is everywhere too. All unelected people, you know.), the financiers, Michael Bloomberg, the mayor of New York, and the media moguls Ted Turner and Oprah Winfrey.

These members, along with Gates, have given away more than £45 billion since 1996 to causes ranging from health programmes in developing countries to ghetto schools nearer to home.

They gathered at the home of Sir Paul Nurse (A: That's an interesting character, Paul Nurse, believe you me.), a British Nobel prize biochemist and president of the private Rockefeller University, in Manhattan on May 5. The informal afternoon session was so discreet that some of the billionaires' aides were told they were at "security briefings".

Stacy Palmer, editor of the Chronicle of Philanthropy, said the summit was unprecedented. "We only learnt about it afterwards, by accident. Normally these people are happy to talk good causes, but this is different – maybe because they don’t want to be seen as a global cabal,” he said.

Some details were emerging this weekend, however. The billionaires were each given 15 minutes to present their favourite cause. Over dinner they discussed how they might settle on an “umbrella cause” that could harness their interests.

(A: They agreed with Gates...) Taking their cue from Gates they agreed that overpopulation was a priority.

(A: I hope you’re starting to get things together here, folks. This is not new. But this is the latest present cabal for this generation that’s dealing with it from the previous generation. This is an ongoing thing.)

This could result in a challenge to some Third World politicians who believe contraception and female education weaken traditional values.

Gates, 53, who is giving away most of his fortune… (A: Sure. Sure. [Alan chuckles.] If you look at the money he makes with the big Pharma’s, with the big vaccine campaigns, it’s just… I’ve got articles on that too, it’s just astonishing. These guys… these guys don’t just give stuff away, you know.)

Everything is so disgusting, isn't it? An article that ties in incidentally, talking about the guy in the middle of the spider's web, being the spider, 'eh...

Study: Common Core Behind Historic Drop In Student Scores

technocracy.news / 29 April 2020

(A: …a different article about schooling and so on.)

Common Core State Standards curriculum were created and owned by two private non-profit organizations, both of which were heavily funded and influenced by Bill Gates of vaccine fame. CCSS has failed miserably and an entire generation has been mentally crippled. ? TN Editor

As we approach the 40th anniversary of the establishment of the United States Department of Education in May, shocking trends in student performance should lead us to reconsider the federal role in education and whether the initiative for policymaking should be returned to local schools, communities, and states.

Breaking with decades of slow improvement, U.S. reading and math scores on the National Assessment of Educational Progress (NAEP) and other assessments have seen historic declines since most states implemented national Common Core English and math curriculum standards six years ago, according to a new study published by Pioneer Institute.

It goes through it all, what happened. It gives you the stats and so on of what they've dropped, and how they've really plummeted actually. It's got a link to the whole article there as well in the same paper for those who want to go into it more detail.

And here we go with the coronavirus apps. It's a sad thing. I'm sure they have stacks of this news all over the TV to brainwash the really terrified... The folk are watching it day and night now, of television, and totally programmed under a stampede mentality.

Shaming Stigmatizing Coronavirus app: Why you should download COVIDSafe now

news.com.au / 2 May 2020

(A: COVIDSafe, isn’t that wonderful? This is Australia, COVIDSafe they’re calling it there. And listen to the way it’s put across. I mentioned before last week about how they can stigmatize segments of society. That’s the first thing tyrants always do. The communists did it. The Nazis did it. They always stigmatize parts of society that they know won’t go along with it and so on.)

(A: Jordan MP Chris Mullen promotes COVIDSafe apps. And here's the slogan...)

We’re all in this together.

(A: That’s what you had in Brazil, in the movie, the comedy. Because they always use the same techniques and terminology, we are all in it together. Right. Really?)

That’s been the message throughout the fight against COVID-19 but now all of us have to lift our finger to help the war effort, (A: …the war effort… It’s not a war, you know.) far too many appear to be missing in action.

And yet that’s all it takes – just the lifting of a finger. With two or three taps of your phone screen you can download the COVIDSafe tracing app in less time than it takes to spell out coronavirus. In doing so, you’ll help reduce deaths and get us back on the path to economic recovery.

(A: I would sue them unless they give me proof it would reduce deaths, for false advertising.)

And yet while four million have …

(A: And here's your shaming part, how they shame you and stigmatize you. I gave this talk in the 90s, folks, what they would do step-by-step. Because they discussed it, how they would force the public to go along with all these things, that they floated back then. So here you are...)

And yet while four million have - millions others haven’t. Whether they’re too selfish, too lazy or too ignorant to do a little research and realise their privacy is not at risk, (A: [Alan laughing.]) they’re compromising all of us by choosing not to be one of the 10 million needed to take up the contact-tracing app for it to be a success.

(A: So, here’s a private company wanting you to take this, and you should be ASHAMED if you’re not, you know.)

Downloading the app is voluntary, yet nearly a week after it was released only four million people have made it a priority.

(A: That’s obviously, the rest of the public have got more sense.)

Seriously, what can be more important right now than downloading a technological tool that might save your life or loved one?

(A: False advertising again. How could that possibly save anybody, folks? Hm?)

As Prime Minister Scott Morrison has said, the app is our “ticket” out of lockdown…

(A: Because they’re all on board with it across the planet, folks, with Bill Gates, what comes out of his mouth, and the WHO, is what they all… Just like weapons of mass destruction. They’re all, the big gang’s all in it together. They really, really are. If one country opts out, you see, the rest… it will just fall apart anywhere else. It’s like Britain leaving the EU, the same idea. And by the way, the apps and the whole thing and the lockdowns are bringing Britain right back into the same state, they’re all part of the EU mess. So…).

…the app is our “ticket” out of lockdown…

(A: …no kidding. So, you’re not going to get out to shop or anything, or to even work unless you get the apps. It’s your ticket out of lockdown. False advertising again, and that’s very, beyond coercive, you know.)

…and he likens it to wearing sunscreen outside.

(A: REALLY?! Really, ‘eh?)

It’s harmless for the user (A: That’s not either because they’ve had terrible reports about sunscreen. But here’s your…) but hugely beneficial in our fight against the virus.

(A: They’re not fighting it; they’re going to make money off it and track and trace you all. Forever. Forever, folks. Nothing to do with the virus. [Alan chuckles.])

Using Bluetooth, the app recognises other devices with the app installed and effectively makes a “digital handshake” (A: That’s the Internet Of Things, ‘eh, this scattered stuff everywhere.) that records the date and time, distance and duration of the contact. It’s a protective device and it has one purpose: to quickly find and notify people who have been in contact with a person who has tested positive to COVID-19. It doesn’t care if you’re having an affair with your boss, you’ve overstayed your visa, or you’ve been to Dan Murphy’s three times in 24 hours.   (A: …or you’ve visited your, like Mr. Ferguson there.)

The data it collects is encrypted, only available to health officers (A: Oh, that makes it alright then, ‘eh? [Alan laughing.]) and deleted after 21 days. (A: What a lie that is, ‘eh. Can you believe that folks? Nothing is put out there by government collusion or with the government, with this app, including your income tax, ‘eh, your temporary war taxes, and your victory taxes.)

Any stored data – for instance, that which someone consents to be being uploaded from their app when they test positive – will be destroyed once the pandemic is over.

(A: [Alan laughing.] No. This is to be for life, folks, for all your vaccinations, and your boosters. That’s what it’s for. I read this years ago and here it is again.)

And yet so many are suspicious and refusing to do the decent thing because of a delusional belief that their privacy may be compromised.

(A: Can you believe that? So here they are, already calling you a psychiatric term, DELUSIONAL, ‘eh. If you say, no, your privacy may be compromised, you’re delusional if you think that. This is what they used in the Soviet Union when they locked you up. If you complained about the system in the Soviet Union, you had to be mad since you’re living in a utopia, the best system in the world. So, they literally had an illness designated just for you. I’m not kidding you. It’s here now, ‘eh. The disgusting creatures these characters are that push this kind of stuff, that are going to make millions of money off your tax money to imprison you for life! And they’ve got the neck to try to shame you and call you delusional because you know your privacy WILL be compromised. If you give, when you give your privacy up AT ALL it’s compromised, folks, we know that by now.)

Led by former deputy prime minister Barnaby Joyce, who says he doesn’t want to be tracked by the government, they’re clearly willing to put warped self interest above others’ lives.

(A: Ohhhh, my God, ‘eh. That’s it. And you shame yourself, they should just round them up and lock them away, ‘eh. That’s coming, folks. I’m not kidding you, if you let them get away with this nonsense.)

These are doubtless the same people who willingly share photos on Facebook, order Uber Eats, set their Tinder profile to connect with potential dates within a 50km radius, use Google Maps to get from one place to another and store their credit card details for ease of use while online shopping. As one app developer has pointed out, Google and Facebook are far more powerful and intrusive than COVIDSafe.

(A: Of course, they’re not going to combine it all, ‘eh. [Alan chuckles.])

So, there ya go. This is Australia and they're using the shame technique and calling you delusional if you say no, you don't trust it because of previous experience with all the other apps that you get. And the fact that governments can't even keep the stuff safe from your health records or anything else, it's always getting hacked.

Then you've got, let's see now, this other article here. There’s another article here to do with Boris, not Boris, although Boris did put Neil Ferguson in this time again as in charge of the health and yada, yada, ya with his faulty models and so on. There’s lists there of all the things he’s screwed up before, the ones to do with the meat industry and all the poor animals. There were millions of them got slaughtered. I don’t know if it was 17 million or whatever because of his faulty, faulty stuff there again too and his computer… They’re treating the computer like a God, ‘eh?   The computer predicts… Ooooo. Oh, we’d better kill all the animals then. Oooooo, the computer predicts, we’d better kill all the people then, ‘eh. Is that the next step? Is it?

Professor who predicted 500,000 Britons could die from coronavirus and prompted Boris Johnson to order lockdown accused of having 'patchy record of modelling pandemics' - dailymail.co.uk / 28 March 2020

Then you get this one too. As I say, I mentioned the one with Buffett and the rest of them and their secret meeting. I'll put that up again, there's another article from a different site that I'll put up.

Gates, Buffett, Winfrey Attend Secret NYC Population Control Summit - thefinalhour.blogspot.com / 25 May 2009

It's really interesting how... The folk have no idea, they think all this is wonderful how... As I say too, you just hit a certain number of billions, I said that a few weeks ago and other folk have prattled it since. But a certain amount of billions of dollars and then suddenly say, you know something? I'd like to help the world by reducing the population. It just came to me one night.

No, it's all because they're all front people, folks. You live in a very fake world. They put these people out in front as the leaders, that yes, they equipped them awfully well financially and give them all the massive staffs like you wouldn't believe. Some of them have more staff and bureaucrats working than some small countries have government bureaucracies, especially in the big foundations. Quite something, isn't it?

You also have another one…

How COVID-19 might help us win the fight against climate change

weforum.org / 29 March 2020

The COVID-19 pandemic has elicited a global response unlike anything we've seen before. From government and business taking on new roles to respond to the crisis… (A: ...blah, blah, blah.)

What happens over the coming months could go one of two ways.

(A: Then they try to get you used to the idea of it waning and so on. Other ones too saying, well, you know, it will come back in force if we take the lockdown off too quickly.)

(A: Do you understand that I said this at the start, they'll give you a month at a time. Oh, we have to expand it for another month, and another month. And you get used to getting your little handout from your government, your masters, you know, which you're going to pay for dearly, folks, because everything is… It's all your money, you know. You're going to pay it all back one way or another, even from devaluation of the currency. They're not going to just stop and let it go away unless you make it happen. Unless YOU make it happen, that's the only thing that's going to happen to bring back any kind of reality to anything.)

(A: If you go along with this whole agenda, they're going to bring this into next year. They said that in the beginning. And they never change what they are on about, you see. If they know that they can get this into next year, you're NEVER going to go back to any kind of normalicy. If they can keep you wearing masks for years, they will. And social distancing, they will. Because they're training you into absurdity. The utter absurdity that the Communists, they used to talk about communist dictators at one time. I think Woody Allen even had it in one of his movies, about where at the end of it... He ends up somehow fighting for a revolutionary cause in Latin America and at the end, as soon as he achieves victory the leader of the revolution ends up ordering the folk to start speaking Swedish and wear their underwear outside their clothing, on top of their clothing.)

(A: That's actually taken from a reality that's happened in the past. Not the exact thing but something similar. This is how they go with absurdity. If they can break your common sense, there's nothing they cannot do. They've given lectures in universities about this in behaviorism and how they can literally do anything with the public if they can break your basic common sense. Until you cannot trust yourself to actually verify what you're seeing in front of you. You start with changing the names of things of what you're seeing and things like that, then you come in to back it up by laws and so on.)

(A: But eventually they're going to stop... The whole technique is not to help anybody or to feel sorry. The whole technique is to change your confidence in your own self discernment and conclusions. This is a technique that's used in psychological warfare big time, and you're going through it right now. Right now. It says here…)

But there is another possibility. While we are reeling in the shock of what is happening around us and coming to terms with our new reality, (A: This is about Korea supposedly.) we could seize this moment as a unique window of opportunity (A: You see, so here you go with the Council on Foreign Relations stuff.) to re-build our society and economy as we want it. (A: Who is WE, folks, hm?) With scientists warning we have 10 years left to avoid the worst consequences of climate change, this could offer an opportunity to fix the climate crisis before it's too late.

(A: Mm. So, then they... This is from the World Economic Forum, ‘eh.)

What is the World Economic Forum doing about the coronavirus outbreak?

A new strain (A: ...blah blah blah...) is spreading around the world causing death and major disruption. (A: ...blah blah blah.)

Responding to the COVID-19 pandemic requires global cooperation among governments (A: World government, you know, that's what it's about.), international organizations and the business community, which is at the centre of the World Economic Forum’s mission as the International Organization for Public-Private Cooperation.

(A: No, it's multinational international corporations, not for little private businesses, folks. You don't get a little grocer going to the World Economic Forum. This is monopolies of everything you need for living. Hm.)

The Forum has created the Covid Action Platform. (A: You can download that yourself, wow.) A global platform to convene the business community for collective action, protect people's livelihoods and facilitate business continuity and mobilize support for the Covid 19 response.

(A: Hm.)

The platform is created with the support of the World Health Organization and is open to all businesses and industry groups, as well as other stakeholders, (A: ...except for the public. You're not a stakeholder. You're a victim.) aiming to integrate and inform joint action. (A: ...'eh. So, there you go. N-n-n.)

In 2017, at our Annual Meeting, (A: Right. This is the WEF, World Economic Forum.) the Coalition for Epidemic Preparedness Innovations (CEPI) was launched – bringing together experts from government, business, health, academia and civil society to accelerate the development of vaccines.

(A: Wow. Big business, ‘eh, big business. By our masters. The people who brand us, hm. Okay. I’ll put that up too.)

The Lancet, the Lancet Journal, right. It's interesting this one too because, [Alan chuckles.] I said a while back that if you just watch what's pushed from Fauci and Gates and so on, they'll tell you what medicines they want you to take because everything is a big, multimillion, maybe even into the billions worldwide contracts, you understand, for any medications that's involved, which they will be pushing. And I'm sure too, I'm sure they'll have their little coziness, you know, agreements with the corporation. That's just how things work, folks, you know, when you're run by gangs. Because they’re all involved with money with the vaccine industry, some of them even have their own vaccine industries that we’re talking about here. And the World Economic Forum working with them too, right. It's just all out in the open if you bother to care about it.

So here, I was waiting to see them. Because you have the whole thing about the quinine derivatives too, and the chloroquine’s, things like that all getting pooh-poohed by Fauci and others, 'eh. Even though it was actually advocated during the SARS thing to be used across the Western world. [Alan chuckles.] By the same authorities. [Alan chuckles.] But that doesn't matter because this is big money, and in times of crisis you can demand whatever you want, and government will quite happily pay them billions for this thing. So... this is a study I remember I mentioned it a while back. That was April 29, but I had already read the article from China before that.

Lancet publishes results from inconclusive China study of Gilead's remdesivir

seekingalpha.com / 29 April 2020

The Lancet has published the results from a study in China testing Gilead Sciences' (GILD +4.9%) remdesivir in severely ill hospitalized COVID-19 patients with acute respiratory distress syndrome.

237 patients were enrolled across 10 hospitals in Hubei province, 158 received remdesivir and 79 placebo. Patients were allowed concomitant treatment with lopinavir–ritonavir, interferons, and corticosteroids.

The primary endpoint was time to clinical improvement up to day 28 (A: (A: Trying to find when you started showing improvement basically, to day 28…) defined as the time from randomization to the point of decline of two points on a six-point scale of clinical status (1=discharged to 6=death).

Patients receiving remdesivir within 10 days of symptom onset experienced numerically faster times to clinical improvement but the results were not statistically significant.

What they showed in China, really, you might start getting better one day earlier than if you didn't get it at all. Might, it's very iffy, you know. So, they didn't really see any really significant thing on it at all.

But anyway, I noticed that Mr. Fauci for the first time came out and advocated using that same drug, you see. So, there you go, it's made by the Gilead company, I think. So, it's pretty well from the start they knew darn well which one they'd eventually advocate to be used. And how come the rest of them are not going to be used? The other ones they're using in China are not going to get used, even though some of them were made in Cuba apparently, very cheap and it worked too. So, there you go, it doesn't make any difference.

Everything is so corrupt these days, folks. You've got to stop thinking of people out there as being some kind of angels in these positions. That's how the media wants to present them to you. But when you dig in and then you find incredible financing they get, all from the same circle, right, and Bill Gates and that, it's just incredible. Small, it's a small, a very small world when it comes to this kind of thing. It really is. It's really something. Really, really something. And folk never catch on.

But yeah, that was the Lancet one, and the other one where he is actually mentioned it himself, Mr Fauci, what he is advocating to be used.

The Lancet - study in China testing Gilead Sciences' remdesivir in severely ill hospitalized COVID-19 patients with acute respiratory distress syndrome - thelancet.com / 29 April 2020

Dr. Anthony Fauci Praises ‘Important’ Study on Remdesivir’s Effectiveness Against Coronavirus - breitbart.com / 29 April 2020

Remdesivir- the only drug shown to work against coronavirus - could cost up to $4500 per treatment despite costing just $9.32 to make - dailymail.co.uk / 7 May 2020

Another article too…

There is no climate emergency.

clintel.nl / 23 Sept 2019

A global network of more than 500 knowledgeable and experienced scientists and professionals in climate and related fields have the honor to address to Your Excellencies the attached European Climate Declaration, for which the signatories to this letter are the national ambassadors.

(A: This is to António Guterres, Secretary-General, United Nations. Just to show you all the scientists and professors are NOT all on board with it at all. They always tell you all the scientists are on board. No, they're not. [Alan chuckles.] There's a whole bunch of them signed the whole thing.)

There is no climate emergency

A global network of 500 scientists and professionals has prepared this urgent message. Climate science should be less political, while climate policies should be more scientific.

(A: It’s all politicized, you see, for agendas.)

Scientists should openly address the uncertainties and exaggerations in their predictions of global warming (A: Well, I’ve got snow outside right now.), while politicians should dispassionately count the real benefits as well as the imagined costs of adaptation to global warming, and the real costs as well as the imagined benefits of mitigation.

The fact too there’s natural causes of warming and cooling too. It’s always been that way, that’s why we had ice ages and warming ages. We’ve even had volcanic periods massively and stuff like that, before there was even people, or animals. So, you can’t really blame humans for causing it, could you? But facts don’t matter when there’s big agendas.

And again, they’ve crossed over the agenda into the disease one, oh, crisis, crisis. Here we go. And I just want to mention too that bird flu hit China about the same time as the coronavirus, not long afterwards at least, you know. At least they said in February I think they admitted that there was a bird flu out at the same time. An H5N6 strain, and they started killing off the foul and the poultry farming, etc. But anyway, they had other kinds of flus affected humans at the same time, more so than this one. This was hard to get. But facts don't matter, you know, other facts don't matter, to bump up the figures and so on.

Now, here's the next step too. You see, they're following the same thing in China. So much has to be accomplished by this... infection, right. A whole new way of living, a new world order as they call it, right. It says, you had Cuomo go on about, my God, you know, two thirds of New Yorkers hospitalized...

Coronavirus survey reveals ‘shocking’ stats about hospitalized New Yorkers

nypost.com / 6 May 2020

Two-thirds of New Yorkers hospitalized with the coronavirus were admitted from their homes, (A: Oh. Suddenly they're all shocked, 'eh. After telling everybody to get locked down in their homes.) a “shocking” statistic that defies social-distancing logic, Gov. Andrew Cuomo said Wednesday.

The curious conclusion was reached in a three-day survey of patients hospitalized with the bug conducted this week and revealed by Cuomo during his daily press briefing.

“Sixty-six percent of the people were at home, which is shocking to us,” said Cuomo.

(A: Why is it shocking? Since you told them to stay there.)

The same survey found that 46 percent were unemployed… (A: [Alan chuckles.] Well, I wonder why? D’you realize, these are the geniuses that are ruling your lives?)

…46 percent were unemployed, and 37 percent retired.

“So, that says they’re not working, they’re not traveling,” said Cuomo. (A: This guy is definitely a genius.) “These people were literally at home.”

(A: Oh wow. [Alan chuckles.] No kidding, ‘eh.)

Despite the twist, Cuomo doubled down on his calls for social distancing and personal responsibility, especially as hospitalizations and deaths continue to trend in the right direction.

“It reinforces what we’ve been saying, which is, much of this comes down to what you do to protect yourself,” Cuomo told reporters at a Long Island hospital. “Everything is closed down, government has done everything it could, society has done everything it could.”

“Now it’s up to you. Are you wearing a mask? Are you doing the hand sanitizer,” he continued. (A: This guy has no training in anything, except conology.) “If you have younger people who are visiting you and maybe be out there and maybe less diligent with the social distancing — are you staying away from older people?”

(A: Well, maybe they all live in the same darn home! They can’t afford, like you, maybe three or four homes, and all of the rest of your cronies. D’you hear this rubbish, ‘eh? I don’t know how many homes he actually has… Somebody will come back up with an answer.)

And only about 4 percent of respondents — 3 percent among city residents — listed public transportation as their primary way of getting around, though Cuomo noted that 45 percent didn’t respond to that question.

(A: Good for them!)

You understand, this is all again to push for these tracking apps and so on. Or the manacles and bracelets. The bracelets, it’s manacles, folks, that’s what they are. They’re electronic manacles. Because you’re all slaves now, you understand. And the scientists are your majordomos, they are the guys with the whips, you know. They’ll use the brutes, you know, to come and arrest you and drag you off. That’s what tyrants always do.

And believe you me, Bertrand Russell was quite right when he said if there is to be a tyranny he much preferred it would be and he hoped it would be a scientific tyranny, and he said, it would be the worst tyranny of all. Well, that's exactly what you're going to see if you go along with this nonsense. Because what they want to do, you see, with this, oh my God, they're at home and they are ill. No kidding. They WANT to start coming IN your homes, folks, BY LAW, which does away with the private property rights. I hope you're getting the picture here.

I was waiting for it coming, this one here, because they were doing that in China, doing spot checks in folks' homes, no matter who you were, hm. They're getting you used to the idea, no, no, you have no rights anymore, you see. This is a whole new paradigm. Property rights and everything... No, no, no. N-n-n. And that's why, oh my God they're ill and they're at HOME, 'eh. What a mystery this is, 'eh, a big mystery. Maybe it's because they can't get out and exercise and they're all getting sick, folks. Hm? And they can't get the decent food, etc. and they're getting sick? Yada, yada, ya. Hm? Perhaps that's what it is.

Everything is just part of this big agenda. An article here's interesting too, because I was going into finding out, you've got to find who's at the tops of these organizations. Again, you see the spider's webs, 'eh. This one here is…

Presidential Commission for the Study of Bioethical Issues

en.wikipedia.org

The Presidential Commission for the Study of Bioethical Issues (the Bioethics Commission) was created by Executive Order 13521 on November 24, 2009. (A: …when the last so-called fake thing hit at the time.) The Bioethics Commission advised President Barack Obama on bioethical issues arising from advances in biomedicine and related areas of science and technology. It replaces The President's Council on Bioethics appointed by United States President George W. Bush to advise his administration on bioethics, and the National Bioethics Advisory Commission (1996-2001).

(A: I think it was last week or the week before I put up articles, a whole bunch of stuff, from the Rockefeller Foundation on bioethics, by the way, and all these same characters involved in it. A new way of looking at human life, you see, and who should die and who should live, and should we save this and save that or whatever, yada, yada, ya. All that stuff I've been talking about for years. But this one here's interesting because it goes into bioethics for every generation.)

Bioethics for Every Generation: Deliberation and Education in Health, Science, and Technology, published in May 2016, provides eight recommendations to strengthen and advance deliberation and education to improve policy-making in bioethics, and to create a more democratic and just society.

(A: I remember too, you probably remember if you listen to any, I do, I listen to speeches, I try to get a hold of them even though they're not on TV. Because when Obama was running the first time, he mentioned that, he gave an example of his grandmother, was it really right to try and keep her alive in the hospitals. He was getting to the point of bioethics, and should we just euthanize people. That's what he was getting to, quite openly. M-hm. No, he was their character, he was their lad that they put into office for the globalists. He was, again, as I say, he carried on the wars and expanded the wars and got praise from the neocons that worked with Bush for continuing it. Here you go, it says bioethics for every generation…)

Anticipate and Communicate: Ethical Management of Incidental and Secondary Findings in the Clinical, Research, (A: …yada, yada, yada, ya.)

Sam Harris, author of The Moral Landscape: How Science Can Determine Human Values, (A: Well, there you go, kick religion out the window and science can determine human values. You see. They'll determine what's a good value or a bad value, or… you know. There ya go.) has publicly noted his discussions with a member of this panel, specifically regarding the hypothesis of a society that blinds every third citizen for religious reasons. The panel member found this unobjectionable for members of this culture, while Harris found this practice objectively wrong. Harris details a transcript of this conversation in Chapter 2 of his book.

It goes on and on and on. I'm just trying to get to show you the members of them. You'll see the same characters, members of it, who are listed as parts of the bioethics team. You'll see articles put out by them and this present virus, little campaign, you see. But you also find too that somebody who's at the head of one of these organizations, and it might even be this very one, is the wife of the person who's on the TV every night apparently, giving advice about how to live and yada, ya, and the disease, the top kind of disease, etc. It's quite interesting to find the connections of who these particular people actually are. Now, bioethics, 'eh, bioethics and bioethics commissions. And you get…

Christine Grady

en.wikipedia.org

(A: Who is Christine Grady?...)

Christine Grady is an American nurse and bioethicist who serves as the head of the Department of Bioethics at the National Institutes of Health Clinical Center.

Grady graduated from Livingston High School, after which she earned a BS in nursing and biology from Georgetown University in 1974, (A: …all the right places, 'eh.) a Master of Science in Nursing from Boston College in 1978, and a PhD in philosophy and bioethics from Georgetown University in 1993.

(A: And she worked with the HIV, I guess that’s where she met her husband Mr. Fauci, hm.)

Grady has worked in nursing, clinical research, and clinical care, with a specialization in HIV.
(A: And then…) She was a Commissioner on the Presidential Commission for the Study of Bioethical Issues from 2010 and 2017.

(A: Small world, isn’t it, ‘eh? She’s…)

…a senior fellow at the Kennedy Institute of Ethics, and a fellow of The Hastings Center and American Academy of Nursing.

(A: …and so on and so on. And she’s got all these awards, yada, yada. Which naturally if you’re married to Fauci you’re going to have lots of, uh, institutions to be associated with and take awards and yada, yada, ya. Isn’t that amazing? So, it's bioethics, you know, who should live and who should die. Well, that kind of stuff, isn't it? Isn't that something. Ain't that something.)

Another little article...

LEE CAMP: While Pandemic Destroys So Many Lives, The Surveillance State Celebrates

consortiumnews.com / 11 May 2020

If they’re able to track “violators” who follow within a flying spit particle of someone else, then it stands to reason they could choose to track pretty much any other type of behavior.

(A: OF COURSE, they will.)

If we don’t fight back against the secretive surveillance state growing steadily around us, your wife/husband may find out you love a Cinnabon more than you love her/him. And that might be just the beginning of it.

While many of us remain quarantined — inexorably welded to our home/apartment/RV in an abandoned Walmart parking lot — the surveillance state is actually stretching its legs, brought out for a run by our friendly neighborhood oligarchs like a young golden retriever let off its leash on a nice day. Unfortunately, in this case what it's retrieving is all of our information, movements, thoughts and desires.

It's a worthwhile article. These are all worthwhile articles to read that get you off the usual TV version of authorized spieling propaganda. It really is, you've got to look into other things too. There's an oddball thing I touched on too when I was going through some stuff today, was, have you heard of…

Timber Sycamore

en.wikipedia.org

(A: Its operational scope was weapons sales and training of Syrian rebels' forces against Assad, [Alan chuckles.] by the West. It's admitted to now, planned by the CIA. It says…)

Timber Sycamore was a classified weapons supply and training program run by the United States Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) and supported by some Arab intelligence services, such as the security service in Saudi Arabia. Launched in 2012 or 2013, it supplied money, weaponry and training to rebel forces fighting Syrian President Bashar al-Assad in the Syrian Civil War.

(A: It wasn't a Civil War at all. It was an outside created war.)

According to US officials, the program was run by the CIA's Special Activities Division and has trained thousands of rebels. President Barack Obama secretly authorized the CIA to begin arming Syria's embattled rebels in 2013.

(A: I remember at the time reading articles on the air, and it says...)

The program's existence was suspected after the US Federal Business Opportunities website publicly solicited contract bids to ship tons of weaponry from Eastern Europe to Tasucu, Turkey and Aqaba, Jordan.

(A: They were also shipping stuff through, I remember reading at the time, Qat'r. You have to say Qatar now. That's what they were doing with it too. It was so obvious to people at the time that whatever... This is strange CIA organization has been overthrowing governments across the planet since its inception. And literally it uses the US as its funding mechanism, the taxpayers. It's an agenda completely alien to the American mentality. They have a different agenda which folk can't really fathom out. And part of the globalization of it, the management of the world society, that's part of it. Of course, it is. But this is a good enough article here to give you an idea of it too. It gives you some of the history of it.)

Timber Sycamore began in late 2012 or early 2013 and was similar to other Pentagon or CIA-run weapons routing and training programs that were established in previous decades to support foreign rebel forces. Greg Miller and Adam Entous of The Washington Post (A: The links are all here.) stated that "The operation has served as the centerpiece of the U.S. strategy to press Syrian President Bashar al-Assad to step aside."

The program's principal backers were the United States and Saudi Arabia, but it was also supported by some other regional Arab governments, and by the United Kingdom. While Saudi Arabia provides more money and weaponry, the United States leads training in military equipment. The program was based in Jordan, due to that country's proximity to the battlefields in Syria.

According to The New York Times, the program initially allowed US forces to train Syrian rebels in use of military equipment, but not to directly provide the equipment itself.

(A: That was… These are all legalities they get around, ‘eh.)

A few months after its creation, it was amended to allow the CIA to both train and equip rebel forces.

That’s why, by the way, one of the reasons they also got Khomeini in Libya out of the way. Apart from grabbing the oil and different stuff too their as well. And, its massive reservoir of freshwater to get piped elsewhere to, you know, another neighboring country. They’d have stacks of weapons there, the ambassador talking about all this weaponry and these strange foreign fighters were just coming in and just taking the stuff and walking off. These were the armies they were preparing to go in and invade Syria. That’s what all that was about. The American troops were guarding the stuff and they were told to just let these guys go in and take what they wanted basically.

And of course, Europe ends up with the massive, massive overflowing refugee crisis that came out of it, the backlash, the blowback. All predicted, mind you. But they don't stop. And they never will stop. Because the people have no say what governments are up to, and those strange associations that are grafted onto the governments. We're not living in any kind of representative governments. We really aren't at all. And it wouldn't matter what party you voted for; they'd all go along with it too by the way.

This other article is quite good too. I've mentioned it before. John Whitehead’s commentary…

Human Lab Rats: The U.S. Government’s Secret History of Grisly Experiments

rutherford.org / 21 April 2020 / John Whitehead

I have never known any government to put the best interests of its people first, and this COVID-19 pandemic is no exception.

Now this isn’t intended to be a debate over whether COVID-19 is a legitimate health crisis or a manufactured threat. Such crises can—and are—manipulated by governments in order to expand their powers. (A: That’s dead on.)

While the U.S. government is currently looking into the possibility that the novel coronavirus spread from a Chinese laboratory rather than a market, the virus could just as easily have been created by the U.S. government or one of its allies.

After all, grisly experiments, barbaric behavior and inhumane conditions have become synonymous with the U.S. government, which has meted out untold horrors against humans and animals alike.

For instance, did you know that the U.S. government has been buying (A: This is interesting.) hundreds of dogs and cats from “Asian meat markets” (A: Did you know that? There’s a big program that’s on the go.) as part of a gruesome experiment into food-borne illnesses?

(A: That’s the excuse that’s given for it. They buy it from China and everywhere, you know.
M-hm.)

The cannibalistic experiments involve killing cats and dogs purchased from Colombia, Brazil, Vietnam, China and Ethiopia, and then feeding the dead remains to laboratory kittens, bred in government laboratories for the express purpose of being infected with a disease and then killed.
(A: And then they can analyze it, you see.)

(A: Now, this article, I'm going to read some more, it's pretty gruesome actually. But it's all factual and verifiable and admitted to. Can you imagine what they're not admitting to, 'eh? But before I go on, I'll just mentioned to you that I have seen the documentary's put out when the Communists were leading the world in the 1930s. And they were getting financed by the West, and clothed the by the West, and fed by the West. Even as they were starving their own people, especially in places like Ukraine and they were selling the grain off abroad in fact. It was like roundabout of grain; we were feeding Russia as they were killing off their own farmers in the Ukraine and in their Soviet bloc countries.)

(A: But they put out, they were champions you see of the secular society. That's really what the West was so enthralled about because they were doing, it was this big experiment using secular, a secular type government and science would rule. Common sense and practicality and science, and technocracy, would rule. You wouldn't have to be bothered with human emotions and things, just get it done. Efficiency, you see.)

(A: They put out this documentation on the experiments. I've mentioned it before. They cut off dogs' heads, and you can actually see what they gave to Britain as part of an experiment, and the declaration of how advanced they were. Because they kept the head alive by putting blood through it, artificially. It's just a head on a platter and the blood going in and going out. They would tickle its nose and stuff, and so interestingly, just jot down the reactions of the dog and so on in its nervous tissue and yada, yada, ya, and its reflexes.)

(A: I know they didn't stop there because I've already seen the photographs of much, much earlier where they had prisoners, like little huts of them, one of these Nissen huts. On either side you had these people with the tops of their skulls removed. They were prisoners. They were testing them out too. But for the public, for the West, they showed you the dogs' ones.)

(A: But this is science. Science will go this whole way, the very thing the Bertrand Russell sort of applauded. He said, we absolutely, the tyranny, a really horrific one, but that's the one he preferred. Well, here you are, folks. It's still going on, 'eh. And this is the one they published for the public here. So...)

The Department of Veterans Affairs has been removing parts of dogs' brains to see how it affects their breathing; applying electrodes to dogs' spinal cords (before and after severing them) to see how it impacts their cough reflexes; and implanting pacemakers in dogs' hearts and then inducing them to have heart attacks (before draining their blood). All of the laboratory dogs are killed during the course of these experiments.

(A: …I wonder what will happen if we take part of this brain out?)

(A: Maybe it's big, big business, 'eh? Maybe they want to see how they can work it out and they can get better ways to implant pacemakers in humans, by doing the same thing. They kill off our hearts, give us pacemakers and artificial hearts… [Alan chuckles.] …make a big business out of it. Who knows? Who knows? But this is where your tax money goes. The Department of Veterans Affairs, 'eh.)

It's not just animals that are being treated like lab rats by government agencies.

"We the people" have also become the police state's guinea pigs: to be caged, branded, experimented upon without our knowledge or consent, and then conveniently discarded and left to suffer from the after-effects.

(A: There's links to previous things which they've done to the public, like I said before. Even down to sensual human experiments.)

Back in 2017, FEMA "inadvertently" exposed nearly 10,000 firefighters, paramedics and other responders to a deadly form of ricin during simulated bioterrorism response sessions.

(A: I wonder how they… Whenever they do these simulated anything the real thing happens, 'eh? Isn't it? How can you… How can you…)

…inadvertently" expose…

…10,000 firefighters, paramedics and other responders to a deadly form of ricin…

(A: Hm?...)

…during simulated bioterrorism

(A: No, that was bioterrorism, by your own people.)

In 2015, it was discovered that an Army lab had been “mistakenly” shipping deadly anthrax to labs and defense contractors for a decade.

(A: …a decade. 10 years! ‘eh. Anthrax to labs and defense contractors, for 10 years. Mistakenly, ‘eh?)

While these particular incidents have been dismissed as “accidents,” you don’t have to dig very deep or go very back in the nation’s history to uncover numerous cases in which the government deliberately conducted secret experiments on an unsuspecting populace (A: I’ve mentioned some of them in the past and the links are here by the way. It’s got NBC news with the different things that they’ve tried in the past.) —citizens and noncitizens alike—making healthy people sick by spraying them with chemicals, injecting them with infectious diseases and exposing them to airborne toxins.

(A: You’re supposed to trust your governments, NOW, though, you know. That’s all of maybe five years ago, I mean, they’re all better now, you know, they’ve improved. [Alan chuckles.])

At the time, the government reasoned that it was legitimate to experiment on people who did not have full rights in society such as prisoners, mental patients, and poor blacks.

(A: Now, I’ll add to that list, for that one I read for the kind of promotional thing for that app in Australia, for people who just don’t want to, they’ll be a threat to the rest of society, ‘eh, by not taking the app, for goodness sake… Maybe experiment on them too.)

In Alabama, for example, 600 black men with syphilis were allowed to suffer without proper medical treatment in order to study the natural progression of untreated syphilis. In California, older prisoners had testicles from livestock and from recently executed convicts implanted in them (A: Can you believe that! Hm!) to test their virility. (A: They actually, you know these prisoners would obviously die when they had the foreign, from a different, another body, a foreign body, put into them, ‘eh. And…) In Connecticut, mental patients were injected with hepatitis.

(A: …for the big pharma companies and the treatment companies and stuff like that, vaccine companies.)

In Maryland, sleeping prisoners had a pandemic flu virus sprayed up their noses. In Georgia, two dozen “volunteering” prison inmates had gonorrhea bacteria pumped directly into their urinary tracts through the penis. In Michigan, male patients at an insane asylum were exposed to the flu

(A: You see, they’re using people literally who have no rights, they have no rights really, or even mental abilities often, to know what to do or even sue or whatever. Never to be heard of again, you understand that. And yet they want to do all the things to YOU during a crisis thing, they want to pump stuff into YOU, and using the technique of crisis, and shaming. If you don’t go along with it, you could harm other people. Well if everybody got the vaccine, they’d be safe, wouldn’t they? If it works, ‘eh? That negates that argument, if you didn’t want to take it.)

after first being injected with an experimental flu vaccine. In Minnesota, 11 public service employee “volunteers” were injected with malaria, then starved for five days.

In New York, dying patients had cancer cells introduced into their systems. In Ohio, over 100 inmates were injected with live cancer cells.

(A: …and blah, blah, blah, blah, blah.)

Just horrible, horrible, horrible. As they say, they always try to do it with people who can’t get any support or justice done. But you understand, if it was so, if everything was so open, aboveboard, why would they be doing this in secret with people who can’t fight back? Hm? You’d better understand who you’re dealing with here. You’d better understand, folks.

Who owns the environmentalist movement? This is a good one too.

Who Owns the Environmentalist Movement?

agenda21news.com / 15 Jan 2015

This article is adapted from Chapter 10 of the Holes in the Ozone Scare: The Scientific Evidence That the Sky Isn’t Falling, published in June 1992 by 21st Century and now in its second printing.

Twenty-five years ago, those who believed that Mother Nature comes first and humankind second were part of an insignificant fringe, considered radical by most Americans. These environmentalists were visible mostly at the level of the antinuclear street demonstration, where marijuana smoke wafted around “Back To Nature” posters on display. Today, however, what used to be extremist “environmentalist” ideology has become mainstream, permeating American institutions at every level, from corporate boardrooms to the Federal Reserve, the Congress, the White House, the churches, homes and schools.

(A: Because it’s an official agenda. Yeah, they used the hippies to start it all and carried it on from there. They created the crisis and then they don’t let it go to waste, you see, so this works, and folk follow it, so you can use them. Very efficient from that point of view, that technique.)

Official lore from the environmental movement’s publications asserts that the movement emerged from the grass roots. The truth, however, is that funding and policy lines comes from the most prestigious institutions of the Eastern Liberal Establishment, centered around the New York Council on Foreign Relations, and including the Trilateral commission, the Aspen Institute, and a host of private family foundations.

(A: All the big ones too, and the Rockefellers too, Ford, Carnegie and the rest of them.)

This network of foundations created environmentalism, moving it from a radical fringe movement into a mass movement to support the institutionalization of anti-science, no-growth policies at all levels of government and public life. As prescribed in the Council on Foreign Relations 1980s Project book series, environmentalism has been used against America’s economy, against such targets as high-technology agriculture and the nuclear power industry. This movement is fundamentally a green pagan religion in its outlook. Unless defeated, it will destroy not only the economy, but also the Judeo-Christian culture of the United States, and has in fact come perilously close to accomplishing this objective already.

(A: But it’s been used, as I say, by the big ones at the top, the big corporations, you see, to bring in their own forms of energy. Don’t forget, you can go into austerity as they cutback energy. And you say, why would the corporations that supply the power do that? Because they won’t lose anything if they quadruple and increase the cost of the energy by giving you LESS.. Don’t you get it? It’s quite easy to do. They’re all on board with it. And it’s less work for them to produce much less energy for you, you see. Quite amazing. But the foundations and their funding, it’s quite interesting, this particular article. It gives you a list of their revenues…)

Funding from the Foundations

Table 1 lists the annual revenues of a sampling of 30 environmental groups. These few groups alone had revenues of more than $1.17 billion in 1990. (A: …when they were starting all of it.) This list, it must be emphasized, by no means includes all of these enviro businesses. (A: And they ARE enviro businesses.) It is estimated that there are more than 3,000 so-called nonprofit environmental groups in the United States today, and most of them take in more than a million dollars a year.

(A: It gives you the names of some of them and what they bring in, for those who care to look at it.)

But again, you'll find this all, they're all connected too, as I say, with the big foundations, with UNESCO, with the World Wildlife Fund, and all the groups that Prince Philip who was involved with. He gave speeches about depopulation, etc. and he's all for it. And quite openly by the way, you know. And the Sierra Club and many others that he was at the head of, the titular head. I think one of his other offspring has taken over that position now that he's so old.

USC, Emory Creating Coronavirus Surveillance System Similar to China's Social Credit Scoring

breitbart.com / 4 May 2020

(A: You understand, it's all the same thing. That's from Breitbart.)

China launched its notorious social credit system last year to watch over its own citizens and mete out punishment based on personal behavior and loyalty to the Communist Party.

Now three prominent U.S. universities are using taxpayer money (A: …naturally.)

(A: You understand, it's your fellow people, or citizens that are your own worst enemies. The greed factor, ah, it's how all tyrannies flourish. They have no problem getting people to browbeat you or even manacle you or chain you or put you in black holes and close the lid, for money. As I say, filthy lucre. It doesn't change, folks. I've always said that, that no nation in history has been short of thugs they can employ from the base types to club you to death if you don't comply, or if they want to take taxes off you, which used to be farm animals and wheat and God knows what else. Now it's money. But they have no…)

(A: And it doesn't matter how you dress them up to look civilized, in suits, some of the tax collectors, they're still the same brutes really as well. They have no conscience at all. And they don't care who they damage. And for their own personal profit and their own wealth that they rake in off the taxpayers. But the brutes too that enforce it all, it's all one big gang. No nation has ever been short of candidates for this. It's just sad that we've got it. It just… It never gets… It's like the communist used to say and that part was true, that the capitalists would sell us enough rope to eventually hang them. And your fellow citizens are the ones that do it, folks, they'll hang you for their own, their own well-being, 'eh. N-n. Financial well-being.)

(A: So, it says here…)

Tech news outlet dot.LA recently reported that researchers at the University of Southern California, Emory University, and the University of Texas Health Science Center have received a federal grant to create a mobile app for contact tracing the novel coronavirus. (A: And it's everything else for, you know darn well, forever and ever, amen, it's not just for one little thing.) The system will track a person's real-time location and symptoms and calculate a personal COVID-19 risk score.

(A: It's the same thing, 'eh, as the credit score too, all grouped into one.)

USC's Cyrus Shahabi, chair of the computer science department, told dot.LA that the universities hope to have a working mobile app by August, in time for the start of the fall semester.

(A: Again, the same rubbish, it will warn you, the public, to avoid hotspots of infection. [Alan chuckles.])

In other instances, people who have been assigned high personal risk scores might decide to stay home or get tested for COVID-19.

But the project, whose federal grant money comes from the National Science Foundation, has already raised red flags in terms of privacy and the potential for Big Brother-style abuse.

(A: Well, I don't care what they say or what safeguards they say. It's going to be used for the agenda regardless, totally and completely. M-hm.)

China's social credit system has blacklisted more than 13 million citizens as "untrustworthy," (A: That's anyone who questions anything the government is doing, you're untrustworthy...) according to a recent report from the state-run Global Times. The report did not say what these individuals did to land on the list, but the regime has revealed the system assigns a numerical score to every Chinese citizen based on how much the Communist Party approves of his or her behavior.

It’s the same thing you’re getting with Facebook and Twitter and all the rest of it. There’s articles there that Facebook has employed a whole panel of what they call judges, like a star chamber, who decide to either behead you or not behead you according to whatever you dare to say which is politically incorrect and not allowed. It’s VERBOTEN! There ya go. And…

“We Need An Army Of Contact Tracers” – Meet The Enforcement Arm Of The “New Normal”

thelastamericanvagabond.com / 9 May 2020

(A: Oooo, wow. Oooo.)

As the people of the world grapple with a pandemic that is demonstrably less deadly than originally reported, the public is being primed to accept an exponential increase in invasions of personal liberty and privacy. Every day the public grows more weary of lock downs which seem to never end, and the bankrupting of individuals and businesses around the world. Amidst the frustration and protest a solution is being presented.

To return to normal, we are told, we must accept certain changes to how our world operates. Of course, this is actually a push to a “new normal” which will mark the world after COVID-19.

(A: There ya go, ‘eh. Hm.)

Just like the attacks of September 11, 2001, there is the world we knew before, and there is the post-9/11 era. We are currently in the middle of the COVID-19 era and a shift to post-COVID19 life will not happen without the completion of local, state, national, and international programs which identify potential infectees, test them, and, if positive, quarantine them in their homes or other government facilities.

You know what's going to happen, folks, is even if you comply with it, you see, you'll never please the masters as they push the next step of what they want, and the next step of what they want and so on. So if you eventually complain about anything, just like the Chinese credit score, you go into a grocery store and you might show that you're uninfected, but you'll still get a red glaring alarm going off because you said something that's politically incorrect and they're not pleased with you. In China, you understand, when it goes red, if you're in a store and it goes red for you, your phone, the police will come to your location and grab you.

It's just a wonderful scenario, 'eh, of democracy and stuff where big international corporations rule our lives in collusion with government. Which they used to just call fascistic and fascism.

There ya go. It's just astonishing. And once enough the fools go and get it, you see, the ones who say I'm not going to get that, then they're going to make it compulsory. Well, the rest of them have accepted it, what's wrong with you? They didn't mind. You see democracy is great for that, that herd mentality, they always take the path of least resistance. And they all want to be good, you understand... I'll be good enough do what I'm told, why aren't you doing what you're told? You know, well we all took it, you know, what's your problem? That's what government says, well they took it, what's your problem? [Alan chuckles.] It's all predictable, isn't it?

It's all been done before in other ways, you see. Why change methods if they work?

Another one is to do with, well, there's a lot of articles on that very topic, I won't go into any more of them actually. And…

Coronavirus: WHO Official Floats Removing the Infected from Their Homes to Stop Spread

breitbart.com / 7 April 2020

(A: Like I said too, like the mayor of New York there. He talked about, although they're all, you know, there's more in their homes now got it. Even though they haven't been out, for goodness sake. You know. Isn't that amazing, it's all a mystery, isn't it? It's a mystery. So…)

…Removing the Infected from Their Homes to Stop Spread

(A: You see, the end of private property. This is the next step, folks. They're all, when you hear them all parroting the same lines, exactly, across the world, from the same organizations and departments of government, they're all on board with the one, singular head at the top, folks. N-n-n. Weapons of mass destruction.)

Dr. Michael Ryan, executive director of the World Health Organization’s Health Emergencies Program (A: …right…), suggested during a March 30 press conference (A: Remember, the World Health Organization is funded primarily by Bill Gates, the private company.) That individuals infected with the Chinese coronavirus should be removed from their homes to prevent further spread of the deadly disease.

(A: Well, if you didn’t have it, but they grab you mistakenly, and they put you in a ward with it, you’ll soon have it, I’m telling you.)

The clip, first reported by Fox News Channel's Tucker Carlson, shows Ryan warning that "most of the transmission that's actually happening in many countries now is happening in the household at family level" before he speculates on measures to prevent the infection of patients' relatives.

A transcript is as follows:

DR. MICHAEL RYAN: Just so we get our terms right and we can explain ourselves properly, we tend to use the word isolation for someone who is a case, confirmed. (A: They TEND to, it doesn't say they always do but they tended to.) We tend to use the word quarantine for someone who's at risk of being a case, usually a contact, so on that basis we advise that all suspect cases are tested, and all suspect cases are isolated in an appropriate medical facility.

(A: And their tests are all, I've got stuff here where a guy was tested twice in the same day, once positive and once negative. Yep. It's a joke, the testing system, folks. It really is. I've done talks on that already, so I won't go into it all here. But here they go on with it again too.)

But they definitely want into your homes now. I hope you're getting that; I hope you're getting this picture here, folks. And they will do it. The more you back off and take a step back and a step back, they'll keep walking forward with the next demand, the next demand. It's all worked out in advance, you see.

It's a whole agenda for a whole new world system of managing the people, and you can't have private property. They said that in the Communist Manifesto. They said that in the rights of Freemasonry, and Albert Pike. He said, you know, private property, we can't have that. It's all the same agenda, isn't it strange, 'eh? The capitalists say the same thing about you, because they want to own the private property to rent to you, you see. That's the big agenda worldwide. M-hm.

And this one here is world depopulation, 'eh, world depopulation. You go into the Club of Rome and this is their published article that goes on to here, right. So…

WORLD DEPOPULATION IS TOP NSA AGENDA: CLUB OF ROME - The Haig-Kissinger depopulation policy

educate-yourself.org / 10 March 1981

(A: …national security agency agenda…)

WORLD DEPOPULATION IS TOP NSA AGENDA: CLUB OF ROME

The Haig-Kissinger depopulation policy

by Lonnie Wolfe

Special Report EIR (Executive Intelligence Review)

March 10, 1981

(A: They go into this whole idea of reducing the population by 2 billion or whatever…)

Investigations by EIR have uncovered a planning apparatus operating outside the control of the White House whose sole purpose is to reduce the world's population by 2 billion people through war, famine, disease and any other means necessary. This apparatus, which includes various levels of the government is determining U.S. foreign policy. In every political hotspot -- El Salvador, the so-called arc of crisis in the Persian Gulf, Latin America, Southeast Asia and in Africa- the goal of U.S. foreign policy is population reduction. The targeting agency for the operation is the National Security Council's Ad Hoc Group on Population Policy. (A: …for the NSA.) Its policy-planning group is in the U.S. State Department's Office of Population Affairs (A: You know who set these departments up? It was the Rockefeller group, even for the United Nations one, the population department.), established in 1975 (A: …this one…) by Henry Kissinger. This group drafted the Carter administration's Global 2000 document, which calls for global population reduction, and the same apparatus is conducting the civil war in El Salvador as a conscious depopulation project. (A: As I say, this is 1981.)

"There is a single theme behind all our work (A: This is the NSA, eh.) -we must reduce population levels," said Thomas Ferguson (A: …another Ferguson.), the Latin American case officer for the State Department's Office of Population Affairs (OPA). (A: Did you know you had one?) "Either they [governments] do it our way, through nice clean methods or they will get the kind of mess that we have in El Salvador, or in Iran, or in Beirut. (A: This is 1981, 'eh.) Population is a political problem. Once population is out of control it requires authoritarian government, even fascism, to reduce it. (A: DING, DING, DING, DING, DING!) "The professionals," said Ferguson, "aren't interested in lowering population for humanitarian reasons. That sounds nice. We look at resources and environmental constraints. We look at our strategic needs, and we say that this country must lower its population-or else we will have trouble.

(A: And it goes on and on and on. Old article. Some people used to complain about the guy who owned the organization, the Executive Intelligence Review, but they put out a lot of good factual information regardless. And that cannot be doubted, you can check it all yourself and see the articles and so on. Quite amazing. It says here too... So, steps are taken, right, if you don't comply.)

So, steps are taken. El Salvador is an example where our failure to lower population by simple means has created the basis for a national security crisis.

(A: You see, this brings you in to something that George Orwell understood, and he put it in 1984. When you're going through the book and so on and you think there's a resistance movement to the order, and you find out, no, it's been set up by the ones who control the order. They create your opposition. That never changes, folks. The big opposition, you can generally smell the rats and so on. But they find out too that wars aren't meant, when you get this discourse in the book that Winston's given by O'Brien, whose the high order member, and the book says that, wars aren't meant to win, they're meant to simply just be continued. It does matter who they are continued with, just keep the wars going.)

(A: Well, do you ever think about the depopulation agenda here? And all this stuff all through Latin America with the School of the Americas? Remember, they were training them all and sending them down into these different countries and they would go, they would set up, again, the Hegelian dialectic. So, you get the existing regime, and you create its opposition. That's what Hegelianism is all about, you see. The thesis. And then you create the antithesis. Something to go against it and get the strife starting, and out of the strife you get the desired outcome, where you wanted to go to. That's your synthesis.)

(A: That's what the School of the Americas did. They were all over the place killing and either on behalf of the right-wingers, or even the left-wingers, as long as the wars were kept going and down comes the population. Folk can't farm, starvation sets in, yada, yada, yada, ya. This is a technique; I hope you understand that this. That's what really runs the world. It's very efficient. It's disguised, it can only operate with the fact that we refuse to accept what we are seeing. We go into disbelief, you know, I don't want to hear that, I don't want to know that, it's too bad, I don't want to hear that, it upsets my paradigm. That's how it is folks. So, it says…)

Civil wars are somewhat drawn-out ways to reduce population, the OPA official added. "The quickest way to reduce population is through famine, like in Africa or through disease like the Black Death," all of which might occur in El Salvador. Ferguson's OPA monitors populations in the Third World and maps strategies to reduce them. Its budget for FY 1980 was $190 million;

(A: That was a lot of money back then too, believe you me. You could probably say the billions today because the currency has devalued so much.)

for FY 198l, it will be $220 million. The Global 2000 report calls for doubling that figure. The sphere of Kissinger In 1975, OPA was brought under a reorganized State Department Bureau of Oceans, International Environmental, and Scientific Affairs (A: How they disguised it, eh, from depopulation and so on and population control, and let's call it the State Department Bureau of Oceans, International Environment and Scientific Affairs …) -- a body created by Henry Kissinger.

(A: Remember Henry Kissinger brought out that little bill and he said that, from another one too, and they both agreed, the person in the government along with Kissinger, agreed that the greatest enemy of the state with overpopulation.)

Anyway, it's a long enough article and I won't read it all here. You can read it yourself if you want to. And other folks will do it and put it into shows very quickly, I'm sure. [Alan chuckles.]   Another article too and it's from Robert F Kennedy Jr.

Does The Coronavirus Pandemic Serve A Global Agenda? - technocracy.news / 23 March 2020

...very interesting article. They go into it as well too. I'll put that up. Again, getting back to what I've done before but from the 21st Century Wire on 23 December 2019, very appropriate time to bring it out coincidental really.

Bill Gates, MIT Develop New ‘Tattoo ID’ to Check For Vaccinations

21stcenturywire.com / 23 Dec 2019

(A: I've done this one before too, but you got to keep repeating things occasionally for the people who are overwhelmed with extra stuff. If you keep on the basic stuff, then you can argue back at least when you have an idea of at least five different parts of this big agenda and what's coming along the pike, and what's really important. Because anybody takes this tattoo ID, I really, it's beyond Brave New World, folks. And it's not going to be anything like Brave New World. You're going to go into real austerity and literally... At least in 1984 Winston could get a little corner where the camera couldn't see him to write his little diary, you know. With the total monitoring of everywhere that you're going to be at all times, you couldn't even have peace to do that. I hope you understand this. So's that those, your masters, your owners, can feel safe when you're completely monitored 24 hours a day. This article goes into the whole idea of it.)

“The invisible “tattoo” accompanying the vaccine is a pattern made up of minuscule quantum dots — tiny semiconducting crystals that reflect light — that glows under infrared light. The pattern — and vaccine — gets delivered into the skin using hi-tech dissolvable microneedles made of a mixture of polymers and sugar.”

(A: It's got the links to the publishing of it too in …)

The research groups findings were published this week in the journal Science Translational Medicine.

(A: It’s put under translational medicine, a tattoo on you.)

“In other words, they’ve found a covert way to embed the record of a vaccination directly in a patient’s skin rather than documenting it electronically or on paper (A: N-n-n.)

What a hell on earth, 'eh?... a hell on earth they're bringing in under this guise, hm? I tell ya.

I love too how they suddenly have changed their minds on the source of this thing, this particular disease, as they go forward with their... their business agreements with China and the US in Britain and Europe. It's all business, folks, you know, and who's going to get big lump sums from whoever was responsible as they go along with it. Fauci says, yeah, suddenly, suddenly it just appeared in nature, you know, this thing by itself. After going through all the paraphernalia of, it's a man-made thing and my God. That's what really terrified the public, it wasn't natural. That is even more scary if it's made in a lab that deals in sort of biochemistry or biowarfare. It's all the same thing, folks, when you get gain of function. But it just did it all by itself supposedly, 'eh? Because of agreed on things, and big lump sums of billions of dollars was to change hands to make them all come to the same conclusion. You can always smell it, you know. That's how business is really done in the world with big governments and important people.

So...

Trump Speculates That China Released Virus in Lab 'Mistake'

usnews.com / 1 May 2020

The Office of the Director of National Intelligence, the clearinghouse for the web of U.S. spy agencies, (A: They even have a clearing house, right.) said it had ruled out the virus being man-made (A: …right. So, this is nothing to do… They’re not scientists there in that area, but THEY’ve ruled out the virus being man-made…) but was still investigating the precise source of the global pandemic, which has killed more than 220,000 people worldwide.

Hm. Although, that’s not a lot of people. And then they’re lumping everybody in with all the other symptoms with it. Dear, I tell ya. I mean, they’re trying to say that the whole world is locked down forever here? For this? Hm? And folk are dying every day of normal things anyway. We all do eventually folks. Hm? As I say, that Hancock in Britain, the minister in charge of health supposedly, said that 10,000 folk a month die normally in Britain. Yep. Normally. And they balance it between births and deaths, that's what they always do.

So anyway, as I say, they'll come to agreements and money, big big money and big favors flow back and forth and all that. They'll say, well, it just happen naturally, it was one of these things. A mosquito grabbed it and altered it in its body by mistake, you know, just by pure chance, and then it bit somebody, you know. Yep. Or maybe a bat ate a mosquito, 'eh!? And maybe, maybe, maybe, maybe forever, you get degrees in maybes when you go into this particular field and you become an expert in maybes.

Then you go into this article…

The Dubious COVID Models, The Tests and Now the Consequences

globalresearch.ca / 29 April 2020 / F. William Engdahl

Two major models are being used in the West since the alleged spread of coronavirus to Europe and USA to “predict” and respond to the spread of COVID-19 illness. One was developed at Imperial College of London. The second was developed, with emphasis on USA effects, by the University of Washington’s Institute for Health Metrics and Evaluation (IHME) in Seattle, near the home of Microsoft founder Bill Gates. (A: Ha.) What few know is that both groups owe their existence to generous funding by a tax-exempt foundation that stands to make literally billions on purported vaccines and other drugs to treat coronavirus—The Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation.

(A: Quite a good article this.)

In early March, Prof. Neil Ferguson, head of the MRC Centre for Global Infectious Disease Analysis at Imperial College London issued a widely-discussed model that forecast possible COVID-19 deaths in the UK as high as 500,000. Ferguson works closely with the WHO. That report was held responsible for a dramatic u-turn by the UK government from a traditional public health policy of isolating at risk patients while allowing society and the economy to function normally. Days after the UK went on lockdown, Ferguson’s institute sheepishly revised downwards his death estimates, several times and dramatically. His dire warnings have not come to pass and the UK economy, like most others around the world, has gone into deep crisis based on inflated estimates.

(A: But they go into how they use these models, these computer models to give them the outcomes that they want. It’s the same with climate models. What is it you want? Okay, we’ll work on that and program the computer, and we’ll give you all the scary, scary scenarios.)

In 2002 Ferguson predicted that up to 50,000 people in UK would die from variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease, “mad cow disease”, possibly to 150,000 if the epidemic expanded to include sheep. (A: That was back then, I remember that all happened, how horrible it was. Oh, yeah, 50,000 people in the UK could die from it he says, Mr. Ferguson.)

…possibly to 150,000 if the epidemic expanded to include sheep. A total of 178 people were officially registered dead from vCJD.

(A: And even at that, it’s very iffy and that they have neurological problems instead.)

In 2005, Ferguson claimed that up to 200 million (!) people (A: WOW.) worldwide would be killed by bird-flu or H5N1.

(A: This guy should work for horror movies, really. You can make some great scripts from it, couldn’t you? I mean, you really could.)

By early 2006, the WHO had only linked 78 deaths to the virus.

(A: A big difference, ‘eh? 200 million to 78. Hm.)

Then in 2009 Ferguson’s group at Imperial College advised the government that swine flu or H1N1 would probably kill 65,000 people in the UK. In the end, swine flu claimed the lives of 457 people.

Ferguson and his Imperial College group have a notoriously bad track record for predicting disease consequences.

(A: Hm. And he hasn’t stopped yet, as we know, ‘eh. Good article though. And they bring in Dr. Anthony Fauci and his own private group, the NIAID.)

…Dr Anthony Fauci of NIAID reportedly confronted President Trump and pressured him to declare a national health emergency. Much as in the UK, once the damage to the economy was begun, Ferguson’s model later drastically lowered the US fatality estimates to between 100,000 to 200,000 deaths. In both US and UK cases Neil Ferguson relied on data from the Chinese government, data which has been shown as unreliable.

But also, they're all involved as I say with Bill and Melinda Gates, and GAVI, the vaccine alliance. All of them. All of these people are involved in the same organizations.

And also, also, also, 'eh...

Never Let a Crisis Go To Waste

cgdev.org / 14 April 2020

(A: M-hm. It says…)

The coronavirus is spreading and for the first time in history virtually all people on earth are faced with the same, imminent common threat. With multifold stories (A: … blah, blah, blah…) of individual suffering and an unprecedented global lockdown, there is an intensifying call for an internationally coordinated response; it is in every country's interest to think and act globally.

(A: Are you starting to get a sniff of where it's all from, 'eh? Are you?)

The question arises whether global threats like the coronavirus are isolated phenomena (A: …blah, blah, blah, blah, blah...) … Environmental stress seems to be a common feature associated with our economic system.

Therefore, we can be certain that this will not be the last global crisis…

(A: This one here goes into what should be done, blah blah blah.)

The first lesson (A: Again, here's that term, you know where it comes from, and they always say the same, weapons of mass destruction…) is that we are all in this together.

It is understandable that the domestic debate in the countries currently most affected by the crisis has been almost exclusively focusing on the right approach to reduce immediate harm to their own citizens. But we should be conscious that the necessary actions taken in each country to prevent the virus from spreading – i.e. placing their economic systems into a sort of hibernation – may trigger significant unintended side-effects in poorer countries.

(A: We'll all be poorer. It's what they're on about you see.)

A global economy in recession …

(A: No kidding you. That's what happens when you lock everybody down and stop them from working and that. You get a global recession. Ah, I never would have though, who'd have guessed, 'eh? M-hm. Then it goes into the next calamity that might happen during all this. According to The Economist, you know as well, they use The Economist article. They want…)

…strong multilateral institutions and stronger global governance.

(A: Ah, I'd never have guessed that's where they were going with this article.)

As the President of Ethiopia put it in his letter to the G20: "These challenges cannot be adequately addressed (…) by one country; they require a globally coordinated response.

(A: M-hm. So, they get their global governance coming out of this whole… And the World Bank response is in here too. Who would've guessed the World Bank would've got in on this as well, 'eh? There ya go. And the World Bank group, it says…)

The World Bank Group has already prepared a package of support (A: …of your tax money.) and is inviting other donors to co-finance activities to achieve a massive international coordinated and proven intervention (instead of small donor-driven, potentially non-replicable stand-alone projects).   (A: Oh, wow. That's a mouthful, 'eh. and…)

Improving the Multilateral Architecture

(A: Hm. The UN Security Council, the World Bank group, the International Monetary Fund, all the big group set up, the big club set up by the Royal Institute of International Affairs, that private group, that Council on Foreign Relations. Hm. The Biodiversity Conference as well that's all going to get rammed through it as well. The Global Public Goods Window. And all the philanthropists are on board with it. They're part of governance now, you see. You didn't notice them getting grafted on, because you don't vote for them, but they're part of your governance system. I hope you understand that. Isn't that just wonderfully utopic? Isn't it? There ya go.)

You also have all these different, sudden NGO groups, just well-financed ones, just popping out of nowhere. And with big expensive websites.

COMMISSION FOR THE HUMAN FUTURE

humanfuture.net

(A: They want to...)

...promote a positive narrative for transitioning to sustainable planetary health...

(A: During all this crisis, sustainability, you see.)

...and to partner with governments, researchers and policymakers...

(A: Never mind the public though.)

...to draw on the research available in Australia, as an example, and internationally for this purpose, including partnering with like-minded national and global institutions, to act as a knowledge broker in communicating about threats and solutions. Develop action on threat reduction and mitigation, adaptation that focus on both selected and combined risks.

(A: Ah, sustainability, 'eh, climate change, resources, 'eh, human population, that's the numbers, pollution, etc. I tell ya, this one here is quite something, another roundtable. It just came out of nowhere. They rose from the ashes of the fires, you know, they recently had there in Australia. It's called Commission for the Human Future. Commission for it all. And there's a big city there. And there's the clouds, going away, you see. On the other side, there's blue skies and nice white clouds, fluffy ones. And in the middle, there's the sun behind the big buildings, the rising sun idea, the corona. Isn't that wonderful? The light, a light bringer. But there it is, right there. And then a big green lawn in front of the big, big city.)

Surviving and thriving in the 21st century.

A call to action on global catastrophic risks.

Well, my God, if you believed it, if you lived like that, you'd never live at all, very long at all, you'd just die of terror. And believe you me, the money ain't going to help it. Things that really finish off this world would have nothing to do with what we do.

Again, Gates again, I mentioned before about his involvement in Common Core curriculums in schools. Here's…

New York to Work With Gates Foundation to 'Reimagine' Schools: Governor

reuters.com / 5 May 2020

(Reuters) - New York will work with the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation (A: Why don't we just make him emperor of the planet, he seems to have a finger in every pie, 'eh?) to "reimagine" the state's school system as part of broader reforms in the wake of the coronavirus pandemic, Governor Andrew Cuomo told a daily briefing on Tuesday.

"We have paid a very high price for what we are going through. But the hope is that we learn from it… (A: And blah, blah, blah.)

(A: It says he wants to create a new schooling system, I guess it's all to do with the Internet and so on. Mind you, if you don't have the schools on the go, it's a whole new way of doing... It will save, all the taxpayers' money for schools can go into other agendas for the big guys at the top, you understand. [Alan chuckles.] That's what it will be for. Not to save YOU money. It never does. Your taxes won't go down. Np. N-n-n.)

"The old model of everybody goes and sits in a classroom and the teacher is in front of that classroom, and teaches that class, and you do that all across the city, all across the state, all these buildings, all these physical classrooms – why with all the technology you have?" Cuomo asked.

Cuomo is making plans for reopening New York, the worst-hit state by far… (A: …blah, blah, blah…)

This is the idea that they're pushing forward now, is virtual schools, you see. Maybe they give you a virtual degree at the end of your college, 'eh. And we can all be virtual people. I think virtual everything. Except real-life food, decent food, freedom. Yeah. Can you imagine, we get a little virtual figures like they played with on the net years ago, you know, everybody had their little favorite little character. We could all be virtual people living through these little cartoons. Because we won't have any, any life at all in reality the way it's going now.

Offices Will Never Look The Same In Post-COVID World Of Plexiglass and Temperature Checks

zerohedge.com / 4 May 2020

A recent Bloomberg exploration of just what the typical American office worker can expect imagines the scenario that follows, which seems akin to a strict and exhaustive regimen already a reality in Wuhan and other places in China, forever changing what post-COVID-19 'normal' looks like.

The report is aptly titled, The Office You Left Is Not Going to Be the Office You Return To — because the tragic new regimen for most, especially in urban centers will likely be: Goodbye, open desk plan. Hello, masks, temperature checks, and plexiglass walls.

And in the United States, something akin to this is coming, the report begins:

(A: And it’s from Bloomberg.)

The Office You Left Is Not Going to Be the Office You Return To - bloomberg.com / 1 May 2020

Your first day headed back to the office will likely feel different from the minute you wake up. Imagine the morning begins with a self-administered Covid-19 symptom and temperature check. An app will report the results to your boss. (A: …and to the police too, I’m sure.) If all’s well, a low-occupancy company provided shuttle (A: Here you go, this is the whole Agenda 21 too by the way.) will take you to work. Everyone on it will be wearing a mask.

Once at the office, a second health check. Attendants will strictly control access to doors, elevators and common areas to prevent close contact.

(A: This is incredible overkill, isn’t it, for something that’s dwindling all the time in numbers. And never achieved anything like the terror, the actual real, you know, deaths and so on that they claimed it would. Nothing like it at all. No point arguing it because they’re ramming it ahead regardless. This is their whole agenda, sustainability, all-in-one, you understand, and they’re not going to back off. Unless you MAKE them back off. It’s up to people to say NO to all this nonsense.)

The route around the office will be one-way only. Formerly jammed open desk plans will sit half-empty. You may be encased in a makeshift cubicle made of plexiglass sheets.

To avoid overcrowding, (A: You’ll be monitored with…) keycards or sensors will monitor your whereabouts throughout the day. Your smartphone may vibrate to alert you to coworker traffic, like Waze for commuting to the copy machine. Lunch will come hermetically sealed. Say goodbye to communal coffee breaks. (A: …etc., etc.)

Oh, they're just lapping this up, 'eh, the ones who are churning it out, just wonderful, wonderful, you know, all these little nothings will be obeying us.

It's all up to you to go along with it. You acquiesce through fear/terror, and believe you me, you're dooming yourself and generations to come into a living hell.

Then this one here too…

'Cancel their contracts, they are a menace to society': Anti-vaxxer NRL stars are slammed as 'entitled' for refusing to get the flu jab - as league gives players 48-hour ultimatum

dailymail.co.uk / 7 May 2020

(A: May 7, the Daily Mail, Australia.)

NRL will grant exemptions to allow anti-vaxxers to play without getting a flu shot

(A: No one trusts it anymore because folk got sick in previous years too. And they've obviously warned, the military has warned, they've got this whole flap on the go, that the flu shots make them open to the coronavirus. [Alan chuckles.] I'm not kidding you. It's quite amazing what's going on right now.)

Frustrated footy fans have slammed reports up to 20 top NRL players are refusing to get a mandatory flu shot as the league prepares to resume its 2020 season.

NRL management has now demanded the players must either get the flu vaccine or sign a waiver in the next 48 hours if they wish to play the game this year.

Those refusing to get the jab reportedly include Canberra players Josh Papalii, Sia Soliola, Joe Tapine, Canterbury's Sione Katoa, Gold Coast's Bryce Cartright, and Manly trio Dylan Walker, Marty Taupau, and Addin Fornua-Blake.

'The NRL are still to figure out that this self-entitled, better than everyone else attitude needs to stop.'

Well, they got the right to choose. You're supposed to have the informed CONSENT. People at the top have this terrible reaction to the word consent now, they're trying to make everything mandatory. No one sticks anything in your body without your CONSENT. That's the difference between a tyranny, folks, and a free society. And there should be no penalties for refusing it in a free society. Folk who are vaccinated should be perfectly safe, shouldn't you, if you ever had it, you know. Isn't that how it's supposed to work? No, this stigmatization and this shaming of people is a technique that they used in totalitarian tyrannies. That's a standard technique, stigmatize opposition as terrible, disgusting enemies of humanity, blah, blah, blah. It's all been done before. I'll put that one up anyway for those that want to read it.

As I say, you're supposed to have informed consent. Consent means you get to say yes or no, right. And you shouldn't be penalized for saying no. What's the difference of getting tortured to do something, if you say no, they keep torturing you, you know? It's the same kind of idea. This is tyranny when that comes down to that. Absolutely. Then you have…

Trudeau mulls making coronavirus vaccine mandatory for Canadians - lifesitenews.com / 30 April 2020

Well really? Is he the top honcho that says that you must allow your body to be pumped full of foreign stuff by private companies and corporations? That are even terrified to tell the public what's even in it because it's so disgusting. Really. But then again too, they should also say, fine, we’ll take that if you agree that we can sue you, and I mean completely, when it all goes wrong. And sue the government as well. And the vaccine companies. They should have no protection, these vaccine companies for what they do to the people.

What's the old idea with the covenants that they're supposed to take, you know, do no harm? What happened to that covenant? Hm? Do no harm? Well the litany of harm is just endless when you go back and read it all. Oh, well these are just aberrant things. Really? Writing off hundreds or maybe even thousands of people across the planet over many years, is just one of these things. No, no, no, no, no. Nope. Not at all. Especially when there is such a big agenda at stake here, folks, you know. And…

Facebook names 20 people to its 'Supreme Court' for content moderation

nbcnews.com / 6 May 2020

Facebook names 20 people to its 'Supreme Court' for content moderation. Facebook on Wednesday appointed 20 people from around the world to serve on what will effectively be the social media network's “Supreme Court” for speech, issuing rulings on what kind of posts will be allowed and what should be taken down.

The list includes nine law professors (A: …right.), a Nobel Peace Prize laureate from Yemen (A: Well, that’s very…) and journalists, free speech advocates and a writer from the libertarian Cato Institute. (A: Right.)

(A: So, there’s your star chamber.)

Absent, however, was any prominent expert in studying disinformation. Facebook has struggled to contain state-based manipulation efforts as well as hoaxes on subjects like false cures and gun violence.

Helle Thorning-Schmidt, a former prime minister of Denmark and one of four co-chairs of the board, said they would consider such expertise in recruiting more members.

(A: Oh, great jobs for people doing nothing, as usual, ‘eh, who sit there with their noses in the air, they’re soo important.)

But again, this is where it's to go with the whole, the whole Google system too which is part of the massive global intelligence system. That's what it is, intelligence agency system. Of course, they are. It's the same with Facebook. From the very beginning. They always have these fronts. And…

Remdesivir- the only drug shown to work (A: Again, it's a PR thing, it's the only one. No, it's not the only one shown to work. It's by Gilead.) against coronavirus - could cost up to $4500 per treatment despite costing just $9.32 to make

dailymail.co.uk / 7 May 2020

Gilead has not revealed how much its antiviral drug, remdesivir, which is approved by the FDA to treat coronavirus, will cost

(A: It's amazing it got approved though, hey, and it's the only one that Fauci said, you know, that he would back. Interesting.)

The California-based company drew intense public scrutiny when it priced its hepatitis C treatment at $1,000 per pill in 2013

(A: …you want it, you need it, we've got it. That's the whole thing, isn't it? $1000 per pill.)

A report estimated that it costs $9.32 to manufacture one 10-day course of remdesivir treatment

(A: It's interesting too they used, I think they got funding inside the US to test the different stuff out on people. So, all these companies are taxpayer, get massive input from taxpayer money. Incredible really. That's public/private though, isn't it?)

The cost watchdog said that, if the drug is proven to save lives, Gilead could charge up to $4,500 per treatment

(A: Well, there ya go. They're in the business of helping people. Like everybody else that's out there on these stages dictating to you. They're all there to help you. Really. Honestly.)

Now before I get into the last little leg here of my talk for the night, I just have to remind you once again, once again, because we all got short memories, right. You can help me tick along my donating to me @cuttingthroughthematrix.com website. Once again, list all the sites listed there, the official sites I have, in case any of them get pulled or go down for any reason hopefully you can still hear me, and as I say, keep up to scratch with what's happening. Help me tick along because it costs cash to keep these sites all going. And I don't sell T-shirts or herbs to make you live forever or anything like that. I just don't. I leave that to other people.

I just survive on what people send me here and there. Lots of people use my site, believe you me, regardless of what you might see. I've been shadow banned forever. Definitely since I came out with the whole agenda many years ago and really change the direction it all, at least the so-called alternate media. They had to start following me at the time. Until the big boys got control of the other ones and shaped it all around me, I suppose. But that's how things happen in real life. You can't expect that you're living in some kind of fair fight of any kind. Doesn't work that way. It never has.

Everything is always subverted and destroyed. I've seen lots of good radio stations that have been taken down and destroyed because others threatened the people who advertise with them, to stop advertising or else basically. It's just astonishing the tricks that go on. People have no idea of what they're following. Even the so-called alternative media often ends up just being a political, an advocate for a political party. All the parties are the same.

Again, going back to Carroll Quigley, he said the same thing back in the 1960s when he published his book. He said that the parties eventually are all the same, working for the same agendas and promising the same nonsense to the general public. But serving much higher authorities. He was a technocrat. He believed in technocracy and rule by experts and intelligentsia. He really believed in that, so he was quite honest about it in his books.

So yeah, even what you're following eventually is gradually subverted until you don't realize you've been destroyed or neutralized. And then in comes all the different people who are celebrated at the top as the leaders, the leaders of the alternate media. Then they split up any unified action against anything. That's counterintelligence. Until you can't all collectively advocate against anything to save your lives down the road. That's what happens. That's very successful counterintelligence.

Now you're back to voting. You'll be voting when you're in chains, with your manacles and so on, you'll still be voting. They keep telling you so-and-so will make it better, don't worry. There's nobody to vote for, really. They're all completely compromised, the whole system is thoroughly crooked in this day and age. Unfortunately.

It's up to the public to start demanding from governments the fact that they don't just get to take rights. They can't take rights from you, remember that. So, you have to start using your rights and asserting natural power once again. It's the only way you can do it. Or you’re really doomed.

And it really is, if you acquiesce and you go backwards one step, and you do the second step, then before you know what you're going back, you're walking backwards. And they never give up. That's the technique that's being used. The behaviorists, I've prattle on about this for years, they are employed to do this kind of stuff. And here we are, they're all pushing it forward now.

So, you can help me as I say tick along. Go into cuttingthroughthematrix.com and look at my site there. You can find out how to help me tick along too and keep going.

Now, for the last leg here let's just touch on, really, the whole idea of the World Economic Forum. Everything out there is all connected with the same players. Remember, Quigley again said the new system will be run by CEOs of international corporations. He also included the medical industry. You're seeing it openly today. They'll be the new feudal overlords. The new system will be a feudal system and the feudal overlords will be the CEOs of [international] corporations. That's where we are now, isn't it?

You got to it, whether you liked it or not. You weren’t asked about it. You never are. You never will be asked about anything that you really, really need to know or to have an input in. So, the World Economic Forum, I always say it backwards, it's the FEW, it's for the few. They have the Center for the Fourth Industrial Revolution. Very important because they prattle on about the previous times, you know, of times of industry up to the present, and the Fourth Industrial Revolution is the new type. A totally monitored society is all part of their Fourth Industrial Revolution.

WEF Centre for the Fourth Industrial Revolution - Shaping the Future of Technology Governance: Artificial Intelligence and Machine Learning

weforum.org

(A: They go on about how it all works together, for everything you pretty well need, it all goes to computers and black box algorithms and so on and so on. It says…)

Shaping the Future of Technology Governance: Internet of Things, Robotics and Smart Cities

(A: It’s all coming together now, isn’t it? Under a crisis. They want you into the smart cities where you get totally monitored. And at the same time, if you want to catch something, some disease, I gave this talk years ago, you don’t want to be in the cities because if they release something inadvertently or whatever, [Alan chuckles.] accidentally, or intentionally, then it’s going to swoop right through the city. You’re all packed together, you know. Look at New York, hm.)

Shaping the Future of Technology Governance: Internet of Things, Robotics and Smart Cities

(A: But they don’t want you driving around, they want you completely locked down in your area.)

There are more connected devices in the world today than there are humans. (A: …blah blah blah blah blah.)

Internet of Things (IoT), (A: …yada, yada, ya.)

Shaping the Future of Technology Governance: Blockchain and Distributed Ledger Technology

(A: …how wonderful it will all be. And this is the World Economic Forum, remember, the one... the same… [Alan chuckles.] Everybody I've mentioned tonight is a member of it. Hm.)

Data Policy

Data is the oxygen that fuels the fire of the Fourth Industrial Revolution. More data is being generated than ever before, with the global volume of data predicted to double between 2018 and 2022, and then double again between 2022 and 2025.

(A: Well, it will once we’re all manacled and got the apps and stuff… and they’ve got chips on you and chips implanted into you and you get your tattoos as well.)

And autonomous urban mobility and so on because obviously they’re going to start… Do you understand how many car companies are closing down at the present time and have done for the last few weeks? …how much of the Agenda 21 is… The agenda is for the WHOLE 21st-century, that’s what it means, Agenda 21. For the whole 21st-century. Everything is sectioned into 20, 30-year periods, or even 15-year periods, different parts of it's to be completed. But ALL of them must be completed by the end of this century, including the fact of no privately owned cars at all.

Well, they are all on board with it too at the World Economic Forum. Do you vote for this organization? No, you don't. Nope. Do they ask you? No, they don't. But they dictate to you, and they dictate to governments and so on and so on. It's just amazing, isn't it?

And then... Drones in Tomorrow's Airspace, all the wonderful things that they're going to give you. And, Five Ways Collective Intelligence Can Help Beat Coronavirus in Developing Countries. You see, it's all technology stuff. Yada, yada, ya.

No, what you need is treatments for things, folks. The best policy for treating these kind of diseases is to forbid them to be possibly even worked on in these labs, 'eh, where they do their gain of function, when they make things that are pretty harmless into absolutely lethal things. Like I said, Lipsitch at Harvard University gave the lecture, he is one of many, to his students and says…

Marc Lipsitch--Should we be making potential pandemic pathogens in the lab? - youtube.com / Feb 24, 2016

Should we? What part of this don't you understand? Should we be making... potentially deadly pandemic diseases in the laboratory? Making. D'you understand, making? Hm? That's what they do. So that's the best thing is prevention. Just close them all down, 'eh. Close them all down. And maybe they'll have to get real work and real jobs… and we wouldn't have so much problems with these strange things just suddenly appearing out of nowhere. You know?

And another one is…

Davos Manifesto 1973: (A: Going back all the way to 1973.)

A Code of Ethics for Business Leaders

(A: …never mind the public, but it’s for them, the big corporations, you know.)

weforum.org / 2 Dec 2019

Why we need the 'Davos Manifesto' for a better kind of capitalism

Davos Manifesto

(A: I love their manifestoes, that rings bells, manifestoes, you know what I'm saying? I guess that's the capitalists' manifesto. But it's a combination of them both, because they both believe, the left and right believe in technocratic control of society, expert rules. And no religions, because religions make people think they've got rights. You know, you can't do that to me, God gave me this life and it's not yours to take or meddle with, or experiment on.)

Leading by example, all responsibility. The forum commits to being a leader in practicing sustainability.

(A: Sustainability, there you go. As they all jet off to their big, their Davos centers and so on. And they have the best meals on the planet, you know, 20 odd course meals, 24 course meals, etc., etc. And it's all on jet aircraft and just spews out this stuff behind it, but that's all right. You've got to make allowances for your rulers, for your owners. They own you, you see. You can't be like them. You have to do what you're told. The important folk have more rights than ordinary people, for goodness sakes.)

Sustainability strategy for 2021

(A: …is already put out by them, and their policy, and…)

Sustainable procurement policy

Code of conduct for vendors

(A: But they're all, they're just, oh, they're just in ecstasy, orgasmic ecstasy with all the things they can ram through now, now that they've got this terrible Covid thing to deal with, and how it's going to help society, and it's going to cut back on pollution because no one's driving much these days and stuff like that. It's just wonderful.)

What can Covid 19 strategies teach us about the climate battle ahead?

(A: They go into...)

What you need to know about the coronavirus pandemic

(A: ...etc., and the...)

Humanities scholars enlisted to end the coronavirus lockdown.

The second wave is in our hands, says the WHO, and The Covid 19 Briefing

Oh, my God, 'eh. Important people. You didn't even know they existed before. Here you are going to work and slaving away and handing over the cash of your taxes and watching a bit of TV and getting zonked out and stuff. And you had no idea all these organizations of VERY important people are managing your life and the planet. You know? You didn't even, you never even had to ask them, they did it all voluntarily. Wow, 'eh, there ya go.

The Forum commits to being a leader in practicing sustainability. - weforum.org

But they're ecstatic over what they can do with this crisis. They can ram sustainability through. And there's less pollution because no one's driving, eh. There ya go. That's going to help the climate they say, 'eh.

Our Members and Partners - World Economic Forum

weforum.org

Our Partners

The World Economic Forum provides a platform for the world’s 1,000 leading companies (A: Hm.) to shape a better future. As a membership organization, the Forum engages businesses in projects and initiatives – online and offline – to address industry, regional and systemic issues.

Members and Partners benefit from tailored engagement based on their company strategy. The deeper a company’s engagement, the greater is its ability to shape the Forum agenda.

(A: And you have to go into their forms to realize about it, what they're really into.)

Platform engagement:

Regional engagement:

Community engagement: The Forum cultivates a network of communities that extend beyond each Member’s immediate peer group to enhance collaboration.

(A: It's worldwide, you see. It's all through, industry and so on.)

Industry affiliation

Strategic Partnership (A: ...and so on.)

…improving the state of the world.

(A: That’s their mission, these selfless CEOs of corporations. They just want to improve the world. That’s why they rake in the cash and stuff. They just want to improve the world for everybody. How can you attack something like that? It’s like mom’s apple pie. You should be ashamed of yourself.)

Strategic Partners enjoy broad experience engaging with a minimum of five platforms.

(A: All these different platforms, 'eh? Wow. Then they partner you up as a strategy partner too. There ya go. N-n-n.)

Strategic Partner Associate

(A: And they’re…)

Global Innovators

(A: You see, they actually direct the future of the world. On your behalf. Without you having to even ask them to do it. They're innovators in the community...)

The Global Innovators Community is an invitation-only group of the world’s most promising start-ups and scale-ups that are at the forefront of technological and business model innovation.

(A: So, all the artificial intelligence groups are all parts of the intelligence agencies anyway, are on board with it all, all the biggies, you see. And how they can make new champions…)

New Champions

The World Economic Forum's New Champions community brings together the next-generation enterprises that aspire to be at the leading edge of industry…

(A: I guess that's the shackles they're going to make, electronic shackles and everything. And yeah...)

…the Forum engages with the New Champions Community to ensure that the voices of leading Global and Regional companies have a seat at the table

(A: That’s a lot of money just to make… put you… I can make you a seat for a few pennies actually quite cheaply anyway. No? Okay.)

Then you’ve got this other one too, the same again, it’s the World Economic Forum. I’ve even gone into the COR tonight, but…

Our Members and Partners - World Economic Forum

weforum.org

The World Economic Forum provides a platform for the world’s 1,000 leading companies

They shape the future. That's the whole point of control of everything, is to make, you plan what the future you're going to bring in for the peasants to have to rely upon, [Alan chuckles.] right. That's how you do it. And guess who’s all part of it? Guess who's all part of this too, 'eh, the World Economic Forum, 'eh?

New paper outlines ways to boost manufacturing and supply systems resilience

weforum.org / 1 May 2020

(A: Who’s in it?)

Ajay Banga, Bill Gates and Klaus Schwab urge companies to support the COVID-19 Therapeutics Accelerator

(A: Oh, wow, ‘eh. It’s a small world in some ways, isn’t it? The same names just keep popping up everywhere.)

The latest COVID Action Platform virtual meeting

(A: …virtual meeting they’re having, hm, and stuff like that.)

Blockchain toolkit launched to strengthen supply chains

Isn't it astonishing too, 'eh? What gets me is, the big corporate chains, even in the supermarkets, are the only ones allowed to stay open. All the small ones are all closed. They can't, you're not allowed to open. All the biggies are, though. Because the virus is known not to infect anybody in Walmart. They KNOW that. Hm. And there's plenty of space there. Exactly at 5'11" away from you that virus is going to stop dead. It's not going to get through that force field to you. That's the absurdities of today, for tonight.

Now, just to show you that hell really is repetition, I'll put up the link to Mike Wallace...

Mike Wallace (CBS '60 Minutes') Investigates Government Propaganda in 1976 Swine Flu Scare - youtube.com / 28 March 2020

Mike Wallace Investigates Government Propaganda in 1976 Swine Flu Scare - youtube.com / 4 Oct 2009

The swine flu scare, which caused a lot of damage to the people, who never recovered, a lot of them. The same kind of hype was hyped up then, out of nothing really at that time, it was much less than it is now.

And I'm not saying this Covid problem is not real, it is real. It's definitely targeting certain groups of people. But it's nothing like the figures that they claimed initially it was going to be. In fact, the regular flu would kill a lot more people, or at the very least the same amount of people in the year. Plus, they're lumping the flu cases in with it too. Rather disgusting really.

But Mike Wallace goes through what happened in 1976 with the same kind of hype then for the swine flu scare and they wanted to vaccinate the entire population, and it caused incredible damage to the people.

I hope I haven't bored you stiff. I know I haven't for the ones who really listen. At least it's a way to understand what's really going on. However unpleasant it might be and frightening too. They want you all to be frightened. You don't have to be frightened. Because you still have power if you only exercise it.

It's quite simple, you can start to… Don't fight them on their own terms, using their own terminology. That's what they hope you'll do. That's why they want religion out of the way, that gives you rights. Like Julian Huxley said, we must knock humanity off their pedestal thinking it's the supreme being on the planet. We must knock them off it in order to control them, and depopulate, etc. And they did it all, you know, through science and atheism. Then they come along with their new religion and say, now you must obey us. We are the priests with the white coats, and this is what you'll do, you see. And you start battling them with their own terminology, of their supposed sciences. Well, are you going to win? Hm?

You need your religion. And you should stand by it. And just tell them where to get off, as they say, you know. It has to be done.

A little light here and a little light there... across the planet, and eventually there's lots and lots of little lights, just light up in the darkness as folk start to reclaim their natural dignity again.

And the fact that they're not an animal that's owned by anybody.

And no, you're not all in it together. You're not part of a collective. That's what they've been training you to believe, you're collective, collective, collective. No, you're an individual in society and you have the rights to decide for yourselves what's to be done, especially with your own body.

Otherwise, as I say, it's a living hell. A living hell is being set up for you. Honestly, I really mean that. They try to basically sterilize it and sanitize it with terminology, we're here to help you. No, no, no, no. These are Mengele's out there, folks. These are Mengele's, real Mengele's and they are trying to get you to simply cave-in and allow them to own you now, to OWN you. O-W-N.

Again, the terminology you use is simply, it's called N-O, NO! No. You see. That's where you start, with that simple little word NO.

It's up to you, if you want human dignity of any kind at all.

And any kind of life at all.

Because by the time these characters are through with it, and a living hell...

...people won't want to live.

I really mean that.   I really, really mean that, what they want to bring in, this is not a human system they're bringing in here. It is for themselves at the top, they'll be allowed all the pleasures and blah, blah, blah, that you are not allowed to have. Including the best of food, and lots of meat by the way. They always make sure of that. Even in the book 1984 they had it in there too. The Soviet system, the ones at the top were never short of the best of foods as the peasants starved. Often to death.

Never forget the past.

Never forget the past, folks.

And take care of each other too in these times of crisis. Don't turn on each other. You've got to help each other out. Because times are going to get even worse. The economy is not supposed to ever get back to anything that we had before. If they even let you into it, and they might just come out with the next trick of saying, oh my God, it's returned. If they can keep it going, the lockdown, into the fall, and then say, oh my God, it's the flu season. They'll say, oh it's returned with a vengeance, and get it into next year like they wanted initially anyway.

The reason being, even this Neil Ferguson, he still pushing the same thing. Which tells you, they are not insane. It's an excuse for the whole agenda, folks, for the true, the true new world order that they prattle on about, that they're openly proclaiming actually. It's the excuse to bring it all in, and sustainability, depopulation, austerity, yada, yada, ya.

But remember you're worth a lot more than that. Of course, you are.

Don't ever forget it.

And you're not alone either. There are other people in similar boats, and you can all communicate with each other too. And you should be.

For myself Alan Watt from Ontario Canada, where we've still got snow outside, it's good night and may your God or gods go with you.

Topics of show covered in following links:

COVID–19: The Big Pharma players behind UK Government lockdown ukcolumn.org / 6 May 2020

'This is the virus I fear the most': British scientist leading coronavirus fight says it's 'not absurd' to forecast 400,000 UK fatalities as world-wide death toll surges past 1,500

dailymail.co.uk / 14 Feb 2020

Before lockdown, Britain quietly downgraded status of virus threat

washingtontimes.com / 26 March 2020

Is Imperial College Still Open for Business?

unz.com / 4 May 2020

Billionaire club in bid to curb overpopulation (The Times)

thetimes.co.uk / 24 May 2009

Billionaire club in bid to curb overpopulation

globalresearch.ca / 25 May 2009

Student Scores

technocracy.news / 29 April 2020

Gates Foundation to 'Reimagine' Schools: Governor

reuters.com / 5 May 2020

now

news.com.au / 2 May 2020

Professor who predicted 500,000 Britons could die from coronavirus and prompted Boris Johnson to order lockdown accused of having 'patchy record of modelling pandemics'

dailymail.co.uk / 28 March 2020

Gates, Buffett, Winfrey Attend Secret NYC Population Control Summit

thefinalhour.blogspot.com / 25 May 2009

How COVID-19 might help us win the fight against climate change

weforum.org / 29 March 2020

remdesivir

seekingalpha.com / 29 April 2020

in severely ill hospitalized COVID-19 patients with acute respiratory distress syndrome

thelancet.com / 29 April 2020

Effectiveness Against Coronavirus

breitbart.com / 29 April 2020

- the only drug shown to work against coronavirus - could cost up to $4500 per treatment despite costing just $9.32 to make

dailymail.co.uk / 7 May 2020

There is no climate emergency.

clintel.nl / 23 Sept 2019

Coronavirus survey reveals ‘shocking’ stats about hospitalized New Yorkers

nypost.com / 6 May 2020

Presidential Commission for the Study of Bioethical Issues

en.wikipedia.org

Christine Grady

en.wikipedia.org

LEE CAMP: While Pandemic Destroys So Many Lives, The Surveillance State Celebrates

consortiumnews.com / 11 May 2020

Timber Sycamore

en.wikipedia.org

Human Lab Rats: The U.S. Government’s Secret History of Grisly Experiments

rutherford.org / 21 April 2020

USC, Emory Creating Coronavirus Surveillance System Similar to China’s Social Credit Scoring

breitbart.com / 4 May 2020

Army Of Contact Tracers” – Meet The Enforcement Arm Of The “New Normal”

thelastamericanvagabond.com / 9 May 2020

Coronavirus: WHO Official Floats Removing the Infected from Their Homes to Stop Spread

breitbart.com / 7 April 2020

WORLD DEPOPULATION IS TOP NSA AGENDA: CLUB OF ROME - The Haig-Kissinger depopulation policy

educate-yourself.org / 10 March 1981

Coronavirus Pandemic Serve A Global Agenda?

technocracy.news / 23 March 2020

Vaccinations

21stcenturywire.com / 23 Dec 2019

Trump Speculates That China Released Virus in Lab 'Mistake'

usnews.com / 1 May 2020

The Dubious COVID Models, The Tests and Now the Consequences

globalresearch.ca / 29 April 2020

Waste

cgdev.org / 14 April 2020

Same In Post-COVID World Of Plexiglass and Temperature Checks

zerohedge.com / 4 May 2020

The Office You Left Is Not Going to Be the Office You Return To

bloomberg.com / 1 May 2020

'Cancel their contracts, they are a menace to society': Anti-vaxxer NRL stars are slammed as 'entitled' for refusing to get the flu jab - as league gives players 48-hour ultimatum

dailymail.co.uk / 7 May 2020

Trudeau mulls making coronavirus vaccine mandatory for Canadians

lifesitenews.com / 30 April 2020

Facebook names 20 people to its 'Supreme Court' for content moderation

nbcnews.com / 6 May 2020

Words and Slogans as a Weapon of Mass Servitude

theirishsentinel.com / 4 May 2020

Nevada nurse who came to NYC to work on the coronavirus frontlines claims minority patients are being murdered by negligent doctors misplacing ventilator tubes and giving unnecessary defibrillation, but 'nobody cares'

dailymail.co.uk / 5 May 2020

WEF Centre for the Fourth Industrial Revolution - Shaping the Future of Technology Governance: Artificial Intelligence and Machine Learning

weforum.org

Davos Manifesto 1973: A Code of Ethics for Business Leaders

weforum.org / 2 Dec 2019

a leader in practicing sustainability.

weforum.org

Our Members and Partners - World Economic Forum

weforum.org

New paper outlines ways to boost manufacturing and supply systems resilience

weforum.org / May 2020

Commission for the Human Future - Surviving and Thriving in the 21st Century humansforsurvival.org

CIDRAP Viewpoint

cidrap.umn.edu / 30 April 2020

Who Owns the Environmentalist Movement?

agenda21news.com / 15 Jan 2015

Mike Wallace (CBS '60 Minutes') Investigates Government Propaganda in 1976 Swine Flu Scare

May 17, 2020 "Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt (Blurb, i.e. Educational Talk): " Hubble Bubble We're All in Trouble "

Hi folks I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through the Matrix on May 17, 2020. As always, I'm glad to hear from the various people across the world to get their opinions on how, really, what they fathomed about this whole fracas, this engineered hoopla, which, there's no doubt about it, it took years to plan what's happening today.

Governments don't act quickly, believe you me. I think a guy in government told me that years ago, he said that government goes round corners on square wheels. In other words, it lumbers, it's very slow to get into gear and to get operating in any degree of efficiency at all.

But when you see this whole WHO, the WHO plan being unfurled step by step by step, it was planned years and years ago. You saw it too, the coordination on television stations. I don't see TV but I can get little clips once in a while when my Internet gives me enough speed. I can see the governors of different states and so on coming out on board with the whole WHO agenda and saying exactly what… They parrot, literally the same speech from the WHO. Which means they're all in on it. They've all sworn to go along with it regardless of the consequences, and the public backlash to it too.

Which doesn't bode well for the world. I can smell it coming, this whole… They won't back off now, you understand, even when it dies off. It will kick back a bit and die off a bit, and kickback a bit. That's how the last few flus came and went too, the same way. They spike and then they go way down and then they come back a little bit in the following flu season. It's always in the flu season because these coronaviruses like the flu season, and of course they die off again eventually after about three years or so. So it's following a traditional pattern.

But it won't matter because there is such a h... there's such a hu... And that's what's so obvious here today, isn't it? It's so obvious that the whole agenda is being unfurled for a whole new way of living. You're getting the announcements from your new masters Bill Gates and all the rest of them, who have declared themselves the masters of the universe… Without your vote of course. They've got all the airtime in the world because they can pay for it, quite easily. All these top TV companies and news organizations and newspapers too, the old newspapers take big, big amounts of money from Bill Gates, for example. I'll touch on that in an article tonight in fact.

But I like to hear the opinions from people in different countries as to what they witnessed. And it's a uniformity really that I've noticed already of the articles in all the countries. The opinions of people who are witnessing it, living through it, they're seeing the same things I'm seeing here and the same things that people in the State are seeing. The same agenda step by step by step.

And the massive cover-up too. A lot of the conology that's going on, because there's an awful lot of conology going on, especially with the testing, etc., and the fudged numbers. Once you get into fudging the numbers, folks, and it's been found over and over again in all the countries, how they're all going into trying to validate the nonsense figures brought out by Neil Ferguson, that they're trying to validate it by increasing the numbers by putting down all kinds of deaths, that happen all the time, every day, every year, down as Covid. Once you do that, you're into falsification and it's not scientific at all. It can’t be remotely agreed upon to be scientific or objective, an objective study. So, the credibility is pretty well gone for those in charge of it.

But they won't back off because as I say, this is a massive agenda. This is the excuse for the agenda. As I said before, the World Economic Forum came out with it, with amazing statements last year on how they'd have to really find other ways to really get through quickly the agenda for sustainability, which is depopulation. The Club of Rome and all the rest of them including the group called Population Matters with Attenborough and all the rest of them out there, and Goodall of course, the ones who have decided that you're just a scourge upon the earth. You people, you’re a plague.

It's very much like you saw in the Matrix movie where Morpheus is caught, he's captured by the agent, agent Smith was it, I think. He’s got him tied up in an apartment in a building. He's close to him, he takes his earpiece out, because all these agents were all connected to each other, they're basically programs. But he takes it off and he says, he describes humans. He says, and you humans, you multiply and you expand and you take over space, he says, you're a VIRUS. Well, that's exactly the terms that have been used by those in Population Matters and in the big groups to do with sustainability.

Sustainability and climate change, all these things are all one, it's one group really. One group. Different names for different areas and specialty groups and so on but it's one group. With, so again, the sworn agenda is depopulation. Mandatory. The last meeting they had for sustainability, and climate change, they actually said they'd have to go further. And this is official, I've read it off before and on my blogs too, and even when I was in the radio years ago. I read the articles out from these particular organizations saying that they'd have to go the next step, officially and put in the newspapers, it wasn't conspiracy theory, which is really mandating a form of population control. And here you go.

Now you tie that in, really, with today and you tie it in with eugenics. Of course, the same people are really completely tied up with eugenics. That's in their own histories in their bios and so on, a lot of them. Some of them are members of the old Darwin societies and eugenics. You'll find they’re quite open about it too. There are superior types and inferior types etc. etc., and how they'd have to eliminate basically the useless eaters. That's what Lord Bertrand Russell called them.

So we're living through an agenda. Long before this I kept telling the people, you're living through a script. It doesn't take long, if you really are aware, it doesn't take long to catch on that so much of what you live through is scripted. Including the last bank crash. Those in-the-know all saw it coming and they got out of the bad stocks immediately. They had months to do it. The public hadn't a clue. Then they brought out the president of the United States, little Bush, they call him baby Bush. He gave a talk on mainstream television and told the people, he says, you know, this is going to cause a crisis, what's happening with the economy, this massive debt and so on. And he said, it will be worse, it will be a lot worse than the Great Depression.

Well, for anybody at the head of state to come out and say that, had broken the cardinal rule. The cardinal rule is, you never tell the truth to the public, unless you want to make that truth happen. Because stocks and shares, it's all to do with optimism and investment. [Alan chuckles.] If the head guy comes out and tells you that, it's guaranteed people would pull the money out, and then you have a crash. That's exactly what happened.

It was totally corrupt of course beforehand anyway. But you can still keep the con game going. We've been living on a cashless wonder society forever, since the gold standard was taken off years ago. Money is backed by nothing but confidence and faith, therefore they have "In God We Trust" on their bill, the dollar bill. But also, who is the God here, you know? And there are answers to that too. You might see the picture of one of them [Alan chuckles.] on that dollar bill itself. Anyway…

We're living through a script. They make things happen at the top, because they're planned to happen. It's the same thing when you go back far enough and you look at 9/11 and you say, my goodness, you know, this, this, apparently every intelligence agency on the planet knew what was going to happen. They warned about it. I recorded stuff at the time, little bits and bytes from even the BBC and the head of GCHQ and intelligence talking about it, right the day after, saying this should never have happened, we warned America. Israel warned America. Everybody warned America. But America of course was run by the neocons who just happen to want, as they said, a Pearl Harbor event to get their agenda through and to take out the countries on the list. It's just… You can't brush this stuff off. You can't do it. You really can't do it.

Now you're living in such an era of total war against the public. We've been in total war for a while if you haven't realized it. Most folk haven't. They think it's just starting now with the Covid nonsense. But it was on the go along before that. It's total war against the people.

The population reduction groups have been authorized to go to war with all of you, and your children. They're indoctrinating your children that way, have been for years and years and years into what's called sustainability. Until they learn to hate themselves enough, and not breed, you see. They've had articles come out too where they actually, it's like a little new youth league where they actually publicize their statements in the papers where they vowed never to have children. But the same ones will go after the adults because they've been taught that you destroyed the planet for them.

They of course are the unpaid armies that follow behind the leaders of Extinction Rebellion. The leaders know what they're on about and what they're really there for. They have their private tuition given to them, and their salaries too. But the followers don't of course. They actually call them useful idiots, the followers. All kinds of followers are called useful idiots by those who set up the organizations at the top.

Much like, it's all Marxist theology in a sense. I say theology because Marxism was really taught as a religion, you need a lot of faith to actually believe in it. Especially the part about creating a utopia in the future, where you would all struggle in the meantime and starve yourself in austerity, but one day of course, it's for a greater good for all. That was the whole thing of it.

However, Marxism also is a whole new way of living, a brand-new way of living. With the elimination of the old system. Everything would be born anew. That meant the elimination of marriage initially too. Lenin had brought on a woman, it's a whole history in itself, but to be the head of the, really, anti-marriage movement. She basically was the head of a whole new department that would encourage, and teach, young girls not to get married, and how to even bring in abortion and so on and accept it as a natural method of birth control if they wanted to have relations with men at all.

But then they quickly found out in the Soviet Union that this wouldn't do because then you'd have children growing up without dads, that took away the woman from work, so they immediately... Eventually after a while she would say… after giving this woman lots of awards. The Soviet Union was like any other technocratic system, gives lots of awards to their officials at the top and their civil servants. But eventually had they had to really kick her out because they needed families to look after children, to raise the next crop for the military, and to make things work. So it didn't last too long there.

But again, they did believe in a scientific rule. That's the key to it all, that experts would rule the world, and in every facet of human existence, and manage everything in a proper efficient manner of course. That's what you're going into today too.

Those who are the spokespeople for depopulation, the eugenics types and they belong to all the different all Darwinian groups too for eugenics, that still exist today by the way. You can actually look it up yourself to see the names on some of it. Some of them in the human population movement, population control movement, their names are all listed there naturally. Well-known people. A lot of them used to do television series for years and years. That was a famous, famous way they came out with a long time ago, even when Julian Huxley was on the go. They thought that if they could get to the young children, get into their heads quickly, and use all the techniques they could possibly use. First it was radio and then books and magazines. But they came out with television and then immediately you had all these wildlife programs. And these, again, they made heroes, just like scientists were made heroes by the star making machine so you would follow them, they did the same thing with the wildlife characters too.

In Canada of course everybody knows the ones in Canada, David Suzuki. Another eugenicist. He's also a geneticist; they always go together like that. In Britain you had David Attenborough and different people there too. Every country has got their versions of them. They are to get you really involved, to get the idea is that nature is very important, which no one would deny. However, then they go into, towards the last, oh, 20 years starting to jack up, there's too many people, it's interfering with wildlife and the terrain and the planet, etc.

Then it's mixed up with climate change, which their big, big thing. It fell part of course. They tried to get the coming Ice Age, that was back in the 1960s, they banged on it being an Ice Age and they could blame humans for causing it. It didn't work out so then they switched into the reverse and went to global warming. That didn't pan out either, so they just changed to climate change eventually. So you can't lose really, hm.

That's what you're living through, a big agenda. The public of course are still consuming and buying, because the system is set up to consume and buy. I've been talking about this for years and years, how eventually they'd force you into it. Well, here you go. You're going to go into austerity whether you like it or not. You're already in it. Whatever comes out at the end of this, this mess this year, this sausage machine, is all manufactured and planned in advance.

It's going to be a sustainable future for those who control it all. Although they will live way above you of course naturally, they always do, in their lifestyle. They'll have good health because they have the best food and organic stuff and all the rest of it. But you won't, you see. They'll have access to meat products, which they always do, you know. Just like Julia said in 1984, those 'bar stewards', I said 'bar stewards', they always have, they have everything, there's nothing that they lack at the top. That's the way it's always been. The same in the Soviet era. The ones at the top lacked for nothing at all. They had all the same food and clothing, lifestyle, music and so on and entertainment technology, electronic technology as everybody else in the West, and their salaries were equivalent too.

That's how the world really is run, folks. Lots of guises to force you into austerity, while the same crew live high on the hog. You're supposed to start to become depleted. Because your usefulness is over, like I said years ago, you're now classed as obsolete. They don't need you. You're the 'useless eaters' of Bertrand Russell. You're also the 'weeds' of Margaret Sanger, because that's how she actually referred to the children, excess children. Well, what can you say? You can go on forever.

However, what is fascinating as I said, is getting the feedback from people all over the planet who let me know what they've seen in their areas and how it's affecting them themselves and how they it see affecting other people. Right down to the interesting little bits about how folk are adapting to it. Adaptation is awfully important. Because you're being trained to adapt and adapt and adapt. And you’re treated just like children. Actually, you're treated like lab rats to be honest with you.

Years ago I gave talks on, what do you think these labyrinths and the lab rats were for? It wasn't because they wanted to make a better species, make lab rats happier. It was to find out what works with all kinds of mammals, basic stuff and so on. It's surprising how much you've got in common even with a rat when it comes to basic necessities like food and water, believe you me. And the things you'll do perhaps to get it.

But no, they're always studying the public, and we are under the microscope. We've never had freedom as you think of it. You've had an era of a little bit of more cash in your pocket. Or at least cheaper goods to buy, put it that way. The cash has really gone up so much, because its value is constantly going down, what you can purchase, you need more and more of the paper to buy the same things. That's because the money is backed by nothing.

You really don't need world wars to change society. Although they like that too. It's handy for them. They've written lots and lots of books about it at the top, how they can use wars, or plagues for instance, where they can take over with a kind of martial law type scenario and force a new system to come. As they're doing right now. They boasted about it. They're boasting now about it, how it's been planned then how every business that will open up in the future will eventually, very shortly by the way, will be stamped and approved as sustainable and green and all the rest of it and harmless to society or nature. So they use all these techniques to change the world. And as I say, it was planned a long time ago. It didn't just suddenly happen.

You're also finding the connections in some countries, more tightly knit with China, than other countries. Canada of course has been left wing for such a long, long time now, really, and gone left wing since Pierre Trudeau was on the go. Even before that a lot of the civil servants were left-wing, even during World War II and afterwards, but that's a different story. But since Pierre Trudeau, we've become left-wing, left-wing, left-wing until literally, I think they almost praised China for being Communists and having total control over the population.

Over the years I've lost count of the incredible fawning of TV in Canada - when I used to watch television, and I'm sure it's just the same today from the articles I can see on the Internet - the praising of China. Because they actually idealize it. Because that truly is a technocratic type system where a small elite at the top, and then bureaucrats underneath them and academia working together manage all of the public, and the public don't really have, really, the freedom of individual rights. And that's the key to it, individuality that the West has.

When this Covid 19 started in Canada, there were cries in the newspapers here to get a technocratic group in right away, a technocracy in right away, people who would deal with it properly, you see, and just overrule and manage on behalf of government, as in a wartime scenario. And bingo, there you go. That's how you do it. That's how you literally wipe away years and years, maybe even centuries of pressing and pushing for democratic rights for individuals.

We are not a collectivist society in the West. China is collectivist, a collectivist society. You don't find so much in their history, either, of individuality. Even in their stories, even in their fiction and so on, the individuality isn’t really there. It's a different culture altogether from the West. It works well for China, but it doesn't work for anybody else. And we shouldn't try to emulate it at all in fact. Because if you don't have individual rights then horror takes place in the name of many other things. And you don't go down that track.

Including what's happening with the statements put out by the top. Again, Teresa Tam the health czar of Canada has stated that, oh yeah, there are ways to force people to be tracked and traced and so on, including the bracelet. She mentioned that in a documentary quite a few years back but it's still available and I put up the links I think last month, or last week I should say, of her actually saying this. There's a movement now in Canada to try to get her removed from her position, because she is on the board of the WHO. Well, she supposed to serve Canada, not the WHO. We don't vote for the WHO. We don't. We don't vote for Fauci either in the States.

So, we have to start to regain our rights to look after ourselves and such circumstances. This chaos that's been deliberately, deliberately is the key to it, manufactured, that never in history have you locked down a good chunk of the world, never mind one individual country, and literally isolated all the healthy people by forced quarantine. It's unheard of. It doesn't make sense at all, which tells me it's got a different purpose altogether. I don't care how it's tried to rationalize. This is not the big, big, big killer disease that they're talking about.

It's disgusting! And I really, if any reclamation of rights at all after this, I can only hope there will be real big trials with the characters involved put on public display in trials for what's happening. And what's happened… Total destruction of the economies, that are not meant to be regained, by the way. They don't... This is… They're rejoicing at this that the top, the sustainability crowd and the Club of Rome too, they're all one big clique as I say, specializations, they're just branches of the same big organization, and the Bilderberg's and so on. It's one organization with different branches of it, special branches, that's all.

The Club of Rome has been quite open about it, about the fact that they will be monitoring, you know, or they'll set up organizations to monitor the reopening in a sustainable fashion. Which of course is the same group as the WEF, the World Economic Forum, with stuff that they've published too about the same thing. So it's their big war agenda. This is a war on the public. When you fudge and fudge and fudge the numbers and statistics just to put anybody down, who possibly might have it, as the coronavirus, to try to pad the numbers to justify what they've done, it's beyond desperation if you ask me. It truly is. It truly is.

I've gone through the figures before in previous talks, the published figures from governments and government health departments and the different statistics on births and deaths and so on in different countries, and really, we haven't exceeded, for most of the countries we have not exceeded the deaths for the regular flu season. And they even padded that with other deaths too to try to get up the Covid ones. It's just not working at all.

They even got Neil Ferguson that honestly, if you ever lost money and you went to the lost and found department at say a police station or something, and if you are asked how much money did you have in your wallet, you would want Neil Ferguson there. Because he would probably say about 10 billion, you know. The guy has never seen a massive number that he didn't like. He's got quite an imagination. It's all done with computer models. Just like, of course too they work with the climate model groups in England, the famous one, the groups and universities. It's astonishing to see them repeatedly put out the same massive figures with these…

These computers are really sold with programs saying, you know, what kind of numbers are you looking for, big ones or small ones? [Alan chuckles.] It will come up with whatever you want. They can only do what you feed into them; you see. So it's amazing that we’re supposed to just bow down to these guys and their computerized gods, you know, the electric, as I say, elect-trick, the trick of the elect, because that's the trick they're using to con everybody is computer modeling. And they don't back off and readjust their programs once they are caught out in the end. They'll use them again and again. It's phenomenal.

I've got articles here even to do with Sweden, they were using Neil Ferguson's projected models there. They would have been wiped out supposedly according to Neil Ferguson's program, it would have wiped out a good part of the Swedish population. If they followed what they eventually did follow, which is basically the limited quarantine type system and hardly any social distancing, but supposedly that was going to finish them off. But it didn't. It's astonishing. Why are we supposed to bow down and believe these guys? And then they'll do it again and again and again, with their terrible models.

IF you have even chance involved, half the time something should be in your favor and half the time against you. That's theoretical again, but you expect that kind of thing to happen. How come the same guys, same people, are consistently wrong? I mean, Neil Ferguson was wrong with the mad cow disease, as they called it. It wiped out the entire livestock for the entire British nation. When it's not even been confirmed yet that that's what a few people had, a FEW people had from eating meat. It's not even proven yet. Because, we designed something similar in World War II in Canada, that would eat the brains of cattle. And it was declassified in Deadly Allies: Canada Secret War, it was called. So you see this thing cropping up in Britain and they go to Neil Ferguson, you know, and he uses his computer and there you go. The projected models, it will kill most of the population in Britain off if you don't kill off the livestock. Well, [Alan chuckles.] you kill off the livestock [Alan chuckles.] and then you start killing off the population of Britain, folks.

It's the same nonsense you’re hearing today.

Ferguson again was wrong with the flu in 2009/10. The same thing, you know. All the big Pharma groups and vaccine groups were, oh, they got their hands out again. Oh, this is Klondike time again, the gold rush, as governments are dishing out money, taxpayers’ money. They make millions and millions of shots for flu that faded away by itself, and then they have to ditch millions of these things because nobody wanted them.

So this time they're really going to enforce the, they're going to try to MAKE you take it. But you still have got laws, once they go beyond the laws and your choice is taken from you, you're no longer living in any semblance of democracy. Democracy still exists even in wartime, folks. It's not closed down completely. If you do, the people would stop the war, the external war and start fighting the people inside their own countries. Obviously, because you've had a coup, a coup has taken place, or a revolution. I mentioned last week, it really is a revolution.

A revolution is different from rebellion. A rebellion, you try to, some new law is being passed, it's going to take more money from you, or something, and folk rebel against it. Or you're forbidden to practice your religion. That's what happened with different rebellions in Britain and parts of Europe in the Middle Ages and later. They would have rebellions from kings or whoever or Queens tried stop the people worshiping the way they wanted to.

Because we have this ingrained idea that we're supposed to have choices in the West. That's the difference, we have choices and the right exercise our choices, 'eh. When it's taken away from you, you have no, you're no longer in any kind of democracy or free society. You're under tyranny. It's as simple as that.

I think it was George Washington said, government is not reason, it is not eloquence, it is force; like fire, it is a dangerous servant and a fearful master. People can complain and argue about the founding fathers, but the fact is, they knew history. They had great educations back then by the way. They learned it very well, the simple tried-and-true techniques were very old, of teaching children. They understood, they understood the world. They understood history. They understood tyranny. They understood how tyranny takes over and how it's implemented, and how to recognize it. They understood, they debated the whole idea of what government even was, what was it there for. But that was it, government is not reason, it is not eloquence, it is force; like fire, it's a dangerous servant and a fearful master.

So, there ya go. They knew. And nothing has changed except the size of government. And the organizations that graft themselves onto the government like appendages, or tumors even. First to help government to decide what to do on things, like the foundations. You know, we're think tanks that advise governments. Well, you don't vote for these think tanks, and there's nothing out there that's not corrupted, especially anything that grafts itself on. We also have organizations for sustainability that graft themselves onto every local counsel. And we didn't vote for them. Most of the folk don't even know it happened, d'you know that?

This is a big takeover, also war. Well, that's what I'm saying, a rebellion is when you rebel against something changing, you want to keep the old system, but something has happened that you're not happy with and you rebel. Or more is demanded of you, like taxes or something like that. Whereas revolution is a planned, generally a planned and organized, an organized complete overthrow of the system for something else, to bring in a new system.

Well, the people who have been on at you for years and years, that I've constantly talked about and read their articles for you, from the think tanks and organizations themselves, this is their revolution against you to bring in their new system, their New World order. Their new post consumerist and post-democratic society. They're quite open about it. They don't tell you, oh we're having a revolution for ourselves, right. No, they couch it in different words, but it's still plain to see if you're not been brainwashed. It's in-your-face what it really is.

The Fourth Industrial Revolution is one term they use too. It's post industry. The last one we had was postindustrial two, and three, but it also, it gave you a service economy. The public didn't want a service economy. It was just foisted upon them through global meetings. You don't vote for those in global meetings. You don't create the G-7, G-8 and all their G-whizzes.

The fact is, it was done quietly and most of the people think it's all official. No, it's not official. Not when big think tanks are part of them. You don't vote for the think tanks. These are private think tanks. They have their own mission statements of what THEY exist for and their own right, as opposed to what YOU as a member of a society think societies are all about. They're completely opposed to you. The biggest problem they've always had at the top in the West is people obeying them. This idea of having rights, individual rights, really is annoy... They can't sleep because of it. They get ulcers, you know... a society that won't do what they're told.

I've got little clips I've been watching, as I say, on my very intermittent Internet. That's a different story again. Because everyone's cashing in on this Covid thing and getting big handouts from government, including the Internet. The one I'm on is a satellite system and what they're doing is expanding their bandwidth to everybody, because they got more folk at home they said. They give you free gigs, extra gigs per month, which is no use, because they've slowed us down so much you can't get your normal, what you're paying for normally you can't even use all that. You can't get streaming; it's cutting off all the time. Con artists everywhere through the greed society, 'eh. It's incredible.

Getting back to what I'm saying here is, their revolution is on the go. You're post service economy pretty well. I mean, limited-service economy. In a service economy, I've said before, you just import things from China, in the West. Your same masters in the WEF and all the rest of them set up China to be the manufacturers for the planet. It wasn't done by the public. The public had no input at all into the whole affair. We paid for their factories to ship over and business to ship over. We paid for any losses they incurred for years, for 15 years they said initially, which could be doubled again if they hadn't made up what they thought they might've lost in the transfer over to China. We paid for it all. And we lost all the jobs. And all the other tiers and tiers of manufacturing that go up to it, from raw ore all the way up to finished products, that's a lot of businesses gone and factories.

We had no say at all in. It was done by the politicians who did dutifully what they were told by the CFR in the US, the Royal Institute of International Affairs for the rest of the world. The European Institute for International Affairs, all one big group by the way, and the Far Eastern Pacific Rim group, the Asian group as well. All one group, one private group set up all the transfers of wealth to China and the manufacturing to China. We paid for it all. Now you're paying for it again, you're getting stiffed for what? Even being so stupid as to put them over there. But not really stupid because those at the top set up China to be the model for the world to emulate. They salivate when they see people jumping and obediently doing what they're told. They really do. And they're quite open about it.

It's something else. It really is something else to watch it all happening. And the people complying. Because fear/terror, it's not just fear, it's TERROR, you're living through a reign of terror with the Covid idea. There's no doubt some thing’s out there, but really, even Fauci said it himself at one point, it could be no worse than a bad flu season. But they're really making hay, much more hay out of it than a flu season, aren't they? This was planned obviously years ago. Because the last two big scares they gave us didn't work either, we kind of ignored it. We continued, and we didn't fall apart. And yet folk will die, every year we die with flus and things. When you're a certain age your immune system gets weaker and weaker and eventually something, as they say, makes you a cropper, and that's you, gone.

This thing really has been vastly overstated. The treatments that we'd normally give to pull even the older folks through were not even, they were abandoned. It's just astonishing. The staff all know this. Because it's not a scary thing to treat at all and there are standard methods to do so, and they've been ignored. You don't stick people on ventilators and watch them die. That's what they say in New York has been happening, there's sticking them on ventilators and that's it pretty well. Huh?

In Britain they pulled the woman out, 102 years old I think it is. She's, I don't know if she's a dame or whatever they call them over there, she had actually worked for Winston Churchill in World War II. A bit of a celebrity in her own right in her own time, and she got it, went into intensive care, and they pulled her through. So I mean, come on here.

They know what treatments to give them. They know too they can give them plasma. You've got a good part of the Hasidic community in New York who have recovered from it, having it themselves. They came into Pennsylvania to donate blood for plasma, because it's got the antibodies against it, you see. This isn't the horror show it's been made out to be. It's the LACK of treatment, which is understood and recognized, it's not brand-new treatment, that does work, it's very effective. Not just the plasma, there's other stuff they can give them too, very effective. But it's been held back, withheld. That's what some of the nurses have been saying on YouTube, they're murdering them. They're sticking them in these rooms and the staff are terrified to go in. They're not being prescribed the medication, etc. for the treatments they should be getting.

But yes, this thing definitely is taking people that are really obese and very old and who have got high blood pressure and had cardiac problems and possibly badly diabetic if they're obese. But that happens too in the flu seasons, the same kind of people are hit by them too. But the hay that's been made is, you'd swear, you know, that millions had died in the Canada and millions had died in America. It hasn't happened. It hasn't happened. No.

But the hands are still out as millions and billions of dollars get dished out to the big Pharma and organizations, including the tracers, that's your new Stasi groups, if you haven't figured it out. It's really just taken after the Stasi, where the Stasi had about half the, a good half, a few million people permanently at any one time employed by them to snoop on everybody else's activities in the communist West Germany.

That's what you've got here now. There's articles where some of them boasted of the techniques they've learned, how to get into people's headspace. Basically meet them and be friendly with them and get the gossip and find out what's going on and yada, yada, ya. Then they might get snippets of someone that might have complained about being unwell, and they can get the tracer sent out to pick them up and yada, ya.

This will be used. You understand, what you're seeing is a permanent movement here. It's not a temporary thing. It's a permanent movement being set up like an inland Army, as I say, a Stasi type system that will be used for everything else, including... I've already seen the articles out, some of them put out by the governors of States in America. It's... I don't know what it is, but they remind me of really nasty old schoolteachers, really, just dictating to the people and forgetting completely you're supposed to be living in a form of democracy. The States is a Democratic Republic.

That term democracy is the right of individuals and the right to vote and decide for yourselves. Not to be ruled over. Ruling is different from being governed. China is ruled. You see? We are supposed to be governed, by our consent and with our consent. That's a big, big difference. And you don't stick electronic bracelets on people. They're just manacles, electronic manacles... that will be used for many other reasons including this internal Army as well. Because they don't trust the public. Is that the idea, you don't trust the public to report what's happening with a disease? No, this is going to be used for other reasons obviously. OBVIOUSLY, folks.

Once they start, you won't get rid of them. You won't get rid of them. Then you will really be paranoid. The Soviet system, everybody, they used to walk past... All big cities are the same, like Moscow. But there of course people really didn't want to make eye contact at all. Because you just didn't trust anybody. Everybody was paranoid there. That's what's being foisted upon the public in the West as we go through this nonsense here too. Quite amazing isn't it? Tried-and-true techniques by tyrannical systems are now here. All under the guise of saving the people. N-n-n. That's how they always say it, it's always to save the people. And then they defend the system from the people, [Alan chuckles.] or certain people. And here you go with it all.

And folk are watching way too much news, way, way too much news if they're watching television. Some people have got in touch with me who admitted that. That it's incessant, it's 24-hour Covid channels. I've given the talks over the years of how your psyche works, how your mind works even with horror movies. Even the most awful B type or C movies, you still watch them. Because it's to do with survival. The primitive part of the brain kicks in, oh my god the person's going to get attacked with that monster behind them, and if you turn away or go off to the washroom or something, you might miss what happens. So really, you see, you're projecting yourself into the movie and the characters getting chased by the big, big boogie monster, and if you in real life, you see, if you looked away, for an instant, if a bear was standing in front of you for instance, you might be dead. It's a very simple technique that your brain will naturally tune right in. It's survival, survival against all odds.

And it's true, in a real-life situation a fraction of a second is all it takes for you to make a decision, the right decision, or don't do it at all and make the wrong decision, or miss it, miss the opportunity. So they know how it works. That's why they use terror on the public. When you're getting 24 hours a day terror, this might happen and that might happen, and the figures might rise up to so many billion, and dut-dut-dut, and dut, the people literally will lose their heads and go into complete immobility where they are stuck between fight or flight. Completely stuck in between. A click mode I call it, where they cease to function, they don't know how to function. It's like Pavlov's dogs, if I moved to that corner, I'll get a shock. If I moved to this other corner over here, I'll get a shock. Until eventually you just have a breakdown. That's what's happening to a lot of people. They know this at the top. They knew it before they started this whole idea of the pandemic. And lockdown. They knew it would happen.

They already had the teams, even at the exercise they had, Event 201, they already had gone through what would happen in a total lockdown. They would have psychiatrists on standby and psychologists and they would have all these articles they would put in the papers and on television, immediately. And they did, they had it all ready to go for this one. All ready to go. Right down to the wartime scenario. When folk can't get the food that they want, here's the great, a great recipe for this and a great recipe for that. The same stuff that George Orwell talked about during World War II. He said after the war one of his functions at the BBC was to convince the British to eat food that really wasn't fit for human consumption and tell them it was much better for them. Well, you're right back at it again with the same techniques, the same liars, who won't be starving at the top, believe you me.

They're having their revolution. That's what it is. They've been quite open about where it's to take you, into total sustainability, a post democratic society where you'll do what you're told if you want to survive at all. Right down to not just one vaccination here to come out of this. They want annual booster shots, for all vaccinations, and all new kinds they haven't given you yet, that you haven't even heard of. That's what's to be on your report card. You see, your report card is going to be your vaccination record that you'll be either in your skin itself or in your little electronic bracelet if you're a bad person.

They'll have your record of what you've got and what you've refused or whatever. And if you refuse it too, they won't let you get into stores to feed yourself. They've already said it, you won't get on a plane to have a flight. Then they'll say, we're not stopping you from moving, just, you can't go on a flight, you know, if you don't take the shot. Or you can't get to that particular store if you don't take the shot, you know, we're not stopping you, sir. This is the technique that's used as you're gradually barred from this place, that place, or that place.

That's, by the way, what they used in China. They still use it today with their social credit system. Documentaries were put out a few years ago with some of the people who had been blacklisted in China, who didn't know it at the time. Some of them were journalists. Because journalism, true, real journalism is an anathema to totalitarian regimes. That's why you don't really have true journalists anymore in the West either. Not for the mainstream. They're all on board, like an army of yes men and women for their master. And I mean their master because Bill Gates, you'd be surprised how many newspaper organizations, or news organizations he funds. Nothing is ever how it seems to be. Nothing out there at all is what it seems to be in a sense. It really isn't. That's how bad it truly is.

It will stay that way until you... Individually... I gave this talk years ago, over 20 years now. I said, it's not a mass movement thing. You can have movements, but they get infiltrated right away. You have to have, put down... Which, [Alan chuckles.] I keep thinking of Animal Farm, you know when they had their, basically their constitution written out and the pigs were in charge. Then the pigs would go up at night with a ladder and rub little bits of it out, such as, pigs will not sleep in human beds. Then they would add on to it something there, with sheets. So they added 'with sheets' on to it, until they could get in the beds, you see, let themselves into the beds. That's how it's done.

So, you set yourself off with your tenets of your organization, what you hope to achieve and what you are there for. But you'll be infiltrated right away, generally. Right away, you won't even see it coming. It will be people that will be so likable and so pleasing, and they'll take over a lot of the work immediately. Oh, don't worry, I'll do that. Are you sure? No problem. Next thing you know when it comes to electing, or if they're a good psychopath they'll turn the rest of them against you, the leader that is, and then they'll become the leader, they'll get the rest of them to vote them in. That's how it's done. I've seen it for... This is a standard technique that's used. They get trained to do this for goodness sake, you know.

So the real way to do it is to, if you see what you set up, what the organization is set up to do starting to sway off into some other area, or being defused, that's the term you use for it, you defuse them. It's like the We Are Change movements, eventually they start to go into the climate change, for ALL the sustainability. [Alan chuckles.] They had been taken over completely. So when you see it swerving, that's what's happened, you see, you've been defused and reassigned a new role. And the public who follow it often don't even, it's so cleverly done that it's almost like they sleepwalk right through the change until they're walking in a different direction. That's how it happens.

So, I said, the only way you can do it is really be, have a real good eye on what your program is. It's almost like a mantra, you have to get a mantra as to why you exist and quote it every day. I guess it's kind of like the AA or similar organizations, where you recite what you're there for basically and what your purpose is, and you swear to follow certain guidelines, you see, and you name the guidelines. Otherwise you're going to be subverted and taken over. Quite easily. That's how it happens. Very slick, that's how it happens.

But anyway, we're living through it and individually you can make a difference because your time is going to come. It's already happening, we've got to start being a nuisance. It's like passive resistance, the Gandhi technique. Although Gandhi didn't say passive resistance. He said, those who don't want to fight, then don't fight, there are other ways to do passive resistance. That's by like lying down in the middle the road and stopping cars and trucks and all the rest of it and you're not hitting out violently against anybody.

But regardless, it's individually, that's how the changes happened. Because you're all going to get your turn, you see, to obey, as more and more demands are laid upon you. You're either going to say yes or no to it.

That's how things, once they start putting people in prison, they can't put everybody in prison. You understand that? And when there's such a massive number... Look how the West views China right now with the Uyghurs, how they're maltreated by China. They're hated because they won't give up their religion and just blend in with China. The same with Catholicism, they had a tremendous bashing in China, although apparently it's been, [Alan chuckles.] there's some orders from the top recently to tell them to kind of go along with the Chinese government.

But regardless, no, totalitarianism, and again the WHO and their mandate, made it quite clear that they're against religion because it's religious folk who stand up against their vaccinations and their mandates. The WHO is a part of the big global New World order, folks. That's why it was set up. That's why it was set up. Every wing of anything to do with United Nations is set up by those who run the world. They run the banks. They ARE the Royal Institute of International Affairs, the Council on Foreign Relations. They're private crooks. But that's what's running the world right now.

You’ll all get your chance as I say to capitulate and go under and kiss the ring of your masters. Or stand up to them. Even if they do put you inside. But like the Uyghurs as I said, in China, they'll look, the West, look what they're doing to those poor folk there, they're getting persecuted. Well, that's what will happen as well, the word gets around fast, when they start to persecute the people inside their own countries because they've got an opinion which has been tabooed. We're not going to allow YOUR opinion, and they've got all these different organizations out there hammering you, thousands of sock puppets and algorithms, and real people, the armies like the 77th brigade in Britain, cyber warfare, thousands of them working to hammer anybody with their own opinion about this whole affair, this fracas.

It doesn't matter, you put up with it and you say NO. You don't even have to explain why. You have the right to say NO. You have the right to refuse. That's what makes you different from totalitarian regimes.

But to hear some of these governors come out with the statements they're making and talking down to the children, like bad, you know, bad schoolchildren. Well, no, we are not schoolchildren, and we won't be talked down to by some idiot. And I mean idiot, that truly believes... because what the… the fostered rights that their bosses, and it's not the public that are their bosses but the ones who are running them, have given them, they think they can get away with it. No, they'll take pay one day as well.

D'you realize how many folk are dying because they can't get into hospitals, across the planet? And what's to come is pretty well guaranteed famine. Because the farmers aren't going either, most of them. The protein supply is being eliminated and the herds they're being culled off. Milk has been put down sewers. And you're going to pay the price, you now. The Piper is always paid. Guess what happens, 'eh, guess what happens?

It's known, I'm not saying anything that it isn't known by the big think tanks that planned all this. And the Event 201, etc., and all the other events that they've planned, and the Rockefellers that're all still working with their bioethics groups to take over by the way, right now, [Alan chuckles.] the same group that had their big plan for the future in 2010 or so published with their Innovations for the Future, how you would all have to adapt and do what you're told.

Well, until they declare you're now living in a totalitarian regime, although they'll smooth it over by calling it a different name of course, then you have to stand up to it. Obviously. You have to because hell is coming down. What do you think it's going to be like next year? If you can get through the winter even, 'eh? What you think it's going to be like next year? When there's more and more folks scrambling for less and less food? Then they'll come in with their rationing cards or whatever, you know. This is how they're going to do it, folks.

Of course they'll do it on your cell phones. That cell phone is your ID card anyway. And you buy it. You buy your own chains. If they want to run your lives through their programs, they should give you the darn things for free. I've said that with the computers too, it was all for their benefit, not for you.

But anyway, that's what you're living through is a big, big plan. Obviously preplanned. They're all sworn, literally SWORN along with it. I mean like hands together in a circle, that's how they've sworn. TO THE DEATH, that's what it seems like to me. When, they all parrot the exact same things. That's a military technique. That's what you saw with 9/11 when they all came out of their meetings and said the same little, short phrases like, weapons of mass destruction.

Everyone was sworn to say the same things to the press, to the public. The same thing again right now. There's no, when you see that, there's no variation, then there's something else going on, you see because humans have variations of opinion in free societies.

When it's all the same, then they're colluding together, and that's a very dangerous sign, that, because they'll use ultimate force on the public to MAKE them obey. That's what they want. And they will shame people. They've already said they could shame people, and they will same people. Oh, look at that person, they're putting you all at risk. 'Eh? No, you're not. If they get the vaccines, they should be quite happy now that they're immune to it, right?

Not that you might even be a carrier of it either. They might. [Alan chuckles.] Who knows because untested vaccines are very dangerous things. Ron Paul, he is a doctor of course himself, but what does that matter these days? He said the same thing, untested vaccines can kill people. And it doesn't have to be right away immediately. You can get all kinds of reactions, long-term ones as well.

This particular vaccine they're working on is different again. There are so many competing vaccine companies, one of them by the way really took my attention because, honestly [Alan chuckles.] ... People think, they see the white coats and the people with the masks on in laboratories, and they've got the pets and they're doing little, you know, everything is so spotless looking, 'eh. But they have no idea what they put into some of the shots out there. They really don't. They haven't got a clue.

I mean, look at the monkeys they're using, you know, the green monkeys, for the polio vaccine for instance. They had all kinds, they had hundreds of viruses that are carried by the monkeys. Of course the big one is always mentioned, but there's a lot of other ones too in those batches from the same monkeys. It's a simian virus 40, you know, SV40 that eventually causes cancers in the people. Well, it didn't cause cancers in the monkeys, they said, but we had no idea it would actually cause cancers when humans got these things. Oh, really, 'eh?! What a surprise. M-hm.

It's a little oops thing. This isn't like spilling your tea out of your cup here on the table. This is lives, this is folks' lives you're talking about here! This is... This is what tyrants say, oh it was an oops thing, and oops moment, you know. Really? Millions of folk got cancer viruses put them. Nevermind all the other kinds of viruses too apart from the simian virus 40.

And all the problems that came out too with the first swine non-epidemic that happened with the one soldier that collapsed marching and, oh, swine flu, then they started vaccinating folk and thousands came down with different kinds of paralysis and terrible symptoms. And oops, 'eh? Oops. Hm. But it doesn't stop them, does it?

Because it's so incredibly, the money from these companies to get the proper, the proper ideas put across to the people, not the real ones but the proper ones, on their behalf, overdoes everything, overlays everything, doesn't it? And you can't fight that kind of thing when they have limitless money for propaganda. And they're so slick with it, using behaviorists and psychologists and psychiatrists. Here's the mum with her baby, and it's nice little background music and dut-dut, and before you know it, you're just ready, okay give me that darn needle there. You know? It's just too easy, isn't it? They play on natural emotions that we have.

So you're dealing with very wicked people. But yeah, the one that caught my eye wasn't, it was the latest... Sometimes they'll take vaccines, they used to use eggs for it, you know, and that's what they really implant the virus into in different stages for vaccines. Then they started growing different vaccines as well on fetal tissue, aborted fetal tissue, sometimes it will say that on the insert. By the way, you should always ask to read the inserts. And it's good because maybe for the first time the doctor will read the insert too before they give you it to see what's in it. It's got little coding letters that tells you what it's from, you see, and you can look that up on the Internet if you're interested. One of the latest ones, companies for this particular one that they're looking at, there's many companies involved with their own versions. But one of them was to grow, to grow the virus on aborted fetal eyes, on these sclera of the eyes. I don't know why but that was… Or maybe inside the eyes itself, in the vitreous humor and so on. I mean really, it's like a horror show. It's kind of hard to put that together, as I say, with the white coats and, oh, it's so clean looking and… hm(?) when you really look at what's happening.

It made me think actually of Macbeth today, I was looking through some of the stuff earlier and I thought, this is like Macbeth, isn't it? It made me think about the witches in Macbeth.

Macbeth - William Shakespeare

The three witches, casting a spell...

(A: The first witch says…)

Round about the cauldron go;

In the poison’d entrails throw.

Toad, that under cold stone

Days and nights hast thirty one

Swelter’d venom sleeping got,

Boil thou first i’ the charmed pot.

(A: Then all of them jump in and say...)

Double, double toil and trouble;
(A: ...everybody knows that one.)
Fire burn and cauldron bubble.

(A: Then the second which says…)

Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake;
Eye of newt, and toe of frog,
Wool of bat, and tongue of dog,
(A: It's almost like one of those markets, 'eh? Hm?)

Wool of bat, and tongue of dog,
(A: What a coincidence.)
Adder’s fork, and blind-worm’s sting,
Lizard’s leg, and howlet’s wing,
For a charm of powerful trouble,
Like a hell-broth boil and bubble.

(A: Ooh, wow, 'eh. [Alan chuckles.]   It really is, that's what made me think about, how some of these vaccines are made. Then they do their…)

Double, double toil and trouble;

(A: Then it says…)

Scale of dragon, tooth of wolf,

Witches’ mummy, maw and gulf

Of the ravin’d salt-sea shark,

Root of hemlock digg’d i’ the dark,

Liver of blaspheming (A: I won't mention, I can't say that part...) [Jew],

Gall of goat, and slips of yew

Sliver’d in the moon’s eclipse,

Nose of Turk, and Tartar’s lips,

Finger of birth-strangled babe

It's not birth-strangled babe, though, is it? They're going to use an eye of a baby [Alan chuckles.] if you think about it here. I start to wonder, when you're, if we're living in some kind of a time warp or something where this stuff that people took for granted, like silly, silly Macbeth, it's a nice little scary story down through centuries. But it's got so much in it, 'eh, when it comes to the actual, the actual bats, 'eh, and the wool of bat, meeting hair, y’know, of bat and so on. It's just... And bits of babes, etc. I mean, you've gotta stop and think sometimes, especially when it's in your face.

There's articles out there that you'd simply know are meant to get you going. They do this, just like 9/11 and the number 911 and so on in all the movies, that came out before 9/11 happened, where, they had 911 inserted in so many movies. I remember you had The Patriot with Mel Gibson, and the best chair has the weigh, and he weighed it and it was 9 lbs. 11 oz. Then you and other ones where a truck got stuck going through a tunnel, under a bridge actually it was, and the height, the maximum height was 9'11". It's over and over, you saw the same things cropping up everywhere you looked, before 9/11 happened. And you're swearing to yourself, come on here, somebody's in-the-know, and they put these little things out. And the conspiracy theorist go wild with it, as they're meant to do.

Then you have the same thing happening with Covid and the exercises that they had in advance and what's been happening with, as I say, the things that they hope to get, their wish lists. They actually have wish lists of course. Some of them are even called that. Articles I read last week, they actually called it their wish lists, like sustainability groups and so on. And bingo, here they go with it all. But they published them in advance to this particular Covid starting and they said they would need that kind of thing to happen, you know, some big panic, some big danger, something, an emergency, it was the only way the public would give up their rights and freedoms if their lives are in utter... if they're living under fear and they're losing their lives, that's really what it is. And here we are. Here we are with it all, you know. It's quite something else, isn't it?

And they're printing out 6, 6, 6s everywhere. And this is standard. There's even a bill getting but through with them in it too. I mean, come on, you can't make this stuff up. This is meant to be in the faces of folk. Almost to mock them, I really do think it's meant to mock them. I mean, you just can't make this kind of stuff up. You can't. And the patents that are out there too that Bill Gates owns, and the number's in them as well. It really is something, isn't it?

I tell you, no matter how much it's pooh-poohed by the big ones at the top, that are going to really hit you for disinformation, y'know, they know better, they got the true-true-true-true truth, even though you've got true, true truth. So you know, you're supposed to listen to them and not your own instincts. If you fall on your face, they've got a different way of explaining what happened to you, right, and, to you, it was your face and you hit the ground, right? No, they'll tell you a different way of what happened, and you're supposed to believe them. Because they're the new Masters, you know, they're the guardians of the truth, you see. And the truth is always corrupted because they're well-paid. If you take money to say the truth, then you're a con man or woman and a liar to boot. A liar to boot. You don't lie in these times of crisis.

The public are being hammered. The public are the enemy as they said at the Club of Rome. The people are the enemy of the planet and everything else, that's what they came up with. They did Limits To Growth, again, you can't go on consuming like this, you know, we have to do something to stop you consuming and being healthy and so on, you know, the healthier you get the more children you might have and yada, yada, ya. And you're burning up the resources, which they own, you know, the ones at the top, the ones who can really appreciate the fact that it's their resources. It really should belong to them, you understand. If you're all dead, it will be. It's quite simple how their minds work. There's nothing difficult to understand here. There really isn't.

They're authoritarian. They can't get what they want to get done unless they have an authoritarian system in place. A complete substitute to replace the old idea of human rights and individual rights, hm. They've got all the neuroscientists well-paid and on board too, along with the psychologists and behaviorists and psychiatrists all on board, well-paid, and again, the behavioral insights teams all across the Internet, thousands of them all working together with the different Brigade 77 warriors, to make sure that they can get anybody with a different point of view hammered and flattened or taken off, or even put in prison. This is what they're talking about.

This is the next phase, you see. There was phase one, two, three and four, and then five. But eventually they'll put you in prison and say that what you were saying might interfere with people saving themselves and doing the right thing at the right time. You might sway their opinion on something, against what they're telling you is the right opinion. You see? And they will, they'll start to do it. But you have to go through this.

The more folk that eventually they start picking up and trying to put them in loony bins, because that's what they did in Soviet Union. If you complained about things and parts of the agenda, you must be mad because you're living in the best country in the world. So that's the proof that you're mad, if you're complaining about it. That's what they did there, and they had a name for that law, I did the talks on it years ago. It's all here now of course. It's just, what you're saying could be detrimental to the health of other people, you know. Hm? It doesn't matter how true it is, what you're saying, it's not authorized to be said. Only the truth keepers have authorization to say anything, you see. They're paid to do it, very well. Quite amazing, eh?

You've got to understand that human nature is not what you think it is. Most folk really up there, especially the ones who are over you and rule over you, are not nice people. They really are not. They're very selfish narcissistic types, that love… and y'know, they're psychopathic to boot, y'know, they get up to the top and they'll do anything they're told by their masters, because they're well-paid to do it. And they do like money. And they like status. They like that little bit of power. And they'll do anything to keep it. And truth doesn't enter into it at all, especially in politics or civil-service or anything to do with that. You can't get a person in any Department of anything to speak to you. It's all done through spokespeople. There are authorized spokespeople, you see. They're the propagandist, authorized propagandists, they know how to reword things rather than tell you anything in the plain truth. M-hm. That's what's running your lives right now.

You can't find really one clinic after another that agrees with all the findings, with even the tests out there, that are all contradictory. You can't even repeat them without getting hammered or taken off because you mentioned some tests that said that perhaps even your previous shots, because that's what the Department of Defense said at one point, it could actually open you up for the coronavirus, like the flu shots. Hm. But if you're not authorized to say that they can haul you off. Then in two weeks time they might say it themselves at the top, then it's okay.

We've watch this for months now, the same very thing happening with different cases and different things, different topics to do with it. So they can be the only one mouthpiece, from the ones above, the high and mighty ones, all attached to the WHO and Bill Gates. And what a small cabal it is really when you really look at it, hm. With fingers in everything to do with society, education, you name it, entertainment, the lot. Right down to even Bill Gates funding certain newspapers to sway the minds and opinions of people. I gave talks many years ago about this very thing, not just him but many others. That's what the purpose of it was, to sway the opinions so you come to the desired opinions by those in control.

Bill Gates also, and I gave talks about this too, even children's books that are written for them, and read to them before they can even read, by their moms or dads, their little fairy stories and so on, have got it embedded with saving the planet, how humans are bad and wicked and… Total brainwashing over and over and over again. To make sure you turn out little radical armies, 'eh, for the right generation to be used against everybody else. This is how it's done. You don't live in a free society at all. It's a very secretive and covert mission that they're on, those at the top. They've got fingers in every pie to make sure they can get the desired changes brought about. By people who often don't even know they've been brainwashed their entire lives. Quite something.

But, I could go on all night just about certain things. There's no point. The amount of information is overwhelming. Of course that can also be detrimental and deliberate as well when you find so much that's overwhelming. You got to stick on the basic, the basic facts of it. What is it we're dealing with, number one? Why is it so much lower than they said it was going to be as far as death rates go? Then as I say, when you put it against the average annual, especially seasonal death rate, it really isn't worse than the flu. It really isn't.

In fact, when they've got another 20 or 30 padded onto it from dying from anything, they've said it in their own articles and instructions to the doctors. I've seen the ones coming out saying, we are the real true news and no, that didn't say that at all. Oh, YES it did say that. You had that Senator in the States who's also a doctor who showed you the darn thing. That's not a lie. But these ones that are out at the top that are supposed to defame anybody saying something, by calling them the liars, is something else indeed, isn't it?

Isn't it something, where the government sends, and the American Medical Association sends them how to diagnose patients, and if they've got the Covid in their system at all, or even in their nasal passages, put it down as a Covid death even though that didn't kill them? Do you realize that the more testing they do, the more they'll find that most folk have already had it, or had Covid, hm? Because the test can't prove that it's this particular Covid they're on about, a coronavirus. D'you understand that?

There's a whole bunch of investigations going on right now, into the fact that, and they'll know it at the top already, how many folk got flu shots last year, and the types of flu shots they got. The ones in Italy were different. It was a trial, a new type, it was a two-part shot they got. It makes you wonder, once again, is that what caused them to be more susceptible to this new one that came out this year? Or, it really came out late last year, didn't it? You've got all these questions to be answered. And of course, believe you me, they're not going to go there because this is an agenda and facts don't really matter when it comes to agenda driven discourses. There is no discourse really. The only thing they have is damage control to hammer anybody who's noticed or even thought outside the box or had different findings, including professional people who are involved in this particular area of epidemiology and virology.

It doesn't really matter when it's a big agenda. This is to change the whole planet, permanently, right. They said it too, over and over. What's, who's Fauci to tell you you'll never live the same way again? Well, who the heck is he? Who voted for him, 'eh? This Emperor here, Fauci, who again has got a finger in every pie, along with Bill Gates, into the same corporations too, including the vaccine companies. There's a conflict there, folks, there's no doubt about it. But who is he to tell you you'll never live the same way again? Huh?

He's talking about a whole new system. They're all on board with the same cultural agenda, completely different system. Political and cultural, completely different system, which tells you that this isn't about what they're telling you it's about at all. This is a big, big agenda from the WEF, the World Economic Forum, the Club of Rome, the Council on Foreign Relations, Royal Institute of International Affairs. It's the same agenda with them all involved in it. There's no doubt about it at all.

Now, I'm going to touch on a few articles here because I have quite a few, that's relevant for those that want to go into it at all. Everyone's heard of course that Trump, who again, people think that, [Alan chuckles.] I don't know why. I've heard about being faithful to the end, but I listened to Trump, one of the few folks who listened to Trump when he ran the first time, right, to get into government. He said, quite clearly, and people missed it. It's like Masons, you know, Albert Pike said that Masons never talk so clearly and precisely and openly as they do when they say it publicly, it's just that the public seem to hear something different when they're hearing them speak. [Alan chuckles.] They can't believe, maybe they can't believe what they're hearing.

Trump said that if he got in, he was already ready to delegate new powers to big Pharma and vaccine companies, to help them promote revolutionary new medications and vaccines, and it would help them to bypass the normal, it takes years to test all different drugs and vaccines, to bypass the time required to get these on the market, he would make sure he would fast-track all these things. Isn't that a coincidence? I thought it, at the time I thought it, I says, why is he saying that? Unless something is going to happen down in the future. And it has happened. Why else would he say something like that? Because obviously if he was wanting the public's vote he didn't have to mention that one. Big Pharma and vaccine companies that back him, yeah, they would. But yeah, I thought it was quite a coincidence back then. He meant it. And bingo, there you go.

It's getting fast-tracked. It would take two or three years to even go through it all. That's if they could even find one. I've got articles here galore, even from some of the heads of the CDC in previous years, they got the people who are in charge of the vaccine areas saying they've never found a vaccine yet, even for the flu, that's really effective. I'll put some of these links up tonight. I always back it up with their own statements. Then, if anybody wants to pooh-pooh you from, you know, the truth controllers at the top, they have to argue with themselves because it's often their own people who put it out before. [Alan chuckles.] There ya go.

This brutality of coercion, where you won't be allowed to travel or even go shopping unless you get this, that and the other stuck in your arms, are you kidding? What?! No, no, no. NO. This is not communist China. It is not. This is not some totalitarian regime here. Although some who grafted themselves on or were grafted into government position seem to think so. No, you don't do that in Western societies. No way. Or wear electronic manacles, or anything else like that by the way, and punish folk that don't consent of what the state demands. You don't need us to do that. No way. Nope. There's to be choice in society, and you're right to have the choice without getting punished by the way.

Punished. Can you believe that? It's like, really? It's like being in a really wicked school in the Dickens era, you know, where you get punished because you had a different opinion or you said no. Hm? This is perpetual childhood indeed, 'eh? By your masters.

So…

Former pharma exec tapped to head White House's 'Operation Warp Speed' coronavirus effort

usatodaynetwork.com / 13 May 2020

President Trump on Wednesday tapped venture capitalist and former pharmaceutical head Moncef Slaoui to head Operation Warp Speed, (Alan: They're calling it Warp Speed. I think his son-in-law as usual is in charge of the big bucks, etc., that are getting dished out, to maybe friendly companies, maybe very friendly companies.) a White House initiative meant to quickly develop and distribute coronavirus vaccines.

Slaoui was named Wednesday, according to a senior administration official. He was chair of the vaccines division at pharmaceutical GlaxoSmithKline, (A: We all know that one. It's the biggie.) a British multinational pharmaceutical company headquartered in London.

(A: It's not British. Anything that's in the City of London is not, forget this British idea, you know. It's the same with the City of London, it's a sovereign entity and whatever's inside of it has got nothing to do with the rest of Britain. Although they'll probably use the taxpayers' money to back their different endeavors at times.)

He is now a partner at Medicxi Capital, a Philadelphia-area venture capital firm.

(A: Naturally, they're all tied together with the big bankers and hedge funds and everybody else.)

Jim Greenwood, president and CEO of Bio, the biotech industry organization, said Slaoui was an excellent choice and someone who has always stood for scientific excellence.

(A: No kidding. I love the, I love how they praise each other. I feel confident now. I've got faith in it again; it just sounds wonderful. Awfully, awfully good that. I won't go into the different mistakes they've all made down through the years, some of these companies. They're all well-known companies, and the different drugs that have been put out that killed folk and give them strokes. But no, no, I won't mention that at all. It would be inadvisable to mention such things with the big, big Pharma companies. It says…)

In addition, the official said four-star Army Gen. Gustave Perna has been selected to serve as the chief operating officer overseeing logistics.

(A: So, here' your military, the bankers and the Pharma vaccine companies and so on. D'you understand what's happening, folks? Are you getting the picture here?)

Perna is the commanding general at U.S. Army Materiel Command in Huntsville, Alabama.

The goal of Operation Warp Speed is to make 100 million doses of a coronavirus vaccine available by November, 200 million doses by December and 300 million doses by January, an administration official told CNN.

(A: I think they're going to give us, it's two-part injections, I think I read that already. It depends which vaccine they're going to use. But they probably know already what they're going to use. Probably knew it before you even heard of coronavirus, or you know, Covid 19.)

Dr. Anthony Facui,(A: I've seen his name spelled so many different ways here.) Director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases and the public face of the government's response, has said that January might be a possible date but acknowledged that it would be a remarkable achievement and cannot be counted on. (A: So he's giving themselves an out there by saying that.)

But this is what they plan, untested. But Trump is going to stick to what he said he would do and bypass all the testing and stuff like that, or even to see its efficacy. Nevermind the fact, long term, you know, you wouldn't know what might happen five years down the road after the shots. Will you start getting tumors? We don't know yet. You don't know. All kinds of things can happen. And then Trump says…

TRUMP SAYS MILITARY WILL BE MOBILIZED TO DELIVER CORONAVIRUS VACCINE BY END OF YEAR

newsweek.com / 14 May 2020

(A: M-hm. Remember, I put all these links up @cuttingthroughthematrix.com for those that want to look it up themselves and read them.)

President Donald Trump is mobilizing the United States military so a vaccine for a new coronavirus can be widely distributed once it's ready for widespread use.

Trump told Fox Business' Maria Bartiromo in an interview that aired Thursday morning that his administration is operating under the assumption the vaccine will be ready by the end of the year. (A: So he’s assuming that, right.) Inoculation is key to resuming a fully normal life, according to multiple officials, and Trump said failing to make distribution plans could cause a delay in people receiving the vaccine.

"It's a massive job to give this vaccine," Trump told Bartiromo. "Our military is now being mobilized so that at the end of the year we'll be able to give it to a lot of people very, very rapidly."

(A: Are you getting a picture in your heads here, you know? Why would you need the military unless you're going to literally force it? And that's what it's for, of course that's what it's for, to force it on people. It's never happened for a flu before, so why is it happening for this? Hm?)

Phase I clinical trials are being conducted with "many" vaccine candidates, according to Dr. Anthony Fauci, (A: They spelled it a different way again in this article.) director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases. Phase II trials should begin in late spring or early summer and by late fall or early winter…

(A: [Alan chuckles.] Well that’s definitely… Actually, I’ve read articles before, I think last week or the week before, where they had different, they had some trials going on in different countries with test subjects that were getting paid to receive different things, you know.)

The White House is also working on ensuring there are enough syringes to administer the vaccine, according to the president.

(A: The terminology is also helped by the behaviorists, ‘eh, and the psychologists are using this friendly terminology, like they’re working hard, for your benefit, you see, they’re going to make sure there’s ENOUGH to go around. So that you won’t worry. Rather than just say, you know, for those that want it. Hm? You’re not getting the choice of if you want it. You supposed to be worried, are you going to be lucky enough to get a dose, this is what they’re telling you here. Everything is worked out by psychologists, what they give to the general public. M-hm.)

A Newsweek review of state demographic data showed in at least 37 states, the majority of cases involved people under 65 years old (A: …of what? Most of them that are dying are way over that, around the 80-odd mark, 80, older than that in fact.), but the majority of deaths were among people who were 65 or older. Eighteen states reported the highest number of deaths were in the 80 years of age and older demographic. (A: Well, that's more like it, you see, and multiple problems at the same time.)

So it goes on and on and on but yeah, they're trying everything to get you psyched up for it in advance, you see. And…

Bill Gates, HR6666, (A: [Alan chuckles.]) Remdesivir, Deaths in Italy

lewrockwell.com / 13 May 2020 / John Rappoport

(A: They do go through the topics here.)

Each of these subjects deserves its own article. Bill Gates would require a library of thick volumes.

(A: And isn't that the truth, though, if you really get into this guy, who he's involved with. He's got fingers in every pie. He's just a front man for business and a front man for everything else he's involved in. They've got a civil service staff basically probably bigger than a small country's to deal with all the things that he is helping, or supposedly at the head of, including education and some areas.)

BILL GATES: Here, from FAIR, the long-standing media-watch group, is a September 4, 2016, article, "This Guardian piece touting Bill Gates' education investment brought to you by Bill Gates."

This Guardian Piece Touting Bill Gates' Education Investment Brought to You by Bill Gates - fair.org / 4 Sept 2016

It adds a layer of explanation about Gates' Death Star:

"The Gates Foundation gives grants in the hundreds of thousands and often millions to such media organizations as NBCUniversal, Al Jazeera, BBC, Viacom (CBS) and Participant Media (the producer of pro-charter school documentary Waiting for Superman). Both Gates and the Gates Foundation are sizable shareholders in Comcast, which is the primary investor in Buzzfeed and Vox, as well the parent corporation of MSNBC and NBC News—the latter of which teamed up with Gates and other noted education experts like Exxon and University of Phoenix Online for the week-long charter school commercial ‘Education Week’.”

“In 2009, the New York Times reported that the Gates Foundation was partnering with media companies to write and shape stories to ‘embed’ messages in primetime dramas:”

(A: I think they also did it in some of the TV Batman series I was reading somewhere too.)

“’It [the Gates Foundation] is less well known as a behind-the-scenes influencer of public attitudes toward these issues by helping to shape story lines and insert messages into popular entertainment like the television shows ER, Law & Order: SVU and Private Practice. The foundation’s messages on HIV prevention, surgical safety AND THE SPREAD OF INFECTIOUS DISEASES have found their way into these shows.” [CAPS are mine]

“His enormous wealth and the reach of media parent corporations seem to exempt Gates from routine disclosure requirements. He was offered up as an education expert in the pro-charter Waiting for Superman, without any mention of the fact that he donated at least $2 million to the film and had a media partnership with its distributor, Viacom.

(A: I keep telling folks, what you see around you isn’t real. There’s more to everything than meets the eye. They write the same stuff into children’s books as I’ve said. Not just him, but lots of other organizations too.)

He is given softball interviews in Comcast-backed Vox without disclosure that he’s a major Comcast investor. Because his stake in media companies is laundered enough times, it’s assumed not to merit mention.”

“In the case of the Guardian, (A: That’s the Guardian news in Britain.) Gates effectively owns an entire vertical, so when one of his investments is written up, one doesn’t notice the conflict of interest—like a fish doesn’t notice water. Because his influence is everywhere, it appears to be nowhere.”

HR6666: This aptly numbered bill is moving forward in the US House Energy and Commerce Committee. Titled TRACE, “Testing, Reaching, And Contacting Everyone,” it officially embeds the snitch culture—with benefits for new agents of the State:

“To authorize the Secretary of Health and Human Services to award grants to eligible entities to conduct diagnostic testing for COVID–19, and related activities such as contact tracing, through mobile health units and, as necessary, at individuals’ residences, and for other purposes.” (A: That’s the big, big wide field which is more important than all the rest of it, actually.)

“The Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting through the Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, may award grants to eligible entities to conduct diagnostic testing for COVID–19, to trace and monitor the contacts of infected individuals, and to support the quarantine of such contacts…”

HR6666 funds this enterprise to the tune of “$100,000,000,000 for fiscal year 2020; and such sums as may be necessary for each of fiscal year 2021 and any subsequent fiscal year during which the emergency period continues.”

Why don’t they simply advertise: “Have you always wanted to run around like a little fascist, targeting the unwary, the sheep, the outliers, the rebels, the dissenters? Here’s your chance. The State will pay you to do it. Who knows? Maybe the government will design a uniform for you, embroidered with the logo of a skull or a virus with spikes.”

(A: I mentioned too about Fauci, how he really put on, with all the, he did pooh-pooh all the different treatments that folk were coming forward with and doctors were trying out. No, pooh-pooh-pooh. We know that even China was using some good antiviral drugs. But no, pooh-pooh, pooh-pooh. And I said, no, he’s waiting for, I knew it would be some pal of his own or some company he’s involved in or something that would, with the drug Remdesivir…)

REMDESIVIR: This is the Fauci COVID drug. (A: It’s the only one he’s advocating right.) He wants the antiviral to hit the market yesterday. (A: Meaning as soon as possible.) At the Alliance for Human Research and Protection (ahrp.org), an article points to the fraud:

“Fauci’s Promotional Hype Catapults Gilead’s Remdesivir”: “[On 4/29], Gilead [the manufacturer of remdesivir] issued a press release announcing that it ‘was aware of positive data emerging from [a] National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Disease (NIAID) study’.” (A: That’s Fauci’s organization.) [Gilead provided assistance on study design and conduct to NIAID.]

“Based on the ‘positive data’ from the NIAID study (A: That’s Fauci’s organization), the Food and Drug Administration approved emergency use of remdesivir against COVID-19 on May 1.”

(A: Last week I read the articles from China, they said they tried it and they really didn't notice much difference at all. Then another study done inside America, independent one, found much the same. It really is, when you see the same people with their… [Alan chuckles.] who… [Alan chuckles.] have conflicts, of course, there's definitely conflicts of interest everywhere you look here, you know?)

"Dr. Fauci made the promotional pronouncement while sitting on a couch in the White House, without providing a detailed news release; without a briefing at a medical meeting or in a scientific journal – as is the norm and practice, (A: …to do it in a scientific journal.) to allow scientists and researchers to review the data."

(A: No, he just passed it on like a majordomo, a little Emperor, you know.)

"What Dr. Fauci failed to disclose to the public in his promotional pronouncement was that the [list of] primary outcomes [measures for success or failure] of the [NAID] study [NCT04280705] were changed on April 16, 2020. (A: That's true, I read the article too. They changed it; you never do that.)   Changes in the Primary Outcome are posted on Clinical Trials.gov."

(A: It actually says in .gov by the way that changing the primary outcomes measures, the types of measures they were using, after a study has commenced…)

"Changing primary outcomes [measures] after a study has commenced is considered dubious and suspicious."

(A: …that's from the government. Because you just don't do that, you don't change it. Even units of measurements or even types of measurements, like metric versus standard, you know. Or whatever else they were using.)

"Reuters News reported that highly respected prominent leaders in the medical community — such as Steven Nissen, MD, the chief academic officer at the Cleveland Clinic and Eric Topol, MD, director and founder of the Scripps Research Translational Institute in California – were unimpressed by remdesivir's tentative, modest benefit at best."

And it goes on and on and on. This is just one article as I say of how they're doing it, you know. It's just astonishing what's going on. And in front of our faces too, you know. That's how cocky and arrogant they are, 'eh? We're just too stupid to think, or think about what we're hearing or seeing, 'eh? Eeeeeh, just tell the schmucks and they'll forget it in five seconds, you know, they won't think beyond that. And why is, why is his own company, Fauci's company testing the darn thing on behalf of it, you know? And promoting it? I-yi-yi. Anyway…

Senate votes down anti-surveillance amendment, (A: …right…) as both parties back warrantless spying on Americans' browser history

rt.com / 13 May 2020

(A: I hope you're getting the message out there, 'eh, everybody?)

Senate votes down anti-surveillance amendment

(A: So you're going to get more surveillance on your complete, basically your browser history, going way back, forever, 'eh.)

The US Senate has voted down an amendment that would (A: …would have…) limit surveillance of Americans' internet records. Apparently, the true divide in Washington is not between Democrat and Republican, but those for or against the police state.

The US Senate met on Wednesday to debate the reauthorization of some provisions of the USA (A: I love the terminology, the Orwellian stuff…) Freedom Act, (A: The USA Freedom Act, 'eh?) an expansive domestic surveillance bill that expired in March.

(A: It's like the war for Iraqi, they called it Iraqi Freedom, when Bush took them into Iraq. Nobody in Iraq wanted your democracy or what you call democracy, no, we don't want democracy. WE don't have it anyway, you know, certainly not the kind of democracy they pretended to give us. [Alan chuckles.] They've never, you know, Muslim countries have decided long ago they don't want it, they are theocratic, they don't want this democracy idea. But that's for them, fine, it's for them, you know, leave them alone, that's what they want. We don't have it here anymore, obviously. We haven't really had it for a long time. We've got a memory of it. Now you're being taught again that you don't have it, hm. So that's what it's about, the last part too…)

Apparently, the true divide in Washington is not between Democrat and Republican, but those for or against the police state.

The US Senate met on Wednesday to debate the reauthorization of some provisions of the USA Freedom Act, (A: [Alan chuckles.]) an expansive domestic surveillance bill that expired in March.

As Majority Leader Mitch McConnell brought the Act to the floor, a bipartisan group of lawmakers introduced an amendment that would explicitly bar law enforcement from snooping on Americans' internet browsing and search histories without a warrant.

(A: Can you believe what you're hearing here? Hm?)

Prior to the vote, McConnell had urged his colleagues to reject the amendment. When votes were cast on Wednesday, ten Democratic senators heeded McConnell's words, bringing the final vote to 59 Yeas and 37 Nays. One more positive vote would have given the amendment the three-fifths majority it needed to pass.

(A: Which tells me it was rigged from the beginning, y'know, it's meant to look like a close call.)

Ron Wyden-Tweet: Fifty-nine members of the Senate just voted in favor of my amendment to block warrantless government surveillance of Americans' browser history. It failed by just one vote. McConnell is that much closer to giving Bill Barr the green light to spy on Americans' private information. (A: They give you the links to it here.)

Former presidential candidate Bernie Sanders (I-Vermont) railed against the reauthorization of the USA Freedom Act in February yet didn't cast a vote on Wednesday. Online, commenters raged at the progressive kingpin for his absence.

(A: They're all paid off to do… they're all little actors, you know.)

Moreover, the reauthorization was sponsored by Reps. Jerry Nadler (New York) and Adam Schiff (California), two Democrats who have disagreed with McConnell on almost everything, except the expansion of the surveillance state.

(A: There ya go. I-yi-yi.)

Among the Democrats who shot down the amendment (A: …to protect you, you know, that meant that would have protected you, and given you something supposedly by law… They wouldn't have, they would have ignored it anyway.) was Dianne Feinstein (California), who has flip-flopped on surveillance throughout her three decades on Capitol Hill. (A: Oh, she was just warming up, it takes a while to get used to it, you know, 30 years is just warming up.) Feinstein voted to extend the 9/11-era Patriot Act in 2012, and was a staunch defender of the National Security Agency's warrantless wiretapping program, (A: [Alan laughing.]) even after it was exposed by whistleblower Edward Snowden who she described as a "traitor" in 2013.

(A: Aaah, I tell you.)

However, as Feinstein's Senate Intelligence Committee was compiling a lengthy report into the CIA's use of torture in 2014, the Californian senator and surveillance enthusiast voiced "grave concerns" that the agency was spying on her committee's computers.

(A: It's different when THEY get spied on, but they have no problem telling the agencies to spy on all of you, 'eh? I-yi-yi. Of course it's not totalitarianism or tyranny. No, no, no. It's just… Well, what would you call it, 'eh? M-hm. They're cautious, they're being cautious, that's what it is, you know.)

Another article goes on about contact tracing again, as a dystopian brown shirt nightmare. [Alan chuckles.] I just call it the Stasi.

'Contact Tracing' Jobs Create Terrifying Army of Karens

pjmedia.com / 14 May 2020

In my worst dystopian nightmares, I could not have imagined a scenario where the American government would intentionally bankrupt the populace and then offer them $25 an hour to snitch on their neighbors in order to incarcerate them, and yet, here we are. Just in from CBS News is this horrific proposal for contact tracing jobs.

(A: That's the cover for the name of it.)

As U.S. unemployment soars to historic levels, the hottest job of the year could be a lifesaver: contact tracing. Containing the coronavirus as the economy gradually reopens has created an urgent need for hundreds of thousands of people trained to identify infected individuals and track down anyone and everyone they could have been exposed to the virus.

In the absence of a federal plan, some city and state health departments are already seeking to fill thousands of these positions. Experts estimate that between 100,000 and 300,000 contact tracers (A: Can you believe this?) — who can earn up to $65,000 per year (A: Hm.) — will be needed nationwide based on state populations and projected COVID-19 infection rates.

(A: This is for a different purpose than what they're telling you, folks. And it's going to be permanent. M-hm.)

"I do think that it's a fantastic job for people who have been furloughed, and it's something that people can be trained to do," said Roger Shapiro, a professor of medicine at the Harvard School of Public Health. "It takes some training, but it's not impossible to train almost anybody with reasonable social skills, who can work off a script, begin a conversation with people, convey a few key messages and collect data," he said.

But what is contact tracing? This is the new go-to solution that our betters have come up with to fight the Chinese Wuflu that will erase all semblance of privacy for Americans. They want to know where you've shopped, eaten, driven, who you've talked to, and who they have talked to. In order to do this, you will install an app on your phone that tracks you and you will give up all of your information 'voluntarily' to a government agent who is assigned to spy on you or you will be incarcerated against your will.

If you want to know what this looks like in real life, just check out South Korea and the idiots who think this is fine and dandy. Read the whole thread. This is what is in store for Americans if people don't wake the hell up and say NO.

Michael Kim – Tweet, May 8, 2020

2) You are required to install an app on your phone and enable location tracking all the time. You are required to self-report symptoms in the app twice a day. If you don't have symptoms, you need to report that too. This goes on for a period of 14 days.

(A: Well, extend that forever.)

If you think I'm exaggerating about being incarcerated against your will, check out what Cuomo did in New York before this pandemic even started. He gave himself the authority to incarcerate anyone with any infectious disease for as long as he deems necessary. Then he did it to at least two people in New York, one of whom never tested positive for coronavirus. The man refused to self-quarantine because he had a cold and ended up in the county jail without a hearing or a lawyer.

Rochester City News reports Monroe County Sheriff’s deputies placed the individual in isolation at a Brighton, N.Y., jail after a civil order was imposed by the Monroe County Department of Public Health. The unnamed person was reportedly displaying symptoms consistent with COVID-19 but refused testing and ignored an order to isolate themselves Thursday.

“The Monroe County Public Health Department has determined the individual’s non-compliance with a health order of isolation endangers safety, health, and well-being of citizens in Monroe County,” the Monroe County Sheriff’s Office said in a statement. “The individual was given multiple opportunities to comply with the Health Department order.”

According to WHAM, the person was taken by specially-trained deputies to Strong Memorial Hospital for evaluation, and then moved to a pre-planned quarantine location at the Sheriff’s Office Brighton Facility on Friday. Other inmates at the Brighton jail were moved to a secure area at the Monroe County Jail, where no cases of COVID-19 have been reported.

“You know, I’ve been a police officer for almost 35 years. I’ve never even dreamed about doing something like this,” Sheriff Todd Baxter told the TV station.

This is what contact tracing will bring to your life — illegal surveillance, arrest, and incarceration without due process. And yet, the government has found a way to make this job sound attractive by wiping out vast means of supporting oneself by deeming most jobs “non-essential.” But make no mistake, the end result will turn neighbor against neighbor and build an army of Karens (A: They’re calling them Karens, these people who apply for them.) into brownshirts for the state. If you think the Karens are bad at the park and on social media now, wait until they are given the power of the state and a fat paycheck to ruin your life for not obeying the crown’s edicts. Is any threat worth giving up your freedom like this?

There's other articles I'll put up tonight too on who they are recruiting. [Alan chuckles.] I could go on and on about this particular part, but they're bringing in librarians and so on that are used to dealing with the public and how they find books and so on and know how to chat to the public. So they're recruiting them, because they're down to, with the folk being terrified to go into libraries. I guess they’re closing a lot of them too. So, they're hiring them and social workers of course naturally, that have been kind of out of work since all these things closed down. So now they can go, and social workers have got a way of just wheedling things out of people, and then taking their children off them. Things like that, you know.

So yeah, they've got them all worked out. They're the new Stasi. $65,000 a year! Come on, you know. Hm? When everybody else is going to be starving. And it's going to get worse and worse and worse, you know. This is a whole agenda, as I say, this is, Covid is an amazing excuse. Then another article too, the same again it says…

As States Seek COVID Detectives, Librarians Are Among The Candidates

kunc.org / 11 May 2020

(A: That's the Mountain West news bureau. It gives you an example too. Again, it's a PR thing, you see. It's like one of these little drama PR things they put into the papers all the time. Generally women's magazines by the way. It's interesting that because a lot of women will be used for this. The Stasi used a lot of women too.)

Tair Kiphibane manages the contact tracing operation for Salt Lake County, Utah. She started working as a contact tracer almost 15 years ago, (A: That's for other things, which they don't do much about. Such as AIDS and stuff, you know, there's a lot of laws about that.) and she says there's an art to cold-calling people about scary diseases.

"Everybody does it a little bit differently. I just like to get to know them first, (A: [Alan chuckles.] She's really talking about contacting people, or what? I won't go any further there.) but not to spend too much time because I may lose their time and attention," says Kiphibane, who's in charge of the county's contact tracing team.

In the past, she's called people to tell them they may have been exposed to diseases like HIV, measles, Ebola. She's a pro at diving quickly into personal territory – "Who do you have sex with?" kind of personal. (A: …you see, she's a pro at it.)

For COVID-19, what she and her colleagues primarily need is a person's memory.

"Sometimes we ask them to pull out a calendar, credit card history, bank statements, things like that to help jog the memory," she says.

(A: I'd tell her to get lost, I'm afraid.)

For someone who was diagnosed with COVID-19, they need to know when the person started having symptoms. Then, starting with two days before symptom onset, they talk through what happened each day, says Kiphibane, "from the minute you get up to the minute you go to bed." Where have they been, who have they seen?

(A: …as if it only starts two days before the symptoms. There's cases there sometimes have gone on for about a month, you know, without symptoms.)

Then, it's time to call the people they were in contact with – ASAP (A: …as soon as possible.) – to warn them, give them instructions about how to quarantine, and ask about their contacts, too. And on and on down the line.

"We trace as far as we can, up to infinite generations," says Kiphibane.

It's a delicate operation. You have to build trust with total strangers – quickly.

And, Kiphibane explains, wording matters. When giving instructions about how to isolate or quarantine, she'll say "I need you to do this" instead of "I would like you to do this." (A: …I NEED you to do this. What about saying, I'd like you to go away, hm?) "We have to be direct because we have a very important message we need them to do. And this is serious," says Kiphibane.

And the stakes are high.

(A: I guess the steaks are high if they're not getting refrigerated, these days, you can't get meat.)

If contact tracing is done well, she says, "We can conquer this. We can stop the spread of COVID 19 … and we can reopen America again."

(A: Who's telling lies here? Mr. Fauci and the rest of them have told you it's not going to be the same again. Most of the jobs are gone.   All the small businesses are crashed.)

Kiphibane is a public health nurse by background. But she says you don't need a health background to do a good job.

"There might be various learning curves for everybody, but I think that anybody can do it," she says.

Public health experts seem to agree with her. People like Lisa M. Lee.

"It is a challenging job, but we can train lay people to do this – and we should," says Lee, an epidemiologist and bioethicist (A: I love these bioethicists. They can now redefine ethics, 'eh, as they try to lie to people and weasel their way in. [Alan chuckles.]) with Virginia Tech who started out a contact tracer with Colorado's state health department.

"It was, I must say, the most humbling work of my career," says Lee, whose career has involved (in no particular order) writing a textbook about public health surveillance, (A: [Alan chuckles.] She's made to order for it, 'eh.) chairing the Obama administration's Bioethics Commission, (A: Oh, this person's a born disciple for it.) and working for the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. (A: I-yi-yi.)

Lee says a good contact tracer (A: I wonder if they give her uniform, you know, all these totalitarian regimes deserve uniforms.) is someone who's curious, has a desire to help, "and really importantly, is a person who can exercise good communication skills using empathy."

(A: EMPATHY… there ya go. I really feel sorry for you, I really, this is genuine, I'm practiced in empathy, you know.)

They have to honor confidentiality,…

(A: The first thing they do is blurt it all to their superiors and if you don't comply with the things that they want you to do. And what would really help them to do it, 'eh, they get the cops. So they're there to help you, right. Empathy… I guess they feel sorry for you when you get pulled off in handcuffs. Oh sorry, with your electronic bracelets.)

They have to honor confidentiality, use basic software to keep track of the info they're getting, and help connect people with what they need – whether that's a COVID-19 test, or groceries to get them through a two-week quarantine.

(A: Really? Really? Uhhhh. What guff if this, 'eh!?)

"There are many people right now who are out of work (A: No? I'm glad they're observant.) whose skills would be very transferable into something like this," she says. "There are people who are good communicators or people who know how to access and advocate for resources. There are people who have initiative and are curious and who do want to help. These are all people we can train to do this."

(A: N-n-n. It's like the Stasi, where they had their, a whole chapter there where they had to recite what their function was, and everywhere it was to help the state and the people and protect them and… wonderful really, you know. It was really wonderful. In fact, the Soviet Union had a charter and it was a wonderful charter, except it was communist. If it actually worked the way it said in the charter, it would have been a utopia, you know. Yep.)

(A: The worst of tyrannies are camouflaged by good intentions. I said that. Anyway, here we go…)

…a free online course in how to do contact tracing. "This isn't something we're going to put into place in a year. (A: Now, there's a little clue there, right.)

"This isn't something we're going to put into place in a year. This is something we need to put in place in the next few weeks or at least by the summer."

(A: But, it's not going to go away either, right. M-hm. I tell ya. They didn't get computer simulations of how many contact tracers each state will need and so on.)

Anyway, I'll put these articles up for those that want to ponder their way through it. But it's wonderful to realize just how wonderful it is, all these wonderful people. Everything's wonderful, with a big W. M-hm. And...

San Francisco recruits army of social workers, librarians and investigators to track Covid-19

theguardian.com / 1 May 2020

(A: There you go, that's it right there.)

Large-scale tracing efforts have been proven to work in other countries,

(A: This is always the excuse too, well, you know, they're doing this inside Arabia, they cut their heads off, you know, well, why aren't WE doing it? I'm not kidding you; I've lost count of how I've seen them, this globalization movement where they always go to other countries, well they're doing it, you know… Really? So what. So they say it's working in other countries…)

including South Korea and Germany and are considered crucial to get the United States economy back on track. But tracing efforts in a nation as large and diverse as the US come with unique challenges, and California, the country's most populous state, is one of the first to start to take those challenges on.

(A: So there ya go again, there ya go. M-m-m.)

I tell ya. Quite something. I'll put these ones up. I'll also put up another one too, I'll put up some YouTube there. This one is an investigation into Bill Gates. It's quite interesting. It's factual as well. They can bang it as much as they want and hammer it, but the fact is, it's factual and it's verifiable, in other words, the information on it. [Removed from YouTube. Available on Bitchute] By a guy who is, Alex Newman his name is. He puts it across very quickly, you'll notice it's very quickly when he talks. But it's interesting.

Bill Gates: Globalist Technocrat to "Save" You With Mandatory Vaccines? (Video) - youtube.com / 4 May 2020

Bill Gates: Globalist Technocrat to "Save" You With Mandatory Vaccines? - thenewamerican.com / 5 May 2020

The rabbit hole is so damn deep, honestly, and there's so many connecting burrows at the bottom that you never see all these different organizations. But it's traceable and it's factual for those that really want to know how small it really is, this whole totalitarian system. Everybody's connected and connected and connected with a small clique, all with each other really. And the WHO has been at this for a long time, for a world order, remember.

Don't forget the WHO was set up in a time when communism was going to be the, was the rigor for the world, it was to be the future that everybody was going to follow. Then that quieted down with the Cold War big time. Then of course they started to push China as a new model, a new model, a new new model, you see, for world order, and the model state to emulate. All the papers, and the Guardian had them too, they all had them, how wonderful China was, and we should emulate that and yada, yada. As they were dragging women out...

I did the articles at the time, I can remember actual events where villagers were so brainwashed, they would grab a pregnant woman, if a woman was pregnant with her second child, which was forbidden at the time, and drag her off to the abortion clinic. And they were good citizens and they got little rewards for it and stuff. But they were part of it too, they were terrified if they didn't report it. This is how the Stasi worked too, they would take people and they would have events happen in front of people, at their workplaces or in the street and so on, and they would wait to see who would report it. As a good citizen you must report what you saw. And if they didn't go and report, the Stasi would go after them and ask them if they were subversive for not reporting. A set up basically, a little false flag up for their benefit, and test them. And this is, it increases the paranoia. Incredibly so. This is what we're all in for here.

Don't forget too that the tests, I don't care which test they're using, they are ALL rubbish. They've been blasted, some of them, they're wrong half the time. Well, that's 50%, a tossup, just toss a coin. Other ones, other tests too will come up positive for the blood tests for antibodies if you've got a previous coronavirus, of various kinds. There's many of them out there, remember. Or even the flu shots, some of them, there's some reputable doctors now that are saying wait a minute here, it's possible even the previous flu shots are coming up positive for these, some of these particular tests.

So yeah, the way... And after every calamity they have, they go forward with the next move, as though it had never happened. As though the calamities hadn't exposed the fallacy of it all. [Alan chuckles.]   In Australia they're going the next step too, since they're so close to China in some ways. It says…

New powers for ASIO to question 14-year-olds and go after foreign spies

smh.com.au / 13 May 2020

(A: They do have a lot of spies in Australia, there's no doubt about it. I remember, was it last year they caught another one. It was a woman from China who was in the governments, a politician, and she hadn't disclosed her affiliations and so on. Much like the ones who were caught working in the laboratories in Canada, the BioLabs in Canada, who had been part of the People's Liberation Army, they were officers in it in fact. You know, I'd say it was a bit of a conflict, yeah. But since it’s the model state for the world, why are we bothered about it? I mean... So anyway, Australia is starting to look into it more and it says…)

The Australian Security Intelligence Organisation will also be able to place tracking devices on cars or in people's bags with only internal approval, rather than a warrant, as part of a major overhaul of the agency's powers.

(A: Well I bet you anything it's not going to be used on the spies, it's going to be used on the general population. M-hm.)

As first revealed by The Sunday Age and The Sun-Herald in March this year, Home Affairs Minister Peter Dutton and his department have been working on a plan to remove ASIO's controversial power to detain people for up to a week and beef up its compulsory question powers to catch agents of foreign influence.

The move to widen the counter-terrorism laws comes as security agencies warn the level of espionage and foreign interference in Australia is at unprecedented levels.

(A: Well, that is true. It’s the same in Canada and everywhere else. But it’s welcome by those in government, I think, at times. I really do.)

This is a good one too, I think it's in, what is it, Singapore? Yep. It says…

'Skynet'-Like Robot Dog Patrols Singapore's Parks To Ensure Humans Are Social Distancing

zerohedge.com / 11 May 2020

Our eyes and ears perked up when we learned that Singapore was now going to be using robot dogs to patrol public areas and make sure that citizens are keeping their distance from one another. Municipal authorities are using Spot, (A: ...they call it, naturally, to make it more human friendly...) a four-legged robot dog made by Boston Dynamics, to remind visitors to parks to keep a safe distance from one another.

(A: I wonder if it does, if you don't, does it bite you or what?)

The robo-doggo officially started patrol at Bishan-Ang Mo Kio Park on Friday as part of a two-week trial, according to The Verge. Spot is fitted with cameras that are used to estimate the number of visitors in the park, but Singapore says it won't collect personal data or use the video to identify individuals. Sure.

Spot also comes equipped with a remote control, built-in sensors and will be accompanied by a guide. If the trial is deemed a success, Spot (and likely others like him) could become mainstays in the country's public parks. The robot “lowers the risk of exposure to the virus,” the National Parks Board said, using the virus to shoehorn its agenda forward.

China and the U.S. have similarly experimented with drones to remind people to social distance.

This is terrible, everything gets used against us, isn't it? Again too, I mean, you're supposed to go after a dog and clean up after it, you know. And here it is doing its thing, and you know, it's putting hydraulic oil over lampposts and things like that and wastepaper baskets and stuff. I mean, I hope someone's cleaning up after it. I mean, that's pretty slippery stuff on the grass, you know, is that oil. [Alan chuckles.] No doubt about it. So there you go. It will be all right as long as it doesn't want a bone, 'eh, and grab your leg and chews away.

Everybody's got their hands out right now. All these companies, 'eh, would sell everybody else under and put you under the earth for profit, wouldn't they. Selling robots. And all the companies, oh, give us the right to take the blood of the people and we'll do this and that, it will only cost a few billion dollars here and a few billion there. D'you realize there's companies and people in them that will never have to work for the rest of their lives from the money they're getting thrown at them right now? And they don't have to really come up with anything viable. All they have to say is, well we tried and tried but it didn't work out. Well, they pocket the money and that's it. It's not loans. As I say, this is the Klondike time.

The Department of Defense, right…

DOD Awards $138 Million Contract, Enabling Prefilled Syringes for Future COVID-19 Vaccine

defense.gov / 12 May 2020

(A: It goes into some of the companies that are getting the cash.)

Spearheaded by the DOD’s Joint Acquisition Task Force (JATF), in coordination with the HHS Office of the Assistant Secretary for Preparedness and Response, the contract will support “Jumpstart” to create a U.S.-based, high-speed supply chain for prefilled syringes beginning later this year by using well-established Blow-Fill-Seal (BFS) aseptic plastics manufacturing technology, suitable for combatting COVID-19 when a safe and proven vaccine becomes available.

You can sell anything if you put the name of Covid 19 on it, right. M-hm. There ya go. This other article too, look into the Club of Rome. Because it's a very powerful organization. It really was started up by Aurelio Peccei, who was also in the Bilderberg group as well.

Club of Rome

Wikipedia.org

The Club of Rome was founded in 1968 at Accademia dei Lincei in Rome, Italy. It consists of one hundred full members selected from current and former heads of state and government, UN administrators, high-level politicians and government officials, diplomats, scientists, economists, and business leaders from around the globe. It stimulated considerable public attention in 1972 with the first report to the Club of Rome, The Limits to Growth.

They’ve gone on since then of course. Of course it's about taking down, there's just too many of YOU, you understand, and you can't go on like this at all. You gotta start cutting the population one way or another. YOU are the problem. And it goes into the problem of course, that there's too many of you, obviously, it's your problem, too many of you. And too many of you then becomes their problem, you see, that's how they see it because they’re the guardians of the universe and you are not.

This article here is like one of your little optimism articles. It's from the Club of Rome. But optimism, 'eh, they're good at conning you, you understand. They've already told you there's too many of YOU.

Call To Action To G20 Leaders: (A: Not to the people but the G20 leaders.)

Emerging From The Emergency With People, Planet, Prosperity At The Heart Of The Covid-19 Recovery

clubofrome.org / 9 April 2020

(A: It's what I said it would be, you see, it's we don't want to just go back into the old system where you could buy and consume and so on, and work. They want you to go into a new system of basically, you know, austerity, and preferably, it doesn't say it here, the other articles by other ones say, a vegan system. But here they don't touch that that much, in the Club of Rome, they're careful. They want to make sure that you're not going to go back to driving cars and things like that. Agenda 21, right. This says, this is helping, they're saying that what’s happening right now is helping to…)

…reducing air pollution and greenhouse gas emissions, rebuilding our relationship with nature, rethinking how we use land

(A: I like how they say, WE use land. These people have never put a spade in their hands in their lives. I'm surprised, actually they've almost got to the stage where they got folk putting the food in their mouths for them, they're that lazy.)

and transforming our food systems to produce healthy food

(A: …healthy food, you see, vegan stuff, ‘eh.)

in harmony with local ecologies and socioeconomic well-being.

It is important to acknowledge that in addition to the COVID-19 pandemic, the planet is facing a deeper and longer-term crisis, rooted in a number of interconnected global challenges. Recent research on the ecology of diseases suggests that wildlife trafficking, unsustainable food systems (A: …that’s meat.), biodiversity loss and deforestation are key drivers behind pandemics.

(A: So, that’s the reason you’ve got a pandemic, it’s nothing to do with labs creating it. No, it’s coming out of the forest and places like that, you see.)

International cooperation is therefore essential to resolve future existential threats and ensure that economic recovery and the transfer of capital (A: [Alan chuckles.] …the wealth, that you had a little while ago.) fosters greater resilience to future shocks. Now is the moment for global solidarity (A: When you hear these words, ...communism, communism...) among the people and nations being affected by the pandemic, and for restoring the balance between people and nature for future resilience.

(A: That means cutting the population, that's what that means. I-yi-yi.)

We look to your leadership to build a new global economy that ensures an equitable, inclusive and sustainable future for all.

So it’s the same old stuff that they’ve got at the different, you know, Conference Of Parties they have for the climate. It's all the same thing, same groups actually, that are ALL combined, that ALL go to the WEF, the World Economic Forum, and of course the Club of Rome is a big part of it. So they're going to advise governments for the Sustainable Development Goals, which means less people, less people, less people, etc., etc., etc. M-hm.

In Canada, which again has got... It's got this totalitarian… it's almost like something holding back a tidal wave, it's just been sitting in the background for a while waiting to get totally unleashed in a kind of communist, they called it liberal at one point, communist system of, again, technocracy, where experts will rule every aspect of your life. That's what they really want. This darned freedoms and having your right to individual personal opinion just won't wash, you know. Unless it's all uniform opinion that the state gives you, then it's okay. You know, like China. But it says here…

Alberta health minister allows police to access confidential patient medical records

lifesitenews.com / 12 May 2020

EDMONTON, Alberta, May 12, 2020 (LifeSiteNews) – In what may be a serious breach of privacy and patient confidentiality, the Health Minister of one of Canada’s largest provinces has utilized new coronavirus related powers to authorize health workers to give police confidential patient medical information.

(A: There you go. The police then have all your medical information, and your... everything about you in fact.)

Last week, the Alberta Minister of Health Tyler Shandro, announced via Twitter that Alberta Health Services (AHS) would be allowed to “provide information to police, confirming whether or not an individual has tested positive for COVID-19. "

(A: As I say, these tests are a joke, folks! There's another article here where a whole bunch of sailors in the U.S. Navy were just brought out of quarantine, I guess on the mainland, onto a ship, nowhere else. They had just been let out of quarantine; they had been there for two or three weeks or maybe longer and tested negative. They get on the ship and then they tested them on the ship, and they were immediately positive. I mean, they're a joke! This is an official story, I'll put the link up to it. A complete joke, you know. N-n-n.)

(5 US sailors test COVID-19 positive again - menafn.com / 16 May 2020)

Ministerial Order (MO) 632/2020 was signed on May 4 and was issued under new powers gained by Alberta government ministers under Bill 10, the Alberta Public Health (Emergency Powers) Amendment Act, 2020.

The Alberta-based Justice Centre for Constitutional Freedoms (JCCF) announced on May 1 that it will be legally challenging the Alberta government over the constitutionality of Bill 10.

They had warned earlier that Bill 10 gives Alberta government ministers too much power saying, “A cabinet minister can now decide unilaterally, without consultation, to impose additional laws on the citizens of Alberta, if she or he is personally of the view that doing so is in the public interest.”

They can put you inside and just put you in a loony bin under the same pretext by the way. Just like the Soviet Union. This is how it actually it worked in the Soviet Union that way, the exact same way. They would say, oh, it's all for the good of the people and for society. There you go. So yeah, you're just little peons now. You're owned by your masters, and you'd better get used to it, that...

Or else you stand up to it. Y’know. And you can't stand up to it just walking backwards all the time. Eventually you're going to walk up behind, your back will be to a brick wall... And there's only two ways out of it then, isn't there? And...

More users needed: Lessons from Alberta's coronavirus contact tracing app

cbc.ca / 6 May 2020

Alberta's use of a smartphone app to help slow the spread of the coronavirus

(A: You see, do you understand, all this electronic stuff is helping slow the speed of the virus. Did you realize that? I wonder what we did in previous times before we had these apps and things and cell phones, 'eh? We had a functioning society actually. There was more jobs as well. And people actually use pen and paper to do inventory in stores and things. It worked awfully well. Nowadays you walk into a place and they say, oh yeah there are six of them there, and they go through it and you wait half an hour, oh, they're all gone and it's not been recorded on the computer, that's strange. It was far better the old way; it was always accurate. So here we are bowing down to the things that we made by our hands, 'eh? More users are needed, so here we go.)

Alberta released its contact tracing app, ABTraceTogether, last week. But early uptake figures and a key design quirk show how challenging it will be for Alberta, or any other province considering such a move, to get the most out of the app.

Contact tracing is the practice of identifying and notifying people at risk of contracting the virus from someone known to have been infected. Anyone who came in close contact with that person is instructed to self-isolate to avoid spreading the virus further.

(A: It isn't as infectious as they've said it was initially. It really isn’t. And it's on the wane right now too. So why should they lock people down like this? Hm? And what do they mean by, if you've been in close contact? How close? As I say, it's an intelligent, a really intelligent virus, 'eh. I guess it's really intelligent, it KNOWS that it can jump from one person if you're no more than, you know, 5 feet nine it might just managed to get under, but 6 feet it can't do it, ‘eh? Then you get into 2 meters, that confuses the virus even more, it's got more leeway to jump. It's such bogus nonsense. It really, really is. And if someone coughs inside a store or anything like that, that thing is going to... That what they sneeze out of them or cough out of them, it's going to travel about 20 feet. And that's without a breeze. If you've got a breeze behind it, of any kind at all, that thing’s going to go hundreds of yards. Of course! Of course it is! Eh?)

So far, tracing in Canada has been done manually, with public health staff or volunteers getting in touch with each patient's recent contacts one by one. An app can speed up that process and doesn't require users to remember where they've been or, just as importantly, with whom.

But the government will know exactly who you are, where you are and who you've been with. And once it's all over, they'll use it for other purposes too. Of course they will. Of course they will. N-n-n.

If they had said to you, you know, which they have actually over the last few years. [Alan chuckles.] Well, we'd like to track and trace everybody, you know, right now it's a nuisance we have to get warrants. Even though they don't get warrants. They track you by your cell phone regardless, 'eh. They've had this same kind of app, similar, out, if you have the same kind of phones as, you could find out who had the same kind of phones in your area if you're out in the streets walking and stuff. They had the articles years ago about that, I read them at the time on the radio.

But this is the China one, this is the same as China, where to get into a store you've got to show, and if it goes blue or green or whatever it is you're okay. If it's amber, you're iffy. But if it's red, then you're not allowed into the store. You've got to show that to get into the store. Then the cops come, it dials the cops, and they pick you up. Really. And they will get volunteers. Oh, it's so nice they give us all these free apps, it's wonderful isn't it? [Alan laughing.]

These are the people you would find in George Orwell's 1984, where at the end he ends up getting picked up and taken to the, was it the Ministry of Peace or Love or something, where they torture you and kill you, recondition you. He meets his neighbor in there and his neighbor says, oh yeah, it was my daughter that found out. He had been talking in his sleep saying anti-party slogans and things in his sleep. My daughter, he says, found out and I'm so grateful for her, I had no idea what I was doing, I was being such a criminal, a thought criminal. He praised his daughter for managing to catch him before he went any further. Yep. Well, these are the same folk that are hoping and praying, oh, thank God, they're giving us these apps that can track and trace everything I do, forever, for the rest of my life.

Because that's what is going to be when they bring these apps in, and you accept it. They're not going to go away then. When you give up rights, that’s it, gone forever, folks. It takes centuries to get them back.

Here's the typical article…

Early Antibody Testing Indicates Far More COVID-19 Cases,

(A: These are not cases, folks. These are not ill people. You see? Because you're... [Alan chuckles.]   if you show positive, in one of their pathetic, pathetic tests that are showing lots of false positives actually, and lots of false negatives, they're just useless, especially the swab types. They're now finding the same thing with some of the blood types as well now, the fast blood ones. But this is, so they're showing far more Covid 19 folk and...)

Lower Mortality Rate

(A: Because the more folks who have either had it, it doesn't even mean they had THIS one... As I say, the tests are showing you've had a coronavirus at some time. It might have even been a few years ago, one of the many out there, including a flu type.)

nbclosangeles.com / 20 April 2020

Although there is a decrease in the number of deaths, the study indicates that there could be hundreds of thousands of people who could be infected without knowing it.

(A: Well, that's quite healthy, if they're fine and healthy, that's good. Yep.)

Preliminary results from an antibody testing program indicates the number of COVID-19 infections in Los Angeles County far exceeds the number of confirmed cases, with potentially more than 400,000 residents having been infected at some point.

(A: Well, that's called herd immunity, folks. Nature does it, and it's a healthy thing to have.

It's better than any synthetic thing that's going to change the cells in your body.)

The good news from the antibody study, researchers said, is that the mortality rate from the illness is much lower than currently estimated.

(A: So, the more they find that's had it, the ones who die goes down, down, down and down, a lower and lower number per population, you see. Then they give you another fib, I call it a fib...)

The bad news is that there are potentially hundreds of thousands of residents who are unknowingly infected with the illness (A: No, they’re not necessarily infected with the illness!)

(A: Of course then it's telling you here that... They say that there are more than 400,000 residents having been infected at some point. Meaning, beforehand, right. You've had it, you're over it. You've got the antibodies. You see? You see, they're really misleading articles out, all over the place. It has to be deliberate. It has to be deliberate. M-hm. And after that, after telling you that all these folk have had it and the tests show that they've got, you know, they're talking about antibodies really, I'm pretty sure of it. Yeah, antibody testing. So…)

The numbers prove that “we are very early in the epidemic.” (A: …meaning that we’ve got a long way to go. No, we’re NOT.)

You’re getting over it, when you’re getting that. The more you're tested, you find there's even more and more and more folk who've had it. And they had no symptoms because they're not cases, they're not cases of ILLNESS, you see. That's how they do it. That's how it's done.

This other article too, is from a Catholic cardinal Muller.

Cardinal Müller: It’s no ‘conspiracy theory’ – pandemic is being used to implement ‘questionable measures’

lifesitenews.com / 14 May 2020

Cardinal Müller: Anyone who does not distinguish between the opportunities and the dangers associated with globalization is denying reality.

May 14, 2020 (LifeSiteNews) – In a lengthy interview with the German Catholic newspaper Die Tagespost (published in full below), Cardinal Gerhard Müller responds in detail to the many accusations leveled at him in the last days for having signed Archbishop Carlo Maria Viganó's appeal concerning the corona crisis and the impending dangers of governmental control and abuse.

In light of accusations of fostering conspiracy theories, the cardinal invites people to respond to facts, instead of demeaning people who “think for themselves,”

(A: And that's what you're getting. If you think for yourself now you get hammered with all these thousands of cyber warfare warriors, as the government calls them and the military calls them, that they own, that immediately will attack you if you think for yourself. They've got to smear you in some way.)

and he also points to the danger of “forced vaccinations.” Without mentioning Bill Gates' name directly, Müller mentions that the “threat has been made publicly that 7 billion people will be forcibly vaccinated, even if the drugs have not yet been sufficiently tested, and that if people are not complying, fundamental rights will be withdrawn from them.”

(A: That's true, it's total coercion and threatening... you can’t feed yourself; you can't get to a store, you can't get out of your darn door! or get on a bus or whatever, or even walk on the street! This is what's going to happen, folks. This is complete tyranny. And they're using it as an excuse, you see.)

“No one can be forced to believe that a few 'philanthropic' super billionaires have the best programs for world improvement just because they have succeeded in accumulating a huge private fortune,” he comments.

Cardinal Müller further rejects the accusation of being a “conspiracy theorist” by referring to his own experience: “In Peru during the Fujimori era, I myself spoke to involuntarily sterilized men and women who had been cheated out of health and happiness with money and false promises,” he states and asks: “What does this have to do with a 'conspiracy theory'?”

The May 7 Viganò Appeal – which was also signed by Cardinals Joseph Zen and Janis Pujats, as well as Bishops Athanasius Schneider and Joseph Strickland – had called into question the world-wide response of lockdowns and strong restrictions of freedoms of citizens as measures against the coronavirus outbreak.

The signatories of this appeal, among whom are also journalists, experts, and other clergy, are concerned for the Church and the world that the COVID-19 pandemic is being used as a “pretext” by world leaders to “control” people, strip them of their fundamental rights, while providing a “disturbing prelude to the realization of a world government beyond all control.” They also reminded the public of the liberty of the Catholic Church who “firmly asserts her autonomy to govern, worship, and teach,” thus making clear that the state has not the authority to decide over church closures. So far, more than 38,000 people have signed this text.

Especially in Germany, Cardinal Müller had been singled out and targeted by numerous Catholic and secular media. (A: They will completely attack you if you think for yourself, that's what he says.) The main tenor of the accusations even in major newspapers is that this appeal is filled with a set of crude conspiracy theories, (A: That’s what they’re immediately saying about everything, ‘eh, conspiracy theory.) going so far that it even purportedly fosters Anti-Semitism…

(A: They always use that to try to shame, make people who are not anti-Semitic, haven’t even mentioned anything anti-Semitic. But that’s the kind of slap, and most folk see that and say, oh, they back off immediately, oh it must be those terrible people, that must be true, what they’re saying about this person. You see? Nothing is dirty enough when it comes to these kind of wars of propaganda. And they have nothing else to really hit you with, you see. If you're sticking to facts, all they can do is smear you. That's all they can do. And they get paid to smear you. D'you realize what's happening here, folks? It's not just the tracers. It's also these thousands of people employed to scour the net in algorithms, find you if you've mentioned this or mentioned that, very quickly, and then attack you with stacks of nasty stuff. Your government, your tax money is paying for all this.)

Full translation of Cardinal Müller's new interview with the German Catholic newspaper Die Tagespost:

Q: Your Eminence, are you really afraid that a world government is about to take over power by means of illiberal measures, as the appeal you signed states?

Cardinal Müller: Anyone who does not distinguish between the opportunities and the dangers associated with globalization is denying reality. Pope Francis is also opposed to the neo-colonialism of states and international organizations forcing abortion among poor peoples by withdrawing development aid if they refuse. In Peru during the Fujimori era, I myself spoke to involuntarily sterilized men and women who had been cheated out of health and happiness with money and false promises. What does this have to do with a “conspiracy theory”?

(A: Nothing of course, because it’s fact. They coerce you, you see.)

It goes on and on, this article, and you can read it for yourselves. And then an article by Whitney Webb.

Techno-Tyranny: How the US National Security State Is Using Coronavirus to Fulfill an Orwellian Vision

unz.com / 20 April 2020

Last year, a U.S. government body dedicated to examining how artificial intelligence can “address the national security and defense needs of the United States” discussed in detail the “structural” changes that the American economy and society must undergo in order to ensure a technological advantage over China, according to a recent document acquired through a FOIA request. (A: The link is here for the government document. I put this up before.) This document suggests that the U.S. follow China’s lead and even surpass them in many aspects related to AI-driven technologies, particularly their use of mass surveillance. This perspective clearly clashes with the public rhetoric of prominent U.S. government officials and politicians on China, who have labeled the Chinese government’s technology investments and export of its surveillance systems and other technologies as a major “threat” to Americans’ “way of life.”

(A: But your own government is doing the same thing. So they have… I like an Indian expression, you know, the native Indians, and expression where they said that white man speaks with forked tongue. You know, they say two things out of the same mouth basically. And it's true, they condemn China, but they passed bills to basically rival and surpass China in surveilling of their own people.)

In addition, many of the steps for the implementation of such a program in the U.S., as laid out in this newly available document, are currently being promoted and implemented as part of the government’s response to the current coronavirus (Covid-19) crisis. This likely due to the fact that many members of this same body have considerable overlap with the taskforces and advisors currently guiding the government’s plans to “re-open the economy” and efforts to use technology to respond to the current crisis.

The FOIA document, obtained by the Electronic Privacy Information Center (EPIC), was produced by a little-known U.S. government organization called the National Security Commission on Artificial Intelligence (NSCAI). It was created by the 2018 National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA) and its official purpose is “to consider the methods and means necessary to advance the development of artificial intelligence (AI), machine learning, and associated technologies to comprehensively address the national security and defense needs of the United States.”

(A: It also touches on what I've mentioned before too. It says…)

The NSCAI is a key part of the government’s response to what is often referred to as the coming “fourth industrial revolution” …

Now, this is in THEIR terms. I keep saying, when you see 'revolution' at the end here, it's their system and it's a revolution to utterly change THEIR system into what THEY want it TO BE, the next one, a totally different kind of system. That's what it's about. This is what Covid is all about too by the way, to bring this all into being. Sustainability, depopulation, expert control of society and individuals. You'll all have to get tested all your life for your thoughts and your speech and all the rest of it and what you believe and yada, yada, ya, what you're going to eat, if you're going to, and yada, yada. It's everything actually, it's a whole new way of living. They said it quite openly at the Club of Rome and the World Economic Forum. I'll put this article up for those who want to read it. And…

Abbott’s Coronavirus Test (A: ...that's a big one they touted.) Falls Short of Rival Device

wsj.com / 13 May 2020

Study indicates Abbott ID Now failed to detect 48% of the positive cases found by another machine.

(A: Hm. You might as well, it's the same as saying about half the time it's wrong. Which means half the time it's right. Which you can get from a toss of a coin. In other words, it's useless.)

Researchers reported a device manufactured by Abbott Laboratories widely used to swiftly detect coronavirus, including among senior White House officials, missed nearly half of the positive cases detected by another common test.

The researchers at NYU Langone Health in New York City compared the Abbott ID Now to another device, finding that it missed 48% …

...and blah, blah, blah. It keeps repeating itself… If you notice, the articles keep repeating the same little paragraphs over and over and over? Anyway, that's been put out by the Wall Street Journal. So there you go. What's the point of it? What was spent on it? How much was spent on this rubbish? This useless test? And the other ones aren't any better. Not really. N-n-n. And the elderly lady I mentioned earlier, if they can pull the patient out who is 102 years old through it, it means they have techniques. And maybe they gave her, mind you, some of the plasma from recovered patients before, is that what they gave her? They gave her something obviously.

Fiercely independent' 102-year-old who did secret work with Winston Churchill in World War Two defeats coronavirus after she had been given two hours to live and family had said their last goodbyes - dailymail.co.uk / 15 May 2020

But they give a big glowing talk about this woman, this elderly woman. She never disclosed what she did for Winston Churchill, etc. and it's maybe [Alan chuckles.] it would be better to not even go into that much detail at all. But yeah, she survived it, 'eh. She obviously got treatment of some kind. Her name is, they called her Auntie Kitt, that was the nickname she gave. Her name was Mrs. Grace, I guess that was maybe her married name, I don't know. Her husband died during the 1950s and she never remarried. And she's still alive today. So there you go. She was taken into the hospital, they thought she had the coronavirus and there she is. So it's... If she can recover from it, believe you me, there's methods out there to make it happen, IF they want it to happen.

Canadian archbishop: Selling euthanasia as ‘solution’ to suffering is ‘misguided’

lifesitenews.com / 15 May 2020

(A: That's true. It's not a heavy statement, that one. It's rather light and polite.)

OTTAWA, May 15, 2020 (LifeSiteNews) – Archbishop Terrence Prendergast of Ottawa said that trying to sell euthanasia and assisted suicide as a “solution” to a problem will lead to a different kind of “infection” in Canada of the continued devaluation of human life.

(A: And that’s part, mind you, of technocracy, which they are bringing in. It’s to get you used to the idea, you’re worthless. They've already got you conditioned to it. Oh, you're nonessential. Huh?!? D'you realize most of you are labeled already as nonessential? Hm? Stop and think here folks, you're getting trained and trained in accepting it, oh yeah, I'm nonessential. What happens in a year or two years time, and you're still locked down? Well, I'm nobody really, I'm nonessential, and, they want to euthanize me now and so on, so... you know. I tell you, it's quite something. M-hm. He talked about abortion and then…)

Prendergast then shifted his sermon to focus on the issue of euthanasia and assisted suicide in Canada. He spoke of how the coronavirus has shown to be particularly deadly to the elderly.

(A: It's because of the way, they really are just writing them off in the hospitals, under the direction of the WHO, rather than giving them the standard treatments, they know what it is. M-hm.)

“Selling euthanasia and assisted suicide as a solution to suffering is inviting a different kind of infection to sweep through our communities …

“I ask you, doesn’t every family deserve the right to the care that our elders need to sustain their lives, rather than an expedient means of ending it prematurely?”

(A: Well, you see, it's saving them money. All that money that you would be claiming for a pension and so on, and your savings, the government can grab it and use it to pad their own pockets, y'know. Because everything in government today is, was, I don't care what country it is, utterly corrupt. It's just… Corruption is normal nowadays.)

“Taking measures to end one’s life easier to access, while continuing to underfund good long-term care, sends a clear message. It says the society values expediency over compassionate dignified health care and assistance.”

Euthanasia was legalized in Canada by Justin Trudeau's Liberal Party in 2016 with Bill C-14. In February 2019, Bill C-7 was introduced, which further expanded on Bill C-14.

(A: Once they put it on the books, they always expand it. Now you can kill teenagers who say they're depressed if they want. You can convince them to take the euthanasia and away you go. It's legal. Killing is quite legal now, you know, when the government is doing it and authorizing it. It's quite something.)

Alex Schadenberg, executive director of the Euthanasia Prevention Coalition, warned on day three of the 2020 Virtual March for Life that Canada was on track to become “worst” assisted suicide jurisdiction in the world.

More than a thousand people tuned in during day three of the march to view a screening of a powerful film that deals with the realities of euthanasia and assisted suicide.

I'll put this up. As I've said before, most folk don't want to think of these things anymore, especially religion. They've been, they're so put off by incredibly bad press, by again, the pedophiles that have been after little boys and so on for such a long, long time, mainly little boys they're after. I don't know if they'll ever recover from that. But they weren't ALL like that, you've got to remember that too.

A gang got in, just like gangs get into your government and take it over. And that’s a fact today, you can't deny it. That's what happened even with the Catholic Church too, naturally. I say naturally because I think in a system where, especially a system in a hypersexualized society, because there's been a war on all of society for hyper sexualization, that affects everybody. You're taking the priests out of the same population, that can get contaminated with indoctrination that's made sex as a weapon if you use it in the way it's been done, the fashion it has been done, and they bring the perversions into the church with them.

There's all kinds of perversions taught normally now. You know, this isn't just the same-sex things. This is all kinds. Look at the people tuning into their 50 Shades of Gray and so on. I don't know what's taken over from that. Before that it was Game of Thrones and I think they had all kinds of sexual scenes in that as well, you know. You need more and more and more of it, that's the whole thing with fetishism too. You need more and more and more of it to reach the same climax, same orgasmic activity. It's like a drug. It destroys the person in the meantime as they become addicted to needing it, you know. It's a way out of temporary, it's a release out of temporary stress even, y'know. And this world today is full of stress, especially now I suppose.

But yeah, this is a war. They talked about it, HG Wells did too, how to implement it, how to get women to be promiscuous. He used part of the free love society in the 1880s, 1890s. That's why he was picked up by, to be a propagandist for the Fabian Society, which is really just a left-wing of the establishment. They run all sides. They never gave up on that. He said, once we get women into the workforce, and World War I was great for that, he says, get them into the workforce because the guys are at war, then they can have affairs and so on and then they won't be happy with the one man, and divorces will happen, and the younger ones won’t get married at all. This is all, they talked about that, and they celebrated it, it was planned that way.

Look at it today, where we are all at the mercy of the government now. He says, when there's no family standing around YOU, when the government wants to get to YOU, there's no one to stand there and protect or speak up for you, then you will obey the government, or they'll lift you and there's no one to stop them from lifting you. That's what he said, folks. I'm paraphrasing it but that's what he said.

The American Economy is Imploding — and America is, Too

eand.co / 9 May 2020

How Coronavirus is Finishing the Job of American Collapse

Another 3 million people filed unemployment claims last week, bringing the total since the beginning of the pandemic to a staggering 33 million. How much is that, in context? The US labour force is 165 million people. 33 million people means a full 20% of the labour force is now unemployed.

But even that’s an understatement. Here’s another, truer way to think about it. These numbers mean that, since the employment to population ratio has crashed to just fifty percent. That means: just half of the American population is now employed.

These are numbers so catastrophic they make economists like me shudder. They have no modern parallel whatsoever. They point to an emerging depression — call it the Coronavirus Depression — that’s probably going to be greater and worse than the Great Depression.

That's what they're wanting by the way. There's articles from the big wigs, they're drooling at the thought of a massive prolonged Great Depression. In comes austerity, the very programs I talked about before. Because your governments were all involved in signing documentation on austerity, by the Club of Rome and the World Economic Forum and so on, and the climatologists, yada, yada, ya.

Government by billionaires? Cuomo names former Google CEO (A: Naturally, it's all in the family, it's all in the big intelligence agency.) to join Gates and Bloomberg in drafting post-pandemic ‘reforms’

rt.com / 6 May 2020

(A: There you are, you don't need democracy or rights and that, they're already there, your masters are there.)

Meet your new overlords! (left to right: Schmidt, Gates, Bloomberg)

New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo has appointed ex-Google CEO Eric Schmidt to lead a panel on post-pandemic “reform” of health and education systems, despite criticism for taking other billionaires with conflicts of interest on board.

Schmidt will head a ‘Blue Ribbon Commission’ tasked with “reimagining” New York's existing systems of healthcare and education,

(A: I think I read last week maybe this article about, and I'll put another one up tonight, on Bill Gates, how he was into the Common Core project big time that really has dumbed the children down even more than they were before. So here they are going the next step with it. You got the same characters really going further with healthcare and education. Now, healthcare naturally is to make sure that you're going to get a whole array, a battery of vaccinations given to you every year now. And they're getting the education powers to brainwash the children that they've got to accept it, I suppose after about the first few years they might be so far gone they won't know it's happening anyway, so they'll take them all.)

Cuomo announced on Wednesday during his daily coronavirus briefing. The decision to place such power in the hands of another unelected billionaire has riled critics already uneasy about the governor's post-Covid-19 plans.

The panel's initial priorities will be “tele-health, remote learning and broadband,” Schmidt announced.

(A: I wonder how much money they're going to charge the taxpayer for all of this. ‘eh? As they play themselves and indoctrinate the children.)

The Gates Foundation poured nearly half a billion dollars of its own money into the notorious Common Core program, which while pitched as a way to improve floundering educational performance in mathematics has actually caused the US to drop even lower (A: And it's got the link here to it, for the facts.) in international rankings (A: And they give you the international ranking by the PioneerInstitute.org.) since its nationwide implementation in 2013. After steering over $4 trillion of taxpayer dollars into the government-funded program, the Foundation tacitly admitted failure in 2016, acknowledging in a letter to donors that it had “underestimated the level of resources and support required for our public education systems to be well-equipped to implement [Common Core].”

This goes into more detail about the educational mess, the morass of it all.

House Democrats roll out $3 trillion coronavirus relief bill, eyeing a vote by the end of this week marketwatch.com / 12 May 2020

Republicans have said they’re in no hurry to move on another bill soon

(A: You understand, with the money that they're just... Although it's just all magic and nonsense, they could really create as much as they wanted to without having to devalue the currency, IF they wanted to. Because it's based on nothing anyway. Money is just a way of controlling you, by those that print it, and they decide what value it's going to have that day, every day, etc., etc. M-hm.)

The 1,815-page bill, (A: The link is here too.) dubbed the “HEROES Act” (A: Can you believe it, ‘eh, the HEREOS Act…) by Democrats, was projected to cost a little over $3 trillion as of Tuesday morning, according to a House Democratic aide. It includes bolstering the direct payments program put in place in the $1.8 trillion coronavirus bill passed in late March, additional monies for state and local governments, (A: [Alan chuckles.]   By the time it gets through the hands of these characters there will be little left for the guys at the bottom.) and extending the expiration date for some unemployment benefits related to the pandemic.

Quite amazing hey. And again too, Forbes says...

Future Air Travel: Four-Hour Process, Self Check-In, Disinfection, Immunity Passes

forbes.com / 10 May 2020

Once airports and borders open again and people are able to fly freely (A: That's going to be a much reduced people who is authorized to fly, believe you me. It's the bigwigs of course, who already bypass all the checks.) — a process already in play as airports of all sizes around the world ready strategies to ensure healthy air travel — how much are you ready to change your flying habits?

Considering some of the changes already happening and the many more recommended before airports can reopen safely to commercial routes, experts (A: You see, that word EXPERTS again, ‘eh. Bertrand Russell says, we'll train the people to just do it by experts. They don't even name them anymore, they just say experts and you bow down, oh my God, an expert said this.) are referring to the coronavirus pandemic as ‘the new terrorism,’ (A: It is. It is. It's a war of terror on the public, obviously. They've got the public terrified.) triggering the biggest crisis the airline industry has ever faced.

Let’s start with the entire process of checking in for flights, which some calculate that it could take up to four hours and involving social distancing, sanitation of passengers and luggage, wider spaces for various lines and waiting to board.

Nine out of 10 experts (A: …again…) expect slower turnarounds between flights due to the need of thorough cleaning of cabins and following of sanitary measures at airports.

Among the steps under consideration: no cabin bags, no lounges, no automatic upgrades, face masks, surgical gloves, self-check-in, self-bag-drop-off, immunity passports, on-the-spot blood tests and sanitation disinfection tunnels.

(A: [Alan laughing.])

Digital technologies and automation will play a critical role in the future of air travel. The need to reduce “touchpoints” at airports implies mandatory use of biometric boarding (A: There ya go.) that allows passengers to board planes with only their face as a passport.

(A: So, you have to be authorized, you see. There ya go. N-n-n.)

… “the ‘new normal’ at major airports…

(A: It's, again, called the “new normal”, which I happened to come up with that years ago.)

(A: It goes on and on and on, what you have to go through. Again, they'll take your temperature and yada, yada, yada, ya. Which is pretty pointless anyway unless you've got the fever at the time. Even then it doesn't make any difference. Because the ones they are saying have got the illness don't even have fevers now. Like those quarantines sailors I talked about, just brought them on board, they didn't have temperatures or anything, but they got tested again, oh you've got it. [Alan chuckles.] They didn't have any symptoms at all. So what's the point in taking the temperature?)

"Only those 'fit to fly' will be allowed to enter," predicts the airline strategy firm SimpliFlying,

...is the strategy firm in charge of it all. Quite something isn't it. It really is quite something what's going on. But yeah, I was going over the old articles too, like Catholic bishops in Kenya...

A mass sterilization exercise’: Kenyan doctors find anti-fertility agent in UN tetanus vaccine

lifesitenews.com / 6 Nov 2014

Kenya’s Catholic bishops are charging two United Nations organizations with sterilizing millions of girls and women under cover of an anti-tetanus inoculation program sponsored by the Kenyan government.

(A: This was well documented by the way; it wasn't some little suspicion.)

“We sent six samples from around Kenya to laboratories in South Africa. They tested positive for the HCG antigen,” Dr. Muhame Ngare of the Mercy Medical Centre in Nairobi told LifeSiteNews. “They were all laced with HCG.”

And they did, they came down with terrible pains, the girls. This thing attacked their ovaries. That's what it does. I remember at the time I did the articles, not just from this site but from many other sites who were involved in it, the testing laboratories and all the rest of it. They're always amazed just how it gets into the, you know, this is for a tetanus shot - it's free, though, it's free - that they were pushing. N-n-n. Of course they tried to sue the companies involved, the usual companies, you all know their names, I won't mention them again. But India too came out with the same thing. Latin America, different countries in Latin America found the same problems with the same shot, it was doing the same kind of thing. It's all just coincidence though.

And another one here is...

So why did it take so long? Britain finally approves 100% accurate coronavirus antibody test... (A: I don't believe that either.) but experts slam PHE for taking too long as UK languishes TEN DAYS behind EU and US

dailymail.co.uk / 13 May 2020

(A: I very much doubt it's 100%. If it's a FAST test, I very much doubt it.)

Britain last night finally approved its first commercial coronavirus antibody test that can tell whether someone has had the infection (A: It could be it will test positive for any coronavirus.)

(A: And again it's...)

Swiss pharmaceutical giant Roche's (A: That’s a huge one, a huge company.) test is 100 per cent accurate, meaning it will identity everyone who has had COVID-19.

But questions were today asked about why it took Public Health England so long …

(A: And so on, it's amazing how they get you off the topic, off the track, as they see how really, how they can prove it's deadly accurate. There's something there, 'eh. So there ya go.)

The body makes antibodies in response to many illnesses and infections, including other coronaviruses. New blood tests are being developed to identify antibodies unique to SARS-CoV-2, the official name of the new coronavirus.

The tests look for two kinds of antibodies: immunoglobulin M (IgM) and G (IgG). The body quickly produces IgM antibodies for its initial attack against infections. It makes IgG antibodies more slowly and retains them longer; IgG antibodies suggest possible immunity.

WHAT IS THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN RAPID TESTS AND ASSAYS?

Some companies are developing finger-prick tests that get results in minutes. These are called immunoassays and will form the basis of home testing kits.

Others are developing far more accurate tests called enzyme-linked immunosorbent assays (ELISA) that require sending blood samples to a lab for analysis.

And the lab analysis is quite expensive I believe. I think from the States it was, for that type, was about $4500 per test! So, you can see where they're going for these cheapos that give you all the fake answers and so on. So yeah, it will show if you've had an antibody for coronavirus. And it will be interesting, I really would like to see the surveys to see if the ones who've had their shots last year for the flu, if that's may be also giving them it. Because you have to take all these things into consideration. Science, true science has to look at everything and do studies on everything. Another article…

How France helped build Chinese biolab linked to COVID-19 – and then got burned by the communists

lifesitenews.com / 30 April 2020

(A: [Alan chuckles.]   That's quite something, 'eh. So it says, yeah, they gave them, they helped to build it for them.)

That the French delivered the turn-key, high-containment biolab to China has long been public knowledge, (A: We're just finding out now that France had a big hand in it.) but now a German newspaper, the Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, has added riveting details to the story. The insider information comes from interviews with French scientists directly involved with the effort.

(A: Once they had built it for the Chinese, [Alan chuckles.] the Chinese didn't let them, the French hoped that they could also use it, 'eh, but the French were kicked out and the Chinese took over. So that's how you can trust them, 'eh? N-n-n.)

To the surprise and consternation of the French, that ceremony marked the effective end of the "research partnership" that the opening of the lab was supposed to inaugurate. Now that China had the P4 lab and technology it wanted, it promptly stiffed its foreign "partner" and tore up the agreement it had signed.

I want to also put up some YouTubes that I've mentioned before. I'll put these links up @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Remember as well, you can donate to me @cuttingthroughthematrix.com website. List the official sites which are all listed on the .com site in case one goes down, or others goes down. Because the ones at the top, if you read their Event 201, they actually mentioned the stages they'll go through before they actually start to imprison folk. That's actually what they did in the test if folk wouldn't toe the line they'll put, they'll just arrest you for being, giving out false information which is detrimental to others. That's going to be the excuse for arresting you and imprisoning you.

So, there's to be no debate, you understand, from the authorities, that you can only take the authorities' opinions and that's it, authorized authorities. And they're all sworn to the same agenda to the bitter end, come what may, that nothing is going to deter them from this agenda. It's way beyond any virus, the agenda, way way beyond. It's the whole sustainability program here.

So anyway, take note of @cuttingthroughthematrix.com and the sites that I have listed. And hopefully you can throw a few pennies my way. Because it costs money to do what I do. And I don't sell stuff, I don't sell you all the usual stuff they sell you to help you, or even T-shirts, I don't sell that either. You could help me tick along, because the information is used by everybody and very few folk will send anything my way at all.

You can even tell who's using my stuff because, even my archives stuff, some of the biggies mentioned, someone mentioned last week about the little people, the talks I gave back in the late 90s about the elite being tall because they have the best foods and proteins and stuff and interbred with other people that were really of the master race, put it that way, the nobility. And how the rest of the folk were stunted, and they call them the little people. But they never mention where they get it from, it's quite amazing, but they say it verbatim from my talks because they have them, some of them.

So, it's up to really the rest, the decent folk, to send things my way, hopefully, and I can keep doing what I'm doing. Because I put up information that some folk are scared to put up. And I have nothing else to push. I have no politics to push at all, because I think they're all the same. We’re run by...

Carroll Quigley said it, and he was again the historian for a while for the Council on Foreign Relations. He said, that the parties eventually push, in the 1960s were already pushing the same agendas for elections at election time, jobs, education, healthcare, etc. And he said, when they all start parroting the same stuff, it's really one group. That's what you've got, there's no difference between them all. It's all one big gang who are completely on board serving the Masters above them. It's not the people who put them in to power. They are already preselected by organizations like the CFR, and the groups even above that, and they're elected into power and they're told what to do.

So, as I say, you can send a few pennies my way hopefully. Remember you can even mail me checks and so on. It's going to get harder as they go on with the banks and all that to get things done. But hopefully I can get things eventually cashed at the banks. In Sudbury I believe you stand outside the bank in a lineup, and they have a kind of tent thing outside of it for the one teller. You have to go through this ridiculous farce of before you get to the teller and all the process of social distancing and so on and so on. It's such a farce. It really is such a farce. Honestly.

When you see, especially in Sudbury when you see what the numbers are, even the official numbers, of people who have had it in the past, it's so pathetically low. But you crash a whole economy and businesses go bankrupt and go under? And it's happening to the whole country? This is a complete retraining exercise on the new way of living. It really is. And it's not, it really is not what they are telling you it's for.

I mentioned, I used to give talks on absurdities and how absurdities must be introduced by totalitarian regimes to make you start to obey more absurd parts of the agenda and follow absurd orders. Until you can't trust yourself and your own logic, that's part of the strategy. It's well understood from the days of Pavlov even. He was really into that kind of stuff, to get a whole new way of living and training for schoolchildren for Russia.

Bertrand Russell said it too, with this experimental school that he had in the 1920s, where he practiced on making the children believe completely absurd things. And children will believe them because they're not absurd to children at the time. He said that, if I separate the children from the rest of society, I can tell them that snow is really black, and when they grow up, they'll have arguments with other people outside because they will see the opposite and they will think THEY are right. He was using that as an example, how you could train them to believe anything.

Well, they're doing that with adults now. It's a shock program, it's Pavlovian shock now you're going through. It's a form of, it creates a form of neurosis by doing absurd things. Viruses don't care if you're 6 feet apart. Or 20 feet apart. In reality. It doesn't have a measuring tape. It doesn't have a firewall and says, oh I can’t get through this, I'm 6 feet away but I can't get any further towards this person. It's so absurd. You understand?

The testing is absurd too when it's generally wrong, it's a tossup. The fast-tracking tests that they're putting out now, is it testing for THIS particular Covid virus? Can it detect this particular anti-body you'll need for it? Can it? Or does the antibody work with a few, a whole bunch of different viruses of the coronavirus type? You see?

It's not meant to be realistic. It's meant to be for people who really don't know much about it just to accept. And most folk are so naïvely trusting. They've been trained that way since birth. They have no reason to be suspicious. They believe what they're told even though they don't understand it. But again, absurdities are important because they've got a long ways to training you into new things, new ways of living, a completely new way of living, remember.

It wasn't just starting with gender types and things like that. And then enforcing it by law. But now you have to believe what they're telling you about a whole bunch of things. D'you understand what I'm saying here? They showed you that in movies before, and even in comedies where they'll have you do absurd things, like Woody Allen. In Bananas he joins a terrorist group that eventually win and overthrow the government in a little Latin American country, and immediately their leader goes crazy and says everybody must now wear their underwear on the outside of their clothing and speak Danish. It's absurd but that's what...

The same thing happened with Donald Sutherland in a movie I mentioned a few weeks ago too, in a similar type of movie. He becomes the revolutionary leader, and he tells, he says the children now must wear their ties to the right of their neck or something, or behind them, or something like that. It's literally these absurdities that they push that you must go along with.

Well, they've got people literally standing like, you know, 2 yards away from each other everywhere they go. They've got robots going to get unleashed upon you to enforce it all, [Alan chuckles.] and drones over your head. And you're accepting that. You've been told this might last forever. Because it's going to.

Because they've... You understand every vaccine you've ever had has to be recorded electronically, and it's going to be wearable in one form or another. And then your updates are going to become yearly. And your boosters for everything, yearly. And you must have them, or you can’t continue living or walking the streets or going into a store to buy food. You'll be punished, punished, punished. This is not democracy of any kind at all, folks. Nope.

So as I say, go into cuttingthroughthematrix.com and hopefully send a few pennies my way. Because I have no ax to grind with politicians. I just don't believe in them because they're all crooked. I've never seen, I've said before, if elections worked for the people and voting worked for the public, it would be banned.

We get a few years of just barely making it from the last crisis to the next crisis and the next, and we never, we get raped and plundered and pillaged every time by the authorities. And the wealth that is grabbed off you and absconded with, then they dish out that wealth to their corporate pals. Look at the trillions they're throwing around the world right now to these big, big fat corporations. And YOU've got to live in austerity now, 'eh? N-n-n.

And this is just the start of it, they keep telling you, this is just the start of it. This is May, oh, yeah, this is going to go into next year. Maybe two years. Maybe four years down the road. Once they get it into next year, it's never going to go, it's never going to go away. It's an agenda, folks. And they can play this game forever with new tests. Oh, this new test has detected, oh my God, it's worse than we thought, yada, yada, ya. M-hm. And facts don't matter. Facts really don't matter when there's an agenda in play.

So, donate to me @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Find out how to do it, and I will continue. You can find out how to do it on the website.

As I say, have a few YouTube's to put up, or videos to things. Because a lot of folk really need the visual evidence today, you know. And actually it's endless, even the evidence that's coming out visually now. But again, it doesn't matter, facts don't matter. It doesn't matter when the agenda is in play. And nothing will matter until the public start saying no, this has gone far enough. Really.

I mentioned before about that movie V for Vendetta, where the V character has to go, he goes after every member of this gang that took over government. They had an ecclesiastical group in it, and it had a scientific group that tested on the public, you had the political group and the military group and so on, all these different members and they form a gang. It turned out that the gang had taken over there in the country by releasing some bacterial or viral weapon against the public, then blamed a terrorist organization that didn't exist, which gave them the right to then take over the government, to save the people, then bring in a controlled society, a fascist type controlled society, total surveillance and everything else, that didn't tolerate a democracy and so on and so on.

So, V went after the characters who had released this virus and then looked for a way to try to find antidotes to it after releasing it. One of them was a woman, a scientist who said, it's quite well done actually. Because she says, yeah, they used to bring us in the different prisoners, because they used prisoners for testing different things on and injecting them with diseases that generally killed them, slowly and horribly. But she says, yeah, initially I felt bad but eventually I began to despise these people. They came in. They had their heads bowed forward, they stared at the floor and never had eye contact, and they were so hopeless they were disgusting. You see? They were disgusting, they made me despise them.

Well, THAT'S what you're seeing right now. I look at some of these articles put out by those in authority, over the health systems especially, and I can see it in them. They're the very characters who will despise you as little nothings as they get their nasty wicked way with you if you allow this to go on. And I really see it. I really mean that. It's my point of view and that's how I see it. It will come to that I guarantee you if you start to become a pincushion for big Pharma and the big gangs that run the corporations, and who really have more say in who gets in the government than you do.

This article is pretty good actually. Population Matters, very important. I mentioned before, it’s the same names actually you’ll find in the Darwin group for eugenics and so on. At least a lot of them are. And the Population Matters, they have their little slogans, and for the sustainable world, you see. One of the articles goes on to say that, from their site, that really, the problems really always come back down to too many people. Quite blatant, right to the point, which is good, too many people. Meaning, too many of you, you understand. And then they go on about…

Population Matters

populationmatters.org/our-patrons

Our distinguished patrons…

SIR DAVID ATTENBOROUGH

(A: Now, why would he even get knighted, this guy, David Attenborough who's always about culling the population and culling this and culling that, 'eh? Well, Prince Philip remember is the head of a whole bunch of organizations on the same thing. He's been blatantly honest, incredibly honest about his thoughts on population reduction and culling, and that's the term that Prince Philip uses. So anyway, so David Attenborough...)

Naturalist

(A: The naturalist, as I say, they always give you people who are nice and friendly, and they give you these wildlife things to get you used to them.)

“The human population can no longer be allowed to grow in the same old uncontrolled way. If we do not take charge of our population size, then nature will do it for us, and it is the poor people of the world who will suffer most.”

(A: He really cares, you see. Remember now, no one has elected any of these people to dominate us. And they are a big branch of the Club of Rome and the World Economic Forum and all the usual characters, the CFR, yada, yada, ya. It's just one big clique, you know.)

Video: Sir David Attenborough talks about the problem of unsustainable population growth

DAME JANE GOODALL

(A: I don't know if she was good or not, but she's played around in the forest an awful lot. She says…)

“It’s our population growth that underlies just about every single one of the problems that we’ve inflicted on the planet. If there were just a few of us, then the nasty things we do wouldn’t really matter and Mother Nature would take care of it — but there are so many of us.”

Video: Jane Goodall – Overpopulation in the Developing World

(A: I always say, why don't they lead by example and, you know... you know?)

CHRIS PACKHAM

Naturalist, nature photographer, television presenter and author

“There’s no point bleating about the future of pandas, polar bears and tigers when we’re not addressing the one single factor that’s putting more pressure on the ecosystem than any other — namely the ever-increasing size of the world's population."

(A: The West, look at the articles for years and years and years, I've read them on the air even, where every year it's a decline, decline, decline. And when it starts to equal, the births and deaths, it's because it's mass migration that keeps the numbers up. So, the West, they were awfully good and dutiful to the orders of their masters and only had maybe one or two children per family for years. Lots of them didn't even have any children at all. Well, now there's not enough of you, for goodness sake, 'eh. So now you've got the world's population supposedly. Well, you can't do anything about the world's population. All you've done is, what you've done for yourself. But that doesn't please them either. So, the West's numbers are down, but that's not good enough. You've got to suffer with the world, you understand. They didn't start to sterilize the people in the West, I mean, in some of the big countries population wise, they started it all in the West long ago. That's why the fertility problem is mainly in the West, for goodness sake. Haven't you figured that one out yet? So anyway, there you go, natural environment White paper…)

Video: Chris Packham – Natural Environment White Paper

(A: Ah dear, eh. And…)

LEILANI MÜNTER

Race car driver and environmental activist

(A: Who's also got a vegan thing, where you'll see it there, she's got a picture with a jacket with vegan written on the front. They love to advertise what they're advocating, you see.)

"The ultimate intelligence of our species will be determined by whether we face our population issue and get it under control or continue to sweep it under the rug because it's an uncomfortable conversation. The future of life on Earth depends on us doing the former."

(A: Hm. And then Jonathan Porritt, I've mentioned him many years ago too.)

JONATHON PORRITT, PRESIDENT OF POPULATION MATTERS

CBE

(A: He's a CBE naturally. I think that's Companion of the British Empire. Maybe a Commander of the British Empire, surely. And you've got to be royalty too giving these folks the titles, the same for SIR Attenborough etc., hm.)

Founder Director of the Forum for the Future and former Chair of the United Kingdom Sustainable Development Commission “Population raises all these questions about religion (A: Oh, see, religion is in the way, you see...), about culture, about male dominance in the world (A: ...like, male dominance in the world, what a joke that is, in the West anyway.) — and (people) get very uncomfortable about that.”

Video: Jonathon Porritt – Why is No One Talking About Overpopulation

(A: Because you see what they say is, their aim, they've been aiming for years for the UN, and other charitable donations, and used old computers and that which they fix up and throw over there by the millions, is to train women so that they can break the cycle of getting married and having children. That's what they've been trying for years and it's not really working that great, no matter how much money they throw at it. So they use this pretense of putting women in charge for the Third World countries. And they rile everybody up and get everybody, even the genders against each other too. Every kind of war they can imagine, they foment for sure. But Jonathan Porritt, he's a sly character indeed and I wouldn't trust him an inch. Or any of them in fact.)

SIR PARTHA DASGUPTA

Frank Ramsey Professor of Economics, University of Cambridge

(A: And Cambridge for... [Alan chuckles.] I forget the economics department there, but they've turned out amazing communists in the past too.)

Video: Partha Dasgupta – Nature’s Role in Sustaining Economic Development

PAUL EHRLICH

(A: Oh, Paul Ehrlich, ah, he’s still going yet, hey, I think.)

Bing Professor of Population Studies, Stanford University

(A: This is the guy who had the Population time Bomb and all these kind of things. He was on about a coming Ice Age and all that too at one time, and then of course the global warming thing. His wife of course was a founding member and on the board I think of the Club of Rome. Small world as I say, you know.)

Video: Paul Ehrlich – Seven Billion of Us

PROF JOHN GUILLEBAUD

“Should we now explain to UK couples who plan a family that stopping at two children, or at least having one less than first intended, is the simplest and biggest contribution anyone can make to leaving a habitable planet for our grandchildren?”

(A: There ya go. He has a video called…)

Video: John Guillebaud – Sex and the Planet

(A: There you are. It goes on and on.)

ADRIAN HAYES

Record-breaking polar explorer and adventurer, speaker, coach, campaigner and author

(A: They'll get well-funded by the same characters that are so well known, if they become advocates and push, because they're now celebrities, you know.)

MALCOLM POTTS

Professor in Maternal and Child Health and the first and former holder of the Fred H. Bixby Endowed Chair in Population and Family Planning of the University of California

Video: Malcolm Potts – Avoiding the Next Great Humanitarian Crisis

SARA PARKIN

OBE (A: That's Order of the British Empire.)

Principal Associate of The Sustainability Literacy Project. She is also Co-founder of Forum for the Future, Chair of the Richard Sandbrook Trust, Trustee of the St Andrews Prize and board member of the Carnegie Trust for the Universities of Scotland.

SUSAN HAMPSHIRE

OBE

(A: Here's an actress that didn't get too far in her career, I think. And...)

JAMES LOVELOCK

Originator of the Gaia Theory

(A: He's on about population growth again. He says, climate change, two sides of the same coin…)

Sir Crispin Tickell

(A: You wouldn't want to tickle this guy.)

Director, Policy Foresight Programme, the James Martin Institute, and former UK permanent representative on the United Nations Security Council “Population was a big issue about 30 years ago, now it’s not, but I suspect it will come back because it has to be discussed as one of the big environmental problems of our time.

(A: So you see, population is an environmental problem. And he's a big wig too. I've mentioned him before in previous years.)

But anyway, you should look into their website. It's interesting. They're quite blatant and in-your-face with their platform basically, what they stand for, and what they think of YOU. Not themselves but YOU, you know. It never changes. I've got books here from the 1920s when right after World War I in Britain, some ministers and civic minded people wrote books on the incredible, the incredibility of being told all the time to stop having children, for the lower middle classes and the working classes, and that the war had not killed enough people off. And they wrote about that back then.

And who was pushing them to have less children? All the Winston Churchill types and all the nobility. And they had big families, the nobility. Because they could hire lots of nannies to take care of children. The children often didn't even know there mum very well until they left high school. And I'm quite serious about that. But they made sure, they were so frightened that there were too many of the working-class people. Even though they needed them by that time for the industrial factories, etc.

You see, you can't please them at the top. And they're always afraid of you. They're always afraid of you, in case you become so numerous you become a threat to them, just by pure numbers alone, you see. And they want to start culling you down. But yeah, that's what the ministers and priests in these books I've got were talking about. And they named the families, they were all aristocrats and nobility, and had big families themselves, and they're telling you not to have many children, if any at all.

Then the folk comply, right, they comply. Then eventually they say, you know, there's not enough of you, we've got to start bringing in migrants. Then certain groups cheer on that because they want to destroy the culture of the people, you know. It's just incredible how it's planned that way. It's not all accidental or happenstance. It's completely, completely intricately planned, every step of it, including the destruction of the culture and everything else too.

It's quite something when you get into it, to find out how the world really is run. And it’s still run the same way, and in greater detail now with the types of communication and observation and surveillance that they have today. It's astonishing really. It really is. Honestly is something else. It's a long, long, long road to fulfill their agenda. A long way.

Another article here too is...

Sweden and the Imperial College Model

hitchensblog.mailonsunday.co.uk / 12 May 2020

(A: Imperial College of course is Neil Ferguson, who had his big wrong numbers as always, from every pre-existing thing he's done too, his big wrong numbers.)

I am not able to reproduce charts here. But I here reproduce some material which shows how and in what ways the Imperial College model of projected deaths was applied to and in Sweden. I am grateful to RS for the information:

He says it comes from a study (A: And it gives you the study here.)

https://www.medrxiv.org/content/10.1101/2020.04.11.20062133v1.full.pdf conducted in April by Uppsala University, Stockholm. 'On page 8, they state where they derived their model from:

"We employed an individual agent-based model based on work by Ferguson et al."

The citation they use is to this, which is the Imperial College model, replete with graphs that look like they were put together by a rather dull student:

(A: That's what they say, because it's so pathetic, Neil Ferguson's work is. And it gives you the link to that too, right. So, this is the official modeling links and so on.)

https://www.imperial.ac.uk/media/imperial-college/medicine/sph/ide/gida-fellowships/Imperial-College-COVID19-NPI-modelling-16-03-2020.pdf

'Their report shows is a number of predictions using the IC-based model (A: …the computer-based model.), according to various levels of interventions. By 12th May, it appears to predict the following number of deaths: (A…right, this is what the model projected for Sweden…)

Approximately 65,000 deaths for a “do nothing” policy

(A: If they did nothing 65.000 would die.)

Approximately 45,000 deaths for the policy that Sweden actually imposed

(A: Right.)

Approximately 20,000 deaths for a "lockdown" policy similar to that imposed in the UK

(A: So they obviously wanted a complete lockdown to bring the numbers down to 20,000, and Sweden didn’t do it. It didn’t do it and yet in number two it said if Sweden went the way that they did, that 45,000 people would die, you know.)

As you will be aware, Sweden's current recorded deaths are around 3,300.

(A: Again, that's from January through to the present. Which is low even for regular folk dying off. So, the way that Sweden did it, right, 3300 versus what Ferguson's model said would happen if they did the same policy that they actually did, they said 45,000 would die. Isn't that astonishing? It's like everything else that Ferguson did. Can you believe it? The guy’s never been right in his whole life on anything. He's a walking disaster. So it says…)

So Sweden's actual recorded deaths are about:

About 1/14th of what it predicted their actual policy would bring

And even 1/6th of a hypothetical "lockdown" scenario (even though it isn't under those conditions)

One interesting aspect of this is that it gives the lie to all those who keep saying "what abaht population density" etc when comparing Sweden to the UK. We can now respond by saying that the model upon which the UK's policy is based, when applied to Sweden and therefore taking into account population density, can be shown to have overestimated Sweden's deaths by huge margins.

(A: And it gives you the links to the reports and you can read it up for yourself.)

Quite amazing, eh? Underneath it too is a transcript of the Lord Sumption interview. I mentioned that before as well. That's interesting as well because he's spoken out about it big time. He knows it's a con as well, it's for a big, big agenda.

And the Queen, 'eh, the Queen... As I say, look at all these folk who have been knighted and elevated and given all these awards by the British Empire, you know, The Order, etc. and made Sirs, some of them, or Dames is another one for the women. The Queen’s coronavirus speech that she gave… I think they went to, I don't know if they played the violin with this one or not, but anyway it's the Telegraph the newspaper and it says, it gives you the speech, right. She goes on to say...

The Queen's coronavirus speech transcript: 'We will succeed and better days will come'

telegraph.co.uk / 5 April 2020

I am speaking to you at what I know is an increasingly challenging time. A time of disruption in the life of our country: a disruption (A: …and blah, blah, blah and then she…)

I want to thank everyone on the NHS front line, as well as care workers and those carrying out essential roles (A: …and so on and so on.)

(A: But she eventually goes into the World War II, you know, and how it’s like the World War II and families feel pain and so on and they have to, some people have died, loved ones. And…)

Together we are tackling this disease…

And during the war they had to send the children away from London and the big cities because of the bombing they had in the cities and so on. And... I mean, she's an old woman eh? But remember who she's married to as well. Prince Philip, who was a complete advocate of eugenics and depopulation. One of the speeches he made, Prince Philip in Sweden to one of his groups, I've got it here, when he talked about, he says, you know, he says, we often have an excess in population of deer on our lands. And they've got massive lands across the planet. And he says, well you know, sometimes there's so many of them they start killing off some of the wildflowers, and they breed, and more come along, and they breed, until you have these huge, huge herds, these huge herds of deer that you can't control. And he says, and you have to have a cull with them, you know, that's what you have to do.

So, he's really referring to people. [Alan chuckles.] Just like that, folks. Now, when they start VOICING these things like culling people, and then you have all the organizations that he's the head of, and they are all parts of them, like Population Matters and so on, they all know each other, all these groups, and they are all sanctioned, you'd better believe they're not just TALKING about things. They find ways to DO it and implement it. I HOPE you understand that.

They will not ask for volunteers for sterilization. It just happens in your society, oh, my goodness, so-and-so can't have children anymore, I wonder how that happened, and yada, ya. Are you getting the picture? Hm? Wake up from this naïveté, 'eh. It's time you all woke up. Honestly. It truly is. It truly, truly is. So, I'll leave the Queen here and go on to the next article. Now Rand Paul says…

Rand Paul: Dr. Fauci Not ‘End All’ Authority on Coronavirus Response - breitbart.com / 12 May 2020

He's telling the truth. You've all been trained to believe, and in a short space of time, that this guy's indeed the world... NO, he's not a world expert on things. He's giving you his opinion supposedly, and he's got such vested interests in things that it's rather dangerous to even have such opinions rather openly. He's not the be-all and end-all to coronavirus response. Anymore than Neil Ferguson is the right guy to do computer modeling on projections. Unless you want some science fiction scenarios, maybe he should work for the movie industry, you know, for horrors and things.

But yeah, there's other people coming out with it too. Again I'll put up…

Recovered COVID-19 patients in Orthodox Jewish community flock to donate plasma - orlandosentinel.com / 12 May 2020

...and to Pennsylvania. Because it works, you see. It works. China was doing that too. And I'm sure that's what they must've used to pull that elderly lady through in Britain, 103 years old for goodness sake, y'know.

Another one too is, let me see now, a little quip by old David Rockefeller, an old one. He said…

We are on the verge of a global transformation, all we need is the right major crisis and the nation will accept the New World Order. - David Rockefeller.

Of course, I've mentioned before the 21st century was the century of change. They talked about it in academia for the last 50 years of the 20th century. They knew they could bring the next phase of the system in then. And you're in it. This is the transformation age, the time of change, the agenda for the 21st century. The whole century has to be accomplished in 100 years. That's why you hear transformation everywhere you look at, you know, everything is transforming, [Alan chuckles.] even people. But a new world order, David Rockefeller. M-hm.

And then Dr. Ron Paul…

Ron Paul: People ‘Should Be Leery About’ a Coronavirus Vaccine - ronpaulinstitute.org / 14 April 2020

He goes on to previous vaccines that were rushed through and the damage that it did to populations, thousands of people and so on. Then he gives an example in this one, the example of the swine flu, the non pandemic that broke out back in 1976 I think it was. They rushed through a vaccine and the vaccine wasn't properly made. Nothing to do with the virus that was out there, so it saved nobody's life from it. It caused a lot of harm. More people ended up dying from the inoculation than died from the flu that year. That's from representative and Dr. Ron Paul.

We shouldn't need to be told to be cautious. You see, this terror, this driving stampeding the herd is meant so that you can't think for yourselves and say wait a minute here, maybe it's not such a great idea. They really want to ram it all through, ram us all through this. This is astonishing.

Another article too is…

This Scientist Nearly Went to Jail for Making Up Data

bioethics.com / 4 April 2016

(Washington Post) – Scientific integrity took another hit Thursday when an Australian researcher received a two-year suspended sentence after pleading guilty to 17 fraud-related charges. The main counts against neuroscientist Bruce Murdoch were for an article heralding a breakthrough in the treatment of Parkinson’s disease. And the judge’s conclusions were damning.

That’s quite common. And you have no idea how common this kind of thing is amongst the scientists who can get big, big grants if they come out with amazing theories and findings, you know. There's nothing more of a better case than what we're seeing today. Another one too…

South Australia ELIMINATES coronavirus with no known cases in the state as Western Australia declares all hospitals free of COVID-19 - dailymail.co.uk / 15 May 2020

That's quite the boast, 'eh. We'll see how it goes from there. Another article…

Stanford researchers uncover patterns in how scientists lie about their data news.stanford.edu / 16 Nov 2015

When scientists falsify data, they try to cover it up by writing differently in their published works. A pair of Stanford researchers have devised a way of identifying these written clues.

That's 2015. One of many articles about how they fudge their articles to get some fame and money and so on. Now I'm sure I could go on for hours but I'm not going to. [Alan chuckles.]

Because what I'm putting out is the relevant information that those who can handle the truth will get and will wade through. And it shouldn't terrify them. It shouldn't terrify you at all. It simply fortifies you on what you must do to stand up against tyranny. And make it quite plain that you still have rights, and nothing can take those rights away from you.

If they can take away your rights, then you're not living in the system that lawfully you're supposed to be in. You have to change the law and everything else and the constitutions, etc. or any charters, they have to change them completely. And if they haven't announced they've changed them completely, then what they're doing is illegal. Of course, it's illegal.

Remember too, the big difference with the West as well as opposed to totalitarian tyrannical societies is that we are governed by the CONSENT of the governed. Hm? And the police are the same. The police can only enforce that which is, which is consented to by the governed ALLOWS. If they go overboard with it, they won't be allowed by the consenters anymore, they won't have the consent, and then they become an enemy of the people. Obviously. That's happened in different societies down through, even through the 20th century we saw it happening.

So, you've got to remember that power doesn't give up easily. Especially tyrannical power. When you've had people SWORN to an agenda, and that's what you're seeing, people have been literally sworn to an agenda. All those connected to the WHO definitely sworn to it, absolutely, and not just for what they're telling you, the Covid. It's for a completely new way of living, remember. A permanent new way of living. Never going back to the old. Even Fauci said that. Even though he has no authority to talk about politics or social systems or anything changing, here he is advocating the same stuff as the World Health Organization and telling you that life will never be the same again.

You're in a system where supposedly, if the money was all real, you're going to be bankrupt a thousand times over. It was bad enough after 2007/2008 when the currency was devalued for a so-called reset, that's how they like to phrase it when they plunder the public. Now you're going into the next phase. It's going to be a lot worse actually. You'll have more elite members then running you, because the people with their hands out for huge bailouts, the big corporate giants, money goes into individual pockets and it literally creates instant billionaires, some of it, absolutely. So corrupt, the whole system is so corrupt.

They're telling you it's never going to go back to what it was. But you've got to stand firm and you can't let, as I say, once you start taking a step backwards, then it's followed by the next step, until you're walking backwards permanently, until you hit a wall and there's nowhere else to run.

You've got to nip it in the bud and tell people to leave off. Until they literally show you the laws, which they ram through, which won't be lawful really. But they can't force you to do something without giving you something to look at and read or whatever, then whatever they're forcing upon you cannot be lawful.

Yeah, real people, REAL people have really died with this particular virus that's going around. It's not that unusual from other viruses, really, and it's definitely putting people away. But I think it's the treatment too that's been advocated by the World Health Organization that's been part of the death of so many. Because they've literally not got along the same regime.

You always give them the old prednisolone treatment when that happens, coupled with antibiotics to stave off antibiotic secondary infections setting in. That kills off the cytokine storm very quickly. Then you can give them other treatments along with it as they recover. It's well understood, well known. But when you see them dumped into hospital wards, just stick them on ventilators and leave them, as that nurse said last week, that's a death sentence. That's what you're seeing across the planet right now. But if they're important enough they'll pull you through by giving you the right kinds of treatments, like that 103-year-old lady in England.

So, don't give up hope, folks. The terror is meant to make you lose your sensibilities until you simply obey. That's what rulers always use, terror, to get obedience from the public. A whole new way of living is to come out of everything. The whole sustainability agenda they've been pushing for years. They said at the World Economic Forum, the people weren't listening to them, and we were still consuming, you know, and being happy. They didn't like that at all. So, they had to bring in a new system in altogether through, again, this is it, terror and fear. And they're quite open about it.

The Club of Rome, the World Economic Forum, they are gleeful about it, all the sustainability groups, are just having orgasms over, we're going to ram the whole agenda through. And quite openly in their official outlets for their own media. It's not conspiracy information at all. It's factual, they're telling you, a green economy, you know, and a different way of eating and different things to eat. Meaning, no meat and vegan and so on. They also said that remember at the last meeting they had last year for sustainability and the climate and so on. So here you go with the whole thing.

So, don't buckle under and be terrified of it all. This thing is beatable, there's no doubt about it. It's beatable. Like most things that have happened before it will come and go in little spikes over one or two, maybe three years max. It tends to just fade off after the first big spike, which we've already passed already in the West. Unless something else is released, put it that way, or it just happens to suddenly evolve [Alan chuckles.] by itself. And we'll say that tongue-in-cheek, 'eh.

So, take care of yourselves. Remember as I say, go into my website @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Throw some cash my way, hopefully, and I'll keep kicking along here and putting information out. And telling you, just don't give up.

There's more people… If you understand the truths are out there and what's really happening, then remember, there's more people like yourself that are waking up all the time and beginning to understand what's happening. Like minds tend to attract, and you grow, you definitely grow in numbers until...

And they're taking real-time statistics and surveys constantly on how the public are responding in different segments, yes, no, and all the rest of it. They'll know when to start backing off. Or becoming more totalitarian to try to ram their agenda through.

So, don't be frightened no matter what happens. And remember, you're not alone.

You're not alone out there.

You're not.

So, for myself Alan Watt from Ontario Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Topics of show covered in following links:

Former pharma exec tapped to head White House's 'Operation Warp Speed' coronavirus effort

usatodaynetwork.com / 13 May 2020

TRUMP SAYS MILITARY WILL BE MOBILIZED TO DELIVER CORONAVIRUS VACCINE BY END OF YEAR

newsweek.com / 14 May 2020

, Deaths in Italy

lewrockwell.com / 13 May 2020

This Guardian Piece Touting Bill Gates’ Education Investment Brought to You by Bill Gates

fair.org / 4 Sept 2016

Senate votes down anti-surveillance amendment, as both parties back warrantless spying on Americans' browser history

rt.com / 13 May 2020

Karens

pjmedia.com / 14 May 2020

Candidates

kunc.org / 11 May 2020

army of social workers, librarians and investigators to track Covid-19

theguardian.com / 1 May 2020

New powers for ASIO to question 14-year-olds and go after foreign spies

smh.com.au / 13 May 2020

Ensure Humans Are Social Distancing

zerohedge.com / 11 May 2020

DOD Awards $138 Million Contract, Enabling Prefilled Syringes for Future COVID-19 Vaccine

defense.gov / 12 May 2020

Emerging From The Emergency With People, Planet, Prosperity At The Heart Of The Covid-19 Recovery

clubofrome.org / 9 April 2020

Mandatory Vaccines? (Video)

youtube.com / 4 May 2020 (alternate link provided)

Mandatory Vaccines?

thenewamerican.com / 5 May 2020

Alberta health minister allows police to access confidential patient medical records

lifesitenews.com / 12 May 2020

More users needed: Lessons from Alberta's coronavirus contact tracing app

cbc.ca / 6 May 2020

Early Antibody Testing Indicates Far More COVID-19 Cases, Lower Mortality Rate

nbclosangeles.com / 20 April 2020

Cardinal Müller: It’s no ‘conspiracy theory’ – pandemic is being used to implement ‘questionable measures’

lifesitenews.com / 14 May 2020

Techno-Tyranny: How the US National Security State Is Using Coronavirus to Fulfill an Orwellian Vision

unz.com / 20 April 2020

Abbott’s Coronavirus Test Falls Short of Rival Device

wsj.com / 13 May 2020

Fiercely independent' 102-year-old who did secret work with Winston Churchill in World War Two defeats coronavirus after she had been given two hours to live and family had said their last goodbyes

dailymail.co.uk / 15 May 2020

Canadian archbishop: Selling euthanasia as ‘solution’ to suffering is ‘misguided’

lifesitenews.com / 15 May 2020

The American Economy is Imploding — and America is, Too

eand.co / 9 May 2020

Government by billionaires? Cuomo names former Google CEO to join Gates and Bloomberg in drafting post-pandemic ‘reforms’

rt.com / 6 May 2020

House Democrats roll out $3 trillion coronavirus relief bill, eyeing a vote by the end of this week marketwatch.com / 12 May 2020

, Disinfection, Immunity Passes

forbes.com / 10 May 2020

A mass sterilization exercise’: Kenyan doctors find anti-fertility agent in UN tetanus vaccine

lifesitenews.com / 6 Nov 2014

Distributed Denial of HCQ to COVID-19 Victims

wattsupwiththat.com / 11 May 2020

So why did it take so long? Britain finally approves 100% accurate coronavirus antibody test... but experts slam PHE for taking too long as UK languishes TEN DAYS behind EU and US

dailymail.co.uk / 13 May 2020

5 US sailors test COVID-19 positive again

menafn.com / 16 May 2020

How France helped build Chinese biolab linked to COVID-19 – and then got burned by the communists

lifesitenews.com / 30 April 2020

Population Matters

populationmatters.org/our-patrons

Sweden and the Imperial College Model

hitchensblog.mailonsunday.co.uk / 12 May 2020 and better days will come'

telegraph.co.uk / 5 April 2020

Rand Paul: Dr. Fauci Not ‘End All’ Authority on Coronavirus Response

breitbart.com / 12 May 2020

Recovered COVID-19 patients in Orthodox Jewish community flock to donate plasma

orlandosentinel.com / 12 May 2020

Ron Paul: People ‘Should Be Leery About’ a Coronavirus Vaccine

ronpaulinstitute.org / 14 April 2020

This Scientist Nearly Went to Jail for Making Up Data

bioethics.com / 4 April 2016

Stanford researchers uncover patterns in how scientists lie about their data

news.stanford.edu / 16 Nov 2015

South Australia ELIMINATES coronavirus with no known cases in the state as Western Australia declares all hospitals free of COVID-19

dailymail.co.uk / 15 May 2020

Expert Testimony Before Senate Contradicts Media’s COVID-19 Narrative

thenewamerican.com / 8 May 2020

Rush Introduces Bipartisan Legislation to Fund $100 Billion Coronavirus Testing and Contact Tracing Effort

rush.house.gov / 1 May 2020 (alternate link provided)

California releases detailed list of outdoor activities allowed during shutdown

sfgate.com / 30 April 2020

Alberta Public Health Emergency Act

May 24, 2020 "Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt (Blurb, i.e. Educational Talk): " Pilgrim's Process

Hi folks I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through the Matrix on May 24, 2020. Once again, as always, I hope that you're all doing as best you can. What else can I say, as best as you can because that's all any of us can actually do under the circumstances living in this big agenda driven society that we have very little say in, especially when we keep quiet. [Alan chuckles.] That's the problem with society, that too many folk today just keep quiet and go along with it. It's not unexpected, that's the way it's pretty well has always been.

I've mentioned before that Aldous Huxley went through it in a similar form because he talked about suggestible people and the percentages of primary suggestible people who would go under and do what they're told immediately, under the spell of it, and using techniques like Bernays laid out way back in the 1920s and 30s and 40s. Huxley was giving his talk to Mike Wallace in the 1960s, I think. He mentioned that a certain percentage of the public would go under immediately to suggestion put out by authority. They would buy whatever they were told buy or behave the way they're supposed to behave, even read what they were supposed to read, magazine wise and so on by advertisers, they fell for it very quickly.

He said that but then there's a percentage that simply don't go under the spell right away. But you can get another 10% under quickly if you give them more and more reinforcement of the suggestion. Oh, come on now, just try it a bit longer and you'll find that it will work. Just coach them a little bit and sure enough they will eventually succumb to it as well. That leaves a small percentage that can't be hypnotized and brought under through direct suggestion by authority figures.

That really goes by, in today's society, the behaviorists, they're taught this kind of stuff, how to manipulate us all. In fact a lot of your tax money goes into funding the big, big paychecks and studies from the neuroscientists and behaviorists and psychologists that make their money like parasites off of us so that they can basically manage the host that they feed off, which is all of us of course. And we put up with it. We put up with it and that's a sad thing to me, very sad folk aren't ticked... At least ticked off a little bit about how they are managed and manipulated.

As I say, we pay for all these studies through our tax money so that we can be used basically. We're looked upon as cattle. And unfortunately, and I've met lots of the people in the sciences of behaviorism and psychology that work in these kind of fields. Like, the behavioral insights teams that work across the Internet managing your thoughts and what you should be looking at and, don't look at this, etc., and even shaming you and all that stuff. All paid by our tax money, big fat salaries. I see them in the same category as the KGB or the Stasi would be. I really do. I lump them all together, these people who are manipulating our minds and our thoughts and using all dirty tricks to try to make us do what they want us to do. They're disgusting people. They really are, in that society. So, we shouldn't really put up with it. But again, most folk do. And they know that too, the exact percentages that go along right away.

We're living through as I say an agenda. It's an agenda driven society. I used to give talks on that, how even in the 1800s the big corporations of the day, even before that too, had their hundred-year business plans, sometimes longer than 100 years. They knew exactly where they wanted to be at least 100 years in the future. Like going back even further to the old East India Trading Company and how they set out there settlements of countries they would take over in fact and use the military in Britain to do the fighting for them. So private corporations always have been in bed with the Bank of England.

That's what created the British Empire. The bank of course would lend to government to pay for the armies and so on, then the government would quite happily give them the right to tax the public to pay back the loans. That's never changed to this day. That was the prototype that eventually America too would copy with its Federal Reserve system. Which again is private banks, it's a collection of private banks. It's not really national at all. In fact, foreigners generally run it, [Alan chuckles.] that are not American citizens. It's quite amazing to... That's another story altogether.

But anyway, getting back into what I'm saying. Most folk in today's society, as you know, and I keep mentioning it since this whole thing started, I go back to the idea of terror. We are in a war of terror. This is a reign of terror upon the public. They always use this in a revolutionary time. They did for the French Revolution. The Bolshevik revolution also. They always have a reign of terror to utterly petrify the public into compliance. That's what you're living through now if you haven't figured it out.

They also used it with 9/11, the Pearl Harbor event that they just miraculously got for the PNAC group. So, it's the same thing. That lost a whole bunch of rights for the American people and the people of the world too that copied and followed suit. This is the Part 2 of that Part 1 again. Part 1, the towers. Part 2 now the Corona. And here we go again.

But it's based on terror. It's like a bad horror movie. You'll still watch and watch it because you're tuned, you're tuned to trying to survive. The primitive part of the brain in the limbic system, that's what your fight or flight system is based upon. Even though it's a bad movie you will identify with the characters that are getting chased or hunted or about to be eaten or whatever it happens to be. And if you look away, you see, you miss a clue, you might miss a clue that's going to be vital for your survival, or your failure, so you keep watching it.

That's what they're using daily and have been from the beginning with the complete on board of all media with this whole war of terror, repeating the same horrific things to the public. You're all going to die unless you take a vaccine, etc., etc., etc. The people who keep tuning in every day to watch, to get their dose of terror, in case again they miss that one bit of information that might one day come across, that's going to be vital for survival, they keep tuning in for the next bit of fear, you see.

If folk haven't figured out by now, this is all incredibly well coordinated from the very, very top to bring in a new system. We can quote the facts until the cows come home, if there's any meat left at all or milk to drink by the time this is finished. But the thing is, facts don't matter. If you haven't noticed, y’know. Unless you really drive them home with something else behind it, you must put demands behind the facts, like, get off our backs and stop this nonsense and let's get on with living, you see.

Because if you don’t, you're into the whole agenda. The whole agenda was designed, a brand-new type of agenda of the total lockdown of the public, including the healthy people, never been done in history. It goes against all common sense, even for herd immunities. Folk who are testing positive for antibodies to this, meaning they've had it, or they could've had... By the way it's so vague now, they're getting so confused with their own studies, and counter studies etc., you might prove positive if you even had flu shots in the past. And these are official, I'll bring out tonight official stuff about this too. So, they can't say it's lies since they put it out themselves in previous years.

But if you prove positive, they've got two choices now you see. They want to lock you down again, you, for testing positive, and then find everybody you've been in contact with. Being positive doesn't mean you still got the darn thing. It's residues to the RNA actually, it's residues, it's fragments of dead viruses and so on that are still around. They're everywhere. That's what these tests for the swabs are designed to pick up on, you see. It doesn't mean you still got the thing. If you get a factual, proper... There isn't even a proper laboratory test really for the antibody, because it doesn't mean it's the antibody for that exact coronavirus. You understand? They're trying to make it out they're so precise. They're NOT precise at all.

I spent so many years, so many years going over false information that was touted at one time as the holy truth from the very top, only to be discounted years later. By, oh, subsequent research has found that blah, blah, blah... and they go the opposite direction. And they never go back and say, oh, we're very sorry for giving you all that false data before. That never happens. They never apologize. Because if they start to apologize, the public might start thinking, well, maybe they're wrong quite a lot of the time. So, they can't go there. They just go on to the new normal and repeat it as though they had never had a previous new normal, you see. That's really what it's all about. That's how it's done.

I can remember one of the biggest companies in Canada that took the blood supplies for tests, and sputum and all the different tests they did for all the different stools and everything else. A massive company. Again, these companies get BIG contracts put out by the federal and provincial governments, and I think they're all through the States too. They found out that there were so many scams going on that literally about half of the results were fake, false positives, no matter what they were testing, and false negatives. Meaning, they were just making the darn stuff up as they went along. A lot of them were definitely doing that.

I have no doubt too that the technicians, lab technicians had pressure put on them by their bosses, because it's all bonus time, isn't it? The more you ram through, the better it is for them all, you see. Until credibility goes out the window and honesty with it. And that's pretty common by the way. We live in a very corrupt society. Very corrupt society. So anyway, they lost the contract and some other big company got it. I wouldn't be surprised if the same thing is happening now, you see.

But, having a false, or a positive I should say, to an antibody really, an antibody that would fight it you see, is very iffy at the best. What they say, it might not be the right antibody. Well, what d'you mean? Make your mind up here. Then they'll say, well we can't say that it will last very long, this antibody. Well, nobody can, until you study it for years down the road. I've seen virologists already, or heard virologists, top ones too, some of them saying that if you've got antibodies to this thing, you've got it for life. Other ones will say, are parroting the same phrase, well you might only have it for 2 to 3 years before it dies off, you see. That's how it goes.

That's something of course the vaccine companies, massive industry of course, incredibly [Alan chuckles.] lucrative industry, especially right now as they're throwing trillions around the world here and the hands are all out for studies into all oddball kinds of things. But when you think about it, the whole idea of repeat vaccination is because your antibodies might not last long enough until the next outbreak of whatever it happens to be. But three or four years down the road this particular one won't be around; it won't be something... It will have mutated into some other strain, you see, or many strains.

Then they go back to the old idea too, well, you might have crossover from, if a vaccination doesn't work, it might be similar enough to give you crossover. This is the, [Alan chuckles.] this is the trick that they're trying to use for taking vaccines for flu for instance. If that was the case, you had a crossover, well, the original, whatever the real original flu ever was many, many, many years ago, right, then you would still be, you would have a crossover to that one too. So that doesn't work at all. So, their whole idea of crossover is out the window. You generally have to have that exact right one or not at all.

Don't forget we have again the flu types every year and most of the time you never know you had it either, it passes through your system. Just like polio passed through the system of most folk in the 1940s and 50s, and folk never knew they had it, unless they had some problem where it would settle into a particular area, and definitely injured areas in the body, it would settle in and cause the problem sometimes. For the young children, they have never found out why some of them, it stayed with some and not the others of course. That's very debatable too, that that whole thing. There's a whole lot more information they have today.

As I say, this is a massive… Haven't you noticed, and this is what really struck me initially, was the all-for-one-and-one-for-all parroting of every supposedly public figure in the health industry that was put on television. I saw it only through the computer, I didn't see TV ones, but it's really taken from TV, all these little clips and so on. No matter what country it was, the ones who were put in charge of health all, you didn't need them, you didn't need them at all. It didn't matter what they looked like, they all had Fauci's voice, they all said exactly what he said. Exactly what he said. The same as the WHO of course, this big clique at the top that had preplanned this, obviously, their response to this. Because right off the bat they never went anywhere near, NEVER went anywhere near the fact that your body would probably have or develop an antibody to it. Didn't even... No. From the very beginning it was, and it’s still the same by the way, you've got to get a vaccination for this... And then, only then will we let you out of your houses, eh, and only then will we let you go to work. No, this was right from the beginning, folks.

At the very top you've got a clique here who are so compromised in vaccine industry, and massive handouts and multimillions, even billion-dollar industries when it looks to go worldwide, they're all in it together, aren't they? They really are! I said too eventually if they don't back off from their threats of what they're going to do the public, I said they'll lose all credibility. And when that starts to happen, when they start losing credibility, tyrants, and this is the key to it, tyrants then get really heavy-handed and nasty and lethal towards the public. That's what you learn through history. Where especially when they're in the wrong, they won't back off, and they’ll pledge to go ahead with something, because nothing is going to break this agenda, they will get vicious towards the public. That's a dangerous, dangerous thing.

Because they can't ever back off. Because if it comes the information is coming out now, it's got enough to put lots of them on trial already for what's happened. Now, mistakes can be forgiven. But when they are complicit and heavily involved, with huge shares and so on and some of them even own vaccine companies, hey wait a minute here, eh? Wait a minute here, this is looking rather suspicious. And the more suspicious it looks, the more angry the perpetrators become and the more vicious they become to those who are exposing them. That's the dangerous time.

That goes for the complicity too of those in governments. They know it too. They know it. That's why they’ll stick together until, like, one-for-all-and-all-for-one until the end, eh. Because this is... It isn't just money here. It's a completely NEW way of living throughout the future. The high-tech industry, the Rockefeller plans for the future basically, you know, that they came out with, projections for the future, the scientific system of tracking and tracing everybody and a whole new way of living and yada, yada. And the real kibosh on anything to do with any traces still left over of personal freedom and privacy, to completely eliminate that for the average people. That's what they want to be unfurled of course, the whole futurist phenomenon. Years ago.

It's boring to me because I did talks on the futurists societies and how they work with the behaviorists on behalf of the master’s that run the world. And yes, you do have masters that run the world. And it isn't just the deep state, you know. That's one term for it. The deep state really is more of the working, the worker bees that make it all happen, the real technocrats. Fauci technically is a technocrat. I'm sure he's involved with high decision-making, but he's not the boss at the very top. He's allowed to take his big fill and take his money back from all the different things he's got his hands into. But he's not the boss.

I'm sure too, all these characters that you're seeing have got high intelligence clearance, you know, for the agencies, probably the CIA, every one of them. Because it isn't just the media that they completely took over long ago, the CIA. It's every main industry in technology, including, especially media. [Alan chuckles.] Today, with those in charge of vaccine companies and all the rest of it. Why do you think they're completely, they've been made, you can't sue them? Why do you think that is... if they were just private corporations? Hm?

And so far, the presidents and prime ministers come out with declarations that they can't be sued. But they want to stick their stuff into you, hm? Directly into your body? Which is an invasion, anything that goes through the skin is still called an invasive surgery, believe it or not. It's penetration into your bloodstream, even if it goes into the tissue first, the interstitial tissue, it makes no difference, it goes into the bloodstream, and that's the whole point of it. And the people who, if it's going to get mandated, you'd better believe everyone who is mandating this better have their name on the forms so you can sue them if anything goes wrong. And it often does go wrong.

But as I say, isn't it astonishing, that from the very beginning... And that didn't raise the hackles on everybody's, you know, the back of their heads. When no matter who was telling the public what to do, you've got to get a vaccination, it's the ONLY way you're going to get out of this, it's the ONLY way you're going to get out and get any freedom and get to work and go outside. And they made you know it too, with all the different reports of folk getting locked up or arrested for going into their gardens and planting vegetables in the spring. You can't do this, you can't do that, yada yada, ya. Meanwhile, there's all these reports, and in every country, of the politicians often in charge of the health parts, going off and doing their own thing and traveling, where they want to go and meeting with other people.

Tonight, too I'll put up some YouTubes, and even Bitchute too, but one of them is a guy in England, who's been dogged about the Bristol Hospital there, he put out some videos before, how empty it was, nothing was happening. But what’s happening now there, and he's gone and taken his camera with him, is these staged events for the applaud of the nursing staff and the medical teams and first-line responders. In hospitals where literally nothing's happening eh? In areas where folk are dying, because they can’t get in the hospitals for treatments for other things.

But you've got this big publicity like wartime propaganda nonsense, and he goes there, and you see them all lining up. They come out of the car parks, they all meet in the car parks from different places and come into the hospital, and they're all dressed in uniforms and so on. The police are there. The fire brigade gets there too, with its hoist and all that. And there's all the teams of folk in uniform, you know. Uni-form, one form, right. Applauding themselves. And this guy says, he was across the street filming it, he goes up to the cops and says, how come all of you lot don't do social distancing, but you arrest us for doing it? Because they're all huddled together having a great ole time, slapping each other on the back sort of thing.

Complete farce of any logic. It's not meant to be logical. It really isn't. It really isn't, you know. It's wishful thinking. It's magical thinking that they've given you to believe in here. That if you are 2 meters away from someone, then the virus, it's so intelligent, or it's so taboo, you put a taboo, a force field around you, a black magic, or white magic, depends on what side you're on I guess, and it depends if you made the virus, or you had something to do with making the virus, or making money off it maybe in black magic. But the white magic is, if I keep them 2 meters away from me or just over six feet, then this virus, that can't get any closer to me. I mean, phew, it just stops dead in its track, eh?

Especially when you've got your magic amulets with you. Do you have them with you? You know, you've got your little balls, or your hand sanitizers, eh. And you've got your mask, and you've gotta have that mask on your face. Because all good voodoo ceremonies have masks on their face. So, does Eyes Wide Shut mind you. But here you are, that's your talismans. These are your magic talismans that you've been taught to have with you. At all costs. Scrub, scrub, scrub, and stick that thing on your face there.

So once you're protected against the magic out here, right, even though [Alan chuckles.] those facemasks really, the micron size it could catch is inadequate really most of the time, most of those masks that you see, you know, for the size of this particular virus. It will come through regardless. Whether you’re breathing it out or you're breathing it in, it's going to come through it. But they know all this stuff. They know this. But you've gotta have it with you. Even though you were forbidden to have them initially, right, by the same experts that then demand that you wear them now, or you could get fined, eh.

You understand, you can't please these characters. It's like having a parent who... who... I can remember they used to say that a lot of guys had problems if especially the mother, you know, the mum's got a very significant role to play in raising children, VERY significant. She could make or break a child. And the males especially, you know. So if you get an ambivalent mother, the mother who was often, come here, come here, and then at other times just furious like a manic, and just fury and go away, go away and whack, whack, whack, you know. That guy is going to be really screwed up with relationships for the rest of his life. Come here, go away, come here, go away, come here, go away. You know.

Well, that's what it's like with this whole thing. Wear a mask, don't wear a mask, slap, slap, slap, you know. And there's the cops ready to jump on people, quite happily and eagerly to jump on folk that are disobeying the magic laws. Hm?

And it isn't until I sat and really thought a lot about what was happening, because from the beginning it was all wrong. You see, you don't, you don't quarantine healthy people. You don't destroy the economy, unless you're going to bring in a whole new system. And bingo, that's exactly what it was for. There's no other reason for this.

Right off the bat too they said, oh, there could be another spike in the late fall when winter is about to come in. Well, they're going to guarantee it's going to happen. Because a lot of folk won't have, had, even knowingly or unknowingly, this virus if they've been locked down. You haven't created the 80% herd immunity that normally would have happened. You've got have at least 80%, they claim, for it to start fading off really big time, like, for good. Because once folk have had it, they can't pass it on to anybody else. You've got the antibodies, the thing dies off in your body or it goes inactive, and you're not a spreader anymore, you see.

But by locking folk down and keeping the children, who are great spreaders with these things, are separate from people, and again stopping them all from going to school, then you're going to get a spike, you're pretty well guaranteed a spike. And this is how, I thought about it at the very beginning, I thought, you know, when they played this, this way, and then they come down and say, well we gave you a little bit of temporary freedom in the summer.

That's right up with their playbook too, their manual for how to handle this, right, from their test that they're going to do, Event 201, etc. That the people would start rebel a bit. So, loosen up a wee bit, loosen up a little bit and give them a little bit of freedom in the summer. Then of course, if it spikes again in the fall, you're locked down again. And they'll show you even more horrific pictures. I'm sure they've got even better stuff, refined now, now that they've got more con artists on board with them, who can do some amazing stuff with film, you know, and video.

So, we're living through an incredible script. An INCREDIBLE script. There's no doubt about it, when 9/11 happened nothing made sense. Nothing that was put out made sense. Right off the bat, I mean, the dust hadn't cleared from the towers coming down when the voice went out, it was Osama bin Laden, y'know. Immediately. That's who you were told. Meanwhile, you found out, well, you find out afterwards they already had the military ready to go into Afghanistan months before 9/11 happened, hm. Then as they went through Afghanistan, they were already changing their sites into Iraq, it was Saddam Hussein. He had nothing to do with it. It didn't make any difference.

But what you saw then was the same kind of thing. All the same spokespeople on TV every day, and Rumsfeld and Cheney and Bush all repeating the same stuff, and whatever general they brought forward, the same stuff. Weapons of mass destruction, blah, blah, blah, fuzzy pictures and all the rest of it. It was incredible. But you saw that complete sworn determination, and I mean SWORN, they put their hands together and the whole thing and they swear on each other's lives to go through with this thing, to the bitter end regardless of what happens.

You're seeing the same thing now from the top health experts, with the heads of even US states, that come out and are just adamant, they're going along with the whole darn thing regardless of herd immunity building up. That's why the spike dropped off now, right after it. You get a spike now, then it drops right down again. That's the standard. You find that even with flu seasons; that's what happens. Yep.

But they still got a lot of people who haven't been exposed yet, I'm pretty sure. And they know it too. Because this is the first time ever lockdown on the people so they can't get the herd immunity. So, it will spike again come the cooler weather once again. They'll be quite happy. Then they hope to have the vaccine ready to mandate it into your bloodstream. I laugh at it too when they say, well it doesn't go into the bloodstream. Well, it's not supposed to go. But it makes no difference. If you stick it into your body, I don't care if it goes into interstitial tissue and into the lymphatic fluid, it's going to get in, it's going to get into your bloodstream. That's where it goes, folks.

So again, it's like a big business plan. And you're living through one. Your whole life has been living through a big business plan. 9/11 had to happen to bring in the whole martial law type system and end of freedom. Even freedom of thoughts now, you're completely policed with your thoughts on the Internet now. Because you put all your thoughts out there, and then on all your chitchat too and your texting and in your phones. EVERYTHING, everything. I mean they've built whole areas like towns, the size of towns in the States and elsewhere to house the data, the trillions and trillions of gigs of data that they collect all the time, every day and week and month and year on all of us. And this isn't temporary stuff.

I can remember how they launched it when 9/11 happened. Well, you know, we're only going to keep this certain type of data here for maybe a month or so, two months, six months at the most. As time went on, no we got to keep this longer and longer. Well, nothing gets ditched, folks. Unfortunately, the people adapt to it. That's what’s so interesting. They know this too. The studies on the public, are you adapt, you adapt. Like Darwinian, adapt or die, eh. That's what they tell you, you've got to adapt to this, and you've got to adapt to having no rights, to no freedoms and beings spied upon and monitored. Then branded with Bill Gates special tattoo, you know, his little luciferase tattoo. Isn't that wonderful? A complete record of vaccinations. Because you are a product. But they've got other products to pump into you annually.

And this consent thing is just annoying, isn't it, eh? Look at Alan Dershowitz, you've all seen, and I'll put up again the clip where he talks about, you're going to get this thing whether you like it or not, and the military is going to force you to do it, yada, yada, ya.

Alan Dershowitz: States Can 'Absolutely' Mandate Vaccinations (video) - youtube.com / 18 May 2020

Talking like a tyrant. You're looking at people… You'd better stop, you'd better stop and put them in their place right off the bat. You're looking at tyrants here, folks. You really are. They're so arrogant in the height of their STATUS, and they've been pampered and spoiled for so long. They really believe that all you little peons are little creatures, you're little farm animals, you know, and guys like him have the right to dictate how you're going to behave, eh. This is the guy that was allocated to try and get Jeffrey Epstein off, hm? He has things in common with Bill Clinton you know, they all have, mind you, with Epstein. [Alan chuckles.] Even Gates apparently knew Epstein as well. Small world isn't it, eh?

Alan Dershowitz asks judge to dismiss Epstein victim's defamation case - jpost.com / 25 Sept 2019

But if you think about it, Dershowitz, he also tried to put in a motion to stop the investigation into himself. Because I think it was, was it Miss Roberts is it, one of the people who was getting used as basically a prostitute for the high and mighty by Epstein. I think she had a lawsuit against him too. Or, he was at least mentioned, Dershowitz was mentioned in the same kind of thing for sexual massages. Dershowitz I think said… He was like Bill Clinton. You see, Bill Clinton was caught in a similar kind of thing in the Oval Office. Oval is rather, maybe a bad word for it. But he did a thing with cigars apparently, Bill Clinton, with a woman, you know. We all know the story. Bill Clinton smoked marijuana, but he said he didn't inhale, right. And Dershowitz had a massage, you see, but he didn't take his underwear off and didn't have sex. So, they've got things in common, you see, one didn't inhale, one didn't have sex and kept his drawers on.

These are the characters who through some strange way have got incredible power over society, and this, again deep state that's referred to, has the real power behind governments. They really believe they are the kingpins. Even though, as I say, there's people above them too. The ones above them don't do any work at all. They don't have to. They make suggestions once in a while, but they don't say how to do things. They just make suggestions and things are done by the peons below them, you see.

But you better believe it, when you see the faces of these characters, you're looking at, you're beginning to see the faces that you've seen down through the eons, whether it’s a Caligula or a Nero, or folk who are in charge of mass slaughtering, you know. Down through the ages. Right up through the 20th century. And the Bolshevik revolution as well and incredible slaughtering, 60 to 80 million people during it's time. Slaughtered. Horribly too. It wasn't... it wasn't... Lenin said, don't just kill them, you've got to put a show of horror and terror on to the public.

That's another thing they always do, they always let prisoners out during their revolution, eh, when they start a revolution. The French did that with the Bastille. They even let the Marquis de Sade out of course. Before that the Marquis de Sade, d’you know how he talked to them, d'you know how he talked to the people outside the Bastille? It was a tube that he had to, ah, wee-wee in, you see, I'm being very polite here. But that's what he used to yell down to the public as well, hm. So even that's highly symbolic, how he got his message to the public. But the Marquis de Sade was let loose too to bring in more chaos if possible. The reason he had been put in prison was his incredible perverted attitude to everything. No one was safe around him, of any gender, or any age for that matter. But they let him lose. They always do that.

Then the Bolsheviks did the same thing. They let the murderers and rapists out to cause mayhem. But they also employed a lot of them. They gave them full rein for their rare intent, full rein to do what they want to do. Lenin had people literally disemboweled, and this is a popular way to do it, especially in the rural areas. He sent these gangs out. They would take one or two members of say local councils, or people who are just looked up to, like unofficial officials in little towns and villages and so on, to make an example. It didn't matter if even they were going to comply with you or not, it made no difference, just make examples of the high and mighty. Even if it's just a peasant with less patches on his clothing. Disembowel them. Put a part of the intestine around the lamppost, or any post, and make them walk around and disembowel themselves in circles around the post. That's... I'm not kidding you, there's even photographs that have been done.

These are the wonderful people who brought “civilization”, another great leap forward for humanity, with a new way of living again. They always bring you revolutions, and we’re in one now, folks. You can either nip it in the bud now. Or just comply, just comply. It's the same characters. The same formula.

Why do you think that they prisoners out? Hm? They do this when they're launching revolution. When you look at the whole agenda that the Rockefellers put out, with the Scenarios for the Future, it's a revolution into technology and a new way of living, and experts ruling everything of your life from birth to death. Something we've all talked about for years and years and years, at least I have. And here it goes. The same thing. Then of course they want to get let loose create more mayhem in society until the folk demand the police to do something about it. And the police get more new powers, you see. It's all been done before over and over again.

But when you see the faces, like the Dershowitz's, saying you're going to get it whether you like it or not blah, blah, blah… and people in Britain are doing the same thing too. Because they're all going to get mightily, d'you think they're not going to get paid for this in one way or another? Do you really think that?

I really don't think we've had such blatant corruption showing itself… almost, not before. We saw it in 9/11. We saw it with the whole agenda with Bush and the PNAC group. Before 9/11 and after. [Alan chuckles.] Yeah. In fact, Georgie, little Georgie, he said after, once he got out, you know, and Obama got in. He said, if the public had known what we were up to, they would've chased us down the road with ropes in their hands. That's what he said! Again, it's in one-for-all, all-for-one, so they could never back down. One cannot break, none of them can break, you see, if anybody breaks confidence, that they've sworn onto these things, their lives are in danger. Absolutely. That's how it works amongst these kind of societies, these groups. That's how it's done.

So, you let the prisoners go loose. Mayhem is created. You tell the police the same thing by the way, not to go after them. And what were the police told right off the bat, in every country? Let them out of the prisons, don't bring them to trial, for a lot of the new cases. Don't even respond to what are now, where even if you catch them, as more minor infractions of crime, just let them go. That's what's happening now, eh? But the cops are going after you if you if you're not social distancing, or if you stopped longer than five or 10 minutes for a rest on the way to get some groceries. Etc. etc. etc.

This is a real training exercise on the general public. Nothing to do with what you think it is.

Obviously. Because if it was all aboveboard you would not be letting prisoners loose. You would be arresting them for committing crimes in the streets when you catch them. You would not be letting them go.

Another thing too is, you see reinventing government has been talked about years and years and years, of reinventing government. Also, reinventing goverNANCE. Look at the Council on Foreign Relations. You can look into their Foreign Affairs magazine; they've been telling you for years where they want to take the world. They have a big group in Canada here in Ontario, they've got ex-Prime Minister's working with it too, or ex Deputy Prime Minister's working with them too. Guys who brought you the Fortress America, we're going to join into one system, you know. To save us all against terrorism, they said. They didn't tell us that once you're in Fortress America, you're now locked up with the terrorists. [Alan laughing.] And the terrorists are the guys that bring you all the agendas and they sign agreements for amalgamating countries, which they drafted up themselves too, just like the European Union. Long story about that.

What I'm saying here is, you've to understand you’re living through just the next part of the agenda. There's no doubt about it. No doubt whatsoever.

There's some comedy there too. Of course, apart from the folk [Alan chuckles.] that literally think the virus just know to stop, you know, and don't go further than that 6 feet, for goodness sake. It's an intelligent virus. As I say, you're wearing your amulets and your talismans and your facemask there and you've got your hand sanitizer, eh. Some folks have little spray bottles to take with them too to spray in front of them. It might kill everything before it hits them, it might kill things in the air, you see. It might be good against mosquitoes, though; I've got them back out here already in Canada where I am here.

But when you look at the comedies, where you were told not to wear masks, eh? Only doctors, remember that? You’ve got the same article, they haven’t disappeared yet, that the media was telling you. The same mainstream media that was getting totally ignored for years because they were so corrupt and awful that no one believed them anymore until this happened. And back again, through horror you tuned in, they might tell us something important for our survival. And they're making hay of it.

Again, in January it was a small sites that were reporting what was happening in China and say, this is going to come here. Because, d'you know how many Chinese students are all across the universities of the planet? Huh? That's just one thing. Never mind all the other traveling back and forth to China, constantly, every week. So, the small sites, this is going to happen here. But the professionals and the media, oh no. Even Fauci said, oh nothing to worry about, in January. He said Americans don't have to worry about that. N-n-n.

Then as I say, they told you, well, only doctors, they said, only doctors should wear facemasks. I guess, you see, again you're back into the world of magic, eh, you see. Because when the viruses are heading towards that doctor, and they see a mask on his face, they all know that he's a doctor and to go around them and don't go right to the mask, you see. But if you as a peasant wear that mask, you see, it's not going to take any notice of you because you're a peasant. That's what they're telling you. It's magic, you see. Absolute magic.

Then of course, they mandate, you've got to wear a mask. After you’re almost clubbing to death folk, when the cops find them, that they have masks on. Now of course they club you to death if you take it off, eh, or you have got it on. Whichever, you can't keep up with it anymore. Should we have it on, or should it be off, eh? You don't know anymore. Magic.

The same magic you find with the virologists. Have you noticed that? It's like Wiccanism. It's like white magic and black magic, you see. Because now you have top, top virologists, and by that, I mean the ones who've actually worked in laboratories. There's other ones who are top virologists to do with study and the bio effects of it through graphics and so on who do the detailing of it. Like Neil Ferguson, the guy who... But again, Neil Ferguson, honestly, if you have got a dispute with the government for back taxes, that they owe you, right, get him. He'll get millions for you. He doesn't like small numbers. He'll get millions for you, and you'll be okay there. Make sure you do that. You put it through his computer program, and that 150 bucks or pounds that you were owed, it's going to turn in the millions. Instantly. Guaranteed. So, you have those guys too, you see, with their computer modeling, with their God, the computer. And they've trained the public that computers are gods. A computer can't think. A computer has no common sense. Hm? But they've trained you to believe it. What does the computer say? Hm? Astonishing.

So yeah, you've got white magicians and black magicians. Some of them worked in the labs who have come out openly telling you that this thing really is going to die away, like other viruses before, annual viruses, and herd immunity is going to literally take a good hold and it will just die away. You might get a few folk next year that it will make an appearance, but most folk, once you get a certain amount of herd immunity, it can't take hold, you see. So, they are the good magicians, the ones who are telling you that, you see.

They worked in the labs. That also means they did a lot of testing. They use animals to test. If they get their hands-on humans they will, with volunteers for vaccines. But they worked in the labs, and they make these different things, so they know what they're talking about. I'll put up some YouTubes to that tonight as well where one woman from Ireland worked in some top laboratories, level III and IV, and she knows what she's talking about, and she's more optimistic and so on, and shooting holes through the stuff you're getting fed right now. Then you get the other ones too that are terrified of, who've also worked in laboratories, but when they cut up animals and things, they do it, they do it with hate in them, you see. The good folk are the white magicians that pat the animals on the head before they dissect them, you see.

I think the whole field is incredibly corrupt, the modern field, with these laboratories with the gain of functions. These things started off for the military in the first place combined with vaccine makers. Because they can make a fortune if, if they can start to perhaps... discover, put it that way, discover new types of viruses. But if they can guarantee annual outbreaks of whatever, then, and get out vaccines for it, then it's big, big, big, big money. BIG money, you know. Quite something, isn't it? As I said last week is like, double, double toil and trouble and when you look at the different parts they put into some of these vaccines, it's not much different. I'm not kidding you. It really, so it again, black magic, white magic, what side are you on.

You know, Fauci himself, as I say, I'm pretty sure these characters at the top are all connected with the CIA. You have to be. You have to be. You don't get into that field working with these top labs, and he was picked up early on working for them, right out of medical school really, in government financed departments for this kind of thing. Which really was CIA covert operations. Britain years and years ago, back in maybe the 70s did in an expose on what happened in Britain, with the CIA operatives that had left behind them, had different cages they had vamoosed out of the country of Britain. But they could tell by the residues and so on they had literally been testing things on rats in London, and in apartments, actually basement apartments which they were renting, and to release things if it ever became, if it became necessary to release things to cause a disease in England. If the Russians were taking a hold in the country or coming over, they were going to release pandemics or plagues in Britain if they'd eventually hit there.

I'm not kidding you. That was, I don't know if it was a Panorama, it was a special, it was either that or a kind of 60 Minutes type thing, like Man Alive. But yeah, it was done way back then. They showed you the cages and the debris that had been tested for what the occupants had been and so on and that's what they concluded. They knew it was like a CIA type thing. So, the CIA has always been involved with biowarfare. Obviously. From their own writings in the past, down through history.

You find it with Canada too. Canada was right up there with biowarfare. Deadly Allies: Canada's Secret War. From the 1940s onwards in fact I think at the Connaught Laboratories that eventually went under after it was exposed that they were buying tainted blood, that Clinton allowed to be sold. They killed off a lot of the hemophiliacs with the blood products, tainted blood products. They were using prisoners with HIV and everything, and knowingly, and selling it for blood products for hemophiliacs and so on. So pretty well Connaught Laboratories was behind them at the time. They actually caught them on TV at the time when that happened. I think it was 60 Minutes or maybe the national for CBC or whatever it was, they caught the main purchaser going up the steps to the laboratory I guess it was. They asked him, you know, they said to him, but you knew what you were buying and what it was going to the public. And he says, the man says, this is what did them in, eh, it finished off the laboratory. He says, it's business, it's just business, he says. That's how a psychopath answers you. Just business. Never mind all the thousands of folk that dies of the stuff, the tainted blood.

But you see, from the eugenics point of view, he was a good man for doing what he did because he killed off what they would say were the weak or infirmed. People with maybe congenital problems and other problems. The unfit, as they like to call them. You'd better, you've got to start seeing things in a different way here, especially when you have the big boys out right now from the eugenics Society and Population Matters openly, openly again, the same groups that go to the World Economic Forum and the Club of Rome, who are all mixed with the WHO. These folk all know each other. They're all part of the same sustainability program.

So, they're going to help you and vaccinate you? And as Bill Gates said himself, it will bring down the population maybe 10-15%. Wait a minute here, eh! Gates also said it might kill, this particular vaccine, whenever they get it right, you know, might kill 700,000 people across the world. Really?! Really? Hm. N-n-n. You'd better start seeing things as they really are here. Hm?

The disgusting way that the elderly have been treated during this whole thing is purely eugenics. Canada was more open about it, with bioethics. You see, bioethics now, and in an atheist society where scientists who are now in charge supposedly and technocrats, it's all dollars and cents and they can't just fork out cash to keep you alive if you're over a certain age and you're not very important, you're not a somebody, you see. Even though they pretend it's equal for all. NO, it's not equal at all!

The arrogance of class distinction is incredible. When you go into the scientific communities, the more degrees they've got, the haughtier they are and their noses go higher and higher in the air, you know, as they sniff down at the peasants below them. That's the truth of it, folks. The arrogance in academia is phenomenal. Once you get a group of these people together discussing eugenics, you'll, phew, [Alan chuckles.] you'd better hope that you're a somebody because they have their way, you'll be written off quite simply and easily.

They had it in Canada too, oh, we'll have to, I did the articles, I read them here, I mentioned them, and I've still got them. They said, we have to think now, you see, if the bioethicists were running the show, if this gets really bad, who's going to live and who's going to die and who's going to get allocated the medication, who won't be, etc. It was getting you all ready for it, your life is of less value than this person over here. That's what runs the countries now, eh, your medical systems. In the States it's a bit more of an advantage, because even though they want that there, and if you're just the peasants and you have no real insurance, as one of these Medicare aid programs, which the state might sponsor for those at the bottom, they're still going to write you off. But if you've got a good insurance policy, oh, they're going to do all they can to try to keep you alive. M-hm.

It's just astonishing what's happening and the folk are unaware of it. Because they're not putting that across every day on the television, are they? They're putting Mr. Fauci, you know, who I didn't vote for. And yet even Canada is following his advice. Hm? And the World Health Organization's advice. The most FAR left organization on the planet at the United Nations, the WHO, and it's totally involved with the Department of Population. It used to be called the Department of Population Control when it was set up by Rockefeller who funded it for the UN by the way, that department. And here you've got Bill Gates literally running the WHO.

If you can't understand, you've got a cabal of people here who somehow have been very highly organized, and they've got a mandate to work up with each other, and fund everything. And Bill Gates has got a finger in every pie like some strange little, you know, magician. Anybody who can get bought over has got bought over, pretty well. That's another thing too, when tyrants, when you start to unpeel all the different blankets off the tyrants, all these sheets off them to see who they are, the more ferocious they'll become. Because it can get to the stage they're so compromised with corruption, they know if it's exposed that they're done for, so they make sure that anybody trying to expose them will be, it will get done first.

No kidding you. The corruption here is phenomenal. Everyone is so compromised with each other, as they toss millions and billions around with each other at the top here. It's just disgusting! It really is. I'll be going into some of that tonight with some of the evidence to support it. You've never seen such a tight clique of people running everything. Bill Gates has got reimagining education; it will never be the same again. That's another thing that Fauci said. Well who... Fauci, he's telling us we can ever go back to anything at all, the world will never be the same again. Oh no. No. No, it's never going to go back to any normal, oh no, oh no. He said that from the very beginning along with his vaccine agenda. Which means the agenda was planned long before this thing hit. Of course, it was.

Again, it had not been done before, let's lock down all the healthy people. Never been done before. Stop herd immunity. Then ease it up in the summer. The folk will stop being so angry and they'll start to lighten up a bit, you see. Then you make it appear in the winter because there's not enough herd immunity, because of the lockdown. You couldn't plan it better. This isn't coincidence. It goes against every, every, every law that they've ever had before in dealing with these things. M-hm.

Everything in fact is going to make it worse. What's so interesting, even with the original stuff coming out of Wuhan, where even some of the Chinese, some of the Chinese were admitting, so this must have escaped from the lab there. Scientists who work at it came out and talked about working with bats, that some of them were even bitten with the darn things during the experimentation and so on, yada, yada, ya. And Fauci kept quiet on that aspect of it, you see. He didn't refute what they were saying.

Then once you start to find out it came out, oh my goodness, you know, Fauci started them off with a $3.5 million grant to the Wuhan lab. Then it went up to about $7.5 - 8 million to do the coronavirus experiments there. They got the virus, to start with, given to them, and Fauci supposedly accommodated that as well. All the folk who worked at the Wuhan lab, are the ones who work, from China, in Canada too. They all jump back and forth for different labs, right over to Wuhan, back-and-forth, back-and-forth. Never mind the ones they caught in the States smuggling vials of the stuff out, going back to China, of different kinds of things [Alan chuckles.] in their socks. This is all real, folks.

But there's Fauci who knew all this is going on. And who helped them develop the darn thing. When the Department of Defense says it may not be a great idea to continue with this coronavirus experiments, because with gain of function you're creating something that's lethal. That's what you do with gain of function, you take something that's pretty harmless and make it deadly. Just in case in a million years it might have developed that way itself. That's what they say, you see. SO, we're ready for it. Are they really ready for it? Well, if it's a vaccine they haven't given the real vaccine to it, eh? Have they?

So anyway, they gave what they had worked on from North Carolina, it was a University there too, and they give it to Wuhan to continue the work. So, they could continue, so if anything broke out it would be on their heads, and they would take the brunt of it. Fauci was again authorizing the transfer of the stuff over to China from the States in 2015-2016.

Then once that started to come out, you see suddenly Fauci, suddenly he came out with amazing declarations, no proof to back it up... Ah, this thing probably just evolved by itself. To get the heat off himself, right! Obviously. Why else would he say that? Why else would he suddenly say that? Hm? And gave no evidence to back it up. Well, it probably just jumped by itself and evolved by itself. Just a little statement and everybody parrots what he said. Without saying, wait a minute here, you know, you helped to get this thing over to China, to the Wuhan lab, and giving them a maximum eventually from $3.5 to up to $8 million eventually to kick start it with its gain of function. But suddenly, that's when, yeah, only then when it starts you, you know, Fauci's name popping up in connection with it. Oh, it probably just evolved by itself. And that's good enough for us all to believe, eh. Is that right? N-n-n.

Sad, isn't it? Sad that the media won't do any proper reporting or investigative journalism. It's very, it really is sad, isn't it? But it also tells you that the media is totally bought and paid for. It always was. There were always certain topics even when it was actual newspapers that they'd all know what to leave alone and don't go near, etc. It got worse and worse over the years right up until they put that British Lord in charge of it, the Leveson Inquiry. Any little commentary at all about events was stopped dead, and that's when they really died. Australia did the same thing. Canada did the same thing. Because we're all part of the so-called Commonwealth of Nations, meaning the British Commonwealth. And that's how it's done.

They were just dying with hands out, hands out, hands out to government to keep ticking along. Because they're mouthpieces for policies by government and the government agencies. Most of the government agencies are privately owned nowadays, for those who haven't figured it out. The British post office I think was privatized, I don't know if it was totally privatized, a few years ago. But that was the idea behind that too. Again, I think it was Osborne, [George Osborne] one of his relatives or one of his workers in Parliament got the contracts and pushed it through and end up owning this new company I think in Britain. They're all crooks.

I can remember when they did the same thing in Britain with the water supply in England. Probably for Scotland too at the time I suppose. I even read it at the time on the radio. It was a group in Parliament and some in the House of Lords that had put forth a bill to privatize the water industry. These were always classed as essentials, you had essentials for not just national security but for your local security, your own water supply, your gas supply, your proper sanitation sewage systems and so on. Now, these were public utilities. They own the thing, the public supposedly owned them when they were taxpayer funded.

Then of course Prince Charles and others, he was being a spokesman for the public-private fascist enterprise because that's what it means, you'll pay for it to be privatized. You'll pay for the upkeep and maintenance, while the private company just rakes in the cash from the taxpayers, it doesn't cost them anything at all to actually run it. That's what public-private really means. You build it for them, if it's not built already, and then you maintain it for them, and, well, they do a little bit of, you know, management perhaps. And your road systems. So anyway, they did the same thing with the waterworks. A group of them put a bill through in Parliament to privatize the system. Then I don't know if it was two or three years later, they privatized it. And guess who happened to own immediately the company that owned the waterways of Britain? The same politicians that put the bill forth! Aargh!

You know, why do people vote?! What's wrong with them? And we know, we know, because we're so well studied, we really are so well studied, you know. They've done countless surveys as they break down society and who votes for whom and so on and why did they vote for whatever it is. It's just astonishing the answers that you get. Generally it's, oh, my dad voted labor or conservative, and yada, yada, ya. Forget these people, they're gone. They probably like football too, or soccer, that's all they watch. More so actually today as they get less and less rights to be a man. [Alan chuckles.] So, they fulfill their fantasies through a tribal display on a field kicking a ball around, by overpaid characters. For a children's game, eh? Hm? But it's very important to keep the people happy, you know, so they can live out their fantasies. It's just imagining that they were young again and they were on the battlefield. Because that's what the field is for sports, a battlefield, it's symbolized. And your team with your colors is fighting those guys with their colors. So, you get your own little uniform colors and so on. We are so well managed as I say.

But again, you get the same things. Do you realize it's all theater? You get the guy who's going to stand for Labour is going to talk about the working class. God knows who they are these days! You know? Because Britain especially doesn't have much industry left at all. And they could hardly call the folk working class, really. Where even the welfare folk now, it depends, mind you, if you've probably been brought up and lived in Britain you won't get welfare, [Alan chuckles.] but other folks certainly do. So, the person is going to definitely, oh, the working class, the underdog... Then they change the sites onto the female, there's not enough women in the work force. Then that fell apart eventually, when there's more women in the workforce actually and especially in the universities and in the professions than men. So then they start to go for incoming ethnic groups and so on. There's nothing much left that they can push. Because they lost the track of why they existed in the first place. You see?

Every country followed suit, the same tactic. Divide/conquer, divide/conquer, divide/conquer, divide/conquer until you have nothing left really that will back you up. And the conservatives are a joke! Absolute joke. What is a conservative? What’s a progressive conservative? Progress/conserve, progress/conserve, eh? It's gone.

In reality as I say, you've been managed by technocracy for a long, long, long time. Experts run it. The politicians depend on lifetime civil servants in different departments to give them their cues and write their speeches because they know what their departments do. The people appointed to their department temporarily and who often get moved around like musical chairs, like, you know, in charge of health and the next day they're in charge of the military or something. [Alan chuckles.] They've got nothing to do, they have no idea, so they depend on the civil servants to do it all for them. They're just figureheads, you know. And they're allowed to fill their pockets and do their little bit of petty corruptions and things like that as long as they play the game.

But most folk accept it. Most folk never really catch on, again, that big 80% of the general public that Huxley talked about too, they never catch on, do they, of what's happening. They believe what they're told immediately. Oh, wow, my God, you know.

It was a great series, it was called Dad's Army, in Britain. I never ever watched it at the time, I wasn’t into it or anything like that. But as you get older you start looking at the stuff and you say wait a minute here, you know. What they're portraying is an older group than yourself, that lived through the war, World War II. But they showed you the rationing, it was all comedy and so on. But they showed you the rationing, it really affected them all. Where the future, no one would have imagined, most of the folk didn't imagine they'd have much of a future, or one day even own their own car or something, it was just beyond any, [Alan chuckles.] it was science-fiction to them. What they ate was a starvation diet, y'know. But every excuse that they had, where they couldn't get something, or couldn't get the food, or they couldn't get parts for anything, was, there's a war on, y'know.

The same characters who gave you that are trying to bring it all back permanently again. The post consumerist society. I've said before, it's been copied so many times, some you know, within the week he's prattling the same stuff as me. But as I said a few weeks back, or a month ago too, that the technocrats are going to bring it in.

It's a post service economy, or, it's a service economy is what the Council on Foreign Relations proudly boasted that they were bringing into the Americas years ago, and that are being accomplished in 2005, the service economy. They'd already, the same group the CFR had written it up and drafted up the NAFTA agreements for the amalgamation of the Americas. And they are a private organization. A private club that belongs to the Royal Institute of International Affairs for Britain. The global, that's the globalists, folks, that run it. They run it on behalf of the Masters, but they run it all. They drafted up the European Union charter. You think that came out of thin air by itself? They drafted up the Far East Pacific Rim group, the Asian group with its members mainly in Japan but also Australia and New Zealand, and eventually they have to be amalgamated into China, in that bloc, you see.

You're living through, your entire life, your parents were, and your grandparents were living through a big, massive plan, that takes sometimes a lifetime for even one part to get fulfilled. But they publish their goals. It's dry reading, it's not sexy, it's very dry. It's just that folk can't believe they are actually doing it. They are in disbelief their whole lives. Even things that are straight, right in front of their faces, they stay in disbelief. I don't want to, I can't believe that, they'd never do that. Even when they're doing it, they'd never do that. [Alan chuckles.] Why not? Somebody would stop them. Hm, okay.

These are the guys that brought you also the agenda for the Pacific Rim, all the different treaties, the free-trade treaties. You were never asked to vote for it. You don't get to vote on it. Anything that really matters in the world that's going to affect you, you get no vote at all. The only right that you have, that they say, they tell you this, in democracy, is to elect someone in to office, to vote. That's the only right you have. Once they are in, they can do what they want. And they DO do what they want. Well, they don't really, they follow the agenda because they do have Masters.

The big problem, I've said this from the beginning too, going way back. You can't be a cheerleader for everybody. Because I used to give the blatant hard truth, and it's cold, it's cold truth. It's nasty. When you see how the world is run, and what it's really all about, and how it's managed, and how we are looked upon, and how they manage us too, it could be scary to people, naturally, quite scary. But I wouldn't make it soft for the people.

I always made it quite clear that it's up to everybody to try and help to bring in a proper, a decent future for themselves and others. It's very important that you actually motivate yourself. If you're waiting for people to do it for you, you end up in hell, a hell on earth. Because it's not going to happen. It's not going to happen.

I've always said that, at the top you've got a clique at the top that draft up these plans for the Masters, implement it on the public whether the public know it or not or even like it or not, then you've got the public themselves. The vast majority will go along with anything, the path of least resistance is what they are shown to take. And they do take it. It doesn't take much to prompt them to take the... Well, if I do this I can still go and, you know... if I allow them to search me, and then strip me off and make me walk on my bare feet and take my belt off at the airport, then I might be able to get on the plane. Utterly humiliated, you know. X-rayed, the whole lot. Utterly humiliated.

And it doesn't stop, does it? Oh, now we want you to wear bracelets, eh, for ID. Oh, you don't have a cell phone, you've got to wear this bracelet then. This manacle, this electronic manacle, which they want to push in Canada, at least Tam wants it, that we wear it all, you see. And if you prove positive, which just means that you might have had some fragments of dead virus somewhere in your system, in your nasal cavities, you know, that's what it probably will be in fact, then you have to do what you're told and get isolated again. You see? Utter rubbish! Utter rubbish. Absolute rubbish.

Because those swab type things are not accurate at all. Honestly, you could be immune to the darn thing and be immune for months and walk into a ward where they have some of the people, and then you will get tested afterwards, you're going to have fragments from them. It's in the air. Folk breath, folks. [Alan chuckles.] If they don't breathe, they're all dead. You know, there's no point in having them in the hospital if they're all dead. They breathe out, and out comes the dying, it's all dead bits of debris of these viruses and so on. And you'll test positive if they take the swab. Because the RNA that it responds to is fragments of what they're really testing for. M-hm.

It's quite amazing that folks just don't go the whole way of logic with it. It's just astonishing. What does the computer say? Ah, it doesn't say too much, does it? But yeah, you ARE your own champion. I keep telling people you are your own champion. It's funny, after my talks I always hear the same people, with big, big shows, you know, because there's authorized alternatives out there, put it that way, and they'll use my stuff even verbatim. It's quite comical. And they never say where they get it from. If it wasn't for my stuff a lot, some of them you'll know actually, all you'll hear is about voting for Donald Trump. Because that's what they're really supposed to be there to do at the moment. And as far as I'm concerned Donald Trump is no different than anybody else actually. He's got his job to do, we all know what it is, and it's not for America. Np.

But you have nobody to vote for because the other side is no better. That's the truth of it, folks. They are all placed there by the ones above them. And I keep, maybe I heard wrong, but I mean, I heard Donald Trump give the talk that he was going to have millions of the military going around giving doses of the vaccine door-to-door to all the different people, you know. And m-hm-hm-hm, okay. He's there to help who? Okay.

So yeah, as I said, I even gave the talk too last time about, you've got to learn to really say no, and that person from the same show said the same thing a couple days later. [Alan chuckles.] But I guess I’m doing an awful lot of work, for nothing, for free for these characters because I don't push the politics and they need other stuff apart from politics to talk about.

And it is, what it really comes down to, I said this before too, it is a spiritual war. I won't go into it and drag it out in great detail. But I've said before, you see, the characters, and I've read their own quotes to you all as well, from the top in the eugenics movements and so on and from the WHO, where they said that religion is a darn nuisance, it has to get put away. Because in the past it was always religious exemptions that were demanded for vaccinations, or for complying with what they want you to do. So, if they could knock that away, and what they've given you is an atheistic society, pretty well atheist, for most folk it's atheistic, so all you've got to argue with is the terminology they give you.

What was it the communists said? They decide what the terminology and the names that things will be, and then you have to trying to debate it on their turf, you see. Using their language so that they win. That's why they give you, that's why they're always rephrasing things today as they go. Progressive as they call it in society with the social programs and social ideologies. They give you the terminology. And they give you the negative terminology, like 'phobic', something phobic or whatever, or 'deniers', all this kind of stuff to make, to shame you into shutting up, you see. To end all debate at all.

That's exactly what Peter Hitchens talked about too. He said when he was trained as a Marxist, and he was, at University, he said he came out not just like a true believer but ready to kill for Marxism and for the communist system. They liked to call it Marxist/Trotskyist at that time. But that's what he said. He said, the first thing they taught you was how to stop any opposite reaction by stopping all debate from the other side. Just silence them. Well, that's never changed.

But part of it, as I mentioned before, is they give you the terminology. Well once you have knocked your God out of the picture, right, you see, they can't debate you on God. When you say, well God gave me these rights. They can't come back with a scientific answer to that, you see. So, once it's out of the picture, all you've got is THEIR language to argue with. They'll say, oh we're the real experts, you're nobody, so we win, you see. In the public's eyes, you've always got this passive public that sit and watch it all. In the public's eyes, they'll say, well yeah, I guess so, I guess they win, they're the professionals, they've got... And that's how it's done. You'll be defeated, for most of the people, before you start.

So, you've got to start saying NO. And all you have to do, don't go into science, just say I'm a human being. Just like Network the movie where he said in Network, I'm a human being, and I'm not going to take it anymore! He yells out his window, and he has them all yell out the window every night at the same time.

Maybe when they're all clapping for the National Health Service in Britain, which has been getting destroyed for years before this happened, by many different means actually. But when they're having all their clapping and that and all the cameras turnup for the televisions, and nurses from all around come out, that don't even work in the hospital a lot of them, and they'll take part in this big love-in there and they're not going by social distancing, etc., and laughing and clapping, and they're all getting clapped and stuff...

Maybe all the poor convicts, all the general public, you're all convicts now, you see, locked down in your homes, but maybe you should be worshiping all the folk in uniform now. Worship them. I mean, all fascist societies love you to worship the services as they call it, you know, the police, military and everything else. And teachers by the way. Teachers could get their own uniform. They could join in on the act because they're getting big bucks too. Like Stalin says, you pay your teachers well because they indoctrinate the next generation of citizenry.

Exposing Staged NHS Worship Bristol Hospital No Social Distancing - youtube.com / 23 April 2020

So, you get them altogether in the pictures congratulating each other, and you can applaud them. Well, that would break the monotony of it, wouldn't it, of being locked down like a convict. You see? Isn't it wonderful, you get locked down and then you're supposed to praise the people that are going to keep you in line, like the police? That's really good psychology. It's a great technique, isn't it? Where the police can join the nurses and everything. I mean, the police themselves have no problem going right up to folk, less than 6 feet away, in Britain as an example, right in their face, and push them and moving them or arresting them, you see. They're probably spreading it more than anybody else. Maybe they're doing a good job if it's going to create herd immunity. Maybe they are unwittingly doing a better job of it, you know.

[Alan laughing.] It's really something. [Alan laughing.] Every year I used to think about herd immunity when it came to, when the flu season came around. Because when nothing much is happening, they've gotta keep training the public to respect police, you know. That's what ride programs are for, it's got nothing to do with catching the drunks. The drunks generally know not to go on the road when they're drunk. Or they know where the side roads are or whatever, you see. But they’re really a form of exercising control on the public. To keep you in the public... It's public awareness, that the cops are still there to remind you. Because everybody is guilty of something. You see? Everybody feels… As soon as you see cops... Unless you become a cop, you see, I guess that's why a lot of people become cops because then they don't feel guilty anymore. But whenever you see cops, you always think, my God what are they… You know? You're trained that way. You really are trained that way, aren't you? It's just quite something how you’ve been trained from birth to be a cowering little animal. [Alan laughing.] But that's how it is, how a very naïve people are trained that way.

I used to think during the flu season, because they'd ask you to roll the window down, and down goes the window. They'd stick their face inside of the car to sniff your breath. It's rather insulting. And that's a challenge, it's an aggressive act. It's like dogs, try that with a dog, you know, and you get your nose bitten very quickly. It's meant to be aggressive. Because you're like human animals, your space is important to you. So, they stick it in your face and then sniffing you, right, to see if you've been drinking. And I thought, you know, that's probably how they're creating herd immunity every flu season, mainly through these ride programs, when you think about it, eh. Of course if you did that even with the Covid, if they're doing it with Covid or the flu, they'd still say, when they put tracers on you, you've tested positive for this thing, how many folk have you seen in the last week or whatever? And the last person you're going to think of is the cop sticking his face through the window. [Alan laughing.] Like he's impervious or something. But that's probably where you would get it from if that would happen.

So really, you have to examine your life and what you live through. You have to stand back from it all and see it through different eyes. It's the same, like an alien creature coming to earth and looking at all. That's when you start to realize what's really going on. As opposed to how you're trained to believe what's going on. I mean, it's really true. As I say, Jacques Ellul was a great writer and a great philosopher. He would break so much down in plain speak basically, on how we behave and how we are trained to behave, by the rulers in society.

I'll put up another video by the way where a politician in Italy gets to the point on this. She gave a little speech during the parliamentary session in Italy, and she brings up Bill Gates and talks about him being really a criminal and he should be tried for the enterprises that he's done in the past. She went through the sterilization with all the different free vaccination programs that he's been doing and bringing polio into India and so on. And that's true.

That doesn't mean it hasn't been denied. The World Health Organization had to admit it, I remember reading that at the time on the radio too, where they found he was giving a live polio vaccine, he was giving it actually orally, or inhalation, one of the two, and it was live. What happened was they had a massive outbreak of polio, and it mutated, they claim. I often wonder if it was actually in the stuff they were given, if it was already mutated maybe. Because this is another thing, you can't go on like this when you've got folk like that who are eugenicists who don't like too many, he wants to bring the population DOWN. Like his daddy. You know?

These are causes for these folk. It's not to help you, you know. They're true believers in reducing the population. Big time. Like, by big amounts. And no one, who gave him permission to do what he's doing across the world? You understand, there's a bigger governmental system on the go than what you, what you're about, obviously. And it's by guys like Gates and the rest of them that are all part of it. But the vaccine for the polio, they ended up saying, it mutated and caused a new strain of polio, it was sweeping through parts of India. That was admitted to by the WHO. N-n-n. Then the sterilization too with the so-called free tetanus shots. Lots of stories about it. All can be verified, as they say.

These people are really monsters, that's how I see them. It's only because they still looked partly human like Bill Gates that makes folks think that, well, you know, he could never do anything really awful, you know. He doesn't look like a very strong man, does he? He flaps his arms around an awful lot. And those eyes, they're dead, they're steely cold, you know, behind them, there's nothing there. You know? This is a guy who really is dedicated to these causes of bringing down populations and so on. You can see it in him, you know. And in his talks, he's been quite open about it.

But that politician in Italy goes through it, the whole list of the agenda in a quite condensed form. And says it out loud. Now, this politician in Italy gave her talk, seven minutes I think it was. It's on YouTube and it's on Bitchute I think too. She went right to the throat, you know, right for the throat. She demanded the arrest of Bill Gates in her talk in the parliament. Sara Cunial her name is.

Italian MP Sara Cunial wants Bill Gates arrested in Italy - youtube.com / 17 May 2020

Italian Member Of Parliament Demands Arrest Of Bill Gates As A “Vaccine Criminal” For Pursuing Crimes Against Humanity

humansarefree.com / May 19, 2020

Sara Cunial, the Member of Parliament for Rome denounced Bill Gates as a “vaccine criminal” and urged the Italian President to hand him over to the International Criminal Court for crimes against humanity. She also exposed Bill Gates' agenda in India and Africa,

(Alan: That's talking about what they did with the sterilization and also the polio disease that was let loose through his particular brand of vaccination.)

along with the plans to chip the human race through the digital identification program ID2020.

(A: I mean, this guy has got his hands, he finances a good chunk of the money to the WHO. So, everybody's in his pocket there, right. The official ones who are pushing the agenda are in his pocket. He's also with reimagining education. So his company, if he can keep all the children at home, from now on, rather than going to school, then his company with his new education system online will be the total indoctrination service for a unified indoctrination, a standardized indoctrination, for the whole planet. You understand?)

(A: You can't make this stuff up. This is the greatest Bond villain [Alan chuckles.] that you can imagine. He really is, of our day. He's not the only one. But he is, he's really got a finger in every pie with this global agenda. So, this politician comes out with it. And then goes... By the way, every minister of health who's on board with this total ID 2020 as well, is all part of the same thing. They've all sworn allegiance to it, there's no doubt about it.)

In 2015 it was the Italians who exposed secret Chinese biological experiments with Coronavirus.

(A: Back in 2015, eh. And they show you some of the links they had there at the time.)

In an extraordinary seven-minute speech met with wide applause, Sara Cunial, the Member of Parliament for Rome said that Italy had been subjected to a "Holy Inquisition of false science."

She roundly criticized the unnecessary lockdown imposed on her fellow Italians in the service of a globalist agenda.

(A: She also mentioned the deep state, it wasn't just in America. I'll put up the link, you can actually see it like I say on video if you want. But there's also translations elswhere too of her talk. She goes through Hobbes...)

Hobbes said that absolute power does not come from an imposition from above but by the choice of individuals who feel more protected renouncing to their own freedom and granting it to a third party.

(A: Right.)

With this, you are going on anesthetizing the minds with corrupted Mass Media with Amuchina (a brand of disinfectant promoted by Mass Media) and NLP (A: That's neurolinguistic programming.), with words like “regime”, “to allow” and “to permit”, to the point of allowing you to regulate our emotional ties and feelings and certify our affects.

So, in this way, Phase 2 is nothing else than the persecution/continuation of Phase 1 – you just changed the name, as you did with the European Stability Mechanism (ESM). We have understood people, for sure, don’t die from the virus alone.

So people will be allowed to die and suffer, thanks to you and your laws, for misery and poverty. And, as in the “best” regimes, the blame will be dropped only on citizens. You take away our freedom and say that we looked for it. Divide et Impera (Divide and Rule).

It is our children who will lose more, who are ‘raped souls’, with the help of the so-called “guarantor of their rights” and of CISMAI (Italian Coordination of Services against Child Abuse).

In this way, the right to school will be granted only with a bracelet to get them used to probation, to get them used to slavery – involuntary treatment and to virtual lager. All this in exchange for a push-scooter (A: I guess they give them a push scooter.) and a tablet.

(A: …to the little children, eh. Get them trained as criminals really, yeah.)

All to satisfy the appetites of a financial capitalism whose driving force is the conflict of interest, conflict well represented by the WHO, whose main financier is the well-known “philanthropist and savior of the world” Bill Gates.

(A: You wish some of the politicians here would give these talks out, eh, on the air. Mind you, they wouldn't get them out, they would have a sudden interruption of services on the TV. She goes on and says…)

Based on an intercepted human intelligence report, a controversy has erupted in Nigeria whereby Bill Gates is accused of offering Nigerian House of Representatives a $10 million bribe for a speedy passage of a forced Coronavirus vaccination program.

We all know it, now. Bill Gates, already in 2018, predicted a pandemic, simulated in October 2019 at the “Event 201”, together with Davos (Switzerland). For decades, Gates has been working on Depopulation policy and dictatorial control plans on global politics, aiming to obtain the primacy on agriculture, technology and energy.

(A: And it's true enough, he's trying to do away with the meat supply, he is quite open about it. He's even got patents on certain artificial meat products. And of course, he's right into the different agribusinesses as well. No kidding, this guy is way above, was it Blofeld in the Bond one. Way above that. N-n-n. It also says, she quotes Bill Gates from his speech, and I put up the links before to a YouTube.)

Gates said, I quote exactly from his speech:

“If we do a good job on vaccines, health and reproduction, we can reduce the world population by 10-15%. Only a genocide can save the world”.

(A: [Alan chuckles.] Really? Whoa.)

With his vaccines, Gates managed to sterilize millions of women in Africa. Gates caused a polio epidemic that paralyzed 500,000 children in India (A: The link is here to it as well by the way.) and still today with DTP (A: …vaccine.), Gates causes more deaths than the disease itself.

And he does the same with GMOs designed by Monsanto and “generously donated” to needy populations.

All this while he is already thinking about distributing the quantum tattoo for vaccination recognition and mRNA vaccines as tools for reprogramming our immune system. In addition, Gates also does business with several multinationals that own 5G facilities in the USA.

(A: It goes on and on and on, it's quite good. It goes on about the deep state, talks about...)

Hi-Tech multinationals, like the Roman Engineering which is friend of the noble Mantoan, or Bending Spoons, of Pisano, which are there for control and manage our personal health datas in agreement with the European Agenda ID2020 …

(A: Yeah, your governments are all completely complicit with this exact same agenda. It's all one big agenda worldwide here. And it was drafted up long before you heard of this coronavirus, this Covid 19. She says...)

The Italian contribution to the International Alliance Against Coronavirus will be of 140 million Euros, of which 120 million Euros will be given to GAVI Alliance, the non-profit by Gates Foundation.

They are just a part of the 7.4 billion Euro fund by the EU to find a vaccine against Coronavirus – vaccines which will be used as I said before.

No money, of course for serotherapy, which has the collateral effect of being super cheap.

No money for prevention, a real prevention, which includes our lifestyles, our food and our relationship with the environment.

The real goal of all of this is total control. Absolute domination of human beings, transformed into guinea pigs and slaves, violating sovereignty and free will.

(A: Well, that's a politician that somebody might vote for, eh. [Alan chuckles.] Really. Come on. But as I say, unfortunately you just can't get that kind of rhetoric in the West. It's just verboten. It's as simple as that. But yeah, she ends it with hoping that the President...)

I ask you, President, to be the spokesperson and give an advice to our President Conte: Dear Mr. President Conte, next time you receive a phone call from the philanthropist Bill Gates forward it directly to the International Criminal Court for crimes against humanity. If you won't do this, tell us how we should define you, the "friend lawyer" who takes orders from a criminal.

[Alan laughing.]   That's the kind of stuff you want to... This woman has got more cojones than the guys obviously. But that's what has to be said. This isn't speculation she's giving out here. Everything she's saying can be confirmed. Including the damage that's being caused by certain vaccines across the world. And Bill Gates big agenda, he's got his fingers and so many pies, eh. I-yi-yi. N-n-n. Quite something. I’ll put these ones up tonight and you can go through some of the stuff.

We're run by these criminals. There's no doubt about it. I mean, suddenly out of the blue Bill Gates is launched and presented as some kind of superstar. Again, I've mentioned before with some of the characters who literally run big PR companies, who admit their job is to create stars out of scientists. They made Carl Sagan a star, given the same star making machinery as a popstar and actor and actress or whatever, and put out all the guff, all the rubbish about them, how wonderful they are and how intelligent they are. Then they start telling you how you should live and all the rest of it. And you say, wait a minute here, I thought they were just a guy who liked to look at the stars, you know. [Alan with a super deep voice, mimicking Carl Sagan.] There are billions and billions of stars, yes, and you're little nothings, a little midget in amongst them.

Then they start telling you how you should live or die even. That's how it's done. They did the same thing with Einstein, eh. The star making machinery. Most of his speeches by the way were about politics. Yep. Oh, I think I'll follow Einstein because he's got good ideas on politics. Well, [Alan chuckles.] there you go, see. That's why I read the articles from the Council on Foreign Relations when they brought in George Clooney and some of the other actors and actresses in that category that were well known [Angelina Jolie]. It said, because people tend to follow them. They follow the stars. That's what they mean by that. They didn't used to call these folks ‘stars’, remember, until Hollywood was created, and they took it all over. They introduced you to the 'stars' and you follow the stars, you see. Just like a horoscope or something with the zodiac, you know. And sure enough, you know, it doesn't matter what kind of bimbo it is, but she's presented as someone that does amazing things. And woah, well by God, you know, I'll follow that, she knows what she's talking about, I've seen her in that movie where she murdered 10 husbands and... she's awfully good. That's all it takes. Actors and actresses generally have nothing to say. They don't know who they are themselves. They're always acting. But that's what they give you to follow, you see.

They do the same thing with scientists. And then Bill Gates. They made him, because he's got all the money in the world so he can pay for them, make me a star, and they make you a star. Suddenly he is presented on every show as though he's the ultimate authority on... He has no medical training of any kind. It doesn't matter though eh, that's how it's done. Oh, he's a rich man you know. Oh. M-hm-hm. Who made him rich? What made him rich? Do you really think these are all self-made people? They're all part of the big front. As I say, if they have to appear in front of the public and speak and so on, they're not the top. The top ones don't work at all. For those who don't know it.

I'll put these links up tonight. Remember too, again, I keep stressing this because the way things are going as the big tyrants at the top there who literally have given you the only kind of form of communications left and who are censoring everybody way more than any Stasi operation could ever have dreamed of, you know, as I say it will get worse and worse and worse as this goes on. They're saying that it doesn't matter if what you're saying is true and can be verified, if they want you to shut up, they'll say what you are saying is the wrong information. It doesn't matter how true it is or verifiable it is, they've decided they just want rid of you, you see. This is what tyrants do. Down through history. Now it's electronic communication and they've made sure that they are in charge of it all.

I've always said before, you're not given more access to more information or more means to communicate. You're getting less. When they withdraw and eliminate other forms of communication, that they're narrowing your choices, and then they own what's left, right. I told folk back in the 90s what's going to happen. I says, you'll get 20 years out of this Internet, because they've got to get you addicted to it before they start taking away your rights, make you pay for things and so on, and then monitor you yada, yada, ya. And I said, but by then you've got nothing left. I says, don't get rid of your little printing presses and machines, you might need them again. I really mean that.

Because the tyranny that's coming down the pike is way beyond the old Soviet system. Or the Stasi system. The Stasi was better really where they literally had a fantastic technique of forcing folk to spy on other people. A good chunk of the population was spying on all the rest of the people, you never knew who was who. But this is more efficient when you're voluntarily putting all your data up on their system, and they tell you that they've got the rights to use all your data. [Alan chuckles.] And you've gone along with it too, you see, you update yourself to them, and you do it voluntarily, and they've got all that. It won't be hard to come and find you, no matter where you are, and just make you disappear at the right time if need be.

You've got to understand something, and I really.... I don't want to lecture people but... When tyranny takes a real hold and gets going, right now it's not even a fast walk. Once it starts walking quickly, almost at a trot, then you'll see it, you'll see the teeth then. That's how tyranny really works. You've got a chance to do something before it gets to the trotting phase by saying NO, no way, no way at all.

It's going to take as I say the Gandhi technique of a passive kind of resistance, a nonviolent resistance. But definitely as people individually, little lights come on across the planet and say no, no, that's it, that's how things have to work. Because the majority of the public will go along with who makes the most noise. But they will follow the lights going on eventually. If they see it's making an effect and possibly going to win, that's when the rest of them just jump on board. That's what they always do down through history.

Because what they're bringing down here in an atheistic society, like Bertrand Russell said, and he was all for it, is a scientific tyranny. It's not even science. It's bogus science as you know, most of it, but it's under the guise of science. And they've knocked out all your arguments especially with God and religion. That's why they're so cocky about it right now. So, you'd better find your Gods back again and bring it back and start putting it up. Because if you don't do it, they're going to walk all over you and destroy you.

This is a hell on earth, the scientific tyranny, as Bertrand Russell said, it will be truly a hell on earth. That's what he said. But that's what he was all for. He said that, I'd rather it be a scientific tyranny, it will be brutal but that's the way. That's what they’ll do, if you're in the way of the scientific tyranny, you know, you're not a person with rights anymore or even God-given rights or any kind of divine rights at all. You're just a creature no different than a mouse and they'll squash you, you know, like they squash a bug. You're just in the way and you're irrelevant. That's where science eventually always goes in the atheistic type system. I hope you understand that.

So, go into my website @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Take permanent note of all the sites I have listed on the .com site in case any of them go down. Remember too, you can always download the talk, it's much easier that way, and then listen to it when you want, you can stop and start it, etc., because they're pretty long. I put the links up to the topics I mention for those that want to use them. A lot of folk do, [Alan chuckles.] that's what they run their shows on. [Alan chuckles.]   You can help me tick along too by sending some cash my way hopefully and I'll keep going as long as I can. You can see how to do it on my website @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Hopefully very shortly we'll get a temporary reprieve to get some stuff maybe printed up shortly, we'll see how it goes, and get some books out that way. With your support as I say I'll keep ticking along. But I've seen this, what I talk about I've seen personally, and I've had them come AT ME too personally.

I almost died in the hospital when literally the only thing that was keeping me alive was pulled off me. The specialist came, I didn't even know who he was at the time, yelling that he was, he said, I'm a very important man, I was coming out of a kind of semi, the first dose I'd had since I'd been in there, had no idea what he was yelling at me, you know. He said, I can't be sued, he says, I'm a corporation. No one was saying anything about getting sued or anything. I knew this guy. I says, why was he so upset? He had been sent in to give me the death sentence, and I was discharged because of him, without the medication I needed to keep me, that would help me and literally clear up, cure me of the problem. I'm not kidding you, that really happened here. That's how the world really works, folks. So, he had been the guy who had been appointed to do it, and he was in a bit of a panic. Because I couldn't figure out, why was he saying this, why is he saying he's a corporation and he can't be sued. Nobody was threatening him with anything. It took me a while to dawn on me, that's exactly what it was.

So, in the real world, believe you me, they're already working fast and furious. Even the hospitals here anyway say to you, if you go in a second time, by the way, this is bioethics, this is taught in universities now, and bioethics is another thing that should be tossed out and literally burned amongst all the other rubbish that's out there and degrees, and there's an awful lot of trashy degrees out there. But they're dangerous degrees because it's training people who then trained more people in different areas of health on how to look at people and not as really valuable creatures, but as less valuable and even unworthy according to their age and their medical status, etc. etc. That's what it's about, folks. That's why you've got euthanasia being put, really forced upon people now in Canada and different places. Lifesite News has had quite a lot of articles in the past years about that. So have other sites as well.

So, it's quite fascinating to actually see it all happening. Because you don't see any propaganda about marching guys in dark uniforms and jackboots, it doesn't hit home to people. You've been trained that that's what evil is, you see. But the worst evil wears business suits and often casual wear too, the professor class. They are the characters who are advising a generation who will all, who have been radicalized with Antifa groups and all the rest of it, like an army, a Bolshevik Army ready to get let loose upon older people. And they will go for you, and they will eliminate you... with... with... GUSTO, believe you me. That's how they've been trained. You can see it in them. You're responsible for destroying our world, our future. That's been drummed into them through the education system.

So, as I say, cuttingthroughthematrix.com, and help me tick along and you can donate as well. You can see how to do it there. You can even send checks. Now here's some articles here. One article here talks about the availability of genetic data to do with the coronavirus has got biologists thinking that it's possible that the virus may have escaped from the lab in Wuhan. This is what they said initially.

Coronavirus 'did NOT come from animals in Wuhan market', says landmark study

thesun.co.uk / 17 May 2020

The study raises the possibility that the virus may have escaped from a lab in Wuhan, which was known to be studying coronavirus like diseases in bats.

The UK ministers are reportedly "no longer discounting" the possibility the virus escaped from lab.

The link is on the article. That's from the sun.co.uk, the Sun news outfit. So, they get into it.

Wuhan lab was performing coronavirus experiments on bats from the caves where the disease is believed to have originated - with a £3m grant from the US - dailymail.co.uk / 11 April 2020

Remember that, eventually when the Chinese says, oh it could have been the Americans that did it, and then you thought, well it's because of that sporting thing they had with the US over in Wuhan a few months before that all broke out. But I think what the Chinese were also hinting at is that they were given the basic building block of this particular virus from the US, and from Fauci of course. That has been admitted to, or at least the data has come out about it to confirm it.
And...

SARS-CoV-2 is well adapted for humans. What does this mean for re-emergence?

biorxiv.org

(A: As they're getting ready for the spike, oh, it will come back in the fall, you know. But, it's well adapted for humans. They go on about…)

In a side-by-side comparison of evolutionary dynamics between the 2019/2020 SARS-CoV-2 and the 2003 SARS-CoV, we were surprised to find that SARS-CoV-2 resembles SARS-CoV in the late phase of the 2003 epidemic after SARS-CoV had developed several advantageous adaptations for human transmission. Our observations suggest that by the time SARS-CoV-2 was first detected in late 2019, it was already pre-adapted to human transmission to an extent similar to late epidemic SARS-CoV. However, no precursors or branches of evolution stemming from a less human-adapted SARS-CoV-2-like virus have been detected.

What they're telling you is that it seemed to be made. It would have had to. Some of the top virologists have said it would take about 800 years of any kind of, with a lot, put it that way too, 800 years or so to evolve in so many different stages to be so adaptable for attacking humans in the way it's doing and being awfully successful in what it's doing to humans. It would take 800 years from the old SARS, the last SARS type virus to the present Cov 2, you know. So that's what they're really getting at here. It was awfully well, just all ready to go, you might say. Well, that's why other scientists, you know, the white magicians from the laboratories are saying that it had been manipulated to be so potent. Again, they're back into the gain of function. That's what they do in these laboratories.

Don't forget too that Fauci worked, he was one of the overseers for Fort Detrick, eh. Did you know that? And also over the cancer society. Because cancers are often caused by viruses, eh. It's a small little world when you get into it really. He had a finger in lots and lots and lots of pies. But I found that when I was digging through some of the old, old articles from Fort Dietrich. So, he was a very important guy in that field. Which as I say, at the very least you'd have to be totally, you have to have CIA clearance for many, many things, and maybe even higher than that.

But this article goes into it, and a little bit, not really much depth. It gives you an idea of what they're thinking about. The PDF is there too if you want to study it and literally look up on what they have found out. And it is interesting, where they actually admit to certain things in scientific articles without saying it's definitely, they're pointing to the fact that the darn thing had somehow been helped to skip a whole bunch of evolution to do what it's doing. And that's regardless of what Fauci eventually came out and said, oh it probably just did it by itself. Which he had to do when his name started to come in for having been responsible for giving it to China.

Then you've got...

Trump’s WARP SPEED vaccine czar oversaw an infamously BOTCHED vaccination. Wonder why a THIRD of Americans want to dodge this one?

rt.com / 16 May 2020

Nearly a third of Americans might refuse a vaccine for the novel coronavirus, according to a poll conducted earlier this month by Civic Science. The percentage has likely gone up since then, as the 2,900 respondents to that survey gave their answers before Trump announced on Friday that the 12-to-18-month timeline for vaccine development – already unheard-of in the pharmaceutical industry – would be stepped up with an eye toward rolling out a shot by the end of the year.

It’s not just the shockingly abbreviated timetable that has Americans worried about their safety regarding the proposed vaccine – the head of the initiative already has one botched jab under his belt, and he’s invested (literally) in several of the vaccine candidates under development.

(A: They're all completely, you know, these people are so contaminated with corruption, and they've got fingers in all kinds of pies, that you can't say that they're independent working for any kind of health for the public. They're too compromised, and in so many different areas.)

GlaxoSmithKline vaccine chairman Moncef Slaoui was appointed by Trump on Thursday to run the task force his administration is calling Operation Warp Speed. Slaoui spent 30 years with GSK, which is one of dozens of pharmaceutical companies working on a vaccine; he’s also earned close to half a million dollars as a director of Moderna, currently tapped as one of the leading candidates in the vaccine race.

(A: I wouldn’t go near them too.)

Watchdog groups like Public Citizen have already raised alarms about his conflicts of interest, but that’s the least of his problems.

(A: And it's true, they're so glaring they shouldn't be appointed to any of these positions.)

As chief of vaccines at GSK, Slaoui oversaw the development of the disastrous Pandemrix vaccine for swine flu, a shot that was rushed to market without proper testing in the midst of a 2009 epidemic, during which public health officials (A: Oh, you were all going to die then too, by the way.) were shrieking about enormous death tolls that never materialized, with some claiming the death toll would rival the 1918 influenza pandemic (sound familiar?).

The result of the hasty approval process was an unsafe, ineffective shot that left over a thousand recipients permanently brain-damaged (A: …oops.), some 80 percent of them children. Forty percent of NHS staffers were vaccinated under false pretenses, told the shot was safe and effective. The UK government was forced to pay out millions of pounds in compensation, as GSK had refused to supply the drug to governments until it was indemnified against lawsuits. (A: …meaning impervious to lawsuit, they couldn't be sued.)

Pandemrix was never approved for use in the US, and it's possible Trump is unaware his vaccine czar was involved in the sordid debacle.

(A: Why can you keep making the excuse for Trump? I mean, the rubbish I've heard for Trump, honestly, is beyond any kind of comprehension. The man said when he first ran, was it 2016, before he got in, that if he got in he would give pharmaceutical companies and vaccine makers the rights to bypass all kinds of testing on the general public and rush things to market. What part of that don't you understand? Do you think he just was uninformed? It's just astonishing to me. Do you hear the rubbish they used to have, oh somebody took away his cell phone because he was Tweeting…? Do you really believe this tripe? Huh? Huh?! You've never heard any guff like this in your life. N-n-n. So here they go again, maybe he doesn't know what this guy was involved in, maybe he doesn't know. M-hm. Iiiii. But as I say, it wouldn't matter who was in because they're all the same, folks. That's the truth of it. They are all the darn same. It goes on to say here...)

GSK's checkered past isn't exactly a secret stateside. The firm had the dubious distinction of paying out in 2012 what was the largest fine ever paid by a pharmaceutical firm, after admitting to what the Justice Department called "the biggest healthcare fraud in history," shelling out $3 billion as punishment (A: That was a drop in the bucket by the way.) for, among other things, concealing the deadly side effects of its diabetes drug Avandia.

Of course, GSK is hardly the only drug company cutting corners. Moderna, the favorite to "win" Operation Warp Speed, has never brought a vaccine to market before, and the mRNA vaccine it is developing is a type that's never been approved for use in humans. Worse, the company is actually skipping animal trials completely, with its chief medical officer Tal Zaks insisting that he didn't think the intermediate step – carried out to avoid subjecting humans to unnecessary harm – was necessary.

(A: Can you believe that? Hm? As chief medical officer. I wonder how much he gets for promoting that kind of stuff. It says...)

…he didn’t think the intermediate step – carried out to avoid subjecting humans to unnecessary harm – was necessary. (A: Noo…)

It’s a brand-new type, you know, an mRNA type vaccine that will change your cells in your body forever. It’s not the old kind of stuff where you cut bits and pieces of things together in different, and then you grew them on either in eggs, you know, that was the traditional way it was to inject them into eggs, and later on they started to grow them on dog kidneys, that was one as well. And you were getting massive problems with that one too.

That was the one the Department of Defense talked about before because they tried that with flu shots, on flu shots before and they found out... And I've read the articles by the makers of that particular type, say well it's different, it's much better and they can make it much faster than the old egg way and so on. They always give you glowing reports before they've even used it, they always do that to get their shares up, oh my God, and the money just pours in like you wouldn't believe. But the Department of Defense had to eventually start warning them to stop giving out the flu shots in 2017/18. I put up the links to this before from the Department of Defense, I'll try and put it up again tonight.

Because you had a massive cytokine reaction to it. Then you have a second wave going into your lungs too of phagocytes. They eat up all the debris, like a battlefield in a sense, but they can also flood into the lungs and also choke you to death basically and cause hemorrhaging in the process too as it's eating up the dead cells, living on dead cells, that's what happens. And it will continue until you get resolution, that's what happens. It's like a battlefield where viruses have been battling. Then bacteria set in, secondary infections, you see, in the lungs on top of the viral infection. So, it's a big battlefield with dying and dead cells all over the place, and income the phagocytes and then eat them all up, etc. But they cause scarring in the meantime and so on and so on. But anyway, if you survive that long you're going to be in a bad way for a while.

Well, they found out in 2017/18 that the flu shot that they were giving out, at first, they claimed it will, it gave good antibody response. But here's the thing. Once they hit the real flu, the REAL, raw flu IN nature, once they hit it, they had a massive overreaction to it with the cytokine storm, and that's what was killing the people.

We had the same thing in Canada where they panicked at one point, you know, that health group in Canada panicked and the government had to warn people to stop right off the bat, if you've had the, don't take this particular flu shot that year. I remember reading it on the air at the time as well. Because they found the same thing, that folk who were getting the flu shot were WAAY more, actually in that one that they gave in Canada, they were way more susceptible to getting the darn flu than they would if they hadn't taken the shot. There's so much…

You understand, that to write the good success story for these vaccine companies, they spend a lot of big money getting people to make up bogus reports on how wonderful it is. I used to do articles exposing this stuff years ago. They would hire the top guys in the line of virology and bacteriology and so on and have them write glowing reports. Not that they even checked up to see if the folk often existed. But that's how you do it, the conology. Because the rewards are so incredibly lucrative, where you get government signing on every one of their citizens to take shots for whatever it happens to be. BIG, BIG money, guaranteed to get paid by the government, which is the taxpayers' money. But guaranteed, eh?!

And then they're made safe from prosecution. So I wouldn't let them put anything in me unless the doctors or the nurses, I would have all their names and addresses, and written that they knowingly gave me the shot, blah, blah, blah, and folk from the government too if it gets mandated by Trudeau or whoever, then their name is on it too so that they are willing to be, handle the lawsuits and deal with the lawsuits if they're found to be negligent and putting people in danger of their lives basically. How about that? Isn't that a good way to do it?

As I say, they're already, the top virologists are already out saying this thing is blowing over. Blowing over. Meaning, you know, the more lockdown you would take away quickly, you'd get a faster herd immunity to it. But they've done everything to stop the herd immunity, really, to slow it, so that they can get a spike so they can lock you down over the whole winter and into next year. That's what they wanted initially, remember that? [Alan chuckles.] And your system will never be the, anywhere near the same again if they get that. You'll get used to it, yep, folk adapt to it all.

There's an article too that was also put out by Dr Mercola. He talks about Robert F Kennedy Junior again and how he's been doing some courageous work. He said…

The Well-Known Hazards of Coronavirus Vaccines

lewrockwell.com / 11 May 2020 him/ Joseph Mercola

He co-founded Waterkeeper Alliance — the world's largest clean water advocacy group — and provides legal counsel for the Natural Resources Defense Council, which help protect organic producers. (A: …for food and so on.) He has also fought legal battles on behalf of the Informed Consent Action Network, founded by Del Bigtree, and chairs the board of directors of the Children's Health Defense.

Kennedy wrote a brilliant foreword to Judy Mikovits' book "Plague of Corruption"…

While Kennedy was referring to Mikovits' moral courage, the same can be said for Kennedy himself, whose career as an environmental attorney and activist is built on defending those who cannot defend themselves.

This includes children who are being harmed by vaccines that have yet to be tested for safety, especially when given in combination with other vaccines.

What Happened to Trump’s Vaccine Safety Commission? (A: Trump was going to get a vaccine safety commission. But he'd say anything to get in, you know what I mean.)

When President Trump was elected, he contacted Kennedy (A: …right…) and asked him to run his Vaccine Safety Commission. Unfortunately, the Safety Commission never got off the ground:

(A: Most of the stuff that Trump talked about never got off the ground.)

“I agreed to do it, but immediately after that, Pfizer (A: …the big drug company.) wrote a $1 million check to his inauguration committee. He then appointed a Pfizer lobbyist, Alex Azar (A: He’s big up there and I hear his name everywhere.), to run the HHS, and he handpicked a Pfizer insider, Scott Gottlieb (A: He’s all over the thing. It's a small gang, you see.) to run the U.S. Food and Drug Administration. As soon as they got in there, they shut down the Vaccine Safety Commission and any other questioning of vaccines,” Kennedy says.

(A: That's how things work, folks. You're dealing with gangsterism, organized gangsterism. It's the same in every country. It's the same gang, really, different departments of the same gang across the world right now. And they share the loot big time, you know. That's how they do it. Quite good, eh. And really, they're bold. They don't give a darn if they get seen or not, they're so cocksure of themselves. But there you go, Kennedy was asked to run the vaccine safety commission for the president, but immediately after that Pfizer…)

…Pfizer (A: …the big drug company, vaccines...) wrote a $1 million check to his inauguration committee. He then appointed a Pfizer lobbyist, Alex Azar, to run the HHS, and he handpicked a Pfizer insider, Scott Gottlieb to run the U.S. Food and Drug Administration. As soon as they got in there, they shut down the Vaccine Safety Commission and any other questioning of vaccines,” Kennedy says.

“I think a lot of people were telling him, ‘You shouldn’t be doing this,’ and [Bill] Gates was one of them. But I think once he took the money from Pfizer and put in their guys, [the commission] was dead in the water.”

(A: So yeah, Trump knew what was happening. Then they go into the evolution, you know, of viruses.)

How to Accelerate the Evolution of a Virus

As explained by Kennedy, the way they accelerate evolution (A: This is what the gain of function is.) is by taking the coronavirus from (A: This is what they take it from, from the bats right.) the anus of the bat and replicate it in animal tissue such as pangolin kidney tissue. Next, the grown viruses are placed on feral monkey kidney cells, followed by mouse brain tissue.

(A: That's by the way, one of the reasons they have this massive cytokine storm. You see, these animals also have a whole HOST of other viruses in them, humans do too, we carry them all the time, different kinds. But what they're saying, even with the Department of Defense is because they're using, they're growing it on all these different animals, that have these coronaviruses, all kinds of harmless ones too. But you get all, what they call, debris in the actual vaccine from all these other viruses, and for some reason when you get hit with a real coronavirus, from outside of the vaccination, from the air, from nature - if they want to call it nature, I'm very skeptical that many of them are just natural these days - but you get this massive cytokine storm that can kill you. And they're putting it down to this, the other coronavirus types that are, because of the different tissues they're growing viruses on from animals. That's one of the main things they're looking at right now. So, they grow the viruses on, and I think I mentioned last week that there was even an article where one company was trying to grow them in human eye tissue, actually embryos, you know, of aborted fetuses. [Alan chuckles.] These are the black magicians obviously. The white magicians don't do that, they want to do it all for the good of humankind, you understand.)

Each time you transfer the virus to another animal tissue, you increase the risk of zoonotic animal virus contamination (A: That’s what they call virus contamination, you see.) in addition to mutations. According to Kennedy, six years of evolution can be accomplished in a matter of days using this accelerated evolution process. Through this process, extremely viral forms of the virus can be rapidly created. Typically, milder forms are used to create a vaccine. As explained by Kennedy:

“You can take a mild form and give a person that mild form, and they don’t really get sick. They develop the antibodies, and that’s the theory [behind vaccination]. (A: That’s the theory, right.) But there are reasons that they like to create those super viral forms. (A: …the super type.) One is, most of the labs where they do it, like Fort Detrick in [the U.S.] and Wuhan lab in China, are not only vaccine labs but they’re also military labs.

(A: They're biowarfare labs. That's what they're using really.)

So, they want to mess around and look at these viruses that they may be able to weaponize. Not only that, the people who are creating vaccines like to create super viral forms. They give them to mice who have been genetically engineered to have a human immune system, essentially. Then they try to cure them.

(A: They actually, [Alan chuckles.] there was an article last week where they've created another type of super mouse that's even more, has more human genes in it than ever before. M-hm. I tell ya.)

Those experiments were going on in the United States until 2014. They were Dr. Anthony Fauci's projects. President Obama ordered that to stop because they had a lot of lab escape problems (A: A lot of these creatures escape too, mind you. But they also have the viruses escaping.)

in 2014 from three different labs …

(A: So, they had to put a clamp down at the time for it.)

Instead of stopping as he was ordered, Fauci moved those operations to the Wuhan lab in China

(A: This is what I'm saying, this stinks to high heaven with this Fauci and Bill Gates and the whole thing. It really does. Come on here!)

Instead of stopping as he was ordered, Fauci moved those operations to the Wuhan lab in China and continued to do those experiments right up until the time that the coronavirus [pandemic occurred]. In fact, [infectious disease expert] Ian Lipkin was doing those experiments over there when [COVID-19] exploded. And I'll tell you exactly what happened because it's very suspicious."

Kennedy continues telling the story of how the COVID-19 epidemic may have been generated — by releasing the virus — to ensure that dangerous coronavirus research would continue and receive fresh funding:

(A: Here's what happened…)

"When President Trump came in, Obama had an office in the White House for pandemic defense, for pandemic security. They were involved in funding [coronavirus research projects in Wuhan] through Fauci. President Trump ended all funding for that office September 20, 2019. (A: It's interesting, the dates, eh? And when did they have that Event 201?) So that was the last paycheck any of those scientists got.

On September 30 [2019], a whole lot of scientists were laid off in Wuhan. October 1 is when the first case of [COVID-19 was reported]. So, it’s suspicious because it looks like there’s a possibility — and I’m speculating here; I want to make that clear — but there’s a possibility that somebody who lost their job in that lab … could have released the virus.

(A: It might have been somebody who wasn't even in the lab, folks, who just ordered it released. You know that yourselves, eh. Because the whole agenda is to come out of this. Your whole way of living is completely altered, folks. And they want this to be permanent. And having you bend over backwards to start with, with lockdowns and social distancing and all this kind of stuff, is just the start of it. IF you let them get away with it. It's a prewritten script here, and they needed this thing to happen to bring it into being.)

An even broader agenda appears to be the introduction of a far more authoritarian regime, along with the transfer of wealth from average people to the richest through a planned economic collapse.

(A: Of course, that’s happening now with trillions of dollars being dished out. You're supposed to be in perpetual debt forever, massive debt, worse than before. You're going into the austerity program that the United Nations had the British sign on to years ago. I did all the talks at the time and said what do you think austerity means? It means poverty. You're going to be living in poverty, mandated poverty. Of course, this article ends with a whole, I'm only partway through it but...)

Coronavirus Vaccine May Be a Disaster Waiting to Happen

I'll put the links up anyway for those who want to read it for themselves. And it's good to read, you know. Most folk now are looking for visual, visual little clips, bits and bytes from YouTube or somewhere. But it's good to read stuff. It sticks in your head longer, and better actually, I always find that.

And again…

Influenza Vaccination and Respiratory Virus Interference Among Department of Defense Personnel During the 2017-2018 Influenza Season pubmed.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov / Oct 2019

Greg G Wolff

Armed Forces Health Surveillance Branch

(A: It's an official branch of the Air Force and so on.)

Wright-Patterson Air Force Base.

Abstract

Purpose: Receiving influenza vaccination may increase the risk of other respiratory viruses, (A: Well, they're growing them on animal tissue now, that have different coronaviruses. And that's what’s called, you end up getting virus interference...) a phenomenon known as virus interference. Test-negative study designs are often utilized to calculate influenza vaccine effectiveness. The virus interference phenomenon goes against the basic assumption of the test-negative vaccine effectiveness study that vaccination does not change the risk of infection with other respiratory illness, thus potentially biasing vaccine effectiveness results in the positive direction. This study aimed to investigate virus interference by comparing respiratory virus status among Department of Defense personnel based on their influenza vaccination status. Furthermore, individual respiratory viruses and their association with influenza vaccination were examined.

Results: We compared vaccination status of 2880 people with non-influenza respiratory viruses to 3240 people with pan-negative results. Comparing vaccinated to non-vaccinated patients, the adjusted odds ratio for non-flu viruses was 0.97 (95% confidence interval (CI): 0.86, 1.09; p = 0.60). Additionally, the vaccination status of 3349 cases of influenza were compared to three different control groups: all controls (N = 6120), non-influenza positive controls (N = 2880), and pan-negative controls (N = 3240). The adjusted ORs for the comparisons among the three control groups did not vary much (range: 0.46-0.51).

Conclusions: Receipt of influenza vaccination was not associated with virus interference among our population. Examining virus interference by specific respiratory viruses showed mixed results. Vaccine derived virus interference was significantly associated with coronavirus and human metapneumovirus; however, significant protection with vaccination was associated not only with most influenza viruses, but also parainfluenza, RSV, and non-influenza virus coinfections.

What they're telling you here is, where they've initially tested after they've given it to you, you'll get some antibodies. The problem with, the conflict is there when you hit the actual virus that it's supposed to protect you against, in its raw state in nature, you have this massive, massive cytokine storm. You've been programmed to have it through the contamination of the other viruses in the vaccines, from the animals that they're growing this specific virus on. It takes other viruses with it. They can't clean it out, you see.

That's what happened even with the polio vaccine, remember, where it had hundreds of animal, they call it Simian, the monkey, viruses. They were in every single shot; they couldn't take them out. So, they claim. Including the Simian 40, which was the cancer-causing virus. Well, that's never been, that's what they're still getting yet. You're still getting all kinds of viruses from the animal tissue they're growing this particular virus on.

This Flu Shot Is Not Like the Others

time.com / 30 Oct 2014

(A: Now, this article goes back to 2014, right. This is all connected. It doesn't matter the names or anything they give, they're all different types of vaccines, but they're often connected together by the same companies in fact, many of them. 2014…)

This year Novartis (A: Novartis, right.) shipped its first full batch of Flucelvax, a new vaccine that was only approved by the Food and Drug Administration in 2012. The company made a limited amount of the shot last year, but there are more doses to go around this flu season. And for the first time, the doses were made at the company’s newly approved U.S. plant in Holly Springs, North Carolina.

(A: Remember where the coronavirus that Fauci sent over to Wuhan, it came from North Carolina too.)

The vaccine is made without growing the influenza virus in eggs (A: This is how it’s normally done.) chicken, (A: Right, so this new type, they didn't use the chicken eggs.) which is the way that flu shots were made for more than four decades. Instead, Flucelvax is grown in kidney cells from dogs. The technology means that the shot can be made in less time than a traditional flu shot—enough virus can be churned out in about 65 hours to 75 hours, compared to the six months or so it takes to grow in chicken eggs. It also means that people who are allergic to eggs (A: Oh, they don’t care if you’re allergic to chicken eggs or not, folks. Look at what they’re going to pump into you anyway. [Alan chuckles.] Eh? They don’t care about the side effects of pumping in stuff from dog, the viruses from dog kidneys and so on, you know. So that's the excuse they give you, you know, they don't want folk to be allergic to eggs and so on, and now they have a different option...) now have another option for getting immunized against the flu.

(A: The only thing is, though, if you don't go with the egg type, you're left with the dog type. I can guarantee it, when you walk in a park you'll want, you'll have a strange urge to go up, and you just need to go to every lamppost that you see. Including the wastepaper bin, you just can't help yourself, right.)

In studies that the FDA reviewed before approving the vaccine, the shot was 84% effective (A: They always tell you the same thing.) in preventing flu among adults …

(A: Right. That they do, that the FDA does, their pals in the FDA... These people are all, they're like musical chairs moving from these companies and into the FDA and back again into the company. I've done talks on that too, years ago.)

…in preventing flu among adults who were vaccinated compared to those who received a placebo. People getting Flucelvax produced around the same amount of antibodies to the influenza virus as those who were immunized with a chicken egg-based flu vaccine.

Using animal cells instead of chicken eggs, say Novartis officials, allows them to have more control over the purity of the final vaccine. How well influenza grows in the chicken eggs is variable—some eggs or batches of eggs help the virus grow, while others aren't as conducive to producing large amounts of influenza.

The cell-based technology is also a plus during a flu pandemic, since the platform can produce more doses quickly to control an outbreak as a particular influenza virus spreads among a population. The company has produced doses of pandemic flu vaccine against H5N1 using the cell technology, and it's keeping them in deep freeze as part of the U.S. government stockpile in the event of a pandemic.

The FDA has approved seven different types of flu shots—in addition to Flucelvax and the standard vaccine made from chicken eggs that protects against three strains of influenza, there is also a shot that protects against four strains of flu; for the needle-phobic, one with a microneedle injects just into the skin and doesn't penetrate into the muscle, making it less painful; for the elderly who need more protection, (A: Right, this is the in thing now, you've got to give the elderly more protection, hm, bigger doses of it.) there is a high-dose vaccine; …

Now, if the smaller doses are having reactions, with younger people, what do you think, and you're going to give heavier doses to the elderly who have got weakened immune systems? If you've got a weakened immune system and you're pumping a heavier, more stronger, more virile dose into the elderly, what do you think that's going to do?! Hm? It's astonishing. So, it's, again we're back to voodoo again, isn't it? Magical thinking. Well, the elderly, they've got a more weakened immune system, so let's pump more of the stuff into them. Is that to try to terrify the body - the Lysenko affect, you know - into start to working again, give them a bigger dose of something? If a small dose isn't going to work very well, why not give them a bigger dose? If their immune system is so compromised and weakened, it can't utilize itself, or the vaccine, and produce antibodies. In fact, they're going to have a massive reaction to the vaccine. Definitely. And it happens.

Lysenko by the way was a favorite of Stalin. He came up with the bright idea, it was to do with communist theory, they could force society to evolve, you see. Genetically in a way by... As though... If you brought up the educated classes, from the working class into the educated classes, it would continue and evolve and evolve by itself, like a learned memory, a genetic memory in the cellular structure of everybody. But he thought that you could do it with wheat, I think it was wheat. It just wouldn't grow in some parts of Siberia. So, the idea was to try to shock it, freeze it, and bring it back into the warmth. Like a torture system, you know, like kind of like a Pavlovian style but for plants. And by doing so you'd force it to evolve, to adapt to grow in freezing temperatures in Siberia.

And to show you how terrified and you should be afraid of, a lot of folk who kept studying Lysenko and said, this isn't going to work, you know, other biologists and so on, just, it's not working... They were executed by Stalin. You'd better understand, folk are ruthless at the top when it comes to these ideas. Because they're a bit wonky to start with in their head, you know. There ya go. So, this article was from Time, when they were bringing out the, let's go back to getting more viruses and coronaviruses from animals by growing it on animals rather than the eggs. Why do you think they did it in the eggs eventually anyway? It's because they were doing it before with animals. [Alan laughing.] So, after a while folk forget and, oh, they won't remember, y'know, what happened the last time.

And again…

Flu vaccine grown in dog kidney cells

After that wonderful glowing report there, right? Okay? Have you got it? Or have you already forgotten it? How they said, their 85% success rate, right. Here's an article, which you always see after these fantastic and of how glowing...

Flu vaccine grown in dog kidney cells another failure

nexusnewsfeed.com

(A: Oh dear, hey, I thought it was going to be a success and all that stuff.)

A cell-based flu vaccine, Flucelvax, grown in dog kidney cells became available (A: …again…) during the 2017 to 2018 flu season

(A: Right. That’s what the DoD said, that’s what they were giving them to them, right. By the way, that's what they were giving, something similar, in Italy this last winter, eh. Hm? A novel type again, eh, hm? So...)

Flucelvax (A: …this wonderful thing...), made by Seqirus, was supposed to offer advantages over egg-based flu vaccines

A study by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) revealed the cell-based vaccine worked only a little bit better than the conventional flu shot in protecting seniors — which isn’t saying much

(A: [Alan chuckles.] This is what the report says. [Alan chuckles.])

While flu vaccines overall had only 24 percent effectiveness in preventing flu-related hospitalizations in people aged 65 and older, the Flucelvax vaccine had an effectiveness rate of only 26.5 percent in that population

(A: Which really is negligible at all. So all that money and these glowing reports, because they always give you, they pay really important, really professional writers to give them glowing reviews, you know, and they always end up with the same thing after it's been pumped into the public.)

Most flu vaccines in the U.S. are grown in chicken eggs, but during the 2017 to 2018 flu season, a cell-based flu vaccine, Flucelvax, grown in dog kidney cells became available. This vaccine was licensed in 2012 and is approved for individuals aged 4 years and over. As the effectiveness of conventional flu shots continues to leave much to be desired, the new Flucelvax vaccine was touted as a new-and-improved version that would protect more people once flu season hit.

In reality, a study by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) revealed the shot worked only a little bit better than the conventional flu shot in protecting seniors — which isn’t saying much. While flu vaccines overall had only 24 percent effectiveness in preventing flu-related hospitalizations in people aged 65 and older, the Flucelvax vaccine had an effectiveness rate of only 26.5 percent in that population.

In addition, according to Seqirus, the cell-cultured vaccine is superior because it doesn’t rely on egg availability (A: Like they've got a shortage of eggs or something.), which could be affected by avian flu…

(A: So, they give you all this guff, you see, as to why they came out in the first place. N-n-n. Yeah, they cause problems obviously because you had these terrible cytokine storms after you got the shots, when you hit the actual viruses that were out and around you, around about most of society. Now this article goes on and eventually gets to the point. Again, I'll put all these articles up @cuttingthroughthematrix.com for those that want to look them up. It said that there's more to your immune system and the flu shots than just what they've said before. They keep repeating, a lot of articles today, they'll repeat the same things over and over, almost about five times in five paragraphs saying the same stuff. But eventually it gets to the point. It says…)

Your Immune System’s Response to Flu Vaccine Can Make You More Susceptible to the Flu

(A: Remember, this all comes from the BEST people money can buy in the professions, eh, that bring you this stuff. And yet all these years later, every year it's an oops, oops, oops, well, oops.)

The flu vaccine is described as the best tool to stay healthy during flu season despite years of dismal failure.

(A: Well, who says it's the best tool? If you're healthy generally you don't need anything. You wouldn't get, you know, you wouldn't even get the side effects of the flu or even simple effects of the flu. Most folk who've got the coronavirus or have had it already, didn't know they had it. They're not sick with it, most of them. It's the same with the flu. A lot of folk, as I say, had the viruses of polio going through them, most folk did and had no symptoms and it left them, it's as simple as that.)

There are many reasons why flu vaccines are often ineffective, starting with vaccine mismatches. Each year, health officials make educated guesses (A: And that's what it is, here you are, right, from the people that want to jab things into your body, from dead tissues and so on of different creatures and animals, they make educated guesses, right...) as to which influenza strains will be circulating in order to include them in that year’s vaccine. Often, the vaccines are not well matched to circulating viruses.

(A: That's generally what happens. They always tell you in the spring, well it was the wrong combination.)

However, there’s more to it than this, in large part due to the complexity of your immune system and how it works. A term known as heterologous immunity describes the memory your immune system has of previous infections, which allow it to respond to similar infections later. (A: You see.) Sometimes this is a good thing, giving you protection from circulating diseases — but not always. As noted in the Journal of Leukocyte Biology, heterologous immunity has two faces: protection and immunopathology:

(A: This is awfully important this part. So, your immune system has a form, a form of a memory, right, to previous infections…)

“Immunity to previously encountered viruses can alter responses to unrelated pathogens. This phenomenon, which is known as heterologous immunity, has been well established in animal model systems. Heterologous immunity appears to be relatively common and may be beneficial by boosting protective responses. However, heterologous reactivity can also result in severe immunopathology.” (A: That’s damage.)

This may help explain why flu vaccine may offer some level (A: That’s what I was telling you earlier.)

(A: Often the shots, especially when they're grown in, eh, this hodgepodge of animal tissues and so on, with many... Humans have stacks and stacks of viruses in them at any time. We do. Often, you're born I think with carrier viruses too, or pigeon viruses, or carrier viruses, I always call them pigeon ones. You're born with a lot of them too or you get them from your mom and so on, and they're harmless throughout your life. But animals have them too. Often, they can be similar but not the same. So once you’re putting ones from animals into you, into your bloodstream, especially if there's ones that they've been using for vaccinations, you're having this incredible reaction to it with an overreaction of your entire immune system going on the warpath at once, boomf!, when it hits the real virus that it's supposed to protect you against.)

(A: They know this! But they don't like to, they don't like the tout it too often when they're trying to force you to take the latest shot. Because big money, every year, you know, big money. Every year. Millions, maybe billions going across the world in vaccinations, eh. So, it's not wise for them to, if they want big profits, to tell you the truth. So here in this article it doesn't go into it too deeply, this one...)

“Immunity to previously encountered viruses can alter responses to unrelated pathogens.

(A: But the pathogens, you see, are related to it because they're in the shots. That's what I was saying. You get all this other, they call it debris, from other viruses from the animals, that they're pumping into you. It doesn't say that in this one but that's what it is.)

This phenomenon, which is known as heterologous immunity, has been well established in animal model systems.

The strategy of annual flu vaccination may, in fact, be backfiring, leaving those who have been vaccinated annually less protected than those with no prior flu vaccination history.

(A: You see this over and over again in their own writings.)

Research presented at the 105th International Conference of the American Thoracic Society in San Diego even revealed that children who get seasonal flu shots are more at risk of hospitalization than children who do not.

(A: Now, these aren't conspiracy sites, folks. And the International Conference of the American Thoracic Society isn't some cloak and dagger thing, you know. This is what they found.)

Children who had received the flu vaccine had three times the risk of hospitalization as children who had not. Among children with asthma, the risk was even higher.

Despite its questionable effectiveness, we're likely to see more cell-based flu vaccines rolled out. Already, there's also a flu vaccine produced using genetically modified insect cells (A: That's for folk who are on drugs and like a good BUZZ.) and one on the horizon manufactured in Nicotiana benthamiana, a type of tobacco plant known for its ability to make proteins at a high rate of speed. Yet, no one knows what the long-term effects of such vaccinations will be, or whether their purported benefits are truly worth the risk. (A: Hm. Well I guess they'll probably take the nicotiana one, along with the insects, and they really do get a buzz then, eh, when they're smoking it.)

The Cochrane Collaboration concluded in 2014 that the NNT (number needed to treat) for the flu vaccine is 71.14 In other words, 71 people have to be vaccinated in order for a single case of influenza to be avoided. (A: [Alan laughing.]) In a 2017 scientific review, on the other hand, (A: The links are here for it.) the NNT for vitamin D was 33, meaning one person would be spared from acute respiratory infection such as the flu for every 33 people taking a vitamin D supplement.

(A: No kidding. I guess if you were to get more sun it would certainly help too. There's no doubt about it. This article goes on to eventually natural killer cells...)

Natural killer (NK) cells are a specific type of white blood cell. They’re an important component of your cell-mediated (innate) immune system and are involved in both viral diseases and cancer. Researchers recently discovered that with enough NK cells in your system, you will not contract influenza. (A: The link is there for that too.)

KLRD1 is a receptor gene found on the surface of NK cells, and the level of KLRD1 found in a person’s blood prior to exposure to the influenza virus was able to predict with 86 percent accuracy whether that individual would contract the flu.

Anyway, it goes on and on and on. But don't be scared to look at every sort of article out there. You get other ones with fanatics that would just tell you garlic, eat garlic, garlic cures everything, all that kind of stuff, you know. It's fine for people who want to believe it all, but the fact is, you'll find lots of good information that have been taken from official sources on your journeys. You can verify them, this is the whole point, you've got to verify them too. It's amazing what goes on. Here's an update from Florida…

Florida Health Department manager told to delete coronavirus data

Apparently, she designed a program for them, for Florida and the health department, and they didn't like the numbers she was giving them with different things. I think part of the study that she did was showing you that people had already had, that had been testing positive to the flu before it was supposedly out, or something like that.

But anyway, whatever it was, it just shows you that you can't believe the official stuff they're giving out. Especially during this pandemic, where they're lumping in sick people, sick and dying people with all kinds of things. Like everybody else in society you'll probably find they've got the debris of all these are viruses in their nasal cavities. But they say, well if they detect that at all they put them down as Covid deaths. That is not science! That's a political, that's an agenda, a social political and economic agenda at work here.

No doubt about it, folks. So, they really, you can't believe anything they tell you anymore. So, this particular woman anyway, she was told to delete coronavirus data and was forced to resign. I'll put that link out there to for folk who want to see it. Her name is Rebekah Jones.

Florida Health Department manager told to delete coronavirus data forced to resign, she says - tampabay.com / 19 May 2020

Another article here…

How coronavirus hijacks human cells and takes over our genes then turns our immune system against us as virologist says 'It's like nothing I've seen in 20 years' - dailymail.co.uk / 21 May 2020

You'll find other ones too who are still hyping up the terror and terror and terror. But as I say, you're finding people who have had previous shots, by the way, there's no doubt about it, are having this massive reaction when they actually hit the actual virus itself. And I think this goes to pre-, I suspect like the last article, and many other articles too, and the Department of Defense, it's because you've had shots already that have literally triggered your immune system to go all out, to go into all-out war, like never before, against something that it could deal with if you hadn't had the shots prior to it. I really, that seems to be what's happening.

This article too is another good article.

Harvard Medical School Prof Questions Fauci's "Shading" Vaccine Results

zerohedge.com / 21 May 2020 / Tyler Durden

(A: That's what it says here.)

At a moment in time when narrative-following “scientists” are lauded like unquestionably omniscient supreme beings enabling dumb-as-a-rock-partisan-politicians to play omnipotent overlords without fear of blowback, the world needs more people like William Haseltine.

The last two weeks have seen markets and politicians jump exuberantly at the hope of every press release from a biotech firm that proclaims one of their pet rabbits didn't die when they fed it their latest DNA-reshaping test material.

(Thousands of wild and domestic rabbits are being killed off by a deadly virus - dailymail.co.uk / 19 May 2020)

Barstool Sports' Dave Portnoy said it right - when did we shift from "flatten the curve, (A: Remember all that false... flatten the curve...) flatten the curve, flatten the curve" to "we have to fund a cure or everyone's going to die."

(A: Well, they did that from the start, folks, if you listen to Fauci and the WHO, and every health appointee to the government. They've been on board with the EXACT same agenda from the very beginning. Nothing, your natural immunity is no use, you see. Although it works, you see. It's no use, no, you've got to get an artificial one, you've got to take their very expensive treatment for it, you see, their vaccination. It's been like that from the beginning. And again, this whole, you can't get out of your house until you've had your vaccination. They weren't even carrying it, if you were already immune to it through antibodies, through natural antibodies. It didn't matter. That's the first time in history too, eh. Oh, we've got a better type of antibody, it's synthetic, it's scientifically made, it's better than natural. It says…)

And so, that is where we find ourselves... Every talking head proclaiming the same malarkey - we will re-open carefully, with PPE, and social distancing, and whatever else is mandated from on-high "until we find a vaccine in 12-18 months" at which point the world will be made whole again and Kumbaya...

Former Harvard Medical School professor and founder of the university's cancer and HIV/AIDS research departments, William Haseltine dared to speak out today about the high level of (A: BS. That's bovine fecal matter…) bulls--- and damage that is being done to "trust" in "scientists" and even dared to break the one holy writ that shall go un-mentioned, throwing some shade on Dr. Fauci.

Reflecting on Moderna's press release this week (which was immediately followed by massive equity raises …

(A: And that's how they do it, like I mentioned before. As soon as they say, oh, my God, this is a great thing we've got here, Moderna's press release...)

Reflecting on Moderna's press release this week (which was immediately followed by massive equity raises across numerous biotech firms and upgrades from the underwriters, surprise), Haseltine said:

"If a CFO had tried to get away with such an opaque and data-less statement it would have been treated with derision and possibly an investigation."

The CNBC anchor desperately tried to guilt him into the official narrative of clinging to any hope as long as it lifts stocks - no matter its utter bulls---iness (A: [Alan chuckles.])- but Haseltine destroyed her naive party line:

"we all know it’s an emergency, and in an emergency it's even more important to be clear on what you know and what you do not know."

Moderna did not follow the process:

"you don't know what happened, we don't know what happened, there is no data."

(A: It's just a wonderful thing we've come up with, this wonderful, wonderful...)

"Whether [Fauci] shaded what should have been done, I think is an important question. He's obviously under enormous pressure for positive results but it was not the right thing to do if you can't see the data."

The full interview below is a must-watch by all who care about their freedom being controlled by a narrative directed by fearmongering elites in the name of "science" when the "science" is a) being ignored, b) being bastardized to meet a political need, c) being treated as if handed down on high from the man himself, or d) being manipulated explicitly.

(A: And isn't that the truth of it?)

Haseltine’s interview is perfect lead into his opinion piece in todays’ Washington Post:

(A: So, he actually gave his talk in the Washington Post. It says…)

Faith in medicine and science is based on trust. But today, in the rush to share scientific progress in combating covid-19, that trust is being undermined.

(A: I wouldn't even say undermined. I think it's just a massive hole that's in the ground, just gone.)

Private companies, governments and research institutes are holding news conferences to report potential breakthroughs that cannot be verified.

(A: That's because it's so lucrative, right. It's the Klondike.)

The results are always favorable, but the full data on which the announcements are based are not immediately available for critical review. This is “publication by press release,” and it’s damaging trust in the fundamental methods of science and medicine at a time when we need it most.

(A: You saw the same thing by the way, I was waiting for it, and I knew darn well that Fauci wasn't going to approve any medication or give his go ahead or not to anything until it came from Gilead, the company, I just knew it. And sure enough, that's what happened. He gave his nod and they had a great write up, again, the same kind of thing, without any real data to back up the claims. Even though, was it Remdesivir, had been tested in China already and they hadn't found any improvement with it at all pretty well. Or negligible or very little. The same with subsequent other tests on it as well. The same kind of thing. But it doesn't matter. Facts don't matter when it comes to making money. You know, just....)

(A: There were con men who used to sell posies, you know, handkerchiefs with rose flowers and petals in them when they thought that the plague, the black death in England was caused by some kind of strange, um, what did they call it? Something in the air, an idea that there was something in the air. They didn't know what it was back then, but they knew that folk caught it. So, if they could have a good, nice smell in the thing it would drive away the nasty, the nasty evil magical whatever it was. So, they had these rose scented posies, wrapped inside handkerchiefs, big handkerchiefs to drive it away. At that time, it was the greatest thing since sliced bread too, mind you. Not that they had sliced bread back then, unless you sliced yourself. But that's what they really touted at one time.)

(A: The other ones too, I won't mention, it was quite fascinating. The ones who sold these things actually would bring them in even by the shipload at some point in London, and they also told the people it works best if you could find a good outhouse and shock your system somehow, to shock this terrible whatever it was, this miasma in the air, and shock it from your system by having bad foul stuff smell and then to their lovely smell of the posies, eh. Shock treatment to drive it out. A kind of exorcism. Just like chemotherapy and radiation is medicine's attempt at exercising the disease. That's what it is, it's an exorcism. Hit it with everything that would terrify you and it should kill everything, because you don't know what else to do. That's how it works. Anyway, here we go this article continues that…)

The Moderna announcement described a safety trial of its vaccine based on eight healthy participants. (A: Eight, right.) The claim was that in all eight people, the vaccine raised the levels of neutralizing antibodies equivalent to those found in convalescent serum of those who recovered from covid-19.

(A: Right. So, they're trying to say that their vaccine had equivalent antibodies that you would get naturally if you had recovered from it.)

What to make of that claim? Hard to say, because we have no sense of what those levels were. (A: There ya go, you see.) This is the equivalent of a chief executive of a public company announcing a favorable earnings report without supplying supporting financial data, which the Securities and Exchange Commission would never allow.

There is a legitimate question regarding what Moderna's unsupported assertion means. The scientific and medical literature reports that some people who have recovered have little to no detectable neutralizing antibodies. (A: [Alan chuckles.] And the link is here too by the way. [Alan chuckles.]) There is even existing scientific literature that suggests it is possible neutralizing antibodies may not protect animals or humans from infection or reinfection by coronaviruses.

Such "publication by press release" (A: …which is just advertising.) seems to be a standard practice lately.

(A: It's not just lately, hm.)

The National Institutes of Health announced last month that the drug remdesivir offered a clear benefit to covid-19 patients with moderate disease, shortening the length of their hospital stay by several days. But did it really? Twenty days after the announcement, the supporting data has still not been published. Without the data, no doctor treating a patient can be sure they are doing the right thing.

(A: Well, they already had studies done in the far east who said they saw no real difference at all with it. But you see, this is... I mean, why would, why would, you know, that be the one that Fauci waited to push? I knew it was… You'll find they are all in bed together, folks, it's as simple as that, you know, at the top.)

Another paper, published the same day, found that remdesivir had no measurable effect (A: This is an article.) on patient survival or the amount of virus detectable in nasopharynx and lung secretions. What then should a practicing physician do? Follow the unsupported advice of a news announcement or a medical report published in a leading scientific journal? This is not an idle question: The NIH announcement triggered a global stampede for limited supplies of the drug.

(A: And that's what they do, it's a big, massive sales pitch, you see.   Oh, y'know, oh panic, we've got the, we can treat you and save your lives, oooo.)

To the Jenner Institute’s credit, it does warn visitors to its website that there have been many false reports about the progress of its vaccine trial. (A: [Alan chuckles.]) Still, having a scientist working on the trial paint preliminary results in such a positive manner without having yet released the full data is cause for concern.

The media also bears responsibility.

...not just for lauding each great announcement they give you on the medical field but also for giving you, I'd say for the reign of terror. You couldn’t have the reign of terror without the media ACROSS THE BOARD being complicit in it. Eh? Isn't that something? Another one too is this article here…

The Full Fauci Timeline: Sorting Fact From Fiction

zerohedge.com / 21 May 2020

Anthony Fauci’s name has become dinner-table familiar as people discuss the doctor’s warnings, his comments, and President Donald Trump’s responses to the COVID-19 pandemic. As usual, a firm line has been drawn between the left and right sides of the aisle: Some blame the president for all the world’s problems and declare Fauci the hero in this crisis; on the flip side, the doctor is the villain and the president has been misled and misinformed.

In truth, the whole Coronavirus fiasco has been a pile of convoluted, wishy-washy, contradictory information since the beginning. The blame game won’t fix anything, but perhaps stepping back to examine a timeline of facts and figures may bring clarity to the epic snarl of today’s social-distancing America.

Who Is Dr. Fauci?

(A: And it goes through his history, a little bit.)

In 1962, he graduated from the College of the Holy Cross with a Bachelor of Arts in Classics.

(A: But he really went in very quickly into the National Institutes of Health. Very quickly. He was picked up, became a clinical associate…)

In 1966, he finished first in his class at Cornell University Medical College with a Doctor of Medicine. After completing his residency in internal medicine, he joined the National Institutes of Health (NIH) in 1968, becoming a clinical associate in the Laboratory of Clinical Investigation at the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases (NIAID). In 1974, he became the head of the Clinical Physiology Section and, by 1980, the chief of the Laboratory of Immunoregulation.

Fauci is no stranger to controversy surrounding his findings and methods. In the 1980s, he was one of the leading researchers during the AIDS epidemic.

(A: And that was quite a fiasco back then too, folks. I remember it well. There was a lot of, again, it wasn't just debate, it was almost fisticuffs with all the different groups fighting for the causes of it and what it actually was. Fauci suddenly started, he appointed Gallo I think to be the head, and his theory became the main one that got pushed ever since. Even the AIDS one too, they had the articles out from the government, a bill that had been put in years before, for the government to actually, for the Defense Department to come up with a disease or some kind of a weapon which could destroy the immune system of an enemy in any nation. That circulated. That was official actually. It wasn't just paranoid conspiracy stuff. It was official; you could actually trace it and look at it and find it. And bingo, out came the strange AIDS thing, y'know. M-hm.)

At 79, the doctor has advised six presidents on everything from HIV to biodefense drugs.

(A: I'd say more than biodefense. I'd say biowarfare and bioattack perhaps. Because all these things could be used either to help, supposedly, by their own words, or as a weapon, when you're into gain of function, you know.)

(A: And don't forget too, that Fauci's wife, I think it is, she's the head of one of the government, or attached to the government sites for bioethics. Which is right up at the top right now, isn't it, who lives, who dies and too many people yada, yada, you know. It's all coincidence though. Yeah, it is.)

(A: It goes into some of the stuff that we got, like a summary of information from December of coronavirus being confirmed in Wuhan by Health Authorities. In January, through January, what happens, the releases that were given to the press, or by the press. It says…)

Jan 21: In an interview, Greg Kelly of Newsmax asked Fauci how serious the virus was. The doctor urged everyone to take the precautions that the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) put out, “but this is not a major threat for the people in the United States, and this is not something that the citizens of the United States right now should be worried about.”

(A: There ya go. There ya go.)

But yeah, everything that's been done to hype it up and hype it up, happen because of a lack of total or high immunity, it's because it's been caused by the lockdown, otherwise we would have had it well over and gone. Maybe a little spike in the winter and then that would phase out too. That's generally what happens with this type, with these viruses.

Which terrified the public. It's because the public, maybe for a lot of the public anyway, for the first time they had no idea that a lot of these viruses DO come out of laboratories and have in the past as well. Including the previous SARS one that they say escaped from laboratories there too in the Far East. So why are people really, you know? Well they've never heard of this before. They think everything just happens naturally. M-hm.

By the way, I think it's lauded as a wonderful thing by the Guardian, but it says…

All adults in England to be deemed organ donors in 'opt-out' system

(A:...for those that didn't know it. I'm not shocked by it because I know in Ontario here in Canada, I put out the article years ago when they suddenly declared that if you go into the hospital here, you're automatically an organ donor. As I say, you don't know if they're going to euthanize you and kill you for your organs or what they're going to do. I mean, you've got to start considering reality here, folks. Everything is changed. Massively. It's a paradigm change. Totally. When these things happen.)

All adults in England to be deemed organ donors in 'opt-out' system

theguardian.com / 19 May 2020

(A: So, you're going to be an organ donor, unless, and you die in hospital, right. It says…)

All adults in England will be considered organ donors when they die, after a change to the law this week that will presume consent unless the family intervenes or the individual opts out.

(A: That's what I'm saying, you definitely need the advocates, you know.)

At present 80% of adults in England say they would consider becoming a donor, but fewer than 40% have signed up to the current register. The change, which comes into effect on 20 May, could save hundreds of lives each year.

(A: It’s a massive business, organ stuff. A lot of this stuff is sold out of the country as well. And they always give you the same kind of story…)

The law is called Max and Keira’s law (A: To make it more personal, you see.), after a boy whose life was saved when he received the heart of a nine-year-old girl who died in a car crash. (A: Hm. There ya go.)

Family consent will still be required for organs or tissues to be retrieved, both out of consideration for the family, and to make sure additional relevant information is gathered.

(A: They give you a list actually of the stuff they're collecting. It's quite... It's like a shopping supply, you know. It says…)

While the need for internal organs is the most acute, the need for tissues, particularly corneas, is also urgent. Twenty corneas – 10 donors – are needed every day.

“Last week we had 63 out of 70 so it was a good week. But we have weeks where we might be down to 45,” Gillan told the Guardian earlier this year during a visit to the Liverpool site of NHS Blood and Tissue, the largest tissue and eye bank in Europe.

Heart valves are also in short supply – 60 donations are needed every month, but recent figures suggest only 40 a month are coming in.

In 2019, the volcanic explosion on New Zealand’s White Island resulted in many horrific injuries. Of the survivors taken to hospital in the aftermath, 27 had burns to more than 30% of the body.

Medical authorities said 1.2 million sq cm of skin had been ordered from the US to treat the wounded. The tissue was to be used for temporary dressings until the victims’ skin recovered and could be grafted.

The Liverpool site, which holds human tissues from bone to tendons and corneas, offered skin to New Zealand from its stocks – the bank currently holds 500,000 sq cm of the tissue, with each packet lasting five years.

(A: It goes on and on and on about how they have to work hard to get all these organs and stuff.)

Trained teams have just 24 hours after death in which to retrieve tissues, often from hospital mortuaries.

(A: Hm.)

This is a nice little article here, [Alan chuckles.] to cheer you up. [Alan laughing.] Quite something hey. It's big business though. This isn't free, remember that, it's big, big business. The top surgeons come in to do it and they get incredible salaries and so on. Again, I remember they used to, years ago it came out that, the Internet back in the 90s even, the older system, they had shopping sites for folk who are putting in bids for them, different organs, eh. That's where you end up going, everything's... we're dollars and cents, all of us. Even after we're dead we're still making money for somebody. Because we're peons, we're little servants, you see. That's what we're here for. We are renewable resources, you see. There you go. Yep.

Now here's another article…

Children Who Get Flu Vaccine Have Three Times Risk Of Hospitalization For Flu, Study Suggests

sciencedaily.com / 20 May 2009

(A: Again, I mentioned that before, it was in another article in the same study though. And this article here is Science Daily of course. So again, it's official sites and so on.)

American Thoracic Society

Summary:

The inactivated flu vaccine does not appear to be effective in preventing influenza-related hospitalizations in children, especially the ones with asthma. In fact, children who get the flu vaccine are more at risk for hospitalization than their peers who do not get the vaccine, according to new research.

It goes through the full story of it too with some data to back up what they're talking about, which again isn't that common. You've got to get the data. You've got to get data. M-m-m. Then this one too is to do with, let's see now here, I mentioned before that some articles in some papers are calling this thing a hoax now.

COVID-19 turning out to be huge hoax perpetrated by media - washingtontimes.com / 28 April 2020

It's bigger than hoax perpetrated by the media. It's an agenda, folks. It's an agenda. Definitely it's an agenda. And you will see a spike in the fall. They're waiting for it and they're pretty sure it's going to come because not enough folk have been exposed to the darn thing by the lockdown, right. Pretty well guaranteed it. It will be a miracle actually, maybe on our side, if it doesn't happen the way they want it to happen. Because they said from the beginning, they want everybody vaccinated regardless of if you've got an immune system and you've got antibodies to it that you developed naturally. They don't care. Nope, they don't care.

And...

Early data on Moderna's COVID-19 vaccine insufficient: Stat News

reuters.com / 19 May 2020

(A: Another article saying it's insufficient. And all they do is repeat the same stuff. And they always give you the same one-liner, you know, at the top, it...)

…produced protective antibodies in a small group of healthy volunteers.

(A: Right, that’s what they always tell you. And in a month's time, or two months’ time or three months’ time, they'll have a different thing. But at the moment they're making billions, eh. It says because of the announcement, right, that the stock sale…)

Moderna later announced a stock sale that could raise about $1.5 billion (A: …right off the bat, in shares. It's just whoof, up it goes. Yep.)

And it will go up higher if they get more data up, right. This is how it's played. Everything's business, eh. And…

Alan Dershowitz: (A: Alan Dershowitz of course.) States Can 'Absolutely' Mandate Vaccinations

newsmax.com / 19 May 2020

(A: As you know. What a tyrant eh, what a tyrant. As I say, he had a massage apparently and admitted to that, but he kept his underpants on. As I say, Bill Clinton smoked marijuana, but he said he never inhaled it. But they all knew Epstein and [Alan laughing.] you know... Ah, what a crew, eh? What a crew. N-n-n. And Dershowitz is the sort of character that will try to get everybody else put in prison if you don't accept the vaccine. That when he states that he didn't do anything more than just get a massage, that's the gospel truth because he thinks he's God, you see. He's A god, literally. I mean that. They've got good reasons for saying that. But he thinks he's a God. Yeah. Yeah. I had a massage with that woman, but I did keep my underwear on. And these characters are going to rule our lives, and threaten us with imprisonment if we don't go along with the companies - that no doubt he knows very well, I'm sure he knows them very well, the people who own them - if we don't take the vaccinations, eh? Their experimental vaccinations. M-hm. I tell ya.)

(A: And that's what he said on TV apparently, he said, he put it very clearly, this is Dershowitz...)

"Let me put it very clearly, you have no constitutional right to endanger the public

(A: I love how these characters can destroy nations. I mean, he's destroying a nation here. If you put up with what he's saying here, he's destroying your constitutional rights.)

"Let me put it very clearly, you have no constitutional right to endanger the public and spread the disease, (A: Eh…) even if you disagree. You have no right not to be vaccinated, you have no right not to wear a mask, you have no right to open up your business," he said.

(A: Do you realize what you’re listening to here? Do you REALIZE it?)

(A: Under the refugee policies they all signed onto, they're bringing in people who claimed to be refugees. Most of them are not, they're just economic migrants. [Alan chuckles.] Many of them by the way too are wealthier than some of the folk that are putting them up through their taxes. I'm not kidding you. But they don't have to even give them, some of them have infectious diseases, and tuberculosis, and NO ONE, they're not stopping them from coming in. Huh?!)

(A: Even in Sudbury here they had little warnings a few years ago and billboards up that it's in the area. Well, they were bringing in quite a high migrant population at the time, because Sudbury is scheduled, one of the 12 scheduled places to put them, resettle them, in the rural areas, this is the agenda, that agreed with the United Nations.)

(A: Yeah, there's diseases out there. But they're not getting put in prison as they start walking around and coughing, etc. But hey, Alan Dershowitz, states they can absolutely mandate it because you have no rights, you know, to endanger the public. Do you understand, if something is not solid across the board for everybody, hm, there's something else at play here. So, you have no right to open up your business he said too. Whoa.   Whoa, whoa, whoa, eh. M-m-m.)

The show’s interviewer Jason Goodman asked his guest if the government rules "you have to be vaccinated, we have to be vaccinated.”

Dershowitz’s answer, “Absolutely.”

"And if you refuse to be vaccinated, the state has the power to literally take you to a doctor's office and plunge a needle into your arm,” he added.

(A: N-n-n. I-yi. That’s something, eh. I-yi-yi. I-yi-yi.)

Another article too from Forbes says…

More Than Stimulus Checks: How Covid-19 Relief Might Include Mandated Vaccines

forbes.com / 20 May 2020

Should a coronavirus vaccine be developed, students may hesitate to return to campus if their peers refuse to get vaccinated. (A: That must've been done on the dog kidney I guess, peers refuse.) But refusing a coronavirus vaccine may be illegal.

“If you refuse to be vaccinated, the state has the power to literally take you to a doctor’s office and plunge a needle into your arm,” explained Alan Dershowitz in an interview earlier this week.

Dershowitz’s statement is good news for schools and universities, who could add the coronavirus vaccine to the list of vaccines they require their students to have in order to come to campus. Such a requirement could be enforced at the state level, where exemptions for school vaccination are currently established.

(A: You see, once you start with them, let them get in, you haven't had the measles one, you know, or you haven't had a chickenpox one, you're going to college, oh well just get this little shot here. Then you end up with shingles, eh, you get shingles. A lot of folk of got it. I know folks who got it from the shot. It's not disputed by the way. So, once you start something, allowing something, oh they mandated it… well, they spread it. That's it, get one or two things on the books then you spread it and before you know it, you're getting about two dozen shots pumped into you, you know. This is how they do this. N-n-n.)

Schools across the country have closed their campuses in response to the pandemic and are scrambling to find solutions for fall semester…

Well, Bill Gates has got this virtual education now. It's a whole new way of doing it. Just give in and you won't need your shot then, you stay home forever, and ever and ever, and just play on the computer. There you go. I'll put this article up too.

And let me see now...

COVID-19 data sharing with law enforcement sparks concern

apnews.com / 18 May 2020

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — More than 11 million people have been tested in the U.S. for COVID-19, all with the assurance that their private medical information would remain protected and undisclosed.

Yet, public officials in at least two-thirds of states are sharing the addresses of people who tested positive with first responders — from police officers to firefighters to EMTs. An Associated Press review found that at least 10 of those states also share the patients' names.

First responders argue the information is vital to helping them take extra precautions to avoid contracting and spreading the coronavirus.

(A: It's got your whole medical history here. You know that, don't you. Don't you? Hm? I think they're doing the same in Canada now too, they're pushing for this. Britain is doing the same thing as well. It's interesting to me too that London for instance, well at least the Alphabet company for Google had made deals with the British government a few years ago to share all the patient's data from different hospitals and in society, and it was to grow from there. Well, this is all, you're living through the agenda, folks, that's all it is. This is it, because Google was doing that like in 2016/17 onwards, I think it was. Every country is doing the same thing. Because in the Brave New World the police and the military will know all about you. You cannot have any privacy at all. Of any kind.)

But civil liberty and community activists have expressed concerns of potential profiling in African American and Hispanic communities that already have an uneasy relationship…

(A: It should be… Forget this African American and Hispanic… This is for everybody, folks. EVERYBODY should be up in arms about it and say that's enough, get off our backs. If they're split up into groups, you never get anything done. You've got to ALL come together. Simple. Very simple.)

"The information could actually have a chilling effect that keeps those already distrustful of the government from taking the COVID-19 test …

Don't forget, the tests are mainly junk, folks. Mainly junk. Just impossible. False positives. False negatives. Etc. etc. And if you get antibody tests it's a bit more accurate, but not always because it can also show that you've got antibodies to a range of different viruses or coronaviruses too. You see? N-n-n. So, I'll put this one up too and then this one here...

Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School Offering New Free Online Course To Train COVID-19 Contact Tracers For New York State

baltimore.cbslocal.com / 11 May 2020

(A: Here's your new Stasi!)

BALTIMORE (WJZ) — If you’re looking for something to do to help during the coronavirus pandemic, a new online course can train you to become a contact tracer to help stop the spread of the virus.

That's how they're going to stop it, right. Absolute BS! Absolute rubbish. I'll put up some other links today to other doctors by the way who have quite openly talked about this nonsense of tracing. Because I mean, how many people, one of them actually said this, this doctor. He says, he takes the subway in New York, he says, how many folk has he met on the train station platform, in the carriages, every day? I mean, it's impossible. So, this asking how many folk you've talked to that day... Absolute rubbish!

These tracers are going to be permanent for other reasons, folks. It's a Stasi thing. And here's the cops sharing all the data. So, here's police, health data, and then contact tracers working with the police. You start thinking... You'd better start putting it together where this is meant to go. And I mean MEANT to go, right.

And this doctor said, you'll actually hear him say himself in a little video, if I want to track people who've had sex that week for say sexually-transmitted diseases - now they call them social diseases, there's nothing social about them. But he said, that yeah you can find, the person generally knows how many encounters he's had in a week, right, and with whom. But he says, but walking in the streets and into subways, you have no idea how many peoples you've met, it's impossible.

Not that it would do any help anyway. Because you want, that's what they say, you want the herd immunity. You want more folk to... Most folk never have any symptoms at all, you know. And they can certainly help the people who do, if they were given the right treatments. So yeah, this Stasi is not going to go away. You can tell by the amount of money they’re throwing into this; this is not meant to go away.

Then you've got again…

New York City partners with Salesforce on coronavirus contact tracing program, mayor says

cnbc.com / 8 May 2020

(A: So, there's a couple of articles on it. You can read that for yourselves.)

Salesforce will deploy a call center as well as a customer relationship and case management system that will help the city track potential cases …

But there's other ones too across the country where folk are out in the streets tracking folk down, coming to folk's doors by the way. And they'll come to test you in your home. You can't allow this to go on, this nonsense to go on.

California biopharmaceutical company claims coronavirus antibody breakthrough

foxnews.com / 15 May 2020

(A: Another… You see, they all say, oh, it's wonderful, oh [unintelligible] galore...)

EXCLUSIVE — A California-based biopharmaceutical company claims to have discovered an antibody that could shield the human body from the coronavirus and flush it out of a person’s system within four days, Fox News has exclusively learned.

(A: Oh, exclusive.)

Later Friday, Sorrento Therapeutics will announce their discovery of the STI-1499 antibody, which the San Diego company said can provide "100% inhibition" of COVID-19, adding that a treatment could be available months before a vaccine hits the market.

"We want to emphasize there is a cure. There is a solution that works 100 percent," Dr. Henry Ji, founder and CEO of Sorrento Therapeutics, told Fox News. "If we have the neutralizing antibody in your body, you don't need the social distancing. You can open up a society without fear."

(A: Wow. And it’s got the data on and so on. There’s not much data at all. But what they are admitting is that...)

"Doctors are taking blood plasma (A: I mentioned that months ago.) from patients who have recovered from COVID-19 and infusing it into those who are critically ill. The plasma is laden with antibodies, and the approach shows some promise" …

It definitely gives you promise. Absolutely. It will certainly help you get over the bad hump of it, that's for sure. They have other techniques, once that happens, you're getting someone else's antibodies, you see, and yours might not be pumping your own out, but there's ways they can then help your body to create its own. That can certainly be done.

[Alan chuckles.] This is... I love the nonsense that comes out, like the invisible firewall, the virus just knows it can't go beyond 6 feet, eh! They can defy a breeze even, 6 feet and that's it, doesn't matter. If it's a storm going, but nope, ain't going to go any further. You're all safe if you stay 6 feet apart. Absolute tripe!

Speaking loudly could help spread virus, study finds telegraph.co.uk / 16 May 2020

(A: Study. Study finds. Everybody's doing studies. And all these useless, useless characters they churn out from universities with useless degrees, have got their hands out for all kinds of studies, you know. It says…)

Scientists found that thousands of tiny droplets sprayed from the mouths of people talking noisily can remain in the air far longer than expected.

(A: WOW! Wow.)

The research, published in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences of the United States of America, used laser lights to study the spatter from someone who repeated the words “stay healthy” at volume for 25 seconds.

The phrase was chosen because the “th” sound in the word “healthy” was found to be “an efficient generator of oral fluid speech droplets”.

(A: [Alan chuckles.] They'll probably the have their hand out for another, like, give another 2 million and we'll take this research further, you know. This is what they all do, eh. Maybe they'll have a career living on grants. And of course, it says…)

The “enclosed, stagnant air environment” was filmed for 80 minutes

Well, very few folk live in stagnant air. There's always a breeze from somewhere. I mean, here's the farce of it all too. Folks driving in cars, eh, with the window open, eh. And you know how... They're actually breathing, these people, they breathe. Do you know that? They breathe. All the way down the streets, they’re breathing. And it's just spewing out of that car. And could contaminate thousands of people, eh?! For goodness sakes! My goodness, eh! N-n-n. And then even trains, all the people on trains and carriages in you've got air circulating, that eventually gets pumped outside too. Oh my goodness, eh! Hhhh! [Alan singing.] This train don't carry no viruses, this train... As though... It's endless where you can go with this nonsense. Really endless.

But give me another 2 or 3 million, I'll do a test for you. Yep. Maybe I can reduce that. If you drink a glass of wine every night, have you seen those studies, you know? It's good for your heart at the same time too. And the more wine you drink actually, the more you'll slur your words, and you can't really say thuthuuuthuuuu, heallllthhhhhhhh, very, very, you might ssay, and you won't spray as much droplets across the planet. There you go. That's worth a couple of million right there. N-n-n. I'm telling you. You may laugh….

Now, another article goes on too about the again, the fake counting system. It's atrocious. There's nothing scientific about it. It's so awful. It says…

The US is Dramatically Overcounting Coronavirus Deaths

townhall.com / 16 May 2020

(A: We had even, is it, Dr. Birx admitting it too, that if you've got any trace of it on your sinuses or anywhere in your body at all, of even the residue of dead cells related to the RNA or anything of this particular virus, they'll put you down, no matter if your heart just exploded, they’ll put you down as a Covid death. It's big money. We've had even, he's a doctor and a congressman come out and say the same thing. I put that up a few weeks ago. He talked about the same thing. He was advised to put more folk down as Covid deaths. It's disgusting. So…)

Over 86,500 people have reportedly died in the United States from the Coronavirus, and the fear generated by those deaths is driving the public policy debate. But that number is a dramatic overcount. Our metrics include deaths that have nothing to do with the virus. The problem is even worse as the Centers for Disease Control over counts even some of these cases and the government has created financial incentives for this misreporting. Relying on these flawed numbers is destroying businesses and jobs and costing lives.

(A: It goes into some of the… I don’t know if it goes into the fact they get $40,000 per Covid case, if they put them down as a Covid case with a ventilator; it's extra again. You know? Big money. But this article at least touches on some of it. And again, it puts it down, I mean they're padding it so badly trying to validate what they've done already. Because it really is way down, they say here already, some of the doctors are saying this, it's no higher than a seasonal flu. And if they would stop padding the figures and putting them down [as Covid], they'd actually be lower than seasonal flu. M-hm. N-n-n. It says…)

New York is classifying cases as Coronavirus deaths even when postmortem tests have been negative. Despite negative tests, classifications are based on symptoms, even though the symptoms are often very similar to those of the seasonal flu. The Centers for Disease Control guidance explicitly acknowledges the uncertainty that doctors can face. When Coronavirus cases are “suspected,” they advise doctors that “it is acceptable to report COVID-19 on a death certificate.”

So, there is presumed, suspected, and so on getting stuffed in with them all. Canada has done this before even with flu seasons to get the numbers up by the way. It's really awful, isn't it, what's happened? But facts don't matter when there's a big agenda.

You wait and see, you wait and see, they'll say, oh there's going to be a spike, oh a spike's just happened, my God, we have to close you all down again. And they'll give you horrific pictures that could be made up, we'll have no idea where they come from, there'll be horrific, horrific pictures. And yeah, you get the Fauci again coming out with his grave face, and all the rest of them, all the strange folk behind him. And it's true, it's like a strange Addams family thing you're seeing on the stage every night, as they all have these little knowing grins with each other, and rather fixed expressions. Which makes me think they're kind of tense, they know they're getting caught out. [Alan chuckles.] I'll put these things up again tonight.

And then you've got, let me see here. What else? Yeah, the one about Dershowitz, when I mentioned that he asked to…

Alan Dershowitz asks judge to dismiss Epstein victim's defamation case

jpost.com / 25 Sept 2019

Dershowitz argued that his Twitter attacks against Virginia Giuffre, who alleges that Epstein forced her to have sex with Dershowitz when she was underage, are protected free speech.

Amazing what the characters, this is from the Jerusalem Post 2019 September, quite interesting.

You're looking at gangs of crooks really. You really are. Hm. N-n-n. And then Peter Hitchens goes on about…

PETER HITCHENS: Furlough billions? Just a giant payday loan in YOUR name

hitchensblog.mailonsunday.co.uk / 16 May 2020

Think of Chancellor Rishi Sunak (A: I guess that's who is now the chancellor of the H Checker in Britain for budgets and taxes and so on.) as a smiling salesman of payday loans (A: Because they weren't giving everybody the same kind of, ah, temporary cash as they do in the States and everywhere else.), and you will begin to get the picture.

‘Yes, of course you can have the money. Happy to help!’ he says as he hands over the wads of notes.

But it will not be the cheery face of Mr. Sunak that you see when the time comes for repayment, but the hard and relentless agents of Her Majesty’s Revenue and Customs.

So, they're going to come for you afterwards. As you think it's all free, eh. M-hm. And…

Doubts raised over Oxford coronavirus vaccine (A: …which they were testing out.) after ALL of the monkeys that took part in the trial are found to have contracted the disease

dailymail.co.uk / 18 May 2020

(A: Oh dear, back to the drawing board, eh. Hm. There you go.)

In the latest animal trials of the vaccine carried out on rhesus macaques, all six of the participating monkeys went on to catch the coronavirus.

(A: And it says how they tested the monkeys, it says…)

…revealed the monkeys who received the vaccine had the same amount of virus in their noses as the three non-vaccinated monkeys in the trial.

This suggests the treatment, which has already received in the region of £90million (A: [Alan chuckles.]) in government investment (A: And that’s your tax money.), may not halt the spread of the deadly disease.

Oh, well, we tried. Give us another 90 million, we'll try again. Yep, there you go. In Ontario Canada…

Ontario extends all emergency orders, including limits on social gatherings

toronto.ctvnews.ca / 19 May 2020

TORONTO -- Ontario has extended all emergency orders in the province, including restrictions on social gatherings, until May 29.

And they'll keep putting it off. They're trying to get you into next year. Once they've got it into next year, it's forever, folks, you'll never get out of the systems that you're in. It will be gone.

States ordered nursing homes to take COVID-19 residents. Thousands died. How it happened - buckscountycouriertimes.com / 1 May 2020

And it's true, they put in people who tested positive, they put them into the old folks’ homes. TO get the numbers up. Why else would you do that, folks? You want them to die. You want to pad your numbers and get it up, because it's a big agenda at stake. There's no other reason. This is not, this is not just oops we didn't know, we didn't think that would... Come on here! They're not stupid! They're not stupid. N-n-n-n-n.

Now I'm going to put up a link to Knut Wittkowski, his name is, for opposing lockdown, and he was censored by YouTube. He’s similar to, maybe more qualifications, I don’t know, to Neil Ferguson, and this one is in the US, this fellow. I’ve got him with a link as well talking to Daniel Erickson, another doctor from California who came out and got banned as well. You’ll hear them talking together and talking separately as well.

Dr. Daniel Erikson and Dr. Knut Wittkowski - bitchute.com / 14 May 2020

It says New York City lawsuits/divorces to be accepted online starting Memorial Day. By the way, before I get into it, [Alan chuckles.] so it's amazing, it's going to help divorces get done faster, 'eh. But this article on Wittkowski, it says...

YouTube censors epidemiologist Knut Wittkowski for opposing lockdown

himnypost.com / 16 May 2020

Big Tech companies are aggressively tamping down on COVID-19 “misinformation”...

(A: … Misinformation, meaning not authorized as pro agenda, y'know.)

Dr. Knut M. Wittkowski, former head of biostatistics, epidemiology and research design at Rockefeller University, (A: The ones that are really pushing the bioethics agenda that they got all drafted up for how you live from now on, this brand-new system, forever. He left, he's been kicked out again. He says…) says YouTube removed a video of him talking about the virus that had racked up more than 1.3 million views.

Wittkowski, 65, is a ferocious critic of the nation’s current steps to fight the coronavirus. He has derided social distancing, saying it only prolongs the virus’ existence, and has attacked the current lockdown as mostly unnecessary.

Wittkowski, who holds two doctorates in computer science and medical biometry, believes the coronavirus should be allowed to create “herd immunity,” (A: …which the flu always does too.) and that short of a vaccine, the pandemic will only end after it has sufficiently spread through the population.

(A: And that’s what seems to be happening, as we know.)

But I'll put the links up to him because he's worth listening to and make your own minds up. But he does back it up with data, which is awfully in short supply these days from the official sources, on anything. Except the agenda must go through, the agenda must go through, the agenda must go through. I'll put those things up tonight and another one from a woman in Ireland, on a talk show in Ireland who again worked in some of these bio level III or IV, she was a professor and she worked in some of these labs, bio level III, biohazard level III, or, bio level III. She says the same thing basically, herd immunity is the only way that this, like any other virus before, that's what happens. We get it spiking, once it gets summer and it dies off, you might get a little spike towards the winter, but then it will start dying off as more and more folk have had it basically, even if they don't know it, which is generally the case. There you go. I'll put up her video, her name is Cahill. I'll put that link up for you as well.

Debunking the Narrative (With Prof. Dolores Cahill) - youtube.com / 11 May 2020

You've got to understand, we’re living through amazing times with big agendas on the go. It's so obviously agenda driven. All of this is so obviously, so incredibly obviously agenda driven, that it boggles the mind to see them all on board. That one-for-all, as I say, and all-for-one. And they won't back off. And they can't back off now.

There's an old saying, an old saying with thieves and gangs, they either stand together or they'll hang together. That's what people who are in big, big scams do. They know darn well that they'll all back each other up, because if one falls, it's like dominoes, they all start falling down like skittles and then the truth comes out and they have nothing to back it up with except each other's lies, you see. That's really it. And as more and more stuff is exposed, this thing was planned long before, obviously, this broke out. And they needed it to break out because it's never been done before. They never did it for previous flus that were killing people, they never did it for that. And now that they've got more and more evidence coming all the time it's not as bad as they thought it would be.

And yes, it's hit a lot of the elderly people, but so has the treatment that they're giving the elderly people. They've gone off the standard treatments for similar things that they've dealt with, every year by the way. They haven't been given the proper treatments that would have stopped these massive storms of their body's defense system attacking the lungs to try to attack the virus. They haven't given them the normal treatment support, at all. And then locking them down, hm.

And you're watching the food supply of the country go down the tubes as well. That's all intentional. This is all intentional. I hope you understand what we're talking about here. This is a complete revolution. It's a war upon the public. Starting with the war OF terror. All shouted in unison by all the media and the so-called official agencies for diseases and so on. A war of terror. Oh, life was never going to be the same again, you'll never go back to normal. N-n-n. You're going to have to give up any privacy that's left. You're going to accept the bracelets, mandatory electronic bracelets, a manacle that's going to track you everywhere if you don't have a cell phone. N-n-n-n-n.

Rationing is coming along. The whole thing. It's obvious this is an agenda to go in... Again, the World Economic Forum said that the public were not listening, they told them with sustainability, they won't listen to us, so once they're going into the service economy, now you're post service economy, even, and now you're going to go into austerity and rationing. That's what they really want, folks.

Bill Gates will help the population drop with his vaccination programs, as he said himself, you know, that you could reduce the population, it's not conspiracy, he said it, it's up there you can hear him saying it, and you can watch him saying it and hear him saying it, it will drop the population by 10 to 15%, at least. That's what you're dealing with. And it's not going to go away by itself.

In real-time they've got all these different algorithms on the go checking all the chitchat across all the different electronic sources, and they can tell pretty quickly how the public are going to react to this or that and so on, in real-time, within about five minutes of announcements, trial balloons and so on. They know how to play you, you understand.

Scientific tyranny indeed, eh.

You're all going to die. Well, we’ll develop immunity. No, no, it wouldn't make any difference, you've got to take our, OUR vaccine, we haven't got it yet, but you've got to take it when we give it to you, y'know, when we get it. There ya go.

But the gang of thieves at the top, they used to call it a parcel of rogues, a parcel of rogues, there was an old song about that they used to sing, a parcel of rogues in the nation. They are all complicit and they've got fingers in the same pots and pies and so on, and the honeypots of the public purse for their own private enterprises and corporations, etc. And they’re running us and they're telling us what we must go along with.

So, hang on to your talismans, you know, and wear your Eyes Wide Shut masks wherever you go. And comply. Comply to make sure that batons didn't batter your heads in, by your loving agencies that are there to protect you. And carry all your different wipes and your hand stuff, your hand sanitizers, your talismans. And maybe you'll be left alone. If you do enough magic, you might be left alone. Yep. I'm telling ya.

And don't say words like health. That th, th, thhhhh, that will spread droplets across the other end of the supermarket for goodness sake, y'know! I'm telling you. If you have a lisp, that's just tough cheese on you. That's all I can say.

So regardless of all this, this, this stuff that's going on, folks don't panic. As I say, don't panic, don't panic. Because there's always light at the end of the tunnel if enough information comes out, and enough resistance starts from the public not to go along with this atrocious revolution.

It is a revolution to bring you into a whole new scientifically run society. That's what it's about. That's what the Rockefeller report that came out in 2010 talked about. They went through this whole scenario that we are going through today, they would need a panic situation to make it happen, and we're going through it now, to bring us into the new system of being run from birth to death by professionals.

Oh, I said deathhhh. Thhhhhh, thhhhhh, that thhhhh word again, eh, thhhh. Oh my goodness. But luckily there's only me here, eh.

But there you go, that's what it's all about. You can't make this stuff up. It's in-your-face. The evidence is out there. And I tell you, there will be more and more evidence that will be coming out more and more as we go along through the summer. And they'll get worse towards the end of summer because, the more evidence that's piling up against the people who are perpetrating this whole thing, the more vicious they'll have to be together, to stand together. They close ranks and they become completely vicious. That's what happens in history with these kind of gangs that run countries. Now you have them trying to run the whole planet. And it's rather evident, isn't it?

And Mr. Fauci, who elected Fauci to tell you how you're going to live your lives? And he said, it's never going to be the same again, you're not going to go back to any normal. Nope. He said that at the beginning. Isn't that a rather an odd thing for a guy who's supposedly basically appointed to run, private again medical companies and so on. Is he now a politician and a sociologist now, is he? Or what is he? You know. N-n.

Emperors, eh? Emperor Fauci. With a few other ones to match him, mind you. But they all belong to the same gang obviously.

It's just INCREDIBLE.

But you know I hope the people never forget, NEVER EVER forget the complicity of all the media out there pushing this terror agenda, the war of terror. Don't ever forget that for goodness sake. Because that's a managed war of terror. Obviously. There was no, all the media together are pushing the same stuff. That doesn't happen by itself either. That's by agreement, folks.

Anyway, I hope you're taking care of yourselves and trying to get some sunshine if you can. Even up here where I am now the sun is starting to come out occasionally, and immediately the mosquitoes are there so... Things are back to normal for a little while.

Remember again go into @cuttingthroughthematrix.com, throw a few pennies my way by check or PayPal or whatever means you want to use, you can even send cash. That will help me tick along. Cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Hopefully I'll be getting the books printed up shortly now. Hopefully. Unless they shut us all down again very quickly. I'll get them up for those that want them. And the discs as well.

Thanks for listening.

I'm Alan Watt from Ontario Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Topics of show covered in following links:

Coronavirus 'did NOT come from animals in Wuhan market', says landmark study

thesun.co.uk / 17 May 2020

SARS-CoV-2 is well adapted for humans. What does this mean for re-emergence?

biorxiv.org

Trump’s WARP SPEED vaccine czar oversaw an infamously BOTCHED vaccination. Wonder why a THIRD of Americans want to dodge this one?

rt.com / 16 May 2020

The Well-Known Hazards of Coronavirus Vaccines

lewrockwell.com / 11 May 2020

Influenza Vaccination and Respiratory Virus Interference Among Department of Defense Personnel During the 2017-2018 Influenza Season

pubmed.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov / Oct 2019

This Flu Shot Is Not Like the Others

time.com / 30 Oct 2014

Flu vaccine grown in dog kidney cells another failure

nexusnewsfeed.com

Florida Health Department manager told to delete coronavirus data forced to resign, she says

tampabay.com / 19 May 2020

How coronavirus hijacks human cells and takes over our genes then turns our immune system against us

dailymail.co.uk / 21 May 2020

Fiction

zerohedge.com / 21 May 2020

All adults in England to be deemed organ donors in 'opt-out' system

theguardian.com / 19 May 2020

Hospitalization For Flu, Study Suggests

sciencedaily.com / 20 May 2009

COVID-19 turning out to be huge hoax perpetrated by media

washingtontimes.com / 28 April 2020

Early data on Moderna's COVID-19 vaccine insufficient: Stat News

reuters.com / 19 May 2020

Alan Dershowitz: States Can 'Absolutely' Mandate Vaccinations

newsmax.com / 19 May 2020

Alan Dershowitz asks judge to dismiss Epstein victim's defamation case

jpost.com / 25 Sept 2019

More Than Stimulus Checks: How Covid-19 Relief Might Include Mandated Vaccines

forbes.com / 20 May 2020

COVID-19 data sharing with law enforcement sparks concern

apnews.com / 18 May 2020

Train COVID-19 Contact Tracers For New York State

baltimore.cbslocal.com / 11 May 2020

New York City partners with Salesforce on coronavirus contact tracing program, mayor says

cnbc.com / 8 May 2020

California biopharmaceutical company claims coronavirus antibody breakthrough

foxnews.com / 15 May 2020

Speaking loudly could help spread virus, study finds

telegraph.co.uk / 16 May 2020

The US is Dramatically Overcounting Coronavirus Deaths

townhall.com / 16 May 2020

Thousands of wild and domestic rabbits are being killed off by a deadly virus

dailymail.co.uk / 19 May 2020

Doubts raised over Oxford coronavirus vaccine after ALL of the monkeys that took part in the trial are found to have contracted the disease

dailymail.co.uk / 18 May 2020

PETER HITCHENS: Furlough billions? Just a giant payday loan in YOUR name

hitchensblog.mailonsunday.co.uk / 16 May 2020

Ontario extends all emergency orders, including limits on social gatherings

toronto.ctvnews.ca / 19 May 2020

States ordered nursing homes to take COVID-19 residents. Thousands died. How it happened buckscountycouriertimes.com / 1 May 2020 (alternate link provided)

Wuhan lab was performing coronavirus experiments on bats from the caves where the disease is believed to have originated - with a £3m grant from the US

dailymail.co.uk / 11 April 2020

for opposing lockdown

nypost.com / 16 May 2020

Wittkowski

bitchute.com / 14 May 2020

Debunking the Narrative (With Prof. Dolores Cahill) youtube.com / 11 May 2020 (alternate link provided) wants Bill Gates arrested in Italy

youtube.com / 17 May 2020

Alan Dershowitz: States Can 'Absolutely' Mandate Vaccinations (video)

youtube.com / 18 May 2020 (alternate link provided)

May 31, 2020 "Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt (Blurb, i.e. Educational Talk): " Post-Democratic World Order Coming Into View, Sustainable Austerity, Power Held by the Few "

Hi folks I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through the Matrix on May 31, 2020. I hope you're all just hanging on, and hanging in, but not hanging yourselves hopefully during all this chaos caused by the reaction to a virus. As time goes on of course [Alan chuckles.] we're watching more pandemonium being created as part of this ongoing revolution that we're living through.

The revolution was written about at the United Nations. It was written about from the Rockefeller Foundation. It's been written about too from the Club of Rome and all the... And the World Economic Forum constantly telling us and telling us that we'd have to go into sustainability for a new world order. And by the way, the United Nations has come out with an article called the "United Nations New World Order", for those that like to joke about it. But they say it themselves. They always say it themselves from the horses' mouths.

Just like George Bush senior, and junior, both said the same thing, but everyone else is taught to just laugh at anybody mentioning it. Isn't it strange how this idea of conspiracy theory works on those of low intellect? They always jump at it, oh that's a conspiracy theory. Even though you can give them the exact same quotes from, and even the videos in fact, from those who say it and bring it out at the very top. Presidents for instance.

It doesn't matter. As I say, facts don't matter in this system we're going through right now. But we're living through it and they keep telling us, you won't listen to us, you've got so many minutes to midnight to stop the world from just going into self-destruct with too many people. Too many of YOU actually, you see, all of you, you know, the peasant class. Everybody below a Baron and a Sir and so on is basically a peasant. And that's most folk. Even the folk who think they're middle-class, because they can go down just as quickly, believe you me, if they're not necessary.

Again, you've got to look into the past to get to the present and into the future. George Orwell of course summed that whole thing up in 1984. Because they control the past, and if you can control the past, you can control the future and the present in fact. In the present you can rewrite the past if you want to as well, which they do all the time. We're living through this all, all… In fact, there's never been a time like right now with this Covid lockdown and the complete censoring across the whole Internet and social media by the new, the new information czars, unelected czars in a totalitarian system naturally. It really, really is. You can watch articles disappearing in real time [Alan chuckles.] when you're looking them up… if you can even GET to them. Because they shadow ban and you timeout and all the rest of it trying to get to it, to different articles that have been there for years, and they just disappear eventually. Rather quickly in real time. As they go all out with this war on free speech. And free thought. And free exchange of ideas. You can only get their ideas that are authorized at the top from the czars and their teams, but not from anybody else. Or even from yourself. I've looked up stuff I've said in the past myself, I can't find it either.

But there you go. It's quite amazing isn't it, the times we're living in. It doesn't surprise me because I've been waiting for it for a long, long, long time. Because I did study, and I really did…. I didn't, not like the person who copies my bio... [Alan chuckles.] I really did study from a very early age and went to the library and found the old books and so on. Excellent libraries they had in Britain and Scotland, and especially in the old reference libraries. Even in school you could dig up some because we didn't chuck the books out then. They didn't have what they call the weeding, the social librarian weeding that they have today where they weed out books that are now politically incorrect.

You had different versions of history that were more in tune with what really happened at the time, when I was in school. Right down to money. It was fascinating, when you're about seven years old, or six, and you start thumbing through a school textbook meant for young children, very young, about money, and armies, and empires. Because empires just don't come out of nowhere. It's got to have structure and management and organization to manage it all. Right down to quartermasters and so on that dealt supplies for the armies and so on. Now, where did they get the money from? Well, they told you in the book, and it went right back into ancient Rome and before. It was fascinating to see the peoples who went along with the armies and dished out the food and kept accounts, and they went back to the emperors in Rome and so on or the Senate to get all the money paid back to them.

Nothing's changed. It's just astonishing. Life is really rather simple because it all comes down to economics, eh? And we've been living in an economical system, like a monetary economic system for an awful, awful long time. So far removed from any natural little tribal collectivist society. The collectivist society they're trying to bring us into today is a global society, but is the socialist type run by, really those who've, who are the successors of Marxism, maybe the third or fourth generation of Marxists. They call themselves progressives now, if you haven't figured it out. They use all of the techniques that Marx talked about using and then they were refined again by Trotsky. Then with the revolutionaries in America too, like the Weather Underground and so on, they further restructured how to have revolutions, and fragmented revolutions within society of different groups all combating each other to get to a particular goal, and how you create it and use it. All that kind of stuff is going on right now to an amazing degree across the planet.

And folk never figure out who's behind it. They've got little clues where you'll see certain people's cropping up all over the place. Just like now, we do, when you look at the CDC. You can see Fauci at the CDC. You can see Fauci too at the Institute of course for Infectious Diseases and Allergies [NIAID] and so on. And we see Fauci again dealing with the World Health Organization, the WHO and so on. It's the same names cropping up all over the place. And again, it's Fauci who decides what medications you're going to get, and he advocates who they're going to be. And there's definitely, definitely, um, what you would call it, he's not impartial. He's not impartial enough to be advising what we should have since he's too closely affiliated with these companies, these corporations that are going to churn out the medications and the vaccines and so on.

I mean, at one time you used to call these folk gangs. It was a much better and pleasant term to use. It's very short, you know, gang, quite easy to understand. And in the gang, you have the leaders of one part of the gang, but it's specialized lieutenants that would deal with other facets. Like for instance, vaccinations and so on and big Pharma companies. Hm? And then other ones that would deal with the government. We call them fascism, really when it's fascism running government, it's really making sure that governments and agencies work together with the government. Technically to make everything to work together, to make it work. But in reality, it's to force it upon the public, that's what fascism really is, when governments are in bed with big private corporations, and the money boys at the top that dish out imaginary money. It's not even just paper or plastic anymore, it's just blips on a screen. A good magic act, a really good magic act. But we're living through amazing times, through magic, isn't it? Because most folk haven't a clue what's real anymore, what isn't real anymore.

Let's get back to revolution, right, and the New World Order of the United Nations. And sustainability. And again, the World Economic Forum. All these big groups ALL attend the World Economic Forum. All the corporations, all the top members of the WHO, the CDC, the Club of Rome and every other group out there that runs our lives, and then the Rockefeller Foundation and so on, they all go to this WEF, you see. They decide, with the Futurists, how they're going to run the next part of their agenda. Not our agenda, because we don't have one. We have to follow their agenda; it's forced upon us. And it's announced to the public just like it comes down from heaven.

Even the idea of the World Economic Forum in Switzerland, in Davos, you always think of it in the mountains, you see. You get a picture in your mind of the mountains. And just like in ancient times in Sumer and so on, and they put food into the caves in the hills and that because that's where the gods lived, you see. They put the food up there and ask for the blessings. It was always up on high, something above you, you see. But today you imagine it too like the Ultima Thule of the high, high Nordic mountains, you see, in Switzerland, and way up yonder they all meet on the top of the world, eh, the World Economic Forum. The overlords. That none of them are elected of course. Because they've conned the public that somehow, they're a natural appendage to government, you know, they graft themselves on. But they go there, and they decide your future.

I.... I'm always astounded of folk that say, we’re Democratic, we're progressive. Progressing towards what? Eh? Whose progression are you progressing towards? Because you certainly are not told, most folk aren't told about it. The leaders of all the radical groups are well-paid and funded. I mean, they get salaries that are like CEOs of corporations, a lot of the leaders of these radical groups, you know, if you don't know that, they get lifelong pensions and everything. Incredibly well organized. And if you think they're not part of the Mossad, the CIA and MI6, you'd better think again. Because this strange organization called the CIA has been running the world since the end of World War II really. And overthrowing countries and nations. And plundering countries too for the rich men in their own countries. This is how empires really work, you see.

But yeah, back to Davos. You're thinking about them and they’re waay up there having their meeting. And they're having big, massive, you should see, it's incredible. Never mind the money that gets them there. And the money, it's not meant for the average Joe. It costs a fortune to get a hotel for the night there, apartment, or room, or even a little slum for the night. [Alan chuckles.] I suppose you could maybe bribe the person to get his St. Bernard out of the kennel and you can get in there for the night. But no, it's for the rich, you see. They don't want the peasants around there.

But they decide what they're going to do in the agreements, and they draft… And again by the way, most of these big corporations have got their hands out to governments, for handouts and public-private partnership deals, energy commissions, all these kind of things. So here we are, the people who are going to pay for it all are the general public of the planet, we're not allowed to get, we can't get there, you see, and get a ticket to get in or anything. But these people at the top, that live OFF OF US, like parasites, at the top, with their big think tanks and their big, big bureaucracies, just like civil servants, for each company, that's what they have, decide how we are going to live. Of course, they always make sure that we are going to be dependent on what they actually have and what they preside over, you see, whatever, like energy supplies and all that kind of stuff. And we're supposed to all follow along.

And most folk do. They never think about it at all. They think it's somehow natural. You know? If you... [Alan chuckles.] If you... [Alan chuckles.] If you suddenly noticed a third arm growing out of your chest, would you think that was natural? Well, how come these organizations just appear, you know, and then you'll hear it repeated on the news and you see important people there, and you think somehow, it's quite natural that this new appendage to it all is making decisions that we are all going to have to live by or die by. You see?

And strangely enough, just like Bill Gates, eh, and just like the Lucky Gene Club, I like to call it because that's what they used to call themselves, their nickname for them when they meet together, the eugenicists, the richest people and all that, and the influencers of society, Oprah was a member of it too. They influence society, you see. They are persuaders, you see. But here they are, you know, the same people are at the WEF and they have, they are quite open about their agenda. Too many people, and so what we've got to do, then the UN repeats the exact same stuff. Because it's one clique with a lot of faces, folks. Like the different departments at the United Nations. It's the same group really with different faces.

Forget Janus, you see, Janus is the old God idea, and much more than just that. of the one who looks forward and rules in front of them and sees and rules. But also behind him, he's got another face looking backwards as well. If you could imagine just a circle of them, ha, with all different kinds of names, huh, looking outwards and inwards, and you get the WEF and the Club of Rome and you've got all the different organizations and all the big foundations there, and you have also the big top Corporations all around it as well, education committees and the UNICEF and blah blah blah blah blah. This all, it's just a club with specialized branches, that's all.

But they all meet. And they're all on board with the same agenda, too many people, too many of YOU. And they would like to bring down the population of the planet to fit their goals of a wonderful future for themselves, and their own progeny, you see. Their progeny is worth it because they have better genes than you. And they know that, if you look into the eugenic societies and how they formulated the better types and the inferior types.

And the better types, you can't just join their club. They were quite brazen about what it took to join their club. You had to prove that you, and your mother and your father, had at least seven generations before you of good breeding, you see. Who'd always interbred with the better families, you know. And had the proper, they kept on the straight and narrow. They didn't go into drugs or booze or whatever. They kept an even keel in society. And they had their children. And they would run the militaries. They would run the armaments companies. They would run the big corporations. All that kind of stuff. But they'd always marry within their own groups.

And they were very, very, they were sticklers about it, keeping tabs on genealogies and the families to see if they had any bad genes or... Oh, you know, there are, seven generations ago uncle so-and-so was a, great-great uncle so-and-so was a bit of a lush, and things like that, you see. And they literally talked about that. They actually talked about that in their little meetings, and their little tittle tattle behind each other's backs. Because there's always a bit of rivalry amongst them at the top, you see. But they all knew each other's family histories. It's astonishing. That's how the British upper-class were. And the British upper-class often had kind of emigrated into the country and married very, very, very broken-down lords and so on who had lost their money through gambling, because they were not fit really to run anything.

But nothing's really changed. You see, that's how you the eugenic societies were formed. I've mentioned before with the histories of Charles Darwin. He was one of many families, his family was one of many families that were already practicing, practicing especially selective breeding within certain families that they claimed, or they really thought through their constant checking of genealogies, that they had the better chance of a more superior offspring than the general population, that married because they like the shape of some girl’s... ankle, you know, back in those days. So they'd arrange their marriages.

There's many ways to look at it, because psychopaths can also marry psychopaths, or the offspring of psychopaths. It's true, they've done studies on that too and found out that going way back you could find that really the nobility's came out of warrior classes that were really families that started to slaughter families round about them. They had a big family, you see, and you start slaughtering, you take them over, and all the peasants underneath them then were yours. And you got a bigger base to draw an army from an you'd build it up and build it up. But the leaders, then you would marry some other psychopaths daughter, you see, another warlord's daughter from either your own country or a different country and amalgamate. You see, that's how they accumulated wealth and so on.

It's quite an old, old history but that's how it used to be for many, many centuries. We saw it too going way back into the pharaohs where they often married their sisters for instance, to keep everything, you had the proper blood, right, so you didn't want to marry inferior blood, so you called yourself a God and you'd marry your sister, the goddess, and have children, little goddesses and gods and stuff. Maybe it was ‘Godlings’, eh, for the little ones. But anyway, it's interesting to see how it's always been much the same.

Even when they try to put a scientific spin on it like they did with the Darwins, and the Darwins just married for generations into the Wedgewood family, that are well-known for their ceramics and pottery and so on. But they kept marrying them, and so much so that I think it was when Charles's wife died, he then married his wife's mother or sister or something. But they kept, all they did was marry into the same families over and over and over. Of course then you end up with unfortunate traits as well that are very predictable. Because all of the Huxleys too, who were also related to the Darwins later on, you'd find they'd all have terrible headaches and things like that. And depressions. Even Julian Huxley used to have depressions that came on him.

They got it all from Darwin's bulldog. Of course that was Thomas Huxley, I think it was, he was called Darwin's bulldog. He took over when Darwin died and pushed the whole idea of eugenics and superior breeding and giving it a scientific slap instead of the usual blueblood stuff, you know, to make it more scientific. If things are, if you quote things in science or the terminology of science it seems more real and more genuine, put it that way. Credible. So that's what they used for it.

So right down to today you find the same things going on. The same people, right, you've got the same people with the same agendas that they had centuries ago, who now believe it's time to have their great leap forward and get rid of all the peasant stock that they don't need anymore. So much so they say they could even re-create a peasant stock genetically if they need to, if they really had to. It isn't just... [Alan chuckles.]

You've heard about the arcs that they have, right? Back in the 90s I gave talks on this, about the arcs that they have. They have one in the States, in Louisiana, and another couple inside the States, other ones across the world. But these scientists, and they have scientists in charge of them, lifelong, these arcs. And it isn't just seed or plants that they have. They actually have the semen and the ovum of different animals, all animals, and humans by the way, in cold storage. Every so often they take them out of the cold storage and will bring, and actually fertilize them, then insert them into other mammals. They have all this documentation, it's fascinating, and they can actually bring whatever mammal it is to term by using a different kind of animal as a mother to bring it to term. And they've been awfully successful.

Years ago I put up links on the documentaries that were put out about them, by themselves because they did that back then. They said it was for a great catastrophe like an end-of-life extinction experience that could happen. They gave all the different scenarios like nuclear war or again, a disease that would wipe out most of humanity. Where the elite would live underground and blah blah blah, and survive, but then they could come out and then repopulate the planet. Including a working-class stock that they could basically create there from sperm and ovum that was frozen. It's just astonishing what they've done to make sure that they can survive for themselves, you see.

It wouldn't, it doesn't matter if most of the people just perish. In fact, they'd be quite happy in this day and age if most folk perished. [Alan chuckles.] They're rather outspoken these days about that. But now, it's always put under sustainability, it's for the good of the planet, you know, and for the good of the animals. Just too many folk competing with animals, and yada yada ya. So it sounds again all scientific. And it's always for the betterment and the good of something, you see, whatever they do to you, hm, it's always for the good, the greater good.

They never come out and say, we just want to get rid of you for goodness sake! So they couch it in nice cozy documentaries and things like that, nice, wonderful, we're here to help you. And bring on different university graduates and professors that dedicated their life to helping, you just don't realize that. No, it wasn't for the money. It wasn't for the power and all the prestige. And it wasn't so that they'd get picked for survival for themselves when the rest of us go down the tubes. No, no, no. These professors, they come out openly now saying it's time that the people around the age of 65 just died and took euthanasia like the professor in Australia [Philip Nitschke], they draw him out every few years, you know, to give these talks on television apparently. I've only seen clips that folk have sent me. But he gets all the publicity he wants. Because he's a spokesperson for those at the top.

They do their best to persuade you... It's for the greater good, you know... That you shouldn't collect that pension. And you've had a good life, you know, you've watched lots of television. They gave you lots of good TV programs to watch most of your life, that's what you did with it. Then you emulated what you saw on TV and if you didn't have any children, you're really good, good, good, you see. But even if you were very good, good, good, they still want you to just self-annihilate at about the age of 65. Leave the pension money because the government then could use it for good scientific endeavors for the future of the planet, and those that are chosen to live on it.

So this is how it really is, folks. I'm using a bit of the satire to put it across, but the satire has got, it's completely loaded with the truth. You're so used to being talked to like a child. You can present anything through a good documentary using psychologists and behaviorists, you can put something across in no time at all and have most of the folk having tears in their eyes and at the end of it say, okay, okay, yeah you're right, okay, where do I sign on for elimination at 65? I'm not kidding you. It can be done. It can be done. You have no idea the power of the television. George Orwell talked about it too, you know, the TV can convince people of anything and to do anything or behave in any way that they wanted them to. Yep. It's been done. But the folk don't know.

So getting back to the third arm sticking out of the chest, what's that thing called? The World Economic Forum. Well again you don't vote for it. It just created itself. The rich folk of the earth created it for themselves. And you don't matter, you don't count because they are the ones who are going to make the changes in the world. Not you, you little peasant. All you do is change the channel on your TV. These folks literally decide what you're going to get on TV and what you're going to believe and not believe, and how you'll behave, and what's good behavior and what's bad behavior. Hm. And what they're going to teach the children. Yes. Not to have any children either, you see, good, good, good, yep.

But you can, unfortunately, it's so true, you're so well understood as I've said so many times and studied more minutely than any animal or ant has been studied. And constantly, and more, there's studies going on all the time. Even now under the Covid thing. I mean, look at the billions getting thrown at different endeavors of universities' psychological operations and so on, and studies on all kinds of things to do with us during this pandemic. It's just astronomical. It's amazing. It's amazing. Because you see, that's how you rule the world is by understanding the peasantry.

If you put, if you got the peasants in a room and you walked a tiger in, the dog would freak out right away, naturally, that's a natural response, you see. But they find other ways of doing it that wouldn't elicit the same kind of fear. They could train you to go up and cuddle that Tiger, you see, if they wanted to do that. They could, yeah, sure they could do it. You've seen the people; I've done the articles years ago. There was a woman in I think it was Canada, or was it Alaska, I can't remember. She took her two children, and she was a greeny, you know, into greeny-greeny, hug the trees, and Disney, Disneyland makes you love all the animals, you see. Her daughter, that when they saw a bear, her daughter ran towards it. And the bear swiped her, I think killed her. And the son went to try to help the daughter, he got hit as well. Then a few days later they talk to the mom. She says, I don't want the bear to be put down, you know. She says, it's not the bear's fault and so on. The saddest thing was, she couldn't see it was HER fault. Because you don't let children go and run towards and cuddle bears in the wild.

Anyway, I mean, that's... They get that from TV. They really think it's a cuddly Disney world out there. These animals, have you seen bears fighting each other?! Woah. You won't want to be around that. Each swipe could pretty well put whole slashes through a house in seconds, just whoof, whoof, whoof, whoof, whoof, they wouldn't even notice it, the bears. So you don't go and cuddle them, you know. They're wild animals. Leave them. Leave them as they are. And give them a good berth, they'll give you a good berth too in the wild. That's how you do it.

But no, you can convince the people of anything. And unfortunately it really does work with the people. They're almost ready to sacrifice the children and themselves to the nice bears, you know. Do you understand? Don't look at any particular problem or event in one direction. Uni-directional. Look at it from different angles. Because there's many things you're seeing at the same time there. M-hm. How did that mother allow the children to do that? Why did the mother allow them to even go and run towards it? What was the mother thinking? What was her impression of what a wild bear is like? Where did she get that impression? Huh?

Now, if you pushed a child towards a bear and it got mangled, you'd be up on a charge. But to train children to run and want to cuddle bears in the wild, from television, nobody gets up on a charge for that, do they? That's the power of persuasion, again, through very, very expert videography coupled with soothing voices. You always have these soothing voices talking over in the documentaries they churn out. Canada's quite amazing for the women who do these documentaries. You never see them generally, but there are certain ones with a certain voice and accent they use, and Canada is famous for using them, for, oh, 25-30 years. They talk in a certain, it's not monotone but it's lower than the average woman's voice, and they can talk at a very paced talk, very paced like that, hypnotic. And a little bit of the music at the back there to put you into the alpha state, which is hypnotic, you see. TV will do for that; you go into the alpha stage. Then the voice is hypnotically paced... and mentioning... and dut... and dut... and dut... and dut. And you're getting sucked into it. With the music and the tempo of the music which will vary according to the scene, and when they give you that nasty, nasty thing of a poor bear that's lost his home, because someone's moved in that area or whatever, then the music will change and dun-dun, dun-dun, there's man, dun-dun, dun-dun, dun-dun. You see?

Then they'll show you a clear-cut part of a forest, from the 1950s, which they don't do anymore, but they always show the same thing when they want to train the radicals, you know, and a radical generation like the Antifa movement. That's what they've been brought up on in school, make sure they see that kind of... Oh my God, oh my GOD! There ya go. It really works wonders, doesn't it? It really does. You always create the society you want for the next 20 years. You start now for the ones you want in 20 years time. They'll be young adults and fully trained, fully indoctrinated. They'll have a common opinion, for every topic they'll have the same uniform opinion. Because they've been trained that way. There's never been a time in history when you have so many people at the age of 20 all saying the same things, believing in the same things. It's never been done to this extent before.

Before, they've tried it for revolutions, they know what works. You train them for, like, the Bolshevik revolution. You make things as bad as possible with wars and famine and so on, to make it worse so's that folk will revolt. And you trained them that you're going to work for a better utopia for the future, and they jump on it. The young always fall for the same things, you see. They never realized that once the revolution is over those who really wanted the revolution to occur go after the leaders and annihilate them. That standard. For those... [Alan chuckles.] it's just a little warning for those who are doing it right now. They don't realize this. But that always happens.

You find too that Yuri Bezmenov who was the ex-Soviet spy they came out in the 70s and 80s and talked about it, and the cultural espionage. It was cultural espionage, it was successful. That's all you had to do was destroy the culture. The Frankfurt school knew that too. But Bezmenov said that the leaders that agitate and do the agitprop's and so on, and they do the organization for the riots and all that, they really think that there's going to be a wonderful system. But when they find out the conquerors don't give them the wonderful system, that there's a different agenda there, they start complaining and so they get wiped out. Because they won't shut up. That always happens.

That's what we live in, it's a world of constant intrigue run by powerful institutions, well-funded institutions. So well-funded in fact that most folk are completely misled as to who runs it all. That's the beautiful trick of say the CIA. It has so many revolutionary forces across the world on the go, all age groups too, and always disguised under political reform parties or revolutionaries or whatever, that the folk never catch on to the true functions. Even the folk who participate and actually do the fighting never catch on. That's why you have the old movies and even modern ones about the disillusioned freedom fighter when they find out it's all bogus.

You see, everything is run by the masters of disruption. Because that's how you have control, is by causing disruption. You guide the disruption; you cause it to happen. You guide the outcomes of where you want it to go. The thesis, antithesis, and synthesis. You can't fail by doing things that way, you see. You can't fail. It's done all the time. The beauty of it is that it's so well camouflaged that even those who participate never really catch on, to the bitter end, as to who is really behind it and what it's really, really for. To get great change for those who rule the world already, you must always plan the change, manage all sides to force the change on them, and all combating forces too, and then bring them into the new system that you planned at the very first.

Because it would not have happened by itself. Folk are quite happy generally by the way things are. Even though they moan, and they complain, they're generally quite happy the way things are.

You see it now with the agenda for the whole 21st century, with its different parts, 2015, 2030, etc. Different segments of it where things must be accomplished in each segment throughout this century. They mean it, they mean what they say. You have to go back to the old idea of no private property. No private property. I used to... get kind of excited when I realized that Freemasonry, for instance, the Scottish Rite of Freemasonry, and Albert Pike talked about it, what was the curse of private property. Then you find that Karl Marx of course wanted the abolition of private property, and marriage as well, hm. So they give you what they'll call is a slightly different, a slightly different, a more watered-down version. We'll just call it socialism, national socialism, eh. Which is just the same thing again, you know. It takes a longer trek to get there.

That's what Stalin also said when they asked, what is socialism, what is communism? He says communism is socialism in a hurry. It's just a quick, a quick revolution and then you've got it. Then you can call yourself socialist if you want to, but you had the revolution. Whereas the Fabian Society, set up in Britain and funded by the richest folk on the planet at the time, like the Astor families and others that were all part of it, [Alan chuckles.] and the Rothschilds, because they own all sides. You've got to own all sides if you want competing and conflicting parties that will fight and push and argue to get changes. Because YOU plan the changes. You get them to argue it out in Parliaments and so on, this party versus that party, and you bring the desired conclusion along, you see. That's how it's done. Folk never catch on to it at all.

But the Fabian Society literally boasted, if you get the old books from it when George Bernard Shaw and HG Wells were the top members at the time, amongst others of course. They had lots of correspondence with the Soviet Union. The early Soviet Union too. They boasted they had a direct line to the desk of Lenin, and then Stalin. Then of course Trotsky. They had a little tiff, you can still see the old, old letters from Trotsky addressed to them. If you bother to read through them. Most folk don't read this stuff. But it's interesting to see the slanging matches, they call it a slanging match, where they'd criticize each other. Trotsky wanted instant rebellion and stop this playing the political game to achieve your goals by the Fabians, meaning the slow technique. He says, have a revolution. But they wouldn't go along with it. They were tempted at times to try and go along with it, but they didn't think they'd get away with it at the time. The public, they couldn't get the public ready for revolution so quickly.

They did the same with Germany of course. Germany, you found lots of articles put out by the top Soviets at the time who before World War II, and even leading up to World War I, they hoped to bring Germany into a revolution for communism, as they were going to do with Russia with the Bolsheviks. They thought by having a revolution, they tried to couple of ones which failed there. But when you read how they analyzed the data when it all failed, they said that the German people, they says, even though they are mainly working-class people, very robust and hard-working people, they just wouldn't fall for this idea of communist system. A lot of them were still religious by the way, you know, in Germany, so they couldn't get them to just overthrow their governments. They really hated it when the Germans would take up arms when told to go and fight for the country. They hated them, for the working class for doing that, they never forgave them for that.

Of course Britain also had little revolutions that they attempted at the time in London. You can still see the old photographs of Winston Churchill in his big top hat at the time, with policeman standing with shotguns around a building near the Key and the Thames, where the Communists had hoped to get a revolution started were holed up. But yeah, it's quite amazing, when they were doing that, they always have the standbys, the trusted method of doing it, which is the Fabian technique of slow, slow incremental changes. Until, yeah, sure, after World War II...

I mean, Britain went into World War II giving the excuse to the public, you know, because you always give excuses and never the truth, of why they're going to fight Germany. They were going to fight supposedly to save their way of life and their culture and their traditions and everything, you know. So they were going to fight national socialism, which was Germany, the National Socialist party and at the end of World War II, supposedly, supposedly the victors, they were worse off than Germany in fact. Germany got on its feet far faster too with economic aid from all the countries, and through the United Nations and the World Bank, they got Germany on its feet much faster. But Britain emerged from World War II AS a national socialist country. The very opposite of what it, actually what it was fighting initially.

So, you understand, you're taken for a ride when you lose your sensibilities and you start parroting propaganda and you start believing the propaganda. You've lost your sensibilities. You won't actually see what’s really happening. And the folk don't see what's happening as they go through it, let's save ourselves. They lose all sensibilities when its panic mode, you know, whether it's a pandemic or it's a war. You're all going to die, give up your rights and freedoms, do what you're told and starve yourselves through rationing, and obey. And they all do it dutifully. That never fails. Hitler mentioned that too, so did Stalin. Stalin was more vocal about it, that the techniques work so well for terrorizing the public. Get them to obey you to save their lives, and then you can do whatever you want with them. It never fails. But folk always forget.

Most folk lose their sensibilities right off the bat. They really do. I remember the Green Party, I've got an article somewhere, it was quite a few years ago, in Britain, where she said that, she looked back with nostalgia at the way her parents and so on put up with World War II and the blitz in London. She said, they seemed so happy and resolute to get through it, even though they were on terrible rationing, it was like a starvation diet, but everybody obeyed the law and they did what they were told. That's what appeals to those in power, when you do what you're told and obey them. [Alan chuckles.] And put up with all kinds of hardships, which you shouldn't be putting up with in the first place.

Nothing changes. And what does that got to do with anything today? Well, you're going through it again. If you really think this pandemic just came out of the blue, fine, you can toss that up in the air and argue about it forever if you want to. But the preparations for it certainly did not. And you can't, I keep saying this, you know, in the 1990s the Project for a New American Century, the PNAC group, that eventually got in with George Bush, you know. In the 90s when they met more informally, even though some of them were in governments at the time too, they wrote their list out, the list of countries they wanted to invade and take over, and plunder, across the Middle East and so on and Asia. We've been doing that ever since actually.

They got little George Bush in there, and the same members of course. And 9/11 happen. They even said it in their articles, they needed something... The first thing you must do is get the public opinion on your side. You must get the support of the people if you want to go to war, you see. So they said they would need something on the scale of a Pearl Harbor event. Well, no one is going to complain about Pearl Harbor, oh, the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor. Of course there's lots of things about that, but regardless, they did attack it. That's what you need to get to go to war, you see. And bingo! I mean literally within two years, or one year, they got what they wanted, 9/11 happened. What luck for them, eh!

They actually say, to get all this agenda done, eh, they would need a Pearl Harbor event to galvanize the people to be behind you for war. And bingo, they get it! They get it. Then all your freedoms get tossed out. Not just in the US, but across the planet. Everybody's in the same mode. Oh, we're all allies, oh, let's all sign the same things into law. Let's use high technology to censor speech and monitor the people. Let's build big, almost cities to collect all the data and for everybody's chitchat, etc. Like the NSA and all the other organizations they're using. And then you train the people not to mind it. And sure enough eventually they get used to it.

Do you ever wonder why folk put up with the Soviet Union? For so long? They got USED TO IT. We can get used to pretty well anything. You get used to it. [Alan laughing.] It doesn't mean it's right or proper. And once you get, they know it too, that once you get, say, 20 years of constant surveillance and facial recognition and thumbprints, iris scans, dut, dut, dut, dut, dut, and dut, they can push it to the next step, because they've all accepted that it's normal. You normalize anything as a new normal. I came out with 'the new normal' years ago, and here's another new normal you're going through now. Because here's the second phase of it.

At the World Economic Forum you have all these big industries and electronic companies, all work with, they're all part of, by the way, of the military-industrial complex. All these different ones that are going to churn out your bracelets and apps and so on for monitoring you for Covid and all that, can you get out of your house, can you not get out of your house, you've got to get this app, yada, ya. These are the same people who are part of, these people are part of the military-industrial complex. Each corporation that you hear is a part of it. So they get big money from the taxpayers, again because you're in a fascist society, and then they make more chains for you. You'll adapt into it as well. Well, I can't, I've got to get that flight, I forgot to get my app upgraded for my immunity passport and blah, blah, blah, and I need it. That will be common phraseology given three years from now.

Here's one example right here, one of many actually. Just with the bracelets alone, never mind the apps that they have for your phones. Of course everybody's got to run towards it, I've got to get the app for my phone. And give it snob appeal and they give it more, we have to buy this one, it's expensive, meaning, oh it's a better one than the commoner’s one. Folk are really pretty dumb, you know. You really see it coming out in times like this, like these. Anyway, this one here is…

Coronavirus Monitoring Bracelets Flood the Market, Ready to Snitch on People Who Don’t Distance

globalresearch.ca / 25 May 2020

(Alan: Wow! There ya go. [Alan chuckles.] They've even got them for factories by the way and they're adapting themselves that they'll go off with alarms if you're closer than 6 feet away. Even though I've got articles here today where I think in Britain and elsewhere, they're dropping it to may be, well maybe 3 feet away is okay, you know. As they adjust the magic slide rule. [Alan chuckles.] Because it's all magic, it's got nothing to do with reality or science. So anyway here they go, it says…)

Surveillance firms around the world are licking their lips at a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to cash in on the coronavirus by repositioning one of their most invasive products: the tracking bracelet.

(A: That's the one that Tam in Canada is pushing of course. Of course she mentioned that years ago. It would be interesting too, to find out how many at the top have got shares in the products as well, by the way. They'll be given shares, I'm sure, to promote them in their own countries.)

Body monitors are associated with criminality and guilt in the popular imagination, the accessories of Wall Street crooks under house arrest and menace-to-society parolees. Unlike smartphones, de facto tracking devices in their own right, strapped-on trackers are expressly designed to be attached to the body and exist solely to report the user’s whereabouts and interactions to one or more third parties; they don’t play podcasts or tell you how many steps you took that day to sweeten the surveillance.

But a climate of perpetual bio-anxiety has paved the way for broader acceptance of carceral technologies, with a wave of companies trying to sell tracking accessories to business owners eager to reopen under the aegis of responsible social distancing (A: [Alan chuckles.]) and to governments hoping to keep a closer eye on people under quarantine.

It goes on and on. But this is one example. That's from Global Research, it's a longer article of course. But I know they're also putting into them more data, and of course they'll report you if you're out of... You see, when they put you into a certain area, which of course all totalitarian systems do eventually, and of course under Agenda 21 they don't want you moving outside your area that you live in. Hm? Did you know that? [Alan chuckles.] I hope you know that. Under the agenda for the whole 21st century they actually mention eventually they'll phase out all privately owned vehicles.

You will be locked down basically with or without pandemics in your own little area. It's more tidy that way, your masters like it to be tidy and efficient, you understand. And if you're taking time off to go holidaying across the countryside, that's awfully untidy, and you should do what you're told and be good and stay in your own little area, where you're monitored, and your little bracelet will go off. That's what we'll all get. I mean, this stuff really is all for...

This is never going to go away; I hope you understand this. They are licking their lips at the top. Just like the 9/11 with the incredible surveillance laws that they just rammed down everybody's throats without asking, do you mind. It's never going to go away because it's so lucrative.

We're slaves, you understand. We are slaves, and as far as those at the top, the WEF, the World Economic Forum are concerned and the Club of Rome, we're obsolete slaves. We really don't have any rights because they don't need us anymore. They're only suffering us, you know, we're in sufferance at the moment, that’s how they put up with us, not because they really want to, and they don't really need us so much now, you see. They really don't.

They planned their great leap forward into the future, into their modern utopia that they keep telling us all about, that's just for themselves with a vastly reduced population. Like the Georgia Guidestones prattle on about, and that people like oh, Jacques Cousteau is one and David Attenborough. Jacques Cousteau is awfully good about it. He said quite openly, in between, you know, cuddling his fish and everything, he mentioned that they'd have to kill off maybe about 140,000 people a day, every day, rapidly, over the normal death rate, to bring the population down over so many years to a more acceptable level. I guess to get more room for his fish and things I suppose, you know. Yep.

They always give you the same characters, that are eugenicists, you know, when you look at the organizations they belong to. They always put them out to get the children to like them. Because the children follow the heroes that they see. They had David Suzuki in Canada who would, he said we were maggots actually, we're just maggots living on the droppings of higher involved maggots above us, you see. That's what he said, eh. And David Attenborough has been very blatant about it. They made him a Sir for being so blatant about it. Which tells you a lot right off the bat too who runs the show at the top. And Prince Philip's organizations of course, 'eh.

It's astonishing what we live in and how people hear everything that they should be wary of, they hear about it and should take action, but they don't. They think, well, they can't mean what they say. Do you understand, that happens before every terrible catastrophe in history? Oh, they won't do that, nobody would do that. You know?

When you look at the Crusades, the Crusades were horrific. Horrific ordeals. For every side that took part in it. And yes, you had the Muslim invasions into Spain and so on, and you get them driven back again and so on. But then you had them following onto that thinking that they go into the holy lands and really quell Muslims and so on, and plunder, do a bit of plundering at the same time, that's always beneficial to those involved. But some of the cities that Christians were holed up in when they were conquered over in the Middle East, they would take the women and then behead everybody that was left. Like hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of people getting beheaded and that was... And the Christians did the same thing in some of the cities they took over.

I guarantee you, when the cities surrendered eventually, the people would all be looking at each other thinking, what are they going to do, are they going to kill us? No, they wouldn't do that. No. They wouldn't do that. It's unthinkable that people would do that. So you cling to that little bit of hope of, well I wouldn't do that personally, so they won't do it either. Well of course they'll get slaughtered. How many times down through history do you think that's happened? Hm? It always happens. Well, they'd never do that. Well, we're civilized now. Every generation down through centuries have said the same thing, we're civilized now, you know, we're more civilized. No, no. It always happens.

Do you know in Scotland, in Scotland when they had the rebellion for Prince Charles, not the present [Alan chuckles.] Prince Charles, I'm talking about the guy who wasn't quite so deformed. He was a young Charlie and he led the rebellion, supposedly. They could have maybe even won, it's even, they speculated too because they got down to Derby, and London was evacuating when the armies went down there. But then they got bad news, and there was an awfully good spinner of tales sent out to deceive them and says, oh the English army's arrived on the coast. They had not arrived on the coast, but they believed that and started retreating back up to Scotland. Well, that was decided by England, or London really who ran everything, that they would annihilate the Highlands. Annihilate, absolutely annihilate them. The troops they sent up there after the battle were really convicts and murderers, but they were given permission to go slaughtering through all the Highlands. And they did. They wiped out thousands of families. Thousands of them. Now, that wasn't ancient history, y'know. It wasn't that long ago, just before the American Revolution in fact.

And it's happening in your own country. Right? And I'm sure they're all saying the same thing, it could never happen, they'd never do that. But they DID. They did. Then for a hundred years after that they were deporting them off the land to Australia and Canada and everywhere else. For the males especially that were of fighting age they could always join the British military and go off and fight and win the wars for the City of London, who ran everything, that's where all the money was that was involved. And the average English person was just the same because they had, they were just as basically [Alan chuckles.] in the dark about how things really ran as the peasants in Scotland. But London was the center of it all. Very old, old center indeed.

But yeah, down through the ages that's how it is. Oh, they'd never do that now. They'd never do that now. Then again as I say, once Britain had its Empire on the go, you have to look at the official secrets act. Every country uses it now. Lord Kitchener, his record couldn't be open for the general public to see for over 100 years. Now, he was the troubleshooter of the day for the Empire. He went across Africa; North Africa and he was sent into India and so on after rebellions and he would just have them slaughtered. He would just use martial law, and what was it, every fifth man, you know, in a village or whatever it is, just grab them, it doesn't matter who they were, and pull them out and in front of the rest of them shoot them, you kill them. That was the lesson that you put out there.

The war of terror didn't start with Lenin. Lenin really understood it perfectly well, the Bolsheviks understood it awfully, awfully well. When it came to running empires there's nothing new in this. It's total brutal force, that's what they do. So, Kitchener's record wasn't open up for about 100 years. And yeah, this bemedaled character with high, high rank who did his best supposedly for the British, this strange, the entity, it's a corporation called the Empire. Because only a few thousand folk in London really benefited from it, that ran all the businesses, you know. But he was the guy that they sent for to deal with the problems. That's how it's always been. That's how it always will be. But the folk don't, again, look at all these little places in India, that were rebelling, or even about the lack of food or whatever it was, or, you name it, stuff getting taken from them, resources and all that, and that's enough to get them killed. One out of five, and that's it. The riot act, you see. That will teach for them for a while, and then they'll be quiet again for a while. They did the same across Africa and so on.

And I'm not saying that all these countries were deadly peaceful either. Because they weren't. The same as Africa. Africa has had the warring tribes for, well, phew, probably thousands of years. M-hm. And the Zulus certainly were efficient warriors, but they were also mass slaughterers as well. And eugenicists by the way, great story there, really fascinating when you read it. How Shaka the Zulu formed them, and he literally had everybody under, you couldn't join them, he would kill everybody under about 5 feet 11” I think it was. Including the females, until they got a people growing up that were really strong and tall and all the rest of it. A eugenicist. I often wonder where he got the idea. But he certainly was. And getting information from traders certainly who would supply him with goods from, I think it was Holland, or parts of Europe anyway, who maybe gave him the idea, I don't know. But he certainly was very efficient in what he did. And utterly ruthless.

But things really are much the same across the world down through the centuries with the techniques that are used on the people. They'd never do that... They'd never do that. Think of the people during the bubonic plagues who were burned out of the villages, as the nobility all came from scattered around the countryside and their biggest estates, and ran into the castle, you see, for protection, and they'd bring in what food they could and yada, yada, ya. But on the way they'd have the remaining peasantries burned down and out of their homes. And during the winter and so on. They would die, with the winter coming on, and their food taken off them into the castle, and their homes burned down. In order to stop the plague getting to the castle. That was standard stuff, you know.

Life is a pretty horrific thing. And we have to acknowledge it. Because when we forget how horrific it is, especially when it comes to those who want power, and then are given power, you can't take your eyes off them for a second! You really can't. And the megalomaniacs, megalomaniacs that you'll see craving the power, openly, you should really, really be, humph, on their utmost guard to make sure these characters never get into power. If they're in power, get them out. I don't care what party they belong to. Because behind them, today as you well know most of them are just fronts with bigger powers behind them all. They know that too.

But for the ordinary people, you've got to start to... Hhhch, the way that you watch those nature programs that are getting you used to the idea that, oh sometimes you know when all these deer move in there and you know, the wolves have to come in behind them and thin down the herd a bit. Because it's a culling. Or else, you know, the big landowner has to do a culling, the Lord. Like Prince Philip used to give a great speech about that. He loved to repeat it, how they used to cull them, the excess ones, the deer, you know. In the speech he was referring to people by the way, that was used as an analogy. When there's just too many people about, it seems the practical thing to do is just cut off the food supply. M-hm.

Then the people who sit and they watch their Disney programs and their happy, happy programs on TV, when they hear Prince Philip saying or they read the articles verbatim from the top magazines on the planet, who are putting the speeches in that he gave at some of the Sierra Club meetings and so on, and world meetings, would say, oh, he didn't really mean it, he's just a bit angry today, you know, he's a bit off.   M-hm. You see, they don't have to make excuses for themselves. Nice people make excuses for them. Terrible isn't it?

But look at what's happening now. As I say, 9/11 took so many rights away, and now the folk accept it. The next phase of the new system, which again the Rockefellers came out with in 2010, for the foundation, of course by the big foundation. Remember that the Rockefellers were the ones who really ran the Council on Foreign Relations on behalf of the Royal Institute of International Affairs, this private club that runs the world. He's up there, he was the chairman for it for the US branch for years. Then an assistant there as he was getting older. But he also was up there picking the Trilateral group, the real movers and shakers, starting with Jimmy Carter. They're on the go today. For efficiency's sake, they bypass and get around democracy and public debate.

So they're out there today doing their thing. During a pandemic. And bingo, you've got, they bring out Dershowitz. Oh, you know, like he's... What is Dershowitz? I mean, who appointed this guy to be anything? Hm? Hm? Sometimes you have to toss this book of law out the window, you know, and do what's needed to be done to survive. You have to pull him out of the closet every so often to tell you, and that you’ve got to take some kind of vaccination according to what is it, Leviticus wasn't it, he said in his little talk there. Well, good for him that he believes that. Then leave that to him to believe in, you don't have to believe it. Or go along with it for that matter. But I didn't hear GOD saying to let some corporation stick its brew in anybody's arms. I haven't seen that anywhere. Np.

And by the way I think Mr. Dershowitz should really read his Bible a bit more, his Torah. Because in there there's a whole bunch of things they're not supposed to take into their bodies, and when you look into what's in the vaccines, [Alan chuckles.] it's worse than some of that stuff. So I think, you know, I think there would be actual rules against the concoctions that they're bringing up altogether.

It's the same thing, they used to pull out Alan Greenspan, like he was some kind of deity. And I really mean that, the way that the media would, Alan Greenspan is going to come out and address the nation tonight. They'd have this kind of stage thing, and up would come the lights, and you'd see him walking out of the darkness onto the stage. He would look very firm and stern. And really, it's really all for effect, it was very dramatic, you see. He knew what he was doing. He looked left and right, and stare, and still wouldn't say anything. And everybody was sort of breathing and holding their breath. And he's talking about, it was to do with the stock market, and he would say, cool it. That was all, cool it. Then they'd all immediately go to the printing presses, he said cool it, he said cool it, the stock market is too hot, brrrrrrrrrr. God has spoken.

A complete fabrication of nonsense. Because the whole system is so bogus. The stock market has been propped up by the taxpayers every night under a particular act for the last, what, 30 odd years or 40 years. So there's nothing real about it. Anymore than there's anything real about the Federal Reserve in the States, hm, which is owned by outside forces too. [Alan laughing.] There you go, we live in fantasy. A very carefully contrived fantasy, isn't it? The stock market is contrived and rigged completely. The financial system is completely rigged completely as well.

I can remember many years ago the Bank of Canada had a little, there was a little documentary on it. Just a very short one, probably on the national one, the CBC when they used to do the occasional little bit of stuff that was a bit, I wouldn't call it testy but interesting rather than fallacious. They said did you know that the Bank of Canada isn’t a bank at all? They showed you the building where they'd meet, and it's the appointee, the government appointee that represents the Bank of Canada that would meet there, with other members of government, to arrange loans on behalf of outside sources. That's what it was. There was no bank there at all.

Now, at one time there used to BE a bank and I did a talk on that years ago, when Canada used to literally issue its own currency, and spend it into circulation, that's how it was done by the government. Even during the Great Depression you can still see the old articles that were put out by, in other countries as well as Canada, because the countries would come to Canada to see how it was... Canada was the only country that wasn't really suffering badly in a Great Depression because it printed its own currency. The government printed it; they didn't put it out to a private company. Now it does, you see. Since again, Pierre Trudeau came in, he changed it. That was Justin's daddy. Since then we were loaded with massive debt like everybody else. But before that it didn't have debt.

We're under a common system run by the same folk, the same gang. They always say, well it's too complex for average people to understand. Well, no kidding! Since I said last week, it's like voodoo, you know. It's not based on anything at all. I mean, I could, I COULD, I'm pretty sure I could, if they let me near, just for a day, into say a Federal Reserve Bank or the Bank of Canada, when they're arranging their loans for the week for the country, right, from the private ones. I'm sure I could print in, I could just look up the main sum that's owed, you see, or say it's supposedly in your checking account, it's all borrowed money, for Canada, for the government, and I'm sure I could add one or two zeros to the end of that number. Just to stretch it out a bit further. Because that's all they're doing at the time. They're not handing any cash over when you borrow money from the private sector. It doesn't happen. It's all just, you just add zeros to the end of an actual number. That's how you do. Keep extending it, that's what the Federal Reserve does. They don't put up, there's no gold in Fort Knox. That all want a long time ago. Quietly too.

It's just fascinating to realize we live in a fantasy world. And everybody, everybody's, it's like the air you breathe, it's just natural, you're brought up using this thing called money, and everybody expects it to circulate. And sometimes you'll notice you need more of X amount of dollars to buy the same handful of groceries that you buy every week or whatever, and sometimes you need more dollars, and sometimes it's maybe about a little bit less, but generally it's always more. And it’s set to be that way, you see. And we accept that as normal too.

There's no reason for it or given to the public. Well, it's inflation. Really? What it means is, since your money's based on nothing but they pretend it's still based on some kind of standard. It's all pretense. I mean the whole system is pretense. If it was, if it still was, say the British system used to be a pound sterling, sterling silver, eh. That's how things were worked out. And there was little physical money, they used to have gold coins too, which is like guineas and so on which they would use for the big banks and so on. But the currency was based on sterling silver, and you had pound shillings and pence, and half crowns and florins and shillings and so on, but silver, all the way down to silver sixpences and things like that. But it was real wealth. It was real silver, you see. So that was passed around, that was real wealth.

But when eventually they took it off the standard, they kept saying you know, sterling silver, and they were pounds sterling, but they took all the silver out of circulation and gave you substitutes, you see, of fake rubbishy... Look at the pennies you have today even in Canada. They did away with them in Canada, but they weren't copper anymore. You see, everything had a real value. Copper, your pennies were real copper. So you had to get so many of them to make up X amount, the equivalent of X amount of sterling silver for a pound. That's how it was worked out. So it was a real type of currency. It really had value.

But once you took them off even a gold standard, that was all put again, supposedly in the Bank of England, they had massive vaults with the gold in it. Then it was based on nothing to back it. Then they took the silver out of circulation. There's nothing, the whole thing is built on faith. And the priests that run the faith system there, literally decide what it's going to be worth that day, you know. Your pound is worth this today, meaning you've got to get more of it to buy the same, as I say, handful of groceries or something like that. It's the whim of whoever tells you that. It's not really based on anything. But they run it today as though it was still based on, backed by gold or something.

Do you realize that if you went back 40 years, say, in the UK, you could probably live pretty well on 20 pounds a week 40 years ago? Now you need hundreds and hundreds of pounds, maybe even just to pay your rent. Because they'll say, oh it's inflation. Because they keep devaluing the currency because supposedly the country owes that much abroad or to the lenders or whatever it happens to be. So they keep devaluing the currency and you end up having to pay more and more and more. So you need more and more of that paper or plastic or whatever it is to get the same amount of stuff. And we're taught that this is normal. And yet nobody can explain it to you properly. Because as I say, it's as though it was still to do with real value. There is no real value since it's backed by nothing. You can't compare to anything. It's just somebody's idea what the price of anything is today. I'm not saying, well we all owe so many billions abroad and here's the exact amount so therefore we have to value… It's not even that anymore, you see. Because it's nothing, nothing's based… All they do is put blips on computers across the planet. That's all it is.

Greenspan said one thing that was true. He did say that we can never go bust again, if we don't want to go bust, because we just keep printing money up. That's what he said. Because it's based on nothing. It doesn't… At one time the paper money used to be, represent what they actually had in actual gold or silver in the big bank vaults. That's what it represented. So technically you weren't supposed to print more money than you had gold, real gold and real currency to back it with. It was a representative; a note was a representation of something that was real and tangible at one time. That was all done away with too.

Anyway, I'm getting off the topic. What I'm saying is, we live in a world of fantasies, where we don't realize how fragile everything is, because it's bogus. It truly is bogus. Today for instance, and we all know this, we're supposed to go through another phony war with China. Just like we had the big phony war with the Soviet Union. In a great respect it was phony. There were little battles and skirmishes at the bottom to make it all real for those near the bottom, or those who participated at the bottom level. We've got to remember that the presidents and prime ministers talked to their counterparts in the Soviet Union, every day, from Britain and the States and everywhere else, on their special phones, you know, to make sure that nothing went wrong. They'd have their little tit-a-tats and little spats and things, but it didn't amount to much at all. At the bottom level you had to put the occasional troops in behind enemy lines here and there, who would get caught because you had spies on all sides turning them in. But above that, it was really well-run to make sure nothing really happened. It was so lucrative for all sides, for the weapons industries, that they wanted it to go on forever. They really did.

Russia eventually couldn't keep up with it, you see. Russia is just as crooked as everybody else, like the West was. They had their elite livings so high on the hog, in this socialist paradise that was meant for those in the top, that even when the wall fell down, preplanned of course, they rushed out. In the newspapers at the time they showed you even a relative, I can remember, of Lord Rothschild in England was leaving the Soviet Union, and his family, this particular member of the family had been managing the top banks in Russia for a generation at least, you know.

Folks thought, well I thought everything was centralized, and they got all their nonsense we're told of the Soviet system. They didn't ban private banks, folks. They didn't, of course they didn't. Who do you think set it up? And they even made sure that most of the currency that went through their hands was American currency. The Americans helped, Americans gave them their plates, do you know that, during World War II? Anyway, again I'm getting way off topic. Because sometimes [Alan laughing.] it's staggering [Alan laughing.] when you think of how the world is really run. It's staggering. But you must always keep tabs on it all. Otherwise you'll get back into Disneyland and, well they'd never do that again, eh, and so on.

The Best Enemies Money Can Buy, I think Anthony Sutton put out books on that. He was awfully good, Sutton. He did incredibly well documented investigations into the systems that we really live under and have lived under. Right down to Wall Street and The Bolshevik Revolution, how the top bankers financed them. But they also financed the Japanese, by the way, for those who don't know that as well. To even rearm and even showed them how to build the ships and so on for their navies and so on. That was all done by money from America mainly. And London, but America at the time. Well documented.

So, The Best Enemies Money Can Buy, and we financed and set up the Soviet Union. We fed them. We kept selling them grain right up through the 1970s and 80s, you know. Even after the revolution as they were slaughtering what was left of the middle classes, to wipe them out, like Trotsky said, we have annihilated and wiped out an entire class, he's talking about millions of people here. And the West through the whole time was putting out charity stuff to send them food, clothing and shoes and so on, lots of woolens for their cold winters. They make the best enemies money can buy, eh? Again you have, Who Financed Hitler. Anthony Sutton again. Excellent book to read for those who don't know about it. Others did the same things too, good investigative work.

But the thing is, what I'm saying is, nothing is ever as it seems. And we people, we poor people never get a proper education at school. You're not meant to know these things; you're supposed to get the basic Disney version of things and believe it. On the one hand I can see some, even psychologists say that it's important we believe the fairytales, or we would get so depressed that we would become suicidal, if you realized how bad the world can be. And the psychologists today and the behaviorists certainly should know that since most of them are working for the government against us [Alan chuckles.] to manage our thoughts, etc. That's where the money is, isn't it? Managing our thoughts and our behavior.

But yeah, I've been going through the talks when we did the GATT treaty with China, for China, and got them into the World Trade Organization. We financed them too, China didn't pull itself up by its own boots. They were financed completely and trained by the West. Thousands of students per year came to Canada and Britain and elsewhere and in the States to get trained in engineering and design, all these kinds of things, electronics and so on at universities. We bent over backwards to make sure it happened, even brought them in, before they could even go home and find enough work for themselves, in those days. All done in advance. Then with the World Trade Organization, we gave them the factories and signed for them to get moved over to China. We paid for the top, all the factories to move to China.

It was astonishing at the time living through it and realizing that no one was concerned about it. The people really believe the media is going to tell you what to worry about. They really believe that, that it is there to do their reasoning for them. That's what Brzezinski said in his book, you know, that shortly the public will be unable to do their reasoning for themselves, they'll expect the media to do their actual thinking and their reasoning for them. Like warn them. Well, they don't warn you. Even when they're doing drastic things like, hey, do you realize the massive unemployment you're going to have when all these factories have gone to China? And how helpless you'll be if you ever get in a tiff with China, if they ever decide to make it the big bad Dragon again? Well, how are you going to make anything? Look at us today, you can't even make the facemasks for goodness sake.

You always plan the future and the disasters and the tiffs of the future, that's what we do. You make the enemies your friends, you finance them up to be strong, those who have the money who live high on the hog and bring in big, big cash bonuses of cheap labor for a long time, and then when the military-industrial boys say, well you know we're really missing the lucrative era of the Cold War, can't we make another war? Well, here you go. So then you start to say, oh, that China is bad again, and so is Russia. You understand? That's what the economy is there to serve, it's not for us. It's not for us.

Those at the top, they'd love to have it all done by robots and machines. Because they really resent you having to get a wage to even keep yourself and feed yourself, you see, they hate that. It's just not efficient enough, you see. But with robots, robots wouldn't have to vote for anything or be kept happy and given entertainment too, you know. They wouldn't get up to no good, you know, and say, well, that's terrible, we’re slaves. Only humans get to that stage, and they really resent that. They've got to have... It's a big psychological operation to keep us all, just under the surface, of bubbling through into discontentment. That's what all the bureaucracies are for that involve all the surveilling on the Internet and on all your chats, about constantly analyzing the mood of the public.

So, this particular member of the Rothschild family was leaving the Soviet Union and going to Britain [Alan chuckles.] to meet his cousin. With lots of loot of course. And a small private army by the way too that escorted him to the airport. So, it's just astonishing that they can accumulate wealth regardless of the system or the name the system is particularly called. That was the beauty of that too, that you could make money and profit as long as it wasn't off of people's labor, that's how they worded it, through legalities as usual. They got around all the different laws of the supposed centralized banking system of this day. There's always a way, isn't there, for those who are cunning enough, and with enough experience too, to pull the wool over folks' eyes, with terminology and apparent understanding of things which most folk had never seen in that particular light before.

We can't imagine it, you see, we think things are much more simpler than that. It's just astonishing to us. It kind of entertains us too and puts us into a hypnotic state when they start telling us, giving us big words and long phrases that muddle up our thinking using terminology.

And before you know it, you're pointing in their direction and you're, well I guess they know what they're talking about. Because you DON’T. That's just it. That's the beauty of conology. It's quite an art, conology. That's the world we're living in.

So, as I say, I'm going to mention some articles here anyway regardless, because we're going through amazing times. We're living through history, and governments doing all the things we were warned about over and over by folk who knew, who knew better, from previous centuries. We hear it from George Orwell. We hear it from Thomas Jefferson and George Washington. All these different people, down through the ages, people who actually lived and helped create the systems to break away from the old system of corruption and royalties and nobilities and aristocracies that ruled, and banking systems too.

And certainly, yeah, we always end up getting taken over by the same institutions step-by-step, often with different names and so on, but the same things by the same peoples who understand these things. They took over again and you’re right back to where you started eventually. Sometimes worse, it depends. I often look at America and the potential it had, it was astronomical for doing good for its own people and giving some peace and so on. And how it was totally destroyed over time by a very clever, quiet, intellectual wars which again were really fomented at the University levels by outsiders, they came in with their doctrines of revolution and to overthrow the people.

No system has ever been perfect, remember. Never. But in the US for a period of time regardless of what you decided you want to do or how you wanted to live, you were allowed to live like that for a long time. Until government stepped in. You could go off and live in a shack in some forest, if you wanted to, and you'd be left alone to do it. But not anymore. They want money off you no matter where you plopped down your behind on a chair, they want money for it, for that little space you're occupying. And taxation, and for taxation you've got to then get a job to earn their kind of coin to pay them back with. It's such a racket. We're just slaves, as I say. And it's always used, terminology is what confuses folk. It's all just the terms that they use, you know.

Here's a few quotes just from Thomas Jefferson. Again, little, littles statements have such profound meanings, and are so simple to say, and so simple even to just let flash through your mind. But when you just dwell on it for a little bit, this is, these are statements that were made long before he came up with them. He was simply repeating them from previous centuries. And nothing is ever diminished by time when it comes to these particular things to do with humankind and governments and so on. He said here...

There's no justification for taking away individuals’ freedom in the guise of public safety.

Okay?

There's NO justification, NO justification. He didn't say generally no, he says there IS no justification for taking away individuals' freedom in the guise of public safety.

Because you understand, all the tricks and cons had been used in the past, are used today. It's the same thing. And they knew it so well back then, they had a better education back then in reality than we have today. And they didn't have TV to brainwash them with teams of psychologists and neuroscientists and behaviorists all working to bring you wonderful dramas, that through fiction will bring you to the right conclusions and adopt the right opinions.

He also said...

When you abandon freedom to achieve security, you lose both and deserve neither.

When you abandon freedom to achieve security, you lose BOTH and deserve neither.

The issue today is the same as it has been throughout all history, whether man shall be allowed to govern himself or be ruled by a small elite.

That's also what, of course Thomas Jefferson was a Mason, but that used to be the argument they had in Freemasonry for the US. And they called it the big experiment. It was the first experiment to see if people could govern themselves. And if not, they would be ruled by a powerful elite. And that's what you've got, the latter. The second experiment of course was the Soviet Union where they took it for granted you could never have the wherewithal to properly govern yourselves, so it would be done by experts. That's what you're in today, by the way, if you haven't figured it out. M-hm. The experts are all employed by the small elite, the tyrannical elite that took over.

He also says…

I think myself that we have more machinery of government than is necessary, too many parasites living on the labor of the industrious. Government big enough to supply everything you need is big enough to take everything you have ... The course of history shows that as a government grows, liberty decreases. The two enemies of the people are criminals and government, so let us tie the second down with the chains of the constitution so the second will not become the legalized version of the first.

And isn't that the truth? And that's what it was meant to be. There was nothing that's happening today, really, that would have surprised these founding fathers. Again, who had a better education into history and how the world really ran, [Alan chuckles.] and how it had run in the past, and the different tricks that had been used on the public before to take the rights away. That wouldn't surprise them that they were using different techniques today, or different excuses today, to take them away again.

Again, Jefferson warned about the powers of the banks and the private banking monopolies. He said they were more powerful than standing armies to take your rights away.

When I think about it too, as these trillions have been dished out to the same people, Wall Street, etc., and the military boys at the very, very top, the big corporations... And don't forget that Pharma is highly associated with the military-industrial complex, folks, including vaccines. Because the biowarfare industry is completely, intricately involved with making vaccines as well. That's how they... They actually use the exploration of bacteria and viruses as, to help you all, but it's really for the military-industrial complex. It's a two-way street.

So, we're going through it big time right now. Most folk don't figure it out. But yeah, look at the rights that the people lost with 9/11. Oh, you're all going to die, again. Well, they weren't all going to die. But we can't have you, you can't have rights anymore, we've got to keep you safe, eh. [Alan laughing.] So that you end up having no rights to keep you safe. If you don't, if you have no rights, how on earth can you be safe, folks?! Hm? It's your.... Ah, it's quite amazing. What a paradox, as they say, how they can confuse and muddle the brains of the ordinary folk. Poor souls. Aren't we all poor souls really living through all this nonsense?

And yeah, the powerful elites have taken over the Hamilton version of America, it's what prevailed. Hamilton and Jefferson used to go at it a little bit, you know, and they had their little differences and so on. But Hamilton had been brought up with a silver spoon, it would be a gold spoon in his mouth, on an island, it was one of the islands off, it was St. Kitts, I think it was on Nevis. I understand even opening up or rebuilding his old family home and making a kind of monument to it for visitors. But they had a big slave plantation there.

Hamilton was all for the British system in many ways, and the private banking system, absolutely, he was all for that too. Jefferson apparently had visited his quarters at one point. Jefferson commented on, how come all these portraits and paintings are of tyrants? Like Alexander the great and so on. That's who Hamilton admired. He admired all the tyrants in history that just took history by the horns, you know, and pulled everything through the hole of time into new systems. The ones who just took imagination and made it all come into reality. That's what Hamilton really admired, tyrants. He didn't believe in the common people at all. That was the differences between him and Jefferson's way of looking at things.

Quite interesting. It would be interesting actually to have them, ha, have them on a program today on TV, like a debate thing. It would be quite interesting to publicized that, if they saw what was happening today. You can pretty well tell where both sides would be, both parties would be.

So, getting back to these bracelets that's going to have your whole ID on them. Initially they'll use your phones of course. But they really want you to be tracked with something permanently, that you can't take off. That's why the whole idea of the type of vaccination that would also be a kind of tattooed imprint IN your skin, keeping a record of all your vaccinations up to date, it's going to be a permanent thing. You have to carry your whole history with you, to be accessed by your betters, the ones who rule over you, you see, and their henchmen. Because folk, it's just henchmen who end up working for them. You know that. Under different names, well, they're, they keep, they are peace officers, or they’re this, that. No, no, no. These are henchmen, folks, and you're a slave.

Don't forget what a manacle is. I don't care if they want to call it a bracelet, it's a manacle, electronic or otherwise. That's really what it is. That's a sign of a slave. So is the tattoo forced upon you, it's called a BRAND. That's what you do with cattle, you brand them. You've got to start seeing things for what they actually are. And what they want to do. But yeah, I gave these very talks in the 1990s, of their whole vaccination record, where it would have to be up to date, you wouldn't get into a store, alarms would go off with something on your body if you weren't up-to-date with your vaccinations. And here we are! It's just amazing. But there you go.

We're all going through this stuff too. We know from the beginning as I've said before, one of your telltale signs of something being awry and not quite right was when Fauci immediately said, well, after he basically changed his mind about the pandemic just being, it could just be a bad flu he said, in the New England Medical Journal. I'll put that link up today too if you want to read it for yourselves, as proof of it. He said, it might not be no more than a bad flu, initially. Of course once they saw the dollar values, and all the big corporations were calling him up and, you know, we're onto a good thing here, then he changed his mind and immediately said, well nothing's going to fix this except the vaccination and we can’t come out of lockdown until you've all got your vaccinations up to scratch.

You're talking about perpetual lockdown, folks. Do you understand that? This is the whole, this is the revolution I've been talking about. It's THEIR revolution into the new paradigm of scientific management of society. Although it's all bogusly run really but under the guise of science. Total lockdown, new way of living, sustainability, all the things they couldn't get you to just simply go along with, post consumerist and all the rest of it. Here you go with it all.

I mentioned that last week and it's interesting, the next, a couple of days later one of the biggest shows started mentioning the very same things I was talking about, verbatim from my talk. Which isn't unusual actually from that particular one.

But here we go through this big agenda here and everybody's on board with it. But yeah, pretty well at the start he was all for this permanent lockdown. Along with the World Health Organization, and every chiefly appointed health officer for every nation pretty well is on board with the same thing. Isn't that a bit of a coincidence? ...the exact same thing? Hm? You'd think it would be something, well, there's a few countries that didn't go totally along with the same thing, that did very well actually without even lockdowns. So facts don't matter. The agenda is what's important, to bring in a new way of living, into austerity.

I used to give the talks on austerity, that the countries all signed on at the United Nations for, for sustainability. They called it austerity programs. And here you go. This is how you bring it in. And any excuse will do, 'eh. Once you get the food, well, who's growing the food? Who's planting it? Where's it coming from? Hm? When do you think it will start to really run out? The big boys at the top know. They DO know. They're not sitting stupidly at the top. They have other well-paid professionals, experts as they say, looking at all the different scenarios here. They know what they're doing. But there's a big agenda to bring you into line, into this new system. And it's horrific.

Many folk will refuse to believe it. They'll live in that kind of, oh they don't plan to do this forever. If they have their spike, which obviously they will DO, even with the flu it dies down in the summer, the viruses do. And coronaviruses die down in the summer. Then they come back, and they hit again around the late fall, for the wintertime into the next spring. So, you always get a bit of a spike, you see, returning. And they know that. That's why they say, oh, if we get a spike RETURNING, we'll have to lock you down. Because they KNOW it's going to return! That's the agenda. Remember, they wanted, and Fauci wanted a permanent lockdown into next year from the beginning. That's what he said. So, they always get what they want, because there's a whole agenda to fulfill here, you know.

Now, facial recognition is a big part of being a slave too. The big corporations all attend the World Economic Forum. Look at the basket, we're all the eggs in the basket, you see, and they're all deciding how to make money off of each egg. And here they go, the state of facial recognition...

Mapped: The State Of Facial Recognition Around The World

zerohedge.com / 25 May 2020

(A: The whole world is their oyster now. It says…)

In its most benign form, facial recognition technology is a convenient way to unlock your smartphone. (A: Again, they always give you a good reason, oh that's plausible, you know.) However, as Visual Capitalist's Iman Ghosh notes, at the state level, facial recognition is a key component of mass surveillance, and it already touches half the global population on a regular basis.

North America, Central America, and Caribbean

In the U.S., a 2016 study showed that already half of American adults were captured in some kind of facial recognition network. More recently, the Department of Homeland Security unveiled its “Biometric Exit” plan, which aims to use facial recognition technology on nearly all air travel passengers by 2023, to identify compliance with visa status.

(A: It goes on and on and on about…)

…59% of Americans are actually in favor of implementing facial recognition technology, considering it acceptable for use in law enforcement according to a Pew Research survey. (A: But at least…)
…some cities such as San Francisco have pushed to ban surveillance, citing a stand against its potential abuse by the government.

(A: You’ve got to understand what Jefferson said too. He was always on about government will always abuse power, if you let them, on behalf of a small rich elite, you see, who always take it over. And that’s where we are.)

South America

(A: It goes into Brazil and how they're cracking down on crime and they're using more and more facial recognition surveillance. Europe of course.)

Europe

East Asia and Oceania

Africa

China

(A: And China is way above there with their special glasses too, that literally read up whoever is walking past, you know, even about a dozen at a time, they all come up at once in special glasses that the cops can wear at the train stations and so on. They've shown that on little clips.)

So that's, yeah, this is the fantastic time for making money off the slaves. And you're owned. You understand, with each right that you have to even be, to have privacy, once it's gone, you're completely owned. These are the reasons you had things like privacy and laws and rules and regulations and so on, because once they take it away from you, you're just an open slave with no rights at all, folks. M-hm.

Your “Immunity Passport” Future Begins To Materialize As Airlines Call For Digital ID Tracking Systems

activistpost.com / 26 May 2020

(A: Well, let them call for it all they want. Once again, you can't give in for big corporations of any kind. I don't care who they are. You can't give in because they want to take more and more rights away. Eh? Freedom of movement, hm? It won't be just for airlines. It can be, it will go into a few streets from your own home will eventually. This is where it WILL go, and I really mean that.)

The world’s largest airline trade group has called for immunity passports, (A: Again, that’s where all your vaccinations…) thermal screening, masks, and physical distancing to be a part of the industry’s strategy for returning to “normal” operations.

(A: Once they start that it’s never going to be normal, eh. Hm?)

The International Air Transport Association (IATA), which represents 299 airlines, recently issued their publication, Biosecurity for Air Transport A Roadmap for Restarting Aviation, which outlines their strategy to open up air travel as governments begin to lift travel restrictions.

Under a section titled, “The passenger experience” and “Temporary biosecurity measures,” (A: Nothing is temporary when it comes to money and technology and making money off you.) the IATA describes their vision of post-COVID-19 flights. The organization calls for contact tracing, a controversial method of tracking the civilian population to track the spread of COVID-19.

(A: SURE. [Alan chuckles.])

“We foresee the need to collect more detailed passenger contact information which can be used for tracing purposes,” the report states. “Where possible, the data should be collected in electronic form, and in advance of the passenger arriving at the airport including through eVisa and electronic travel authorization platforms.”

Interestingly, this call for pre-boarding check-in using “electronic travel authorization platforms” coincides with the recent announcement of the Covi-Pass (A: They call it the Covi-Pass. [Alan chuckles.]) and the Health Pass from Clear, both of which call for a digital ID system using biometrics and storing travel, health, and identification data.

Alexandre de Juniac, IATA’s CEO, told Arabian Industry that “a layered approach” combining multiple measures which are “globally implemented and mutually recognized by governments” are “the way forward for biosecurity.”

(A: Any excuse will do, eh? Any excuse will do, folks. What was it Jefferson said about giving up your freedoms for security? [Alan chuckles.])

The IATA also calls for temperature screening at entry points to airport terminals. They envision the airline experience involving physical distancing of 3-6 feet throughout the airport.

(A: Ah, this whole distancing thing is completely bogus, folks. I'll touch on that later too.)

Although the organization acknowledged that there is not currently a fast reliable test for COVID-19, (A: It doesn’t matter.) they believe that once an effective test is developed it could be applied on entry to the terminal. They call for this measure to be “incorporated into the passenger process as soon as an effective test, validated by the medical community, has been developed.”

(A: Expert groups and medical communities, eh, all in charge of you. Anthony Fauci naturally is on the topic of immunity passports do with the World Health Organization and Bill Gates... all this cabal, this gang, eh? The very same kind of gang, like the criminal gangs that Jefferson talked about, eh? They always have nice titles and stuff, but it's a gang nonetheless.)

On the topic of immunity passports — an idea discussed by Anthony Fauci, the World Health Organization, and Bill Gates — the IATA states that “immunity passports could play an important role in further facilitating the restart of air travel.” The organization believes that if a person is shown to have recovered from COVID-19 and developed immunity they will not need protective measures. Once medical evidence supports the possibility of immunity to COVID-19, IATA believes “it is essential that a recognized global standard be introduced, and that corresponding documents be made available electronically.”

(A: This is a prison; I hope you understand they're setting up a whole world prison here. If they don't like you eventually they'll just, you'll be surprised how, immediately, if they don't like what you're doing or what you're saying or whatever, you'll just suddenly be diagnosed going through a thing as, oh, you've got a temperature. I don't think that, my own personal temperature thermometer says I'm okay. Oh, well, our one says we can't let you travel. They'll definitely harass you so you can't go anywhere. Do you think I'm kidding? Do you really think I'm kidding, eh? Do you think that doesn't happen in real life, that kind of thing? [Alan chuckles.] Oh, I-yi-yi. N-n. So, they're talking about bringing in...)

Biometrics would include facial recognition, retina scanning, and/or thumbprints.

Coronavirus: NHS app paves the way for 'immunity passports' - bbc.com / 27 May 2020

Covid-19 — Navigating the Uncharted - New England Journal of Medicine (Fauci) - nejm.org / 26 Mar 2020

Remember, these folk will have your DNA and everything on record here, folks. Your whole history. N-n-n. I'll put these links up too. That one is from The Last American Vagabond, that site. It's not bad at all.

California doctors say they've seen more deaths from suicide than coronavirus since lockdowns washingtonexaminer.com / 21 May 2020

(A: Again too, they knew from the beginning, they had all the psychologists on board with their hands out, everybody who studies you all, you know. We're the ants, you see, they're all studying us. They've got their hands out, we'll do another study on this and the whole bit and see how we can do... and dut-dut-dut and dut and dut. Great times to do big experiments on the general population, that's what they're doing right now. All to do with future control, you see, more effective control. So, there's more suicides with folk at home and all that.)

Doctors in Northern California say they have seen more deaths from suicide than they’ve seen from the coronavirus during the pandemic.

“The numbers are unprecedented,” Dr. Michael deBoisblanc of John Muir Medical Center in Walnut Creek, California, told ABC 7 News about the increase of deaths by suicide, adding that he’s seen a “year’s worth of suicides” in the last four weeks alone.

DeBoisblanc said he believes it’s time for California officials to end the stay-at-home order and let people back out into their communities.

"Personally, I think it's time," he said. "I think, originally, this was put in place to flatten the curve…”

(A: But it really didn’t! You understand, this whole idea of flatten the curve is a novel thing too. Because every other coronavirus before in history, and flus as well, you see, you go through it and then you get herd immunity. Folk get sick, there's always the elderly that die, that's standard every year, folks. I hate to break the bad news but that's often what happens. Then you get over it with herd immunity.)

(A: But if you lock people down, they're not mixing to pass it on to get the herd immunity. Remember, most folk with this Covid 19 don't even know they've had it. They have no symptoms. Others, the smaller minority that have a few symptoms are very, very mild. It's the elderly who have other complications that get hit hardest, and that happens every year with every kind of virus that comes out at that time of year, in the wintertime into the spring. You know that. That's the standard history.)

(A: But the lockdown is stopping the children from mixing. The children are the greatest carriers of all these things. They always spread colds and flus and viruses throughout the community, bring them home and into the streets and so on, that's what happens. Then everybody picks it up one way or another, whether they know it or not, and then they get immune to it. That's HOW you get herd immunity.)

(A: This lockdown, this experimental lockdown for it, when for the first time in history, which makes no sense unless it's deliberate for a different reason, you see. I think it's the latter. But the total lockdown of the healthy, stops them getting herd immunity, so it's pretty well guaranteed to spike again in the fall, the late fall. This is what, this is planned to happen. They're not stupid at the top.)

(A: But they say, yeah, you don't lockdown the healthy people. That's how you would GET herd immunity, hm. So anyway, this is talking about suicides and so on…)

By late March, more people had died in just one Tennessee county from suicide than had died in the entire state directly from the virus.

A study published in early May suggested that the coronavirus could lead to at least 75,000 deaths directly brought on by anxiety from the virus, job losses, and addiction to alcohol and drugs.

Another study conducted by Just Facts around the same time computed a broad array of scientific data showing that stress is one of the deadliest health hazards in the world and estimated that the coronavirus lockdowns will destroy 7 times as many years of human life than strict lockdowns can save.

Earlier this week, more than 600 doctors signed their names on a letter to President Trump, referring to the continued lockdowns as a “mass casualty incident” and urging him to do what he can to ensure they come to an end.

Well unfortunately, look at all the other articles I read there about all the different surveillance systems and tracking systems, that are going to make billions of money off us all. Well, they're going to make this drag on as long as, and probably, possibly if they can get away with it, forever, folks. As they bring in a whole new way of existing. I won't say living. It won't be living; it will be existing. This system, a post consumerist society, the austerity agenda.

Another one too similar to that one…

Coronavirus pandemic may lead to 75,000 "deaths of despair" from suicide, drug and alcohol abuse, study says

cbsnews.com / 8 May 2020

Prior to the COVID-19 pandemic, the Well Being Trust reported that more lives had been lost to deaths of despair in 2017 than ever before.

"The primary response at the time was to look at the opioid epidemic, but that didn't even come close to cracking all of the issues of mental health related to deaths of despair," Miller explained.

(A: Then they go through the different things that can contribute to it and all the rest of it...)

Many things can contribute to deaths of despair, including loneliness, isolation,

(A: So they know when they lock folk down, guess what they get? They get lonely, eh? They get isolated… Well, they can't meet anybody and mingle.)

a lack of belonging, limited access to affordable health care,

(A: No kidding you, stay at home if you're sick. [Alan chuckles.]) systemic racism, trauma and financial concerns, like a lack of housing and food, according to the Well Being Trust.

Well, it's just wonderful when you give them a lockdown and you watch it go up and up and up causing it all to happen, folks, eh? For something that most folk don't even know that they've had. Hm? And another one…

Stress from virus response will destroy 7 times more years of life than lockdowns save: Study - washingtonexaminer.com / 5 May 2020

...another study repeating the same stuff. But HERE's the happy news, there's a happy news from your lovely communists, you know, that are all happy to work for the elite who own you, you know, because you are owned you understand, and that the real truly left-wing elites are really just the managerial class for it, and called socialist or communist, that manage you for the wealthy elite. The United Nations, are you getting fuzzy already what I'm saying, you feel all warm don't you…?

United Nations NWO (UNNWO) Launches COVID 19 Coronavirus Focused International Day of Happiness 2020 Campaign Theme HAPPINESS FOR ALL TOGETHER

Thriveglobal.com / 19 March 2020

(A: Now, take the tears out of your eyes, and I know you’re all in ecstasy just hearing that there, so I’ll repeat the last part. If you can handle it, right. [Alan laughing.])

UNNWO

(A: …right. And by the way, the NWO is the New World Order from the United Nations. I’ll put that link up too.   It says…)

COVID 19 Coronavirus Focused International Day of Happiness

(A: I really feel like I'm back in the womb here, you know, just kicking my mum's belly there, you know, it's all fuzzy and warm and everything.)

International Day of Happiness 2020 Campaign Theme HAPPINESS FOR ALL TOGETHER

(A: Isn't that wonderful? Isn't that amazing, eh? N-n-n. This is the stuff they'd put into comedies. But I mean, this meant to be SERIOUS. This is the stuff that communists turn out. You know, they'd have these events that, you’re all to be happy and come out and smile and everything. And here we go, from the United Nations, no wonder, eh.)

New York – Responding to the unprecedented, sudden threat of COVID 19 to the health, happiness, and wellbeing of all humanity, as well as the worldwide quarantine, and disruption to the global economy across every sector, industry, and the everyday life of billions of people, the United Nations International Day Of Happiness (UNIDOHappiness)

(A: [Alan singing.] U-n-i-d-o, i-d-o…)

is launching the HAPPINESS FOR ALL, TOGETHER March 20, 2020,

(A: So there you are. We've already had it. I didn't even get my share of happiness, you know that. I didn't even know it was even happening. I wonder if they can claim it even, you know, after the event may be?)

International Day of Happiness global campaign theme, to promote and advance worldwide solidarity and unity, in winning the global fight against COVID 19 coronavirus.

(A: There's that communist term, solidarity… and, unity again…)

(A: There you are. So, it's a WAR. They always use wars, and, we're all in it together. That's always the slogans in warfare, eh, as those at the top take all your rights and freedoms, and your food away from you, while they stuff their faces at the top and celebrate with their champagne. It says…)

The #HAPPINESSFORALLTOGETHER 2020 United Nations #InternationalDayOfHappiness campaign theme is a call on all 7.8 billion members of the global human family, and all 206 nations and territories of planet earth, to unite in solidarity, and steadfast resolve, in fighting back against the COVID 19 Coronavirus, by taking the (A: [Alan chuckles.] ...it's like a 10-step program.) #TenStepsToGlobalHappiness challenge to celebrate the 2020 #InternationalDayOfHappiness, and ultimately defeating the COVID 19

(A: You see, all you need is happiness. [Alan singing.] All you need is happiness, ba, de, te, de, te, de. And that’s it, cured, right, just be happy. Don’t worry, remember that stupid one too, that other stupid song, Don’t Worry Be Happy? So, there you go, that's your… I wonder how much it cost us all to pay for this nonsense, a few billion here probably as well, eh. But it goes on and on, it says…)

‘It always seems impossible until it’s done.’ (A: …all these big, big agendas.)

Let us unite and work together to win this global fight, and to achieve the happiness, wellbeing, and freedom of all life on earth,” said Ndaba Mandela, UNAIDS Global Ambassador, (A: So we've got global ambassadors, you see, sounds very pompous, eh. Probably gold braid and everything and all that eh.) Co-founder of the United Nations New World Order Project, (A: That's what it's called, and the link is here.)

United Nations New World Order Project, and Chairman of the Mandela Institute for Humanity.

(A: I remember old Nelson Mandela, he used to put a lot into humanity too, especially the children, by attacking school buses and things. But now he's a hero. Now, it depends, eventually you become a hero. It's okay now. It's wonderful. He wasn't a terrorist at all. I don't know where that thought came from but, I have to put it out of my head for goodness sake and rehabilitate myself. So, it says here that, yeah, it goes on and on and on about…)

…collective global action of every individual, organization, and nation. This year’s #TenStepsToGlobal Happiness

(A: Wow. We get…)

…a 7-day virtual event uniting 80 countries and thousands of experts and activists

(A: You didn't know they had that many revolutionaries out there...)

at the intersection of happiness, wellbeing, education, health, technology, politics, economic development, and social impact, among other fields and sectors.

(A: Wow. Eh? There you are, just be happy. As your stomach is rumbling and you can't get food, just be happy, folks. Just be happy. M-hm. My, what trash is this though, 'eh? What trash is this? It's so collectivist. And they really see you like a bunch of children, eh. Mind you, if you smile and show your teeth, they’ll give you a little pat on the head for being good. But if you disagree with them, they're completely intolerant. And that's the nature of the beast actually, and that's what you'll see.)

“The United Nations New World Order Project is a global, high-level initiative

(A: A high-level, 'eh? Again, I guess they'll join them in the snowy mountains up in Switzerland, the high-level.)

founded in 2008 to advance a new economic paradigm, a new political order, and more broadly, a new world order for humankind, which achieves the UN’s Global Goals for Sustainable Development by 2030, and the happiness, well-being, and freedom of all life on Earth by 2050,” the about section of the scheme explains.

(A: Ohhhh, wow, eh. They call that...)

...“happytalism:

(A: [Alan laughing.] I wonder how much that costs them, the marketing company, happytalism. But I'll repeat that for the hard of thinking, because it's kind of important that.)

“The United Nations New World Order Project is a global, high-level initiative founded in 2008 to advance a new economic paradigm, a new political order, (A: Again, I’ll say that…) a new political order, and more broadly, a new world order for humankind, which achieves the UN’s Global Goals for Sustainable Development by 2030, and the happiness, well-being, and freedom of all life on Earth by 2050,”

There’s always a future utopia, when you starve yourself to death. You’re working for us a better tomorrow, you understand. So, here’s a whole new system, folks, getting announced to you. It’s a happy thing, HAPPY, you see. And a Communist is the head of it, somebody who was all part of the big communist family, and for the United Nations. Do you vote for the United Nations? Of course you don't. You don't get to vote for the United Nations. You just get told what to do by them. Well, maybe it's time you told the United Nations where to go! Eh? Huh? ...with its new world order Project, eh? ...and its new political system ...and its new economic system ...and a new world order and so on ...and it's global goals for sustainable development. Maybe you should tell them where to go with it all, eh?! What d'you think about that?

Tell them where to stuff it and then you could be happy. Hm? Because somebody has to. This is tyranny, you're looking at tyranny, folks. I don't care how they try to dress it up for their childish nonsense, the fact is, these are tyrants talking here. The UN is completely staffed with communists ON BEHALF OF the elite at the top who own the world's cash system. They use the communists and socialists to run it all in their socialistic fashion, you see. But you're looking at hell. You won't be too happy with this, believe you me. N-n-n.

Remember, sustainable development is no private vehicles, you'll have no travel, you’ll have no darn rights, you'll be part of your community, and will have to turn up at the community events, for good socialists. If you don't turn out, where were you, you're supposed to be there, says your commissar, you see. Then of course for, you can't heat yourself with that, you've had your quota for heating fuel for the winter! Etc. etc. That's what you're looking at here, folks. N-n-n.

Nasty nasty.

So I've got two or three articles on the new world order here, from them, themselves, not made up about them but from them. And the UN has got the website called, New World Order.

On first International Day of Happiness, Ban calls for inclusive human development - news.un.org / 20 Mar 2013

There you go. I'll put it all out mind you for you guys tonight. I do a lot of work for other people, that just parrot my stuff for the rest of the week, but they never mention where they get it. [Alan chuckles.] But I do a lot of stuff for that, for nothing, that's obvious.

This other article here too, how they can sneak in things during these crisis to familiarize you with other things to come, obviously. Now remember, Canada is sadly beyond socialistic, and they call it progressive, we're so wonderful and caring, we care about everybody yada, yada, ya. But when you see troops getting used for civilian purposes, um, you've got to be very wary. I mean, troops are a blind force. Troops are supposed to be men, they are meant, the whole job of being in the military is for combat. But Canada being so socialistic, and throwing money across the planet, money we don't have, as they take it off us of course to throw it where they want it to go, often to their pals and corporations across the planet, that's what socialists always do, you know. And they do all their social, I call it preening, it's not just virtue signaling, it's actually preening. It's like Trudeau comes on and he, I guess he has his own makeup team or something because they try to make him look sexy for the women and stuff like that. It's just sad. To me that kind of thing is so sad. He strives to be all things to all people, to all left-wingers, all things to all left-wingers, I should say.

But in reality, Canada is a mess right now. It's been a mess, going downhill ever since the free trade with China. We lost all our factories, just like the US and other countries did too. Millions got put out of work, you know. Millions of people. We're not all supposed to sit home and work on silly computers. We're really not meant for that. Obviously. The same with universities. Universities are just a waste of time for most things today. Really. For the ridiculous courses that they teach. And it's so expensive too.

But there used to be stacks of people, millions of folk used to work in factories and made things and were productive. And they enjoyed making things. And it gave them purpose. And it gave them some pride in themselves to bring in a good income for themselves and so on. Purpose, we can't live without purpose, you know. We personally need it ourselves.

We've been a mess ever since. And with Canada like everything else too, has been selling off everything, it's healthcare systems quietly bit by bit, to foreign international chains. The healthcare industry now and hospital industry is like chains of hospitals. Just like supermarkets. The mess Canada is in with the old age homes and so on, was also because the bids were put up for these homes to outside forces, outside the country, that came in and took them over and maximize the profits and don't give a darn about the patients. I really mean that. They hire the cheapest labor possible.

What happened with the massive panic during the terror campaign caused by the media, they were supposed to give us a terror campaign to get us all to believe it, you see. They terrified the public so much into obeyance that people stopped going into the old folks homes, the actual workers, and some of them deserted them. I know they did that in Montréal for instance and elsewhere too. Just terrified the workers, who were not really medical staff. They were caretakers but they're not medical staff as such. They were terrified for their lives as well. They were given no protective gear. A lot of them just didn't go in, and the folk were left in terrible conditions.

Well, this is Canada, we outsource everything, and we sold everything off. Because we're so wonderful in Canada, we're so goody-goody to the whole planet now, you see, we're so communistic that things are becoming nonfunctional, or dysfunctional.

Facing an invisible enemy, Canadian troops lend a helping hand to seniors

thestar.com / 7 May 2020

(A: So, you've got people who are trained to go out and kill folk, this is how desperate it is, bring them in to help the seniors in the homes, eh? Again, it's a public relations thing as well naturally.)

OTTAWA—It’s not the front line they signed up for. It’s not even a deployment they prepared for. But for some 1,500 Canadian military personnel, their mission now is helping care for elderly residents in long-term-care homes hit hard by COVID-19.

(A: It's mainly by the effects of it and the staff getting petrified.)

Defence Minister Harjit Sajjan conceded Thursday that the deployment to facilities in Ontario and Quebec is “not a typical” Canadian Armed Forces operation.

"They will do whatever they can to help health-care providers in these long-term-care facilities maintain the health and well-being of vulnerable Canadians. Canadians need their service and they have stepped up.

(A: So, they brought some medical staff in I suppose.)

Deployed to the homes following requests from Québec and Ontario for help staffing long-term-care homes, which have become Covid 19 hot stones with widespread deaths and illnesses.

(A: Well, there's a lot more to the deaths and illnesses too by the way than they're telling you here. Naturally. And I tell you, when things are so politically correct now that you can't even speak about truth anymore, and get to the bottom to fix things, you know, just to fix things. I said before, we're so far gone now we couldn't say what we have to say and do what we have to do to save ourselves. That's literally what's happening.)

1000 troops deployed at 22 facilities in Québec with 670 medical and support personnel working in the homes while another 350 provides support such as deliveries of protective equipment.

The operation is expected to increase to 1350 personnel and 25 homes in the coming days.

Another thing too, you see, here's the thing too, as you start to selloff… You start something up like your own healthcare systems, like Britain did. Now, Britain, it's the same, Britain was collapsing totally in its healthcare system, national healthcare system, for years, and last year one of the biggest sales off to the private sector was done in Britain too. The same thing is happening in Canada naturally too, big American corporations, that are actually foreign owned, it's not even American, they might have a place based in America, like an office, but they're often outside the country. But they're buying up the hospital care of the planet. And things become dysfunctional as they cut and slash and burn, and they bring in by the way the bioethics teams, which they promote through universities. The big private corporations decide what is going to get taught, and out come the bioethicists who decide what life is worth and what your life is worth and not worth the blah blah blah, who's going to live and who's going to die and yada ya. This is where you end up, with these kind of messes, with the slash and burn techniques that they use. They'll cut the staff and cut the staff until they've got people who literally have no care at all in the work that they're doing. And you end up with chaos.

In some ways this is related to the same international multicultural system of the United Nations and the global agenda of interdependence. It really is. When you're not treating people inside your country, and you’re bringing in the cheapest labor from outside the country to work in places... They have no interest, often they can't speak the languages in the places either. Britain's got an awful job with that as well. It's just astonishing how cheap, cheap, cheap they can do... These places and hospitals are part of your infrastructure. These are essential for the community, for the people who live there in the nations.

It's the same as selling off your resources, your necessary essential resources. You don't sell them off to foreign companies. And then you fall out with them down the road and then you can't get anything that you need. That's what happens with China right now. But it's the same with your healthcare systems. You should never sell it off to international corporations, who have nothing in common with the people or the nation that they're supposedly going to end up serving - I hate that word serving - as they plunder your bank account and tried to give you the cheapest care possible, for massive profit. You can't do that.

Everything in the system is NOT profit. You've got to understand that too. And governments, you see, have to accept that there's a cost of running, just like a business, there's a cost of running a business. Businesses today don't, they get taught in business school try to have no cost at all, they want it all profit. Governments are just the same. Think of all the money they're taxing off us all, ALL THE TIME. And the money they're throwing abroad, rather than spending it at home. Now you have to bring the military in the help out in old age homes?

Today, folk are scared to get old because they know about eugenics. They know that they're getting written off now with the hospitals. Well, why don't you just take this pill, you know, and end it all, it's a lot cheaper than treating you. You might live another 10 years if they treat you. You might live even more. Why not do the right thing and just take this pill, you know, this little... You know? This is what they're advocating in the hospitals here now. Why on earth would you? Folk are terrified to get into the hospitals now. You're written off, if you're a nobody. And I really mean that. [Alan chuckles.]

They've published it enough in the papers here, you know. Québec, by the way, where they've had so much of the problem, even the old age homes being deserted by the staff who are terrified. Again, a lot of them were sold off to foreign companies. All these people who bought them are gung-ho for all this, come in, right from the countries and bought them up... and Québec is gung-ho for all this, they were at the top, the elite, for euthanasia, they were the first ones to really push it big time. There's articles out there where the rate's going up and up and up of folk who are just accepting, they're being convinced to accept euthanasia for God's sake, you know. Convinced. They have teams all trying to convince you. They also got teams to fly all over the countries that try to convince relatives that you should make sure the persons organs are left to good use to get sold abroad or something.

This is incredible what's happening. It's a horror show for God's sake. As we are really lost. This guff you got from the United Nations, the world order thing, eh, about their happiness, will all be happy-happy. What guff! Get back to reality and outside of these marketing campaigns and see what is really happening here. It's a damned horror show what's been happening. And disgusting. Heads should be rolling for what's happening to the public here! Where it's all money and cents and dollars, and then their bioethicists get churned out of universities living off the taxpayers' purses, since they can decide which taxpayers are going to get the chop when they go into hospital. Well, you know, you're old now, you don't deserve to live anymore. And that's how they've been trained to look at you? Hm-hm. We have to get back to a nation, or even leave to go to other nations where there's still a value in human life, eh. For everybody not just for celebrities and so on, right.

Another article in Canada…

Canada’s military exposes ‘extremely troubling’ conditions in Ontario long-term-care homes

thestar.com / 26 May 2020

(A: No kidding, eh? Hm?)

Cockroach infestations, residents left to wallow in soiled diapers (A: That happened when all the staff just fled the place in Montréal.), COVID-19 patients allowed to wander around, forceful feeding of the elderly, and a “culture of fear to use supplies because those cost money.”

(A: Hm. You see, they're all for high profit, high profit, high profit, so don't use the supplies we've got.)

Those are some of the horrifying findings uncovered by Canadian Armed Forces personnel dispatched to help in five Ontario nursing homes during the coronavirus pandemic.

In a searing 23-page military report by Brig. Gen. Conrad Mialkowski made public Tuesday, Ontario's troubled long-term-care system — where 1,538 residents and six staff members have died of COVID-19 — is laid bare.

(A: Of course, Trudeau expressed outrage, all that nonsense, eh. Yeah, sure. He was saddened and shocked and disappointed and he was angry. Yeah. Hm-hm-hm. I guess they just noticed these things, like it's just happening now, eh? [Alan chuckles.] They weren't caring a damn before all this hit.)

Premier Doug Ford from Ontario was visibly upset as he spoke with reporters.

Sure, sure, sure. Again, we're getting independent, one of these endless commissions that Canada's famous for to examine the long-term care crisis. And there will be a full public inquiry, which of course will go nowhere because a lot of the folks who own these big homes, these chains in the medical system, are important, they're very wealthy, and they back the politicians, you know, when they run for office and so on. You know that. You know how the system is so corrupt, that's how it works, folks. Hm. Hm?

So anyway as I say this is what they give you. I can remember when Obama was running for office and he said in his talk that, he mentioned, he kept using the example of his grandmother, and was it really right that we spent so much money keeping her alive and so on. He was talking about euthanasia! He was pushing for that. The left wing, they're all for euthanasia. There's no religion, no God, no nothing. And human life, just like Julian Huxley said they'd have to do, has been put off of the pedestal and brought down to the level of the animal, and usefulness and non-usefulness. That's what you're all getting taught.

Money rules and corporations that own all these chains and chains of nursing homes and that, they rule. They own the hospitals too. They've been privatizing big chunks and chunks and chunks of hospitals for a long, long time in Britain and elsewhere. As I say, Britain just sold one of the biggest sell offs and privatized it last year in fact. So now they're making them all into temporary superstars through all the PR nonsense. That's all fiction, people. The reality is. It'll go back to where it was again. Because the agenda, the same in Canada, is to sell them off to these very expensive, ah, um, what you call them, their tycoons that own chains of hospitals across the globe. And that's a fact. That's what they're doing here.

Our life is becoming nothing. Unless we’re productive they don't see us as anything except just, just, just a purse until the purse is empty. That's how we're seen. That's what life is now in this system.

Another article…

Statement from SEIU Healthcare President Sharleen Stewart on Disturbing Revelations from Long-Term Care by the Canadian Armed Forces - newswire.ca / 25 May 2020

Well, there's nothing disturbing about it. It's what was expected really because it's been going down the tubes for the last 25-30 years apparently. All the deaths too are through, a lot of them are through neglect, folks, there's no doubt about it. And again, the complete chaos to do with who should get into hospital in this day and age, and in a system, in Ontario especially, and in Québec, in a system as I say that's run by eugenics. That's run, as I say, according to the age that you are, regardless of how ill or well you are, as to whether they're going to let you into hospital or not, or if they're even going to treat you.

This is completely dollar and cents now, folks. I've given talks on this. It's disgusting how we're all labeled as to our value into society, our non-value, and if you even get in to hospital now and get treatment. They're not going to... I even read the articles that they came out with when the Covid hit and says, well we'll have to decide now who we're going to treat and not treat, you know. Dollars and cents, yada, yada, ya. That's what's wrong with our system. And it can only get worse in the communist/socialist system run by supposed professionals and experts, you see. N-n-n.

And…

Ontario takes over 5 long-term care homes, extends emergency orders to June 9 - cbc.ca / 27 May 2020

[Alan chuckles.] There’s how good we’re doing in Canada right now, eh. Ah, quite amazing. And here’s the thing too, in New York…

Andrew Cuomo gave immunity to nursing home execs after big campaign donations

theguardian.com / 26 May 2020

Critics say data proves New York’s liability shield is linked to higher nursing home death rates during the pandemic.

As Governor Andrew Cuomo faced a spirited challenge in his bid to win New York’s 2018 Democratic primary, his political apparatus got a last-minute boost: a powerful healthcare industry group suddenly poured more than $1m into a Democratic committee backing his campaign.

(A: Well, that's just coincidence, folks. It had nothing to do with it. I mean, he wouldn’t let that interfere with his work and so on, and his decision-making. What's interesting too, you've seen, come on, you've gotta stop being so naïve. You stop making excuses for people who are in charge of things. You know what you would do if you were in charge of certain things, but you always make excuses when they do the wrong things at the top and think, why I guess they just made big mistakes. Stop doing it.)

(A: You've watched, and you read the articles, you've even heard Dr Birx give her talks there about how they're basically putting everybody down who might have Covid AS a Covid death, and they might not have it. No matter what they really die off, heart giving up or whatever, or kidneys packing in or people with chronic, chronic illnesses who are dying, being put down as Covid deaths. Even when they haven't even been tested and so on, it makes no difference. They have padded and padded to get the numbers up and up and up, and you've all seen it, you've seen the articles, these are verifiable articles, folks. Not from conspiracy theorists, eh.)

(A: But then you saw Cuomo ordering the old age homes to take in active cases, people who had tested positive, and putting them into the old folks' homes. I mean, d'you think he's just stupid? Are you going to just, oh I guess the man is just stupid, eh? You put them into the old folks' homes, and you order the homes to take them in regardless, or you charge them, and they take them in, and then it spreads right through the home, and they die. Do you really think that's just incompetence? No, that's deliberate. To pad the numbers.)

(A: Because they don't care about the lives that are getting lost. They don't! They really, really don't. These are politicians, eh. These are the people who score high on the psychopathic score testing. That's who go into politics, these kind of people. Hm? So $1 million backed his campaign last year, eh.)

Less than two years after that flood of cash from the Greater New York Hospital Association (GNYHA), Cuomo signed legislation last month quietly shielding hospital and nursing home executives from the threat of lawsuits stemming from the coronavirus outbreak.

(A: Well, that's nice of him.)

It's great though how birds of a feather, a crooked feather, really do stick together, isn't it? I mean, they do look after each other, don't they? So, you've got to admit it, they do, gangs look after gang members. I have noticed that. Another article…

"Madness" - Focus On The COVID-19 Death Rate

zerohedge.com / 26 May 2020

The most frightening aspect of the coronavirus-19 (COVID-19) epidemic in the US is that it brought about exaggeratedly heightened fear of death. That fear, once magnified to proportions which become palpable to the individual, became the basis for dreadful economic and medical policies from governments and crushed the natural optimism of the public.

(A: But don't worry, the UN is making up for it with its new world order happiness day and all that.)

In early days, we were caught in a squeeze of conflicting information. Was COVID-19 a bioweapon gone rogue and destined to indiscriminately wipe out young and old? Or, was it another bad flu or perhaps an extremely bad flu? After all, initial information showed the victims were concentrated in a nursing home in Kirkland, Washington.

No cases were reported amongst the homeless on West Coast streets. No deaths among children were reported. And in the closed world of cruise liners and later a military ship, there were lots of early cases and some deaths. As time passed, there was little more bad news. We should have been suspicious of the data.

We were mainly focused on the case fatality rate (CFR: deaths as a percent of diagnosed cases) which were frighteningly high. We worried about the infection fatality rate (IFR), but there was too little data and testing available to have any idea how many people were or ultimately would be infected.

But those concepts – CFR and IFR – are not the most important strategic measures of the severity of the disease. It is the death rate, properly defined and understood, that should matter for long-term policy makers, our erstwhile more level-headed thinkers, in determining policy.

In the past few weeks, we have obtained more useful data in the US. There were secrets lurking in the data, waiting to be uncovered, that could help ascertain what was really happening. The purpose of this report is to do just that – to ascertain what the data are telling us. It also gives us the basis for judging the appropriateness of past and present policies

(A: So they go into the definitions...)

There are many definitions in the epidemiological world such as the CFR and IFR mentioned above. My focus is on the overall death rate…

We do not even have accurate data on how many people have died from COVID-19 alone versus COVID-19 plus some other complications that were already present such as diabetes, morbid obesity and prior respiratory complications, any one of which might equally have been the proximate cause of death. There is ample evidence, especially in the Northeast region that there has been “over classification” (a euphemism for data bias). (A: …meaning, lying [Alan chuckles.] fudging, that’s what it means, folks.)

(A: Because yeah, we've had them all admitting to putting them ALL down as Covid. They even sent, the AMA sent out forms to doctors showing them how to fill them in, regardless of what they really were going to put them down as, the causes of death, but put them down as causes of death anyway as [Covid]. And also, you had them, eventually they gave up even testing and said even if they suspected they had the symptoms, or may have had the symptoms, put it down as definite. So, they've padded the numbers.)

(A: And by the way, can you find the flu? The cases? You can't find flu cases for the year, because they've lumped them all in as well. Try to find how many folk have been diagnosed with the flu this year. You won't find it. This has been an amazing padding job to boost numbers. I'm not saying hasn't, it has killed people. But they've lumped in all the other deaths too from other things like the flu for goodness sake, and as I say, folk who have got comorbidities already, existing morbidities.)

To understand how our minds have been misdirected in understanding the real risks associated with COVID-19, let's begin with a brain teaser. It will awaken our numerate minds in preparation for understanding the data deception and misunderstandings that prevail.

When is 1.7% greater than 98.3%?

In the bizarro world of COVID-19 reporting that is the case – 1.7% is greater than 98.3%. Specifically, deaths among a narrow 1.7% group of the population are greater than deaths from the other 98.3%. Numerically a death may be a death, but from a policy point of view, to be blunt about it, not all deaths are the same.

Fact #1: 1.7% of the population in the US resides in long-term medical care facilities (A: …you see.) (LTMCFs) and total 5.7 million.

Fact #2: The residents of LTMCFs accounted for 38,800 or 53% of all COVID-19 deaths (A: It's mainly old folks' homes.) (based on recent data). The rest of the country, the 98.3%, have experienced approximately 34,600 deaths, or 47% of the nation's total COVID-19 deaths.

The Death Rate at LTMCFs Is Stunning

That means the death rate, deaths expressed as a percent of those living in medical care institutions, is 0.682%, more than 50 times the death rate of the rest of the population at 0.012%. The death rate for the overall populations is 0.022%.

That should leave you speechless.

We have a COVID-19 problem, but we have an even greater and more serious LTMCF problem that is clouding our understanding of the contagion and therefore what our best public health policies should be. Shutting down the economy, the world wherein the 98.3% live and prosper was too draconian. The feared overloading of the hospital system with emergency patients, which was short-lived, was disproportionately coming from the residents of LTMCFs, not the general public.

That's what I've said before, they've locked down the vast majority of the healthy people. The first time in history. 98.3% [Alan chuckles.] locked down. But pretty well so many of the deaths have been in the long-term medical care facilities. And by the way, I wouldn't stop there because there's more to this than meets the eye. There really is more to it. And I know at the top they've seen what I have seen. They have to have seen. But they won't go there because it's so dangerous to even go into it. And I really mean that. It's very dangerous to go into it. Yep. M-hm-hm. But I'll touch on it before I'm finished tonight.

By the way, remember folks you can help me tick a long by going into cuttingthroughthematrix.com website. That's my main website. But I have all the other sites. They're all really main sites of mine, but they're all listed on the .com site. You'll see how to donate to me, how to do it. You can send cash or a check or use PayPal and there's other methods too, and how to get it to me. My email is there too. You can always email me. It's alanwattcuttingthrough@yahoo.com if you ever have to email me. You'll see the link on my website. But again, list all my official sites which are on the .com website in case anything goes down.

Because the people who are running the world right now, even if this thing disappeared tonight and you never hear Covid again, they're not going to stop the agenda. Every part of the agenda puts them another 2 miles ahead, another 5 miles, another hundred miles ahead, or 100 YEARS ahead, folks. They're not going to backtrack on it now. This is a perpetual monitoring system for life, including where you can travel, can you travel, will you be allowed to travel, even drive, or even walk outside your own area eventually. This is where they want to go with it all. Track and trace and monitoring.

You're owned and you'll be subject to all these big corporations that have all your data on you. And who have been assigned all the new responsibilities of deciding how, where you can go, where you can't go and should you go at all or should you stay in your home, yada, yada, ya... because you didn't take your latest chickenpox vaccine or whatever it happens to be. Because this is a mandate for every, you're going to be a pincushion for everything they've ever designed, and stuff they haven't come up with yet. Yes, you are, because you are profitable. If you have no other purpose, you're going to be profitable for that, folks. No kidding you.

You have to understand what's happened in old folks' homes and keep that in mind. Keep that in mind, remember, how so many of the deaths have come from the old folks' homes and long-term healthcare homes as well they call some of them. You have to get, that's very important, that is why, why, why? Hm? I gave talks years ago and I said, I've noticed, I keep noticing that the flu every year was always breaking out in old folks' homes. I read reports, studies that had been done on them, because initially they would say, it must be visitors bringing in the flu into the old folks' homes. But then they said, no, they found that some of them were breaking out in the homes and traveling with visitors outside into the community. [Alan chuckles.] Very important little thing, you know. I'll be mentioning that in a little while.

Let me see now...

Is Mandatory Vaccination Legal in Time of Epidemic? - American Medical Association's Journal of Ethics

journalofethics.ama-assn.org / April 2006

(A: Of course. Here they go with the usual legalities trying to take away rights and so on through legalities, and much-speaking as I call it, much-speaking. This article goes into should they or shouldn't they, or should they have rights to mandate that you take these and so on and so on, and the 14th amendment...)

The 14th Amendment asserts that no state shall make or enforce any law abridging the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States or deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of the law.

(A: I love how they, George Orwell mentioned it in Animal Farm, where the pigs of course that were in charge, they were the bureaucratic class for the animals after the rebellion. The pigs had written their Constitution down, you see, and their Bill of Rights on the wall. Then of course some of the animals noticed in the middle the night there, if they weren't quite sleeping, that pigs would sneak in there and put a ladder up on the wall and go up there with paint, and they didn't just score things out. What they did is add little amendments to the ends of sentences. So, I'll say this part again here because it's what we're talking about.)

… law abridging the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States or deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of the law.

(A: ...and then pretty well in quotation marks in a way, for the purpose of this talk…)

(A: It's like that has been added on. [Alan chuckles.] Do you see what I'm saying? Just like the pig did in a sense. Because the whole point of it is, is to safeguard you. You don't need, 'without due process of the law', which negates the whole purpose of it. You understand? Meaning it can be done. What's the point of writing the first part if you're going to negate it with the latter part? Hm? So that's how it's done. That's how it's done. Jefferson talked about this very thing too. So, then they come up again with...)

In 1905 the Supreme Court addressed mandatory vaccinations in regard to smallpox in Jacobson v Massachusetts.

Yada, ya, and that's how they go on and take your rights away by confounding the people who listen, without going into the fact too of what were their actual results of the vaccination programs that were on the go at that time. You know, you had bigger plagues when they had the vaccinations out. That's in the history books. [Alan chuckles.] It's quite amazing what you can dig up in fact. Nothing is ever exactly as it seems, eh.

How many trillions have they dished out so far? To keep folks staying at home? And to keep Wall Street afloat? How many trillions have they tossed all over the place? Even billions to some of the big foundations. And the private advocacy groups inside America got billions given to them, some of the ones that are actually censoring the media. [Alan laughing.] Ah, I tell ya.

Here again, you understand, in a crisis is a great opportunity time for making billions, when governments are panicking and throwing cash all over the place, eh? Money that won't even be asked to get paid back by the companies. They're like cash grants, just like presents. It's a great time for these guys. Because this is the type of war and that's when you make the money. That's what Rothschild said too. He says, the best time to make money is when blood is running in the streets. When folk are panicking, and they need but you've got. A bandage you can jack up 100%, you know, or 1,000%, or 10,000% percent, they'll buy it.

It says here that…

Media Ignores Israel Connection to Eric Schmidt’s Push For NY “Smart Cities”

thelastamericanvagabond.com / 20 May 2020

In recent weeks, considerable media attention has been given to the decision by NY Governor Andrew Cuomo to tap former Google executive Eric Schmidt to lead a 15-member panel tasked with “reimagining” New York’s post-pandemic tech infrastructure as well as its education, economic and healthcare system. Microsoft co-founder Bill Gates was also recruited for this initiative by Gov. Cuomo, leading some American media outlets to criticize the venture as turning New York “into a Silicon Valley science experiment.”

(A: It's a small world, it's the same names that keep popping up everywhere, isn't it? The gang, the type that Jefferson would talk about.)

However, it is much more than merely a Silicon Valley experiment. As The Last American Vagabond reported last month, Schmidt currently chairs the National Security Commission on Artificial Intelligence (NSCAI), (A: So he’s in charge of the commission.) which discussed plans last May regarding how to re-make American society (A: This is important actually because I’ve read other articles about it too.)

to re-make American society to foster the mass adoption of AI-driven technologies, including so-called “smart cities” and related systems of mass surveillance. That commission includes key people, not just from Silicon Valley, but also the U.S. military and intelligence communities – a testament to how the divisions between Big Tech, the Pentagon and U.S. intelligence have become increasingly blurred in recent years.

(A: It's been longer than just recent years I'm afraid.)

Unsurprisingly, one of the main initiatives that the Schmidt-chaired New York panel is set to promote is the fast-tracking of “smart city” implementation as outlined by the Schmidt-chaired NSCAI. The use of the term “reimagining” (A: I first saw it when Bill Gates used it because he wanted to reimagine education, where through his systems and his program, and of course his education system, they would bring up the children without the use of schools using this pandemic as the prototype system to test it out on, you see. Reimagining education. So this is reimagining...)

“reimagining” in the announcement that Schmidt would chair this panel also underscores this point, given that Google’s “smart city” subsidiary, Sidewalk Labs, describes itself as “reimagining cities from the Internet up.” Smart cities are more accurately defined as cities that are micromanaged by technocrats via an all encompassing system of mass surveillance and a vast array of “internet of things” devices that provide a constant and massive stream of data that is analyzed by artificial intelligence (AI).

(A: That's your electronic prison system, folks. A hell on earth, that's what it is. That's what it is. This article goes on to say that…)

Notably, Cuomo's appointment of Schmidt to lead this panel aimed at "reimagining" life in New York (A: [Alan chuckles.]) came right before news broke that a Google subsidiary was scrapping its plans to build a smart city prototype in Toronto. Schmidt still chaired Google's parent company, Alphabet, when that deal was first negotiated in 2017. At the time, Schmidt had said that Google's effort to turn Toronto into a "smart city" had come "from Google's founders getting excited thinking of 'all the things you could do if someone would just give us a city and put us in charge'."

(A: That's true, they want us to pay for it all in their public-private partnerships, where the public pay for it all and its upkeep and maintenance, and they just take the profit and manage it all, you see.)

Though smart cities have been largely unpopular among Americans to date, the coronavirus crisis has led to a spate of positive PR (A: …public relations…) pieces promoting their implementation, (A: Oh, we got to get it in to save us all, got to save us all!) such as a recent piece in Wired which claims that "smart city planning could slow future pandemics" (A: We'll just make prison camps and throw them in, do it all fast, there you go. It would be cheaper too. But anyway, it would be rather obvious what they were then, eh? They don't want it to be so obvious.) and an article from Forbes about how "smart cities are protecting against coronavirus."

(A: No kidding you, what rubbish is this, eh?)

While the current coronavirus crisis and Schmidt's increasingly public role in ushering in AI-driven technological "solutions" throughout New York have given a boost to the smart city agenda, the plan to create these cities in New York was in the works well before coronavirus. However, those pre-pandemic smart city plans intimately involve one key actor that has, thus far, gone unnamed in recent media reports – the state of Israel.

(A: [Alan chuckles.] Because that's part of their big agenda in technology, it's one of their sales things.)

Who will build New York's Smart Cities?

Last June, NY Governor Cuomo announced a $2 million partnership agreement with the Israel Innovation Authority, a branch of Israel's Economy Ministry, that aimed to "further strengthen economic development ties between New York State and Israel." The agreement was specifically related to the "co-development and commercialization" for technologies related to smart cities, cybersecurity and drones (unmanned aerial vehicles), among others.

(A: Everything that [Alan chuckles.] Israel is producing actually. They're big into the production of drones for instance.)

A key component of this partnership was the creation of the “Smart Cities Innovation Partnership (SCIP),” which Cuomo’s office described as “a new initiative that will share innovative technologies, research, talent and business resources between cities in New York and Israel.” It was also stated that “New York and Israel will contribute an equivalent amount of matching resources” to the project. Cuomo, at the time, also said that New York’s Incubator programs for start-ups – an initiative with funds exceeding $5 million — would “implement a new focus on Israeli companies,” as opposed to local companies.

Regarding this new “Smart Cities Innovation Partnership,” Dr. Ami Applebaum – chairman of the Israel Innovation Authority and Chief Scientists of the Israel’s Economy Ministry – stated the following:

“As technology advances and touches every facet of our daily lives, the future of Smart Cities is just around the corner and highly depends to [sic] new and innovative technologies. This collaboration between the ESD (Empire State Development of New York State) and the Israel Innovation Authority, facilitated by our Americas Operations desk and the Ministry of Economy, Foreign Trade Administration (FTA), headed by Mr. Inon Elroy, Economic Minister to North America, will provide startups an opportunity for pilot validation sites to address the strategic concerns of both States such as cybersecurity, supply chain, energy, health, transportation, wastewater, water, civic engagement, parks, public works, and safety.”

(A: I hope folk are realizing that everything that's to do with anything [Alan chuckles.] that involves you or where you live, or what you need, is going to be run by these corporations from abroad and so on. From all over the planet. I mean, even our taxes are often, for Canada I think they're still done over in India. For years it's been done in India, the government sends it over there. Everything is outsourced. What's the point in having government if they outsource it all, you know? And how can you have any privacy when they're always [Alan chuckles.] in breaches in these countries because so many of the countries are still very, very corrupt and easy to hack into by willing people who are helping them.)

(A: But again, you understand, all these things used to be basic essentials. A lot of this stuff is basic essentials was keeping, like infrastructure, for keeping the system going. And suddenly they're breaking them down into more lucrative different areas and selling them abroad, having companies abroad owning them all, eh. They have nothing... It's like the United Nations, the United Nations, once you sign on to the United Nations, they don't see YOU as so-and-so that lives in the country of so-and-so. They see your country, if it's lucrative, as a cash resource. That's what it's for, taking cash from you. Hm?)

(A: The whole point of having a nation was folk in the nation should run the stuff. And literally it's the only way you can have them stand for the actions they take. You can put them on the stand, they're in your country, they've got responsibilities to the people in the country, and you hold them to it. When it's these faceless corporations across the planet, they've got nothing in common with you, who are you going to complain to? You can't do it. This the con that's going on here. You can’t sell off your infrastructure. You can't do it.)

(A: And you shouldn't be going into this over, over, it's just, this is a massive prison camp the way that they're building it up here. It really is. So, you won't be able to go anywhere on the planet and get any peace and quiet. That's what George Orwell had in 1984 when he tried to write a diary. Because everywhere he went there were cameras watching everything he did. He'd have to get a quiet little corner of a room that the camera couldn't quite see him just to write his little secretive notebook, his daily diary. We don't even have that luxury. I-yi-yi. N-n-n.)

The partnership specifically called for the establishment of five “Smart Cities” in Regional Economic Development Council (REDC) regions in New York that would interact with “test bed sites” created in Israel. This means that this “smart city” partnership only involves the creation of smart cities in New York, not Israel, but gives Israeli companies a major role in designing these five New York smart cities.

(A: Business, business, business, eh? Yeah. This goes on and on and on, and quite a long article actually. Because it goes into depth. Lots of links to it too to prove their points there. And it talks about…)

…Israel’s government and intelligence service has a long history of aggressively spying on the U.S. federal government …

(A: It shows you that too. You find all those different things last year, wasn't it, around the White House. They were grabbing all the cell phone calls by politicians for the White House and so on. N-n-n.)

In addition, Israel’s government under Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu has an explicit policy of creating U.S. dependence on Israeli tech companies in order to counter the nonviolent Boycott (A: …and so on.)

What is interesting, I mean, I've read articles by Netanyahu himself. Again, he's like a salesman for his country. He always gives them positive feedback on deals with outside. Especially the US, it's probably the wealthiest nation that gives them lots of business. But he says that, that they're helping to lead in the technological field, and providing all the different stuff that they're going to MAKE essential. You see, you must make the business, you make it essential. They only do that when they've got the actual product that they're going to make it essential for you to buy. [Alan laughing.] That's how business works. And there you go.

But everything is really, I see everything as a big gang, you know. A big gang that runs the stuff. And the politicians are all on board with it, they get well-paid for their conniving, you know. I have no time for politicians, I really don't have time for politicians. They ARE definitely psychopathic.

Do you realize the hell we're in on earth? long before the Covid idea came along? Do you realize how the standard of living we should all be living in, if politics was real? And they had your best interests at heart? You wouldn't have drugged out camp cities, tent cities across the country. And massive unemployment. It just wouldn't have happened. You wouldn't have had all your work exported off to China. You would have had booming industries, including technological, you know, like the German systems where they would have trade schools if you had lots of factories on the go for manufacturing and so on. People would have function and purpose and have some pride in themselves. If politics worked.

Politics doesn't work. It's not meant to work for you. It never was meant to work, for you. You've been running with the gang at the very top, a very secretive organization running over the, under the guises of, or, over the guises of democracy [Alan chuckles.] running the whole system. And they boast about it, like the Council on Foreign Relations, and Quigley boasted about it for them since he was one of their historians for a while, with their private histories of how they shape the world and plan the future, for their private organization. M-hm.

Another one too, I mentioned this one before and now other folk luckily grabbed it and so on and it's gotten out there as the information travels. Because it's too important just to gloss over.

New Study: The Flu Vaccine Is “Significantly Associated” With An Increased Risk of Coronavirus

collective-evolution.com / 16 April 2020

Greg. G Wolff, an Epidemiologist with the Armed Forces Health Surveillance Branch (A: Now, they've got their own health surveillance branch in the Armed Forces of the US. They've got to have it. Because you've got to be ahead of the curve if there is going to be any kind of sickness coming through the world, if you've got an army, if something's going to knock your army out, so you want to be way ahead of everything and pick up on anything at the very beginning, right. So, the U.S. Army has got its own health surveillance, like an intelligence branch and they published a study…) recently published a study in the Journal Vaccine titled, Influenza vaccination and respiratory virus interference among Department of Defense personnel during the 2017–2018 influenza season. The study examined virus interference in a Department of Defense population, this refers to the increased risk of other respiratory viruses as a result of, in this case, the influenza vaccine.

Influenza vaccination and respiratory virus interference among Department of Defense personnel during the 2017–2018 influenza season - pubmed.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov 10 Jan 2020

